The other Petrus Johannes was about the year of our Lord 1290. which taught and maintained many things againſt the Pope, proving, That he was Antichriſt, and that the Synagogue of Rome was Great Babylon. He wrote upon Matthew, upon the Epiſtles, and upon the Apocalyſe. Mention of this Petrus Johannes is made in Nicolaus Emericus, in libr. Inquiſitionum, &c. And beſides that moreover that Michael Ceſenas (of whom, Chriſt willing, ſhall follow hereafter) took of him a great part of his opinions; and becauſe the Pope could not burn him alive, after his death, he cauſed his bones to be taken up and burned.

The Pope Antichriſt. The Synagogue of Rome to be great Babylon.

Petrus Johannes burned after his death.

To theſe, and with theſe above ſpecified, is to be added Robertus Gallus, who being born of a right noble Parentage, for devotion ſake was made a Dominick Fryer, about the ſame year of our Lord above touched, Anno. 1290. This Man as appeareth by his writing, had divers and ſundry Viſions, whereof part is annexed with the Viſions and Prophecy of Hildegardis. His Viſions all tend againſt the ſpirituality of Rome, where in the firſt Chapter he calleth plainly the Pope an Idol, which having eyes ſeeth not, neither liſteth to ſee the abominations of his people, nor the exceſſive enormity of their voluptuouſneſs, but only to ſee to the heaping up of his own treaſure, and having a mouth ſpeaketh not; but ſaith, I have ſet good Men over them (which is ſufficient for me) to do them good either by my ſelf, or by ſome other. And it followeth in the ſame Chapter, Woe to that Idol, woe to the mighty and proud, who ſhall be equal in all the Earth to that Idol? He that exalteth up his name in Earth, ſaying, Who ſhall bring me under? Is not my Houſe compared with the mighty Potentates of the Land? I am higher than Dukes; Knights on their Horſe back do ſervice unto me, that which my Fathers had not before me, that I have done to me. My Houſe is ſtrowed with ſilver; gold and pearl are the pavement of my Palace, &c.

Robertus Gallus profeſseth againſt the Pope.

The Pope deſtroyed.

Again in the twelfth Chapter, and alſo in the firſt, under the name of a Serpent he painteth out the Pope, whom he declareth to extol himſelf above meaſure, and to oppreſs the few that be godly, and to have many falſe Prophets about him, which neglecting the word and name of Chriſt, do preach and extol him only, obſcuring the name of Chriſt. The Church of Rome and the Pope he deſcribeth in theſe words: I was praying (ſaith he) on my knees, looking upward to Heaven, near to the Altar of Saint James in Paris, on the right ſide of the Altar, and ſaw in the Air before the body of a certain High Biſhop all cloathed in white ſilk; who, turning his back on the Eaſt, lift up his hand towards the Weſt, as the Prieſts are wont in their Maſs turning to the people, but his head was not ſeen. And as I was conſidering adviſedly, whether he had any head or no; I perceived a certain head in him all dry, lean and withered, as though it had been a head of wood. And the ſpirit of the Lord ſaid to me, This ſignifieth the ſtate of the Church of Rome.

The Viſions of Robertus Gallus.

The ſtate of the Church of Rome deſcribed.

Moreover, the ſame Author in his Viſions, well deſcribing the manner of the School Sophiſters and Sorbonniſts, addeth in this wiſe; Another day as I was in like contemplation as before, I beheld in ſpirit; and behold, I ſaw a Man apparelled like to the other before, which went about having fine bread and excellent wine that hanged about him on both ſides; and the ſame, having in his hand a long and hard flint ſtone, was gnawing hungerly upon the ſame, as one being hungry is wont to bite upon a loaf of bread; out of which ſtone came two heads of two Serpents, the Spirit of the Lord inſtructing me and ſaying. This ſtone purporteth the frivolous, intricate, and curious queſtions, wherein the hungry do travel and labor, leaving the ſubſtantial food of their ſouls. And I asked what theſe two heads did mean? And he ſaid, The name of the one is Vain Glory, the name of the other is the marring and diſſipating of Religion.

The School-men and their frivolous queſtions deſcribed.

Alſo, concerning reformation of the Church, this Viſion he declareth: It happned as I was (ſaith he) in the ſame City in the Houſe of a certain Noble Man (a Britain) and was there ſpeaking with certain, I ſaw a croſs of ſilver very bright, much like to the Croſs of the Earl of Tholouſe. But the twelve Apoſtles, which did hang beſide the arm of the Croſs, were very vile, like the Apples which the Sea is wont to caſt up. And I ſaid, What is this Lord Jeſus? And the Spirit anſwered me, This Croſs which thou ſeeſt is the Church, which ſhall be clear and bright in pureneſs of life, and ſhall be heard and known all over through the ſhrill voyce of the preaching of ſincere verity. Then being troubled with the Apples, I asked what theſe Apples ſo vile did ſignifie? And he ſaid. It is the humiliation of the Church, &c.

The reformation of the Church pourtrayed.

This goſtly Man did foreſwarn (as in a certain Chronicle is declared) how God would puniſh the Simony and Avarice of the Clergy with ſuch a plague that Rivers ſhould run with blood, &c. It is ſaid, That there is remaining a great Volume of his Viſions which are not yet abroad; for theſe that be are but a brief extract out of his Viſions and Revelations.

The ſimony and avarice of the Clergy to be puniſhed.

After that we have thus long ſtrayed in theſe foreign ſtories of Frederick, and in the tractation of other matters pertaining to other Countries; now, after this ſufficient digreſſion, it is time that we return to our own Country again. Wherein following the continuation of time and courſe of the Church, we will now adjoyn to theſe good Fathers and Writers, the Hiſtory of the Learned Biſhop of Lincoln, named Robert Groſthead, a Man famouſly learned (as that time ſerved) in the three Tongues both Latine, Greek, and Hebrew, alſo in all Liberal Sciences; whoſe works and Sermons yet to this day are extant, which I have ſeen in the Queens Majeſties Library at Weſtminſter. Wherein is one ſpecial Sermon written and exhibited in four ſundry ſcrols to the Pope, and to other four Cardinals, beginning Dominus noſter Jeſus Chriſtus, &c. Nicolas Trivet in his Chronicle, writing of this Biſhop, affirmed that he was born in Suffolk, in the Dioceſs of Norfolk: who giving him the praiſe to be a Man of excellent wiſdom, of profound Doctrine, and an example of all vertue, witneſſeth that he being Maſter of Arts, wrote firſt a Commentary in librum poſteriorum of Ariſtotle. Alſo that he wrote tractations, De ſphæra, &c. de arte comput. and that he ſet forth divers Books concerning Philoſophy. Afterward being Doctor in Divinity, and expertly ſeen in all the three Tongues, drew out ſundry Treatiſes out of the Hebrew Glooſes, alſo tranſlated divers works out of the Greek, as namely the teſtament of the twelve Patriarchs, and the Books of Dionyſius, Commenting upon the new tranſlation with his own Gloſs, Hæc, illo. Many other Works and Volumes beſides were written by the ſaid Groſthead, as De oculo morali, De dotibus, De ceſſatione legalium, Parvuus Cato, Annotationes in Suidam, in Betium, De poteſtate Paſtorali, Expoſitiones in

Gen. in Lucam, with a number more, besides divers Epistles, Sermons, and invectives sent to the Pope for his unmeasureable Exactions, wherewith he overcharged and oppressed the Church of England.

This godly and learned Bishop, after divers conflicts and agonies sustained against the Bishop of Rome, after the example of Frederick, of Guliel. de Sancto amore, of Nicol. Gallus, and others after named, at length after great labors and travels of life finished his course, and departed at Bugden in the month of October, Anno. 1253. Of his decease thus writeth Matth. Pariſ. fol. 278. One of the priſon and baniſhment of this world (which he never loved) was taken the holy Biſhop of Lincoln Robert, at his Manor of Bugden in the Even of S. Dionyſe; who was an open reprover of the Pope and of the King, a rebuker of the Prelates, a corrector of the Monks, a directer of the Prieſts, an inſtructer of the Clerks, a ſautor of Scholers, a preacher to the people, a perſecutor of the Incontinent, a diligent ſearcher of the Scripture, a mall to the Romans, and a contemner of their doings, &c. Hæc Matth. What a mall he was to the Romans in the ſequel hereof (Chriſt willing) ſhall better appear. The ſtory is this:

The trouble of Robert Grosthead with the Pope.

It ſo befel among other daily and intolerable Exactions, wherein Pope Innocent was grievous and injurious (manifold ways) to the Realm of England, he had a certain Cousin or Nephew (ſo Popes were wont to call their Sons) named Frederick, being yet young and under years, whom the ſaid Innocent the Pope would needs prefer to be a Canon or Prebendary in the Church of Lincoln, in this time of Robert Biſhop of the ſaid Church; and upon the ſame directed down Letters to certain his factors here in England for the execution thereof. The Copy of which Letter by chance, yet not by chance, but by the opportune ſending of God, came to my hands, as I was penning this preſent ſtory, written in the reid of an old Parchment Book, and otherwiſe rare I ſuppoſe to be found; and it is this:

Which foreſaid Letter is thus in English.

Unto our beloved Sons the Archdeacon of Canterbury, and to Maſter Innocent our Scribe abiding in England. Greeting and Apoſtolical Benediction. Forſomuch as our well-beloved Son G. S. Euſtace Deacon Cardinal, upon our ſpecial commandment hath given and granted to our well-beloved Son Frederick de Lavavia (a Clerk and our Nephew) a Canonſhip in the Church of Lincoln with full power and grant of the ſame; inveſting him alſo corporally and preſently with his own Ring in the ſaid Canonſhip, to be from hence-forth Canon of Lincoln, and to have full power of the ſaid Canonſhip in the Church, and a Prebend when any ſhall fall in the Church of Lincoln: from that time, ſince which our former Letters of late, concerning this receiving and proviſion to be given to him in the ſaid Church, were preſented and exhibited to our Reverend Father the Biſhop of Lincoln, or elſe after the next avoiding the ſaid Prebendſhip to be reſerved to the Apoſtolical Donation, and to be given to him, making it void and fruſtrate if the ſaid Prebendſhip ſhall be given to any other Man beſide, and alſo denouncing the ſentence of Excommunication againſt all them that ſhall rebel and gainſay the ſame, as in the Letters of the ſaid Cardinal is more fully contained.

The Popes unreasonable Letter.

Excommunication uſed.

We therefore graciouſly inclined by the devout ſupplication of the ſaid Frederick, ratifying and gratefully approving that which hath been done by the ſaid Cardinal in the premiſſes, we thought good by the Authority Apoſtolical to confirm the ſame. Wherefore we give all commandments by our Letters Apoſtolical to your wiſdoms, that you will ſee the ſaid Frederick (or his Proctor in his behalf) to be really and corporally poſſeſſed in the ſaid Canonſhip or Prebend by our Authority, and alſo defend the ſaid party being therein poſſeſſed, denouncing the ſentence of Excommunication againſt all ſuch as ſhall withſtand the ſame, all manner of cuſtoms or Statutes to the contrary notwithſtanding, corroborated either with Oath, or confirmations of the See Apoſtolick, or by what ſtay or let ſoever; or whether that the ſaid Frederick be not preſent to take the Oath accuſtomed to be given for obſerving the cuſtoms of the ſaid Church, or whether it be given and granted by the ſaid See to the foreſaid Biſhop, or to the Chapter of the ſaid Church joyntly and ſeverally, or to what perſon or perſons elſe, that no Man by compulſion ſhould have admiſſion or proviſion for any perſon in their Church whereby they cannot be Interdicted, Suſpended, or Excommunicate by the Letters Apoſtolical obtained, or to be obtained hereafter, under what form or words ſoever; yea, although the whole tenor of the ſaid indulgence be inſerted word for word in the ſaid your Letters, or by any other indulgences to what perſon or perſons ſoever, of what eſtate, dignity or place ſoever, under any manner or or form of words, granted hereafter by the See Apoſtolick, by the which indulgences the effect of the ſaid proviſion may be by any manner of ways hindered or deferred: yet of our certain knowledge we will that they ſhall want their ſtrength in the proviſion made or to be made for the ſaid Frederick in the Church of Lincoln. And if any, upon the premiſſes or any of them, ſhall alledge againſt the foreſaid Frederick, or his procurator; that you will cauſe them to be cited on our behalf: ſo that they, being cited peremptorily, ſhall within the ſpace of two months of your citation, perſonally appear before us there according to the Law, to make anſwer to the ſaid Frederick upon the premiſes: any priviledges or indulgences whatſoever given and granted either generally to the Kingdom of England, or peculiarly to any other perſon of what ſtate, degree, and place ſoever, granted by the foreſaid See, under whatſoever manner and form of words for them not to be called up beyond the Sea, or out of their own City or Diocels by Letters Apoſtolical, under whatſoever form of words obtained, to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding. All which priviledges and indulgences, we will in no caſe ſhall ſtand in any force or effect to the ſaid parties. Moreover, the day and form of the Citation we will that ye faithfully do intimate unto us by your Letters containing the tenor thereof, and if both of you cannot be preſent at the execution hereof, yet we will notwithſtanding that one of you do execute the ſame without fail. Dated the 7*th.* Kal. February, the 10*th.* year of our Popedom.

As there is no Man which hath any eyes to ſee, but may eaſily underſtand in reading this Letter of the Pope, how unreaſonable his requeſt is, how impudently he commandeth, how proudly he threateneth, how wickedly he oppreſſeth and racketh the Church of God, in placing Boys and ſtrangers in the Miniſtry and cure of ſouls, and alſo in making them his Proviſors, to raven up the Church goods: ſo is it no great marvel, if this godly Biſhop Robert Groſthead was offended therewith; who, in my mind deſerveth herein a double commendation, not only that he ſo wifely did diſcern error from ſincerity and truth; but alſo that he was ſo hardly and conſtant to ſtand to the defence thereof againſt the Pope, according as in this his anſwer to the Pope again may appear, as followeth.

A double commendation of Bishop Grosthead.

The Anſwer of Robert Grosthead.

The answer of Robert Grosthead to the Pope.

SAlutem, Pleaſeth it your wiſdom to underſtand, That I am not diſobedient to any the Apoſtolick Precepts, but both devoutly and reverently with the natural affection of a Son obey the ſame, and alſo am an utter enemy to all thoſe that reſiſt ſuch Apoſtolick Precepts, as a Child zealous of his Fathers honour. And truly, I am no leſs than bound thereunto by the Precept and commandment of God. For the Apoſtolick Precepts are none other, nor can be, than conſonant and uniform to the Doctrine of the Apoſtles, and of our Saviour Chriſt being the Maſter and Lord of all the Apoſtles: whoſe type and perſon, ſpecially in the conſonant and uniform Hierarchy of the Church, the Lord Pope ſeemeth to bear the ſame, our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, ſaying, Whoſoever is not with me, the ſame is againſt me. Therefore, againſt him neither is nor can be the moſt divine ſanctity of the See Apoſtolical. The tenor then of your foreſaid Apoſtolical Letter is not conſonant to true ſanctity, but utterly diſſonant and diſagreeing to the ſame. Firſt, for that the clauſe of this your Letter, and many ſuch other Letters like, which clauſe always ye ſo much do urge (Non obſtante) induced and brought in upon no neceſſity of any natural Law to be obſerved, doth ſwarm and flow with all inconſtancy, boldneſs, pertinacy, impudency, lying, and deceiving, and is alſo a Sea of miſtruſt in giving credit to no Man. Which as it ſwarmeth with theſe, ſo in like manner with innumerable other vices which hang and depend upon the ſame: moving and diſturbing the purity of Chriſtian Religion and life agreeable to the ſame, as alſo the publick tranquility of Men. Moreover, next after the ſin of Lucifer (which ſhall be in the later time, to wit, of Antichriſt, the Child of Perdition, whom the Lord ſhall deſtroy with the breath of his mouth) there is not nor can be any kind of ſin ſo repugnant and contrary to the Doctrine of the Apoſtles and Holy Scripture, and to our Saviour Chriſt himſelf more hateful, deteſtable, and abominable, than to deſtroy and kill mens Souls, by defrauding them of the myſtery of the Paſtoral Office, which by the miniſtry of the Paſtoral cure ought to ſave and quicken the ſame. Which ſin by moſt evident places of the Scripture, ſuch Men are diſcerned and known to commit, which being in the authority of the Paſtoral Dignity, do ſerve their own carnal deſires and neceſſaries with the benefit of the Milk and Wool of the Sheep and flock of Chriſt, and do not miniſter the ſame Paſtoral Office and charge to the benefit and ſalvation of thoſe their ſheep. The ſame therefore by the teſtimony of the Scriptures is not the adminiſtration of the paſtoral miniſtry, but the killing and deſtruction of the ſheep. And that theſe two kind of vices be moſt vile and wicked (although after a differing ſort) and far exceeding all other kind of wickedneſs hereby it is manifeſt: for that the ſame are directly contrary to two vertues moſt chiefly good (although differing in themſelves) and unlike together. For that is called moſt wicked, which is contrary to a thing moſt good. So much then as lyeth in the offenders, the one of their offences is directly againſt the Deity, which of himſelf is always eſſentially and ſupernaturally good; the other is againſt the deification and the image of God in Man, which is not always, but by the participation of Gods lightſome Grace, eſſentially and naturally good. And forſomuch as in things being good, the cauſe of good is better than the effect; and like as again in evil things, the cauſe of evil is worſe than the effect of evil proceeding thereof: hereby it is manifeſt, that the inducers of ſuch wicked deſtroyers of Gods image and deification in the ſheep of Chriſt (that is, the Church of God) are worſe than thoſe chief deſtroyers, to wit, Lucifer and Antichriſt.

And as in theſe degrees of wickedneſs how much more excellent ſuch be, who having a great charge committed to them of God (to edification and not to deſtruction) the more are they bound to keep away and exclude ſuch wicked deſtroyers from the Church of God: ſo much is it alſo off, that this holy ſeat Apoſtolical, to whom the Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath given all manner of power (to edification, as the Apoſtle ſaith, and not to deſtruction) can command, or will go about any ſuch thing, urging unto ſo great wickedneſs, ſo odious, deteſtable and abominable to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and alſo ſo pernitious to mankind. For this holy ſeat a great defection, corruption and abuſe of the ſaid ſeat and fulneſs of power, and an utter ſeparation from the glorious Throne of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and a near neighbourhood unto the two moſt principal Princes of darkneſs, ſitting in the Chair of Peſtilence, prepared to the pains of Hell. Neither can any Man, which is ſubject and faithful to the ſaid See (and not cut away from the body of Chriſt, and from the ſaid Holy See) with ſincere and unfpotted Conſcience obey ſuch manner of precepts and commandments, or whatſoever other attempts proceeding, yea, though from the high order of Angels themſelves, but rather ought of neceſſity with all their ſtrength to withſtand and rebel againſt the ſame. Wherefore my Reverend Lord, I, like an obedient Child, upon my bound duty of obedience and fidelity which I owe to both the * parents of this Holy Apoſtolick See, and partly for love of unity in the body of Chriſt joyned with the ſaid See, do not obey but withſtand and utterly rebel againſt theſe things in the ſaid Letter contained, and eſpecially which urge and tend to the foreſaid wickedneſs, ſo abominable to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſo repugnant to the Holineſs of the Holy Apoſtolick See, and ſo contrary to the unity of the Catholick Faith. Neither for this cauſe can your diſcretion determine any extremity to me, becauſe all my doing and gain-ſaying in this matter is no reſiſtance nor rebellion, but a childly obedience to the divine preecpt, and honor due both to * Father and Mother. Briefly therefore repeating my words I ſay, That this Holy Apoſtolick See cannot do any thing but to edification, and nothing at all to deſtruction: for this is the fulneſs of power, to be able to do all things to edification. But theſe which you call proviſions be not to edification, but to manifeſt deſtruction. The Holy Apoſtolick See therefore neither can nor ought to attempt any ſuch thing; becauſe that fleſh and blood, which cannot enter into the Kingdom of God, hath revealed the ſame, and not the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt which is in Heaven.

Power given to Miniſters to edification only, not to deſtruction.

* He meaneth either Chriſt and the Church or elſe Peter and Paul.

* Patres, both to Chriſt and his Church.

Ex Mat. Par. vid. ed. vet. fum.

Then followeth it in the ſtory both of Matth. Pariſienſis, and of Florilegus, in theſe words: That when this Epiſtle came to the knowledge of the Pope, he, fuming and fretting with anger and indignation, anſwered with a fierce look and proud mind, ſaying; What old doting frantick wretch is this, ſo boldly and raſhly to judge of my doings? By ſweet S. Peter and Paul, were it not but that upon our own clemency and good nature we are reſtrained, we ſhould hurl him down to fuch confuſion, that we would make him a fable, a gazing ſtock, an example and wonderment to all the world. For is not the King of England our Vaſſal? and to ſay more, our Mancipal or Page (to uſe the very words of mine Author) which may at our pleaſure and beck both hamper him, impriſon him, and put him to utter ſhame? Thus when the Pope in his great fury and rage had uttered amongſt his Brethren the Cardinals, who were fcarce able to appeaſe the furious violence of the Pope, with mild moderation of words they ſaid unto him; That it was not expedient for them to proceed againſt that Biſhop in ſuch rigorous manner. For, ſaid they, to conſeſs the truth to your Holineſs, it is but very truth that he affirmeth, neither can we condemn him therefore. He is a Catholick Man, yea, alſo a Holy Man; more Holy and alſo Religious than we our ſelves; a Man of excellent wit and excellent life; ſo as it is thought, among all the Prelates he hath not his better, nor yet his like. This is not unknown both to the French and Engliſh Clergy univerſally, neither can our contradiction prevail againſt him. The truth of this his Epiſtle perhaps is known now to many, and ſhall ſtir up many againſt us: for he hath the name to be a great Philoſopher, and ſingularly ſeen in all the tongues, both Greek, Latine, and Hebrew: zealous in Juſtice, a reader of Divinity in the Schools, a preacher amongſt the people, a lover of Chaſtity, and a perſecutor of Simony. Theſe words ſpake L. Giles a Spaniſh Cardinal to the Pope, and others more, moved by their Conſcience to ſpeak. And this counſel they gave to the Pope, That he ſhould diſſemble and wink at theſe things, as one not ſeeing or regarding them; leſt otherwiſe perhaps ſome tumult might riſe and ſpring thereof: eſpecially being this a manifeſt and known to all Men, that once muſt needs come a defection and parting from the Church of Rome.

Well ſeen maſter Pope.

Giles Cardinal defendeth Robert Groſthead to the Pope.

Not long after this (about the Canicular days) this Reverend and godly Robert Biſhop of Lincoln, lying at his Manor place in Bugden, fell grievouſly ſick; and thereupon within few days departed. In the time of his ſickneſs he called to him a certain Frier of the preaching Order, named M. John Giles, a Man expert and cunning both in Phyſick and Divinity; partly to receive of him ſome comfort of his body, and partly to confer with him in ſpiritual matters. Thus upon a certain day, the ſaid Biſhop conferring with the foreſaid M. John, and reciting to him the doings and proceedings of the Pope, did grievouſly rebuke and reprehend his fellow Brethren the preaching Friers, and the other Order alſo of the Minorits; That forſomuch as their Order being planted in willful poverty of the ſpirit, to the intent that they ſhould more freely carp and reprove the vices of the mighty, and not to flatter or ſpare them, but ſharply to rebuke and reprehend the ſame: the ſaid Friers contrary to their profeſſion did not boldly enough cry out and inveigh againſt the abuſes of their ſuperiours and men of power; nor did uncover nor deteſt their faults and wickedneſs; and therefore, ſaid the Biſhop, I judge them to be no better than manifeſt Hereticks. And he addeth moreover, (demanding of M. John) what is Hereſie? and that he ſhould give him the true definition thereof. Whereat when the Frier did ſtay and pauſe, not remembring the ſolemn definition of that matter; the Biſhop thereupon inferreth, giving this definition in Latine by the true interpretation of the Greek word: Hereſis Græce, electio, Latine, eſt ſententia humano ſenſu electa, Scripturæ Sacræ contraria, palam docta, pertinaciter defenſa. That is, Hereſie is a ſentence taken and choſen of Mans own brain, contrary to Holy Scripture, openly maintained, and ſtiffly defended. And this definition given, conſequently he inferred, ſharply reprehending the Prelates of the Church, but eſpecially the Romans, which commit the charge of ſouls unto their Kinſfolks, being both in Age unworthy, and in Learning unſufficient. To give (ſaith he) the charge of ſouls unto a Boy, is a ſentence of a Prelate choſen and taken of Mans own head, only for carnal and earthly reſpect, and alſo is contrary to Holy Scripture, the which forbiddeth any ſuch to be made Miniſters or Paſtors, which are not ſufficient to drive away the wolves. And moreover it is alſo openly maintained, becauſe it is manifeſtly born abroad and commanded, with Charts imbulled both with Wax and Lead; and finally, it is ſtiffly defended. For if any Man ſhall dare to preſume to withſtand the ſame, he is ſuſpended and Excommunicated, and open War cryed out againſt him: therefore to whom the whole definition of an Heretick doth agree, he is a very Heretick. But every faithful Chriſtian man ought to ſet himſelf againſt an Hereticke as much as he may. Wherefore, he that can reſiſt him and doth not, he ſinneth, and ſeemeth to be a fautor thereof, according to the ſaying of Gregory; He lacketh not Conſcience of ſecret ſociety, which ceaſeth to reſiſt open impiety. But the Friers both Franciſcans and Dominicks are moſt chiefly bound to withſtand ſuch, ſeeing both of them have the gift of preaching committed to them by their Office, and be more apt to the ſaid Office, by reaſon of their poverty: and therefore they do not only offend in not reſiſting ſuch, but alſo are to be counted maintainers of the ſame, according to the ſentence of the Apoſtle to the Romans, ſaying, Not only they which commit ſuch things, but alſo they that conſent are worthy of death. Wherefore it may be concluded, That as well the Pope (unleſs he ceaſe from that vice) as alſo the ſame Friers, unleſs they ſhew themſelves more earneſt and ſtudious in repelling the ſame, are both worthy of death, that is, perpetual Damnation. Item, ſaith the Canon Decretal, That upon this vice of Hereſie the Pope both may and ought to be accuſed.

The Pope proved here inſufficient.

The ſaying of Gregory.

The Pope accuſed for maintaining of Hereſie.

After this the vehemency of his diſeaſe more and more increaſing, and becauſe the nights were ſomething longer; the third night before his departure, the Biſhop, feeling his infirmity to grow upon, willed certain of his Clergy to be called to him, thereby to be refreſhed with ſome conference or communication. Unto whom the Biſhop mourning and lamenting in his mind for the loſs of ſouls, through the avarice of the Popes Court, ſaid on this wiſe, as by certain Apheariſms.

Item, Chriſt came into the world to ſave and win ſouls; Ergo, He that feareth not to deſtroy ſouls, may he not worthily be counted Antichriſt?

Certain Apheariſms or Articles laid of Robert Groſthead againſt the Biſhop of Rome.

2. The Lord created the whole world in ſix days, but in reſtoring of Man he laboured more than thirty years. Wherefore he that is a deſtroyer of that, about which the Lord ſo long laboured, is not he worthy to be counted the enemy of God, and Antichriſt?

3. The Pope thereto not impadently to annihilate and diſannul the privileges of his Holy predeceſſors, of Roman Biſhops, by this obſtacle (Non obſtante) which is not done without the prejudice and manifeſt injury of them. For in ſo doing he doth reprove and deſtroy that which ſo many and ſo Holy Men have builded up before, and thus ſeemeth he to be a contemner of the Saints. Worthily therefore he that contemneth ſhall be contemned, according to the ſaying of Eſay; Woe to thee that doſt deſpiſe, for ſhalt not thou thy ſelf be deſpiſed? And who ſhall keep his priviledges, which ſo breaketh the priviledges of others?

The Pope accuſed of his wicked Canon, for the which, &c.

4. The Pope anſwering thereunto, thus defendeth perhaps his error: He that is equal, hath no ſuperiority over his equal; Therefore, no Pope hath power to bind me, being Pope as well as he. To this anſwer again, (quoth him the Biſhop) It ſeemeth to me, that he that now preſently is ſailing in the dangerous Seas of this World, and he that is ſafely arrived in the haven, having paſt all jeopardies, are not both like and equal. Grant that ſome Popes be ſaved (God forbid any ſhould ſay contrary) Then ſaith our Saviour, He that is leaſt in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than John Baptiſt, a greater than whom did never riſe amongſt the Children of Men. Is not therefore ſome Pope greater, being a giver and confirmer of priviledges, than this that is alive? Truly methinks, he is greater, therefore he hath dominion over his inferior.

The Pope accuſed for anſwering more than his due to him, and proved not to be equal but inferior to his predeceſſors.

5. Doth not the Pope thus ſay ſpeaking of all his predeceſſors for the moſt part? This our predeceſſor, and this our predeceſſor of moſt worthy memory, &c. And again, We

The Pope accuſed for undoing the acts and foundations of his predeceſſors.

{KING} {Hen. 3}

Proved that the Pope in his Bulls infer to his predeceſſors before him, and therefore to have no authority to infringe the Priviledges of other Popes.

Proved by the example of Rome, that men more ancient in time, ought to be preferred in higher reverence.

The Pope accuſed for maintaining of Uſury.

Againſt Uſury.

The crafty practice of Uſurers.

The Popes Uſurers worſe than the Jews.

Crafty Subtility of the Pope to get money.

Men ſigned to the Holy Land, ſold for money by the Pope.

Remiſſion often ſold for money.

We (ſaith he) cleaving, or following the ſteps of our predeceſſors, &c. And why then do ſuch Popes as come after, deſtroy theſe Foundations which their predeceſſors have laid?

6. Many Apoſtolick men coming after, have confirmed ſome Priviledge being granted by others; and be not many Biſhops, being already ſaved by the Grace of God, to be counted greater and better than one Biſhop which hath not yet attained, but ſtandeth in danger to obtain that which the other have got already?

7. Alſo other former Fathers and Biſhops of the Apoſtolical See, in preferment of time, go before the others which in time come after. And thoſe whom the eſtimation of ancient time doth advance, ſuch are we bound to eſteem and to have in more reverence. This did the holy man Benedict well conſider; who in his rule preferreth ſuch as came firſt in time, whatſoever men they were before them, which (albeit being more ancient in years) came after them into the order, and commandeth them to be their Superiors, and to have the Preheminence. Which being ſo (as it is true and certain) how cometh then this injurious and raſh preſumption, which dare repeal and diſannul the old Priviledges of many ancient holy Biſhops, in time and in reverence going before them?

8. Moreover, and though many Popes have been grievous to the Church, yet this Pope moſt ſpecially hath brought it moſt into ſervitude, and manifold ways hath damnified the ſame. For theſe Caurſini, theſe open Uſurers, whom our holy fore-Fathers and Doctors, whom we have ſeen, and namely our learned Maſter in France Preacher; alſo the Abbat of Flay a Ciſtercian, Maſter Jacobus de veteri, and Maſter Stephen, Archbiſhop of Canterbury in the time of his baniſhment, and alſo Maſter Robert Curcum, with his Preaching baniſhed out of France (for before that time theſe kind of Uſurers were never known in England) the ſame Caurſini, theſe wicked Uſurers, I ſay, were by this Pope induced, ſupported and maintained; ſo that if any do ſpeak againſt them, he is miſerably tofted and trounſed for his labour, whereof partly Roger Biſhop of London hath ſome experience.

9. The world doth know, that Uſury is counted a deteſtable thing in both the Teſtaments, and is forbidden of God. But now the Popes Uſurers or Exchangers, the very Jews crying out againſt them, being openly ſuffered in London to exerciſe their Uſury, to the great damage and detriment of all Eccleſiaſtical perſons, but eſpecially Houſes of Religion, compelling ſuch as be in poverty to counterfeit and to put to their Seals to forged writings, which is no leſs than to commit Idolatry and to abrenounce the verity which is God himſelf. As for example: I borrow an hundred Marks for a Year, inſtead of a hundred pounds; I am compelled, to make my Writing and to Seal the ſame, confeſſing that I have received and borrowed one hundred pounds, to be repaid again at the years end to ſuch a man, &c. And if it ſhall chance that your occupying be ſuch, that within a month you bring again the principal to the Popes Uſurer, he will receive no leſs notwithſtanding, than his full hundred pounds: which condition of Uſury is much worſe than that of the Jews. For to the Jew what principal you bring, he will require no more than proportionably for the commenſuration of ſo much time, wherein his money hath been out of his hands.

10. Moreover, we have ſeen and known the Pope to have given in charge and commandment to the Friers, Preachers, and Minorites, to inquire diligently for ſuch as be ſick and like to die; and ſo coming to them diligently to perſwade them to make their Wills and Teſtaments favourably to the profit and ſubſidy of the Holy Land, and to take the Croſs upon them; that if they do amend, they may wring them in the Law; and if they die, they may wreſt the money from their Executors.

11. We have known likewiſe and ſeen men, that have taken the Vow and Sign of the Croſs upon them, to be ſold unto Lay-men as Sheep and Oxen were wont in time paſt to be ſold in the Temple.

We have ſeen with our eyes the Popes Letter, in which we have found this to be written: That they, which bequeath any thing to the behoof or ſubſidy of the Holy Land, ſhall receive ſo much indulgence as they have diſburſed money.

The Pope accuſed for violent extortion.

The Pope accuſed for troubling and corrupting learned men of the Spirituality with Temporal affairs.

The Pope accuſed for unlawful Diſpenſations.

12. Over and beſides all this, the Pope in divers and ſundry his Letters hath willed and commanded Prelates to receive into Eccleſiaſtical Benefices, and to provide ſome ſuch Living in their Churches, as ſhall be ſufficient to ſuch and ſuch a ſtranger (being both abſent and alſo unworthy) which have neither Learning, nor yet the Language of the Country: whereby they are neither able to Preach, nor to hear Confeſſions, nor to keep reſidence to refreſh the poor and way-farers.

The Pope accuſed to be iniurious to Churches in his proviſions and reſervations.

13. Item, We know and have ſeen our ſelves, that the Pope hath written to the Abbot of St. Albans to provide for one called John de Cameſano, whom we never ſaw, ſome competent Benefice. Whereupon, in few days after, when proviſion was made for him in a certain Church, worth forty Marks by the year and more, the party being not therewith contented, complained to the Pope, who then writing to the foreſaid Abbot, commanded him to provide for the foreſaid M. John ſome better thing, reſerving notwithſtanding the gift of the former Benefice to himſelf.

The Pope accuſed to be iniurious to the Abbot of St. Albans.

14. Again, not long after came alſo to the Houſe of the foreſaid Abbot, two other perſons like begging Vagabonds, bringing with them the Popes Letters: in the tenor whereof the Abbot was commanded, that, incontinently upon the ſight thereof, he ſhould give and diſburſe to the ſaid perſons for the expedition and diſpatch of his Affairs ten Marks in hand, without any delay or ſticking: the which perſons uttering unto the Abbot proud and threatning words, he was fain to agree with them and ſend them away.

15. Item, Of men which are both holy and well Learned, which have left the world for the following of God in ſuch order as they ought not to turn back again, the Pope maketh his Tolners and Bankers to get in his money: the which charge they are compelled againſt their wills to take upon them, leſt they ſhould ſeem to be diſobedient, and ſo of Spiritual men are made more ſecular than the moſt ſecular. And ſo the buſineſs of their Chimmers and Scapillers, which they wear, doth prove them to be Lyers; whilſt under the habit of poverty and humiliation there lurketh the ſpirit of pride and elation. And becauſe no Legate may be ſent into England, but being firſt required of the King, the Pope ſendeth Sophiſtical Legates, and ſuch as be diſguiſed and counterfeit in Apparel, and are guarded with great might and power; neither is it hard to bring forth examples thereof: For ſo many ſuch daily do come into the Realm, that to hear the names of them recited, it would be tedious for any man to hear.

16. Furthermore (as we have ſeen our ſelves) the Pope granteth for ſecular favour, that a man may have a Biſhoprick, and yet be no Biſhop Conſecrated, Sed electus ſempiternus, that is, Elect for ever. Which is as much to ſignify, to have the Milk and the Wool of the Sheep and not to keep the Wolves away from the Sheep; to retain the Rents of a Biſhop, and not diſcharge the Function of a Biſhop.

The Pope accuſed for granteth of ſuch things.

And when this godly Biſhop had thus reproved theſe and ſuch other deteſtable enormities of the Court of Rome: as all kinds of Avarice, their Uſury, their Simony, their Extortion, all kinds of filthineſs, fleſhly Luſt, gluttony, and their ſumptuous Apparel raigning in that Court; then ſaith he, this old Verſe may be truly verified upon it:

Ejus avaritiæ totus non ſufficit orbis,
Ejus luxuriæ meretrix non ſufficit omnis.

All the world cannot ſuffice their greedy covetous mind. Nor all the drabs & naughty packs their filthy luſting kind.

Afterwards he went about more to proſecute, how the foreſaid Court, like a Gulf never ſatisfied (ever gaping ſo wide, that the flood of Jordan might run into his mouth) aſpired how to uſurp the Goods of them that die unteſted, and of Legacies bequeathed without form of Law; and whereby more licentiouſly to bring this to paſs, they uſed to joyn the King to be fellow and partaker with them in their Spoils, Extortions, and Robbing. Neither, ſaith he, ſhall the Church be delivered from the ſervitude of Egypt but by violence and force, and with the bloody Sword. And albeit, ſaith he, theſe be yet but light matters, yet ſhortly more great and grievous things than theſe ſhall be ſeen.

Ex Mat. Paris.

And

The death of Robert Grosthead Bishop of Lincoln.

And in the end of this his prophesying, which he scarcely could utter without sighing, sobbing, and weeping, his Tongue and Breath began to fail, and so, the Organ of his Voice being stopped, he made an end both of his Speech and Life. Ex Matthæo Pariſi.

And forasmuch as mention hath been made before of the insatiable Avarice of the Popes Court by his inordinate provisions and reservations, it is telliſied by the said Author Matthew Paris, that the foresaid Robert Grosthead, being Bishop of Lincoln, caused to be viewed and considered diligently of his Clerks, what the Revenues of Foreiners and Strangers within England, sent in by the Pope, came to by the year; and it was found and evidently tried, that this Pope now prefent, Innocentius the fourth, did impoveriſh the Universal Church throughout Chriſtendom, more than all his predeceſſors from the time the Pope firſt began. So that the Revenues of Foreiners and Clerks, placed by him here in England, mounted unto the ſum of Threeſcore and ten thouſand Marks and above, whereas the meer Revenues of the Crown came not to Thirty thouſand.

Ex Ceſtrenſis lib. 7.

Of this Robert Grosthead writeth Ceſtrenſis in his ſeventh Book of his Hiſtory, that partly for that it grieved him to ſee the intolerable exactions of the Pope in this Realm; and partly becauſe he refuſed to admit a certain young Nephew of the Pope to be Canon of his Church (as hath been before recited) he therefore writing unto the Pope, and ſignifying that he could not admit any ſuch perſons into his Church, which neither knew themſelves nor the Tongue of the people, nor the charges committed unto them, was called up to Rome, and there Excommunicated, who, then appealing from the Pope, ſhortly after departed, which was in the year of our Lord 1253. It chanced within two years after his deceaſe, the ſaid Pope Innocent being aſleep, a certain Biſhop, apparelled Biſhop-like, appeared unto him, and ſtriking him with his ſtaff on the left-ſide, ſaid, Surge miſer, veni in judicium: that is, Riſe wretch and come to thy judgment. The next day after, the Pope was found amazed, as a man ſtricken on the ſide with the ſtroke of a ſtaff. This Robert though he was greatly commended for his Sanctimony, and as Ceſtrenſis ſaith, for his miracles; yet was he not permitted in the Court of Rome to be inſcribed in the Catalogue of Saints. And thus much out of Ceſtrenſis concerning this matter. But Mat. Paris, and the Author of Flores Hiſtoriarum, proſecuting this ſtory more at large, addeth this more unto it, and ſaith, That Pope Innocent the next year following, which was Ann. 1254. being paſſing angry, contrary to the mind of his Brethren the Cardinals, would have the Bones of the foreſaid Biſhop of Lincoln caſt out of the Church, and purpoſed to bring him into ſuch ſpite and hatred of the people, that he ſhould be counted an Ethnick, a Rebel, and diſobedient perſon through the whole world. And thereupon cauſed his Letters to be written and ſent down to the King of England, knowing that the King would gladly ſerve him therein, to have the ſpoil of the Biſhop and of his Church. But in the Night following the ſaid Biſhop of Lincoln appeared unto him as coming in his Pontificalibus, and with a ſevere countenance, ſtern look, and terrible voice ſpeaking unto him being in his reſt, and ſmiting him on the ſide with a vehement ſtroke, with the end of his Croſs-ſtaff, thus ſaid, O thou ſcurvy, lazy, old, bald, louſie, wretched, doting Pope; haſt thou purpoſed to caſt my Bones out of the Church to the ſhame and ſlander of me? How cometh this raſh wilfulneſs in thy head? It were more meet for thee being thus advanced by God, and honoured, to make much of the zealous ſervants of God, although departed. The Lord will not ſuffer thee henceforth to have any more power over me. I have written unto thee in the ſpirit of Humility and Love, that thou ſhouldſt correct thy manifold errors; but thou with a proud eye and diſdainful heart haſt deſpiſed my wholſome Admonitions. Wo to thee that deſpiſeſt, ſhalt not thou alſo be deſpiſed? And ſo the Biſhop departing from the Pope, ſtricken, as is ſaid, on the ſide, left him for half dead, and ſo lying in ſorrow and lamentation. Whereupon his Chamberlains being amazed, hearing theſe things, came running to the Pope to know what him ailed. To whom the Pope much troubled and vexed in his ſpirit, ſaid, That great terrors in his ſleep vehemently diſturbed and moleſted him, in ſuch ſort that he thought he ſhould never recover it, nor be reſtored to himſelf again. Oh (ſaid he) how ſore is my ſide, and how eagerly it vexeth me, as being run through with a Spear! Neither did the Pope eat or drink all that day, but fainting himſelf to be ſick of a burning Ague, kept in. And yet the indignation of the ireful hand of God (ſaith the ſtory) ſo left him not.

The Pope ſtriken with the ſtaff of Grosthead Biſhop of Lincoln.

Ex Mat. Pariſ. Ex Flor. Hiſt. Reſtabatis pro miſere: ſic ore.

The Popes new and true ſtile given by Grosthead Biſhop of Lincoln.

{KING Hen. 3} The Pope diſquieted in his mind.

For after theſe wholeſome Admonitions given to him by the Servant of God, the Pope not regarding them, but all fet upon War, ſuppreſſion of his Enemies, and ſecular Affairs, gave his mind wholly unto them; and yet all his labours, counſels, and expences beſtowed upon them, could never proſper after that day in that he went about. For the Pope, the ſame time having War with the Apulians, all his Army, fighting under the Popes Nephew their Captain, were ſlain and confounded to the number of many thouſands: whoſe lamentable ſlaughter all the Country of the Romans did much bewail. The Pope, not yet quiet in his mind, directeth his journy towards Naples, although ſore vexed in his ſide like a man ſick of a Pliriſie, or ſmitten rather with a Spear, neither could any Phyſick of his Cardinals help him. For Robert of Lincoln (ſaith the ſtory) did not ſpare him; and he that would not hear him gently correcting him being alive, his ſtripes did he feel when he was dead; ſo that he never after that enjoyed any lucky or proſperous day, till the time of his death, nor yet any proſperous or quiet Night until the Morning. And ſo continued he unto his death, which ſhortly after inſued, he being at Naples, An. 1255. or as N. Trivet Recordeth, An. 1254. And thus have ye the whole Diſcourſe between Robert Grosthead and Pope Innocent.

The revenge of God upon Pope Innocent.

The Popes Army vanquiſhed and confounded

In the which ſtory is to be noted, gentle Reader, that although in the ſtory of Ceſtrenſis, of Matthew Paris, and of Flor. Hiſt. it is expreſly teſtified and reported, that the Pope was ſmitten with the ſtaff of Robert the foreſaid Biſhop of Lincoln; yet thou muſt wiſely underſtand, that howſoever Gods hand dealeth here in this world in puniſhing his Enemies, or howſoever the image of things not ſeen but fantaſied, offer themſelves to the ſecret cogitation of man, his Senſes being aſleep, by the operation or permiſſion of God, working, after ſome Spiritual influence in our imaginations, certain it is, that no dead man materially can ever ariſe again or appear before the Judgment-day, to any man with his ſtaff or without his ſtaff, to work any feat, after he have once departed this life.

After the death of this Robert Groſthead, Biſhop of Lincoln, great diſſention fell between the Archbiſhop of Canterbury Boniface, and the Canons of the ſaid Church of Lincoln, about the right of giving Prebendſhips, and about the Revenues of the ſaid Church, in the time of the Biſhops See being now vacant. Which right and power the Archbiſhop claimed to himſelf, but the Canons of that Church (maintaining the contrary ſide) ſtood againſt him, and for the ſame were Excommunicated of the Archbiſhop. Among whom one Maſter Woolf reſiſting the Archbiſhop to the face, in the name of all the other Canons, made up his Appeal to Rome, where much mony on both ſides was ſpent. The Popes Donation preferred before the Kings.

theſe Jews moreover King Henry the ſame year, 1255, exacted to be given unto him Eight thouſand Marks in pain of hanging. Who, being much grieved therewith, and complaining that the King went about their deſtruction, deſired leave to be given them of the King, that they might depart the Realm, never to return again. But the King committed the doing of that matter unto Earl Richard his Brother, to inforce them to pay the mony whether they would or no. Moreover of the ſame Jews mention is made in the ſtory Intituled Eulogium. Of the Jews in Northampton, who had among themſelves prepared wildfire, to burn the City of London; for the which divers of them were taken, and burned in the time of Lent, in the ſaid City of Northampton, which was two years before, about the year of our Lord 1253. Ex Eulogio. And forſomuch as mention here is made of the Jews, I cannot omit what ſome Engliſh ſtories write of a certain Jew, who not long after this time, about the year of our Lord 1257, fell into a Privy at Teukeſbury upon a Sabbath-day; which, for the great reverence he had to his holy Sabath, would not ſuffer himſelf to be plucked out. And ſo Lord Richard Earl of Gloceſter, hearing thereof, would not ſuffer him to be drawn out on Sunday for reverence of the Holy day. And thus the wretched ſuperſtitious Jew, remaining there till Monday, was found dead in the Dung.

And to note the blind ſuperſtition of that time, not only among the Jews, but alſo among the Chriſtians; to omit divers other ſtories, as of Walter Gray Archbiſhop of York, who coming up to the Parliament at London, Anno 1255, with unordinate faſting did ſo over-charge Nature, and pined himſelf, and (as the ſtory mentioneth) did ſo dry up his Brain, that he loſing thereby all Appetite of Stomach, going to Fulham, there within three days died, as in the Compiler of Flor. Hiſt. is both ſtoried and reprehended. Let this alſo be adjoyned, which the fore-named Author, and in the ſame year is Recorded of one named Peter Chaceporee, who dying in France, An. 1255, left in bequeſt of his Teſtament 600 Marks for Lands to be purchaſed to the Houſe of Morton for God to be ſerved there perpetually, Pro anima ejus, & omnium fidelium; that is, For his Soule health, and all faithful Souls. As, who would ſay, Chriſtian-Faith were not the ordinary means ſufficient to Salvation of Faithful Souls, without the Quireſervice of the Monks of Morton.

Ye have heard it often complained of before, how the uſurped power of the Pope hath violently and preſumptuouſly incroached upon the Church of England, in giving and conferring Benefices and Prebends to his Italians and Strangers, to the great damage and ruine of Chriſts flock manifold ways. This violent injury and oppreſſion of the Pope, as by no Lawful and gentle means it could be reformed; ſo by occaſion and means inordinate, about this time it began ſomewhat to be bridled. The matter whereof was this, as it is in the Collector of Flor. Hiſt. recited: In the year of the Reign of this King fourty and four, the Biſhop of London, named Fulco, had given a certain Prebend in the Church of St. Paul, to one Maſter Ruſtandus, the Popes Meſſenger here in England. Who entring into the Proſeſſion of the Gray-Friers, and ſhortly after dying on the other ſide of the Sea, the Pope immediately conferred the ſaid Prebend to one of his ſpecials, a like ſtranger as the other was before. About the ſame inſtant it befel, that the Biſhop alſo of London deceaſed, whereby the Biſhopſick now vacant fell into the Kings hands; who, hearing of the death of the forenamed Ruſtandus, gave the ſaid Prebendſhip, given of the Pope before, to one John Crakehale his under-treaſurer, who with all Solemnity took his inſtallation, not knowing as yet that it was beſtowed of the Pope before. It was not long after, as time grew, but this being noiſed at Rome, forthwith cometh down a certain Proctor, named John Gras, with the Popes Embulled Letters, to receive the Collation of the Benefice, by his Commiſſion procuratory given by the Pope, wherein John Crakehale had been already inſtalled, as is aforeſaid, by the Kings Donation. This matter coming in Traverſe before Boniface Archbiſhop of Canterbury; he inquiring and ſearching which Donation was the firſt, and finding the Popes Grant to be the former, gave Sentence with him againſt the King; ſo that in concluſion, the Roman Clerk had the advantage of the Benefice, although the other had long enjoyed the poſſeſſion thereof before. Thus the Popes man being preferred, and the Engliſh man excluded, after the party had been inveſted and ſtalled after the uſe and manner; he thinking himſelf to be in ſure poſſeſſion of his place, attempted with the reſt to enter the Chapter-Houſe, but was not permitted ſo to do: whereupon the Popes Clerk, giving place to force and number, went toward the Archbiſhop to complain. This being known, certain Recluſes purſued him; and he being ſo compaſſed about, one in the thickneſs of the throng, being never after known, ſuddenly ruſhing upon him, a little above his Eyes, ſo pareth off his Head, that he fell down dead; the ſame alſo was done to another of his fellows in flying away. This horrible murder being famed abroad, ſtrait inquiry thereof was made, but the deed doer could not be known; and although great ſuſpition was laid upon Crakehale the Kings Chaplain, yet no proof could be brought. But moſt men thought, that bloody Fact to be done by certain Ruffians or other light perſons about the City or the Court, diſdaining be-like that the Romans were ſo enriched with Engliſhmens Livings, by whom neither came relief to any Engliſhman, nor any godly inſtruction to the flock of Chriſt. And therefore becauſe they ſaw the Church and Realm of England in ſuch ſubjection, and ſo much to be troden down by the Romans and the Popes Meſſengers: they thought thereby ſomething to bridle, as with a ſnaffle, the Popes Meſſengers from their untemperate ranging into this Land. Ex Flor. Hiſt.

Two Roman Clerks going to com, into, were ſlain by the way.

Here by the way is to be noted, that, unto the death of this foreſaid Fulco Biſhop of London, continueth the Hiſtory of Mat. Paris Monk of St. Albons, which was to the year of Grace 1260. The reſidue was continued by another Monk of the ſame Houſe, but not with ſuch like commendation, worthy to make any authentick ſtory; as I have ſeen it noted in a written Book.

The ſtory of Mat. Paris with the craft th here craſteth

It were too curious and tedious in order to proſecute what happened in every year, through this Kings Reign; as how it was provided by the King, that whoſoever could diſpend fifteen pounds Land by the year, ſhould be bound to make to the King a Soldier, that watch ſhould be kept every night in Cities; that whoſoever was robbed, or otherwiſe damnified in any Country, he that had the cuſtody ſhould be compelled to make up the loſs again, or elſe to purſue the malefactor, which was An. 1253, witneſſing Flores Hiſt. Item, how the King making his Voyage into Vaſcon, his expences were reckoned to amount to 270000 Marks, beſide 30000 Marks beſtowed upon his Brethren by the Mothers-ſide, and beſides other great gifts given abroad. By reaſon whereof, great Taxes, and Tolonies, and Tenths were required of his Subjects; eſpecially of the Church-men, who, being wont to receive Tithes of others, now were conſtrained to give Tithes to the Laity: Flores Hiſt. Anno 1254. Item, how in the year next following, the Londoners offering one hundred pounds for a gift to the King, with a precious Cup of Gold, at his return out of France, were ſhortly after compelled by the King to pay three thouſand Marks for the eſcape of a certain Priſoner, being a Clerk condemned; which Clerk being granted of the King to the Biſhop, and he having no Priſon ſufficient for him, borrowed of the Londoners the Priſon of Newgate; to have him kept in, who eſcaping thereout, they, as is ſaid, were demanded this reſompence aforeſaid, Anno 1255. Item, how the King, greatly complaining of his Debts the ſame year, required the whole Tenths, which ſhould be thin gathered in three years, to be taken up all at once. To whoſe requeſt the Nobles and Commons agreed to thrain themſelves, ſo that the Charter of their Liberties and Cuſtoms might be ratified, and fully by him confirmed: and ſo for that year they were: Flores Hiſt. Item, How Pope Alexander the third to deſtroy the City Michera, with King Menfred the Son of Frederick the Emperor, ſent forth the ſame year Octavianus his Cardinal with a puiſſant Armys who coming to the City with his ſiege, through the Counſel of Marchiſius one of the chief Captains, diſcharged a great part of his Hoſt, whereby the moſt of the Popes Army was ſlain and deſtroyed; almoſt all, ſave only the Family of Marchiſius, An. 1255. *Flor. Many other things during the time of this King might be congeſted, as the riſing of Lewlinus King of Wales, Lordwas and of the Welch men againſt the King, and waſting the Land unto the Town of Cheſter; who deſtroyed divers caſtles of the English-mens Horsmen taken in the Marish; with whom at length they fell to agreement by the means of Odobonus, that his successors should be only called Princes of Wales, and should do the King his Homage: and the King should receive of him Three thousand Marks. And this, being Established in writing, was confirmed by the Popes Seal, in the year of our Lord 1257. Ex Polychron.

Ex Polycron. 17.

Ex Anchor Eulogii.

About the same time, such Famine and lack of Victuals oppressed the Land, that a Somme of Corn was then sold for Six and twenty Shillings: in so much that the poorer sort was forced to eat Nettle-roots, Thistle-roots, and whatsoever they could get: Ex Eulogio. Although some refer this to the year 1262.

Anno 1257 Pope Alexander to make suit for money, maketh the King believe his son should be King of Apulia, Richard the Kings Brother made King of Almain.

Heremto moreover might be adjoyned, how Pope Alexander, abusing and mocking the Kings simplicity, made him believe that he would make his Son Edmund King of Apulia, so that he would sustain the charges and cost thereof, to maintain the War which thereto should appertain. Whereby the King, cast in a fadden hope, caused his Son incontinently to be Proclaimed King of Apulia; and upon the same sent up to the Pope all the Riches he could well make in his Realm. And thus was the Realm manifold ways miserably impoverished: to which the Earl of Ex-ceter the Kings Brother, was made King of Almain by the Electors.

Here might be shewed moreover and added to the stories above, how the nex year following, which was 1259, as Nicholas Trivet writeth, the King entring into France, required the restitution of such Lands in Normandy and Anjou, as of old right were due unto him, and wrongfully withholden from him. But the French King again alleadged, saying, That the Country of Normandy by old time was not given away from the Crown of France, but usurped, and by force extorted by Rollo, &c. In conclusion, the King fearing and suspecting the hearts of his Nobles, and looking for none other but for Rebellion at home, durst not try with them, but was compelled to agree with them upon such Peace and conditions as he could get; which was this: That he should have of the French King Thirteen hundred thousand of Turen pounds, with so much Lands else as came to the value of Twenty thousand pounds in yearly Rent: so should he resign fully and purely, to the hands of the French King, all such Lands and Possessions which he had in France. Whereby the King, giving over his Stile and Titles which he had in those parts, ceased then to be called Duke of Normandy, or Earl of Anjou.

What evil difcord worketh.

Resignation of the Earldom of Normandy and Anjou.

Albeit it be true that Gisburne writeth, that King, afterward repenting of his deed, did never receive the mony in all his life, neither did he cease during his life to intitle himself Duke of Normandy. But after him, his Son Edward and his successors in their Stile left out the Title to be called Duke of Normandy, &c. Ex Gisburn.

The conflict and skirmish between the Northern Welch men and the Southern men in Oxford.

Besides many other matters omitted, here I over-pass also the fore and vehement conflict, not between the Frogs and the Mice which Homer writeth of, but the mighty pitched field, fought in the year of our Lord 1259, between the young Students and Scholars of the University of Oxford, having no other occation, as I read in Mat. Paris, but only the diversity of the Country where they were born. For the Northern men joyning with the Welch men, to try their manhood against the Southern part, fell both parts together in such a broil, with their Ensigns and War-like Array, that in conclution divers on both sides were slain. This heavy and bloody conflict during and increasing among them, the end was this: That the Northern Lads with the Welch had the Victory. After that fury and fiery fierceness had done what it could, the Victorers bethinking at length with themselves, partly what they had done, partly how it would be taken of the higher powers, and fearing due punishment to fall upon them, especially seeing the Brother of Leoline Prince of Wales, and Son of Griffin, was newly dead in Prison; drawing their counsel and helps together, they offered to King Henry 4000 Marks, to Edward his Son 300, and to the Queen 200, to be releated of their Trespass. But the King answering them again, That he set more price by the life of one true Subject, than by all which by them was offered, would in no wise receive their mony. And so the Students without hope of peace went home with small triumph, learning what the common Proverb meaneth, Dulce bellum inexpertis. Notwithstanding, the King being then occupied in great Affairs and Wars, partly with Leoline and the Welch men, partly inwrapped with discord at home with his Nobles, had no leasure to attend to the correction of these Universities men; which was Anno 1259. Ex Matth. Parisiensi. Likewise concerning the Dissention following the next year after in the Universty of Paris, between the Students there, and the Friers; the number of whom then did so much increase, that the Commons Umeth was able to sustain them with their Alms. Also between the Universities both of Oxford and Cambridge, for a certain Prisoner taken out of Prison by strength, and brought into sanctury the same year, as is testified in Matthew Paris, Anno 1259. In like manner touching the variance between the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Chapter of Lincoln. Again, between the said Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Chapter and Bishop of London; and how the said Bishop at his Consecration would not make his Profession to the Archbishop but with this exception, Salvis jure & libertate Ecclesiæ Londinensis, quæ pro posse meo defendam in omnibus, &c. Recorded in Flor. Hist. All which wrangilings and differences, with innumerable others raigning daily in the Church at those days, if I had so much leasure to prosecute them as I find them in stories remaining, might sufficiently induce us to understand what small peace and agreement was then joyned with that Doctrine and Religion in those days, during the state and raign of Antichrist.

Little Peace in the Popes Church.

These with many such other matters more, which here might be discourred and storied at large, being more Forein than Ecclesiastical, for brevity I do purposely contract and omit, cutting off all such superfluities as may seem more curious to write upon, than necessary to be known.

This that followeth, concerning the pitiful and turbulent commotion between the King and the Nobles, which lasted a long season: because it is lamentable and containeth much fruitful example, both for Princes and Subjects to behold and look upon, to see what mischief and inconvenience groweth in Common-weals, where study of mutual concord lacketh, that is, where neither the Prince regardeth the offending of his Subjects, and where the Subjects forget the office of Christian-patience in suffering their Princes injuries by God's wrath inflicted for their sins: therefore, in explaining the order and story thereof, I thought it not unprofitable to occupy the Reader with a little more tarriance in perusing the full Discourse of this so lamentable a matter, and so pernitious to the publick weal.

Tribulation profitable for example

And first to declare the occasions and first beginning of this tumult, here is to be understood, which before was signified, how King Henry Married with Elenor, Daughter of the Earl of Provens a stranger, which was about the year of our Lord 1234. whereupon a great Door was opened for strangers, not only to enter the Land, but also to replenish the Court: to whom the King seemed more to incline his favour, advancing them to more preferment, than his own natural English Lords, which thing to them was no little grievance. Moreover, before was declared how the King by Isabel his Mother, who was a stranger, had divers Brethren, whom he nourished up with great Livings and Possessions, and large Pensions of mony: which was another heart-fore to divers, and also an hinderance. Over and besides hath also been declared, what unreasonable collections of mony from time to time, as Quindecims, Subsidies, Tenths, Mercements, Fines, Payments, Loans, and Taxes, have been Levied by the King, as well of the Spirituality, as of the Lay sort, partly for maintaining the Kings Wars against Wales, against Scotland and France, to recover Normandy; partly for helping the Kings Debts, Voyages, and other expences; partly for the Kingdom of Apulia, which was promised the Kings Son by the Pope; partly for monying and supporting the Pope in his Wars against the Emperor. By reason of all which fundry and importable Collections, the Common-wealth of the Realm was utterly excoriate, to the great impoverishment of poor English men. Neither did it a little vex the people, to see the King call in so many Legates from Rome every year, which did nothing else but transport the English mony unto the Popes Coffers. Besides all

The words of the Nobles to the King.

{KING Hen. 3.} all this, what variance and altercation hath been between the King and his Subjects about the liberties of Magna Charta, and De Foresta, granted by King John, and after confirmed by this King, in the former Council holden at Oxford, hath been before declared.

Perhaps this might be also some piece of a cause, that the King considering and bearing in mind the old injuries done of the Lords and Barons to his Father King John before him, did bear some grudge therefore, or some privy hatred unto the Nobility, to revenge his Fathers quarrel: but of things uncertain I have nothing certainly to affirm. This is certain by truth of History, that the year next insuing, which was 1260, thus writeth Nic. Trivet: That the Kings Justices, called Itinerarii, being sent thither to execute their office, were from thence repelled: the cause being alledged, for that they were against the King in proceeding and enterprising against the form of the provisions enacted and stablished a little before at the Town of Oxford.

Anno 1260 In this year it pleased the King, after sute to him made, to License an Universty or Academical School to be planted in the Town of Northampton; and of a special favour which he pretended to bear (and like enough did indeed) unto the Scholars that went there to feat themselves, and to prosecute the exercises of Studies, wrote his Letters Mandatory unto the chief Officers and others of the said Burrough in the said Students behalf; the Tenor whereof followeth agreeing with the Record:

The Kings Letter to the Maior, Bailiffs, and others the Inhabitants of Northampton in the behalf of certain Scholars minded to plant themselves there as in an Universty.

Tenis Lond.

REX dilectis & fidelibus suis Majori, Ballivis, & cæteris probis hominibus suis de Northampton, salutem. Cum quidam Magistri & alii Scholares proponant, &c.

In English thus:

Touching a Universty for Scholars to be kept at Northampton.

The King to his beloved and trusty the Maior, Bailiffs, and other honest men his Subjects of Northampton, Greeting: Whereas certain Masters and other Scholars do purpose to terry in your Town Corporate, there to exercise Scholary-Discipline, as we hear: We hereupon regarding the Service of God, and the great profit of our Kingdom, tending in good part the coming thither of the said Scholars, and liking well their abode there, do Will and Grant that the said Scholars in the said Town Corporate, under our protection and defence, do safely and securely abide, and there exercise and do such things, as to such Scholars shall belong. And therefore we command you and straitly charge you, That when the said Scholars shall come unto you, to tarry in your said Corporate Town, you receive them courteously, and as becometh the state of Scholars use them, not doing or suffering to be done unto them any impediment, molestation, or grievance. In Witness whereof we have caused these our Letters Patents to be made. Witness the King at Windsor the first day of February, in the Five and fortieth Year of his Reign.

It befel moreover in the same year, above other times (as Gualter Hemingford writeth) that a great number of Aliens, coming out of France and other Provinces, resorted into England, and had here the doing of all principal matters of the Realm under the King. Unto whom the rewards and reliefs, and other emoluments of the Land did most chiefly redound: which thing to see, did not a little trouble and vex the Nobility and Baronage of England. Insomuch that Simon Mountfort Earl of Leicester, offering to stand to death for the Liberties and Wealth of the Realm, conferred together with other Lords and Barons upon the matter, who, then coming unto the King after an humble sort of petition, declared unto him how all the doings of his Realm, and his own Affairs, were altogether dispesed by the hands, and after the wills of strangers, neither profitable unto him, nor to the Wealpublick: forasmuch as his Treasures being wasted and consumed, he was in great debt, neither was able to satisfy the Provison of his own House, but driven to Tally for his own Cates, to no small dishonor unto his own State. And now therefore, said they, pleaseth your Highness to be informed by our Advice, and to commit your House to the Guiding and Government of your own Faithful and Natural Subjects, and we will take upon us to discharge your whole Debt within one year, of our own proper Goods and Revenues, so that we within five years may clear our selves again. Neither will we diminish your Family, but rather increase it with a much greater retinue; providing so for the saftety and seeing to the custody of your Royal Person, as your Highness shall find and understand our diligence most trusty and faithful unto you in the end.

The King granteth to his Lords.

To these words so lovingly declared, so humbly pretended, so heartily and freely offered, the King as willingly condescended, Assigning unto them both Day and Place where to confer and to deliberate further upon the matter, which should be at Oxford the fifteenth day after Easter. At which day and place all the States and Lords, with the Bishops of the Realm, were Summoned to appear at the said Town of Oxford, for the behalf of the King and the Realm convented together. Where first of the King himself, then of the Lords, an Oath was taken, That what Decrees or Laws in the said Assembly should be provided to the profit of the King and of the Realm, the same Universally should be kept and observed to the honour of God, and utility of his Church, and Wealth of the Realm. Besides these Lords and the King, were also nine Bishops, which swearing unto the same, did Excommunicate all such as should gainstand the said Provisions there made; the King holding a burning Taper in his hand, and the Lords openly protesting to rise with all their force against all them that shall stand against the same.

The King sweareth unto the Provisions made at Oxford.

There were at that present in the Realm four Brethren of the Kings (most part of them by the Mothers side) which would in no case agree hereunto, but in anger departed privily unto Winchester. The Nobles hearing thereof, in all speedy wise pursued them, fearing lest they should take the City of Winchester, and forceably keep the same. Wherefore the Lords preventing their purpose, and seeing them stifly to persist in their stubborn Sentence, wrought no other violence against them, but, returning to Oxford again, prescribed to them these conditions, That they departing the Realm should repair to their own Lands and Possessions, which they had beyond the Sea: and that forthwith they should put this Injunction in execution. Notwithstanding, that the King made for them great intercession, yet it took no place. And because this should seem to proceed of no special displeasure against them, they Enacted moreover, That all strangers and Aliens, of what state or condition soever, should forthwith avoid the Realm on pain of death. Divers other provisions the same time were ordained and stablished; That if any did hold of the King in whole or in part, and should chance to depart (his Heir being under age) the Wardship of him should belong to the King, as hath partly before been specified.

Moreover, it was there Decreed, That the Wool of England should be wrought only within the Realm, neither should it be Transported out to strangers.

Item, That Garments too sumptuous should not be brought in nor worn.

Item, That all excessive and prodigal Expences, wasted upon pleasure and superfluity, should be eschewed of all persons.

Many other Laws and Decrees (saith the Author) in this Assembly were ordained, wherein they continued the space of fifteen days; and many of them were Impoysoned, of whom was the Abbot of Westminster, a man in that order much commended. Also William Brother to the Earl of Gloucester: also the Earl himself, being Impoysoned, hardly escaped with life, his Hair and Nails falling off his Body, whereof the Author not long after was taken, and duly executed at Winchester. In the mean time, the Nobles considering those daugers and jeopardies, were constrained to break off for that time, appointing the fourteenth day of October next following to convent together at London with Weapon and Harnesse, to prosecute and finish

The King recounteth of his Oath.

After the Promulgation whereof many things therein difpleafed the King, and it began to repent him of his Oath. But becaufe he could not at that prefent otherwife chufe, he diffembled for a feafon. Thus time paffing on, within a year following, which was in the year of our Lord, 1261, the King feeing himfelf more and more to grow in Debt, and not to be relieved according to promife made, but efpecially being egged (as may be thought) by his Brethren, taking it to ftomach, fent up to the Pope, both for him and his Son Edward to be releafed of their Oath made before at Oxford. The benefit of which Abfolution being eafily obtained (or rather bought at the Popes hand) the King ftepping back from all that was before concluded, calleth another Parliament at Oxford: where he before the Lords and Nobles declared, How in the late Council of Oxford they had agreed among themfelves for the common Utility of the Realm and of the King, as they pretended, for the increafing of his Treafure, and his Debt to be diminifhed: And thereupon bound themfelves with an Oath, caufing alfo himfelf and his Son Edward to be bound unto the fame. But now by experience proving and trying the matter to be otherwife than their promife was; and that they, contrary to their Covenant made, fought not fo much the profit of him and of the Realm, as their own, taking him not as their Lord, but going about to bring him under their fubjection as an underling; and for that moreover his Treafure greatly decreafing, his Debts increafed, and his Princely liberality was cut fhort and troden under foot: they fhould not marvel therefore, if he henceforth would be no more ruled by their counfel, but would provide himfelf of fome other remedy, fuch as he might. And moreover, as touching the Oath wherewith he and his Son ftood bound unto them, he had fent already to Rome, and had obtained Abfolution and Difpenfation of the fame, both for him, and his Son Edward alfo, and for all others that would take his part. And therefore he required of them to be reftored again to that ftate and condition he had injoyed in times paft.

The King firsth to the Pope to releafe him of his Oath. The Popes Abfolution abufed.

The anfwer of the Nobles again to the King.

To this again gave anfwer the ftate of Nobility on the other fide, being in the fame place preftent; in the number of whom was Simon Mountfort Earl of Leiceſter, Richard Clare Earl of Glocester, Humfry Romne Earl Ferrence, with a great number of Barons, as Lord John Fitz-John, Lord Haſtings, Lord Geffery Luey, Lord John Vefcy, Lord William Segrave, Hugh Spencer, Lord Robert Vifpaint, with divers and many more; whofe anfwer to the King again was this: That the Provifions made at the Council at Oxford (whereunto they were fworn) they would hold, defend and maintain to their lives end: forfomuch as they did found, and alfo were agreed upon, both to the honour of God, to the profit of the Prince, and ftable Wealth of the Realm, &c. And thus parts on both fides difcording amongft themfelves, they would fo have departed, had not certain of the Bifhops, coming between both, laboured between them to take up the matter. By whofe means (faith Gualter Guisburn) and procurement, the determination of the cauſe was brought in compromiſe, and referred to Ludovick the French King to judge betwixt them, who hearing both the Allegations (faith he) like no equal Judge, but a partial Friend, inclined wholly and fully to the Kings Sentence, and condemned the Nobles. But the Author of Flores Hiſtoriarum faith, that by the Mediation of diſcreet men, two were chofen, one for one fide, the other for the other, to whom the third alfo was annexed, who hearing as well what was brought of the Kings part, as alfo what was anfwered of the other, fhould define between them both, and fo peace was between them concluded till the coming of Edward. All this while, as yet the Popes Abfolution for the King, although it was granted and obtained at Rome, yet was it not brought down in folemn writing, neither was Prince Edward as yet returned out of France into England.

The controverſy between the King and the Nobles put in compromiſe.

At length, the writing of the Kings Abfolution being brought from Rome, the King eftfoons commanded the fame to be publifhed throughout the Realm, and fendeth to the French King and other ftrangers for help; moreover he feizeth all his Caſtles into his own hand, rejecting the Counſel of the Lords, to whofe cuſtody they where before committed; alſo removing the former Officers, as Juſtices, and the Chancellor, with others placed afore by the Lords, he appointed new in their ſtead.

The Pope releaſeth the King of his Oath.

To this foreſaid Abſolution procured from Rome for the King and his Son, Edward returning out of France, at that time did not give his conſent, but held with the Lords. Who then putting themſelves in Arms, with a great power repaired up to London, keeping there in the Suburbs and places about; while the King kept within the Tower, cauſing the City Gates to be watched and lockt, and all within the ſaid City being above the age of twelve years, to be ſworn unto him. But at length, through the means of certain coming between, this tumultuous perturbation was ſomewhat appeaſed, at leaſt ſome hope of Peace appeared; ſo that the matter was taken up for that time without War or Bloodſhed. Notwithſtanding, ſome falſe pretenced diſſemblers there were, which ſecretly diſcloſing all the Counſels and doings of the Lords unto the King, did all they could to hinder Concord, and to kindle debate. By the means of whom the purpoſe of the Lords came not to ſo good effect, as otherwiſe it might. Ex. Flor. Hiſt.

Wicked ſtake-bates.

¶ In this year the Archbiſhop of Canterbury with his Suffragans (after their wonted manner) ſtanding againſt the King, had made their Appeal to Rome: whereupon the King was fain to Anſwer by Proxy, as appeareth by this brief Note drawn out of Record: Rex conſtituit Johannem Hemingford Procuratorem ſuum in Cauſa Appellationis, &c. The King hath appointed and made John Hemingford his Proctor in a Cauſe of Appeal which is moved in the Court of Rome, between the King on the one part, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury with his Suffragans on the other part, about certain Ordinances, Conſtitutions, and Decrees lately in a Council Provincial at London by them publiſhed, to the prejudice of the Kings Right, his Dignity Royal, the Liberties, Laws and Cuſtoms of his Kingdom.

Ordinances in a provincial Council againſt the King right.

This matter no doubt was laboured very diligently by the ſaid John Hemingford, who was to that end Authorized by the King to make his abode at Rome, during the time that any manner of proceſs was held and maintained againſt him, to the impeaching of his Royalty. Whereof the King had a ſpecial regard, perceiving the waiwardneſs of his own Clergy, or rather rebelliouſneſs in daring to Decree and Ordain Laws againſt him. And therefore he was the more carefol to have all matters depending in the Court of Rome concerning him and his to be eameſtly followed. Inſomuch as he joyned to the foreſaid Hemingford, in the charge of procuration, one Roger Lovel: unto which two, reſiding at Rome, the King ſent his Letters, charging them ſo to manage his Affairs, as that nothing might paſs to the derogation of his Royal Title, the Copy of the ſaid Letter followeth agreeing with the Protocypon or Original.

In this preſent year alſo (as affirmeth the forenamed Author) it was rumored abroad (as Flores hiſtoriarum reporteth) that all the Biſhops of England went about to recover again, out of the hands of religious Men, all ſuch Churches and Benefices, which were to them impropriated or appropriated: and that they, for the expedition of the ſame, had ſent up to Rome both Meſſengers and Mony, nothing miſdoubting to obtain their purpoſe. But as little good fruit in thoſe days uſed to ſpring out of that See, ſo I do not find that godly ſute and labour of the Biſhops to take any fruitful effect. The fame year died Pope Alexander, after whom ſucceeded Pope Urban the Fourth.

Of the which Pope Urban the King alſo obtained (or rather revived) a new releaſment from his Oath made to the Proviſions and Statutes of Oxford. Which being granted, he commandeth incontinently all the foreſaid Laws and Proviſions through England to be diſſolved and broken. This done, the King with the Queen taketh his Voyage into France, where he fell in great infirmity of ſickneſs and the moſt part of his Family was taken with the Fever Quartane, of which many died. In the number of whom, beſide others, died Richard the worthy Earl of Glocester and Hereford, after whom ſucceeded Gilbert Clare his Son.

A new releaſe of the King Oath from them with this Epiſtle: Alexander, &c. Reverend Father, Health, &c. Pope Urban greeteth the King.

The Welchmen this year, breaking into the Borders of England, did much annoiance in the Lands of Roger Lord Mortimer, but mightily again by him were expelled, not without great ſlaughter of the Invaders. About which time, the King, through ſome diſcreet counſel about him, inclined to peace and concord with his Nobles, granting of his meer voluntary will the conſtitutions & proviſions of Oxford to take place in the Realm, directing his commandment to every ſhire. Albeit the Realm yet was not altogether pacified for all that.

The Welch-men rebel. The greeting out of England again greeted by the King.

In the later end of this year, the Kings Palace at Weſtminſter was burnt, and for the moſt part was all conſumed with fire, which ſeemed to many an evil prognoſtication againſt the King. Ex Flor. Hiſt.

The Kings Palace at Weſtminſter burnt with fire.

In ſome Engliſh Chronicles it is alſo recorded, that the ſame year five hundred Jewes at London were ſlain for taking Uſury more than two pence a Week for 20 ſhillings, being before forbidden by the King to take above that rate by the Week.

Uſury puniſhed for taking above two pence a Week in a pound.

After this followeth the year 1263. in which the Barons of England, confederating themſelves together, for maintaining the Statutes and Laws of Oxford, and partly moved with old grudge conceived againſt the ſtrangers (maintained by the king and the Queen, and Edward their Son, in the Realm of England) joyned powers in all forceable wiſe, and firſt invaded the ſaid ſtrangers, namely, them which were about the King. Their Goods and Manors they waſted and ſpoiled, whether they were perſons Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal. Among whom, beſides others, was Peter a Burgundian (Biſhop of Hereford a rich Prelate) with all his Treaſure apprehended and ſpoiled: alſo his Countrymen, whom he had placed to be Canons of the ſame Church. With like order of handling other Aliens alſo, to whom was committed the cuſtody of divers Caſtles, as of Glocester, of Worceſter, of Bridgenorth, were ſpoiled, impriſoned, and ſent away. Briefly, whatſoever he was in all the Land that could not utter the Engliſh Tongue, was of every Raſcal diſdained, and happy if he might ſo eſcape. By reaſon whereof it ſo came to paſs, that a great number, as well of other foreigners, as eſpecially Religious Men, and rich Prieſts (which here had gathered much ſubſtance) were urged to that extremity, that they were glad to flee the Land. In the catalogue of whom was one moſt principal, named John Maunſel, a Prieſt notoriouſly grown in riches and treaſures not to be told, having in his hand ſo many and rich Benefices, that near no Biſhop of this Realm might compare with him in riches. Who, notwithſtanding he kept with the King at London, yet was compelled privily to avoid the Realm, and was purſued by Henry the Son of Richard King of Almain. Certain other ſtrangers there were, to the number of 200 and more, which having the Caſtle of Windſor, there immured and intrenched themſelves, to whom at length, Prince Edward alſo adjoyned himſelf.

The Nobility ſtirred againſt the ſtrangers, for the cauſe of the commodity of the realm.

Pope of Rome refuſed a Burgundian a rich Biſhop.

{ KING 1 Hen. 3 }

The King againſt with the Nobles.

In the mean time, while this ſtir was abroad, the King keeping then in the Tower, and ſeeing the greateſt part of his Nobles and Commons with the Londoners to be ſet againſt him, agreed to the peace of the Barons, and was contented to aſſent again to the ordinances and proviſions of Oxford; albeit the Queen, by all means poſſible, went about to perſwade the King not to aſſent thereto; who, as it ſeemed, was a great worker in kindling this fire of diſcord between the King and the Barons. Inſomuch, that when as the ſaid Queen Elenor ſhould paſs by Barge from the Tower to Windſor, the Londoners ſtanding upon the Bridge, with their exclamations, curſing and throwing of Stones and dirt at her, interrupted her courſe, cauſing her to return to the Tower again. Notwithſtanding, the peace yet continued with the Nobles and the King, the form whereof was this: Firſt, That Henry the Son of Richard King of the Romans ſhould be delivered by the King and Queen. Secondly, That the Caſtles again ſhould be committed to the cuſtody of Engliſhmen, and not of Strangers. Thirdly, That the Proviſions and Statutes decreed at Oxford, ſhould as well by the King, as by all others inviolably be obſerved. Fourthly, That the Realm henceforth ſhould be ruled and governed not by forcigners, but by perſonages born within the Land. Fifthly, That all aliens and ſtrangers ſhould void the Land, not to return again; except only ſuch, whoſe abode ſhould by the common aſſent of the Kings truſty Subjects be admitted and allowed.

The Queen a great cauſe of this debate.

The forme of peace concluded between the King and the Nobles.

Thus the King and the Nobles joyning together after this form of peace above prefixed, although not fully with heart, as after appeared, put themſelves in Arms, with all their power to recover the Caſtle of Windſor out of the ſtrangers hands. But Edward, in the mid-way between London and the Caſtle, meeting with his Father and the Barons, entred communication upon the matter. Which being finiſhed, and he thinking to return into the Caſtle again; by the policy of the Earl of Leiceſter, and William Biſhop of Worceſter, he was not permitted to re-enter. Whereupon the ſtrangers within the Hold (deſtitute of all hope to withſtand the great force approaching) rendred the Caſtle into the King and the Barons upon this convention; That with Horſe and Harneſs they might be ſuffered ſafe to depart the Land, not to return any more. Which being granted, certain of the Barons conducted them in their journey towards the Sea ſide, and there they left them.

The Caſtle of Windſor recovered out of the hands of Strangers.

In the ſame year about the beginning of October, the King and Queen made over to France, with Simon Mountfort and other Nobles, to hear and ſtand to the arbitrement of Lewis the French King, concerning the controverſie between the States of England, and all through the procurement of Elenor the Queen. For ſhe, not forgetting the old contumely of the Londoners, exclaiming againſt her upon the Bridge, wrought always what revenge ſhe could againſt them. Concerning the arbitrement of this matter put to the French King, partly hath been ſaid before, and more ſhall be ſaid (Chriſt willing) hereafter. Some ſtories do add moreover, that the King continuing long in France, word was ſent to him out of England, That unleſs he returned again to the Realm, they would elect a new King. Whereupon the King, returning out of France to Dover, would have entred the Caſtle, but he was ſtopped. Wherefore the King, in fierce anger and great indignation, prepared his power towards London; where Simon Mountfort the worthy Earl of Leiceſter, through a ſubtil train, was almoſt betraied and circumvented in Southwark, by the ſudden purſuing of the Kings Army; had not the Londoners with more ſpeed, breaking Bars and Chains made way to refcue him, by the means of whom the Earl at that time eſcaped the danger.

Manet alta mente repoſtum Judicium Parifiis, &c. Virg.

Now to come to the Sentence of the French King. Forſomuch as the arbitrement of this matter was committed to him, as hath before been ſpecified; he in a great frequency both of French and Engliſh perſons about him, conſidering and poiſing the cauſe on both ſides, between the King and the Nobles, clearly and ſolemnly pronounced on the Kings ſide againſt the Barons, ordained that the King of England all this while had suffered wrong, and that he should be restored again to his priſtine ſtate, notwithſtanding the proviſions made at Oxford, (which he ordained to be repealed and abrogated) Ex Flor. Hiſt. Guiburn.

The ſentence of the French King thus awarded, as it gave to the King of England with his retinue no little incouragement, ſo it wrought in the Nobles hearts great indignation, which, notwithſtanding that partial determent of the French King, ſped themſelves home out of France to defend themſelves with all their ſtrength and power. And not long after followeth alſo the King, by whoſe train Simon Mountfort Earl of Leiceſter (as is above recited) was well near circumvented in Southwark. Then the King calling his Council together at Oxford (from whence he excluded the Univerſity of Students for ſome ſeaſon, who were then at Northampton, as you heard before) there conſulted, conferring with his Friends and Counſellors, what way beſt to be taken. And hearing that the Barons were aſſembled in a great multitude at the Town of Northampton, he went thither with his Hoſt and with his Banners diſplaied, accompanied with Richard his Brother King of Almain, alſo with Edward his Son, John Comin of Scotland, with many other Scots, John of Dallilo Lord of Galoway, Robert of Ruſſe, Lord Walter of Anand, Roger of Clifford, Philip of Mamwin, John of Waus, Roger of Laiburne, Henry Percy, Philip Baſſet, Roger of Mortimar, and William of Walrce, and many others. Therefore the King commanded the Barons that were within, to yield unto him preſently the City and the Pledges, or elſe he would immediately deſtroy them. But they counſelling with the younger Simon De Monte forti, which by his Fathers commandment had got the reſidue thither to take counſel together (for his Father and the Earl of Gloceſter were not yet come) boldly and with one mind anſwered. That they would not obey the Kings will, but would rather defend themſelves and the City, if need were, even to the death. Which the Noblemen of the Kings part hearing, ſent word again, that at leaſt they ſhould come to the Wall of the City to ſpeak to the King, if by any means peace might be made. And they ſuſpecting no deceit, followed their counſel, and leaving their Holds, came to the Wall towards the Meadow, for there lay the King and his ſtrong Hoſt hard by. But in the mean ſpace, whilſt divers matters were reaſoned and intreated of between the King and the Lords, the Lord Philip Baſſet (which before was appointed to work that feat) with Mattocks and other inſtruments of Iron and Men prepared for the once, near to the Monaſtery of S. Andrew, did undermine the Wall of the City; and by this means the Wall fell down lightly, and there was made a great Plain, ſo that in one forefront there might have gone together on a row forty Horſemen. And of this ſubtilty the alien Monks that were there, were thought to be the workers, becauſe they made way and entrance for them that came in. But when they that paſſed by few this, and the Kings Banners were erected ready to enter in, there was a great howling made, and the noiſe of the People came to the ears of the Barons, and they made ſpeed to reſiſt them; but it was all in vain, becauſe they were already prevented of a great company of their enemies. But Simon Mountfort the younger, after he had valiantly fought a while in the midſt of his enemies, with Peter Mountfort, and a few that were with him, when Edward the Kings Son came, was by his commandment taken and led away Priſoner. But the Clerks of the Univerſity of Oxford (which Univerſity by the Barons commandment was tranſlated thither) did work againſt the Kings Men more hurt than the other Barons, with their Slings, long Bows and croſs Bows; for they had a Banner by themſelves, and that was ſet up on high againſt the King. Wherewithal the King being greatly moved, ſware at his entring in, that they ſhould all be hanged. Which when they heard, many of them ſhaved their Crowns, and they that were able ran away as faſt as they could. And when the King entred the City, many fled in their Armor into the Caſtle, others left their Horſe and Harneſs, and ran into Churches, and a few were ſlain, and thoſe were of the common people; but there was not much bloodſhed, becauſe all things were done as upon the ſudden. When the City was at length ſet in quiet, the King commanded his Oath to be executed upon the Clerks. But his Counſellors ſaid unto him, Thou be far from thee O King for the Sons of thy Nobles, and of other great men of thy Kingdom were there gathered together into the Univerſity; whom if thou wouldſt cauſe to be hanged or ſlain, even they that now take thy part would riſe up againſt thee, not ſuffering, to the uttermoſt of their powers, the blood of their Sons and Kinſfolks to be ſhed. And ſo the King was pacified, and his wrath againſt the Clerks was aſſuaged.

Univerſity of Oxford removed for a time to Northampton.

Simon Mountfort the younger taken Priſoner.

The Nobles taken at Northampton

{ KING. } { Hiſtor. }

In the ſame day, after little more than an hour, the Kings Hoſt aſſaulted the Caſtle, and the new Hold-keepers were afraid, for that they had not Victuals and other things neceſſary for their reſiſtance; therefore they ſent immediately meſſengers unto the King, and yielded themſelves to the mercy. There were taken that day theſe Knights and Barons under written; Lord William de Ferrers, Lord Peter Mountfort, companion of the ſaid Simon de Mountfort the younger, Lord Baldwin de Wake, Lord Adam de Newmarch, Lord Roger Bertram, Lord Simon the Son of Simon a valiant Warrior, which firſt erected his Banner againſt the King, Lord Berengarius de Waterville, Lord Hugo Guhium, Lord Thomer Mamyſel, Lord Roger Botemiam, Nicholas Wake, Lord Robert de Newton, Lord Philip de Driby, and Grimbald de Painneſtoe. All theſe aforehand did the King take Priſoners, and many more, of whom he committed ſome to the Lord Nicholas of Haverſam, to be kept in the ſame Caſtle well defended: ſome he led away with him; and ſome he ſent to divers Caſtles and appointed Simon Mountfort to be caſt into Windſor Caſtle. And all theſe things, as touching the taking of Northampton, were done on the Sabbath day in Paſſion Week, being the third of April, in the year of our Lord 1264: and the King went forward even to Nottingham, burning and waſting the Manors of the Lords and others his enemies, and there he gathered together his Nobles and greatly increaſed his number.

The Lords taken at Northampton.

When this ill luck was told, of them that there were run away, to the Earl Simon, which was coming towards Northampton with a great Hoſt, he was in a great rage, and yet was not diſcouraged: but immediately going to London, he cauſed a Chariot to be made after the manner of Litters or Coaches, wherein he might ride as though he were ſick; for he feigned himſelf to be feeble and weak, whereas he was indeed a ſtout and valiant Warriour, and there gathered to him other Noblemen that were confederate with him, Earls and Barons, every one bringing with them their ſeveral Arms; and preparing their Engines of Wood, they went to beſiege Rocheſter; for the Earl of Worceſter in the Kings behalf, kept both the Town and Caſtle. When they had gotten the firſt Gate and the Bridge, they were partly wounded and compelled to retire, and there that valiant Knight Roger de la Bourn was wounded, and very ill handled. And whilſt they continue Siege there a while, it was told them that the King was coming towards London, with a mighty Hoſt. And they ſaid one to another, If the King at his coming ſhould take London, we ſhall be ſhut in as it were in a frait corner; let us therefore return unto London, that we may keep in ſafety both the place and the people. Therefore appointing certain perſons to keep the Siege, they returned to London. At the length when the King came, they went forth with the Citizens to meet him, not with Flowers and Palms in their hands, but with Swords and Speares. The King ſhunned them, and after he had the Caſtle of Kingſton, which was the Earl of Gloceſters, he went from thence to Rocheſter; where after he had killed a few, he brake the Siege, and from thence the King went to Tunbridge, and the Town and Caſtle now being given up to him, he took there the Counſels of Gloceſter, and put her into an Abby, not to be kept in bold, but to go at liberty whither ſhe would. And he left for the cuſtody of the Caſtle and City a great part of his Hoſt, to the number of above twenty picked out Enſigns, for that it was commonly ſaid that the Earl of Gloceſter would come out of hand to aſſault them. Which being done, he continued on his journey to Wincheſter, where he received to peace the Seamen of the Haven Towns. And three days after, upon the Sunday following, he came to the Town of Lewis, and was received into the Abby, and his Son Edward into the Caſtle. Then the Barons ſent Letters to the King the twelfth day of May, the tenor whereof followeth.

{ KING. } { Hiſtor. }

The Letter of the Lords to the King.

TO their moſt excellent Lord Henry, by the Grace of God King of England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke of Aquitain, his Barons and others his faithful Subjects, being willing to keep their Oath and Fidelity to God and him, ſend greeting and due obedience with honour and reverence. Whereas by many experiments it is manifeſt, that ſome of Your Graces aſſiſtants have reported to Your Majeſty many lies of us working miſchief, as much as in them lieth not only againſt us, but againſt you alſo, and your whole Realm: Be it known to Your Highneſs that we have been always willing to defend the health and ſafeguard of Your Perſon, with all our power and Fealty due to Your Grace, purpoſing to vex to the uttermoſt of our power and eſtate not only our ill willers, but alſo your enemies, and the enemies of Your whole Realm. If it be Your good pleaſures, give no credit to them, we ſhall be always found Your faithful Subjects. And we the Earl of Leiceſter, and Gilbert of Clare, at the requeſt of others, for us and them have put to our Seals.

These Letters being read and heard, there was a Council called, and the King writ back to them, and ſpecially to the two Earls of Leiceſter and Gloceſter, in manner and form following:

The anſwer of the King to the Lords.

HEnry by the Grace of God King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Aquitain, &c. To Simon Mountfort, and Gilbert de Clare, and their Confederates. Forſomuch as by the War, and general diſquietneſs by your means raiſed up in Our whole Realm, and alſo the burnings and other hurtful enormities, it appeareth manifeſtly, that you keep not your fidelity to Us-ward, nor care any thing for Our health or ſafety; and for that ye have unorderly grieved Our Nobles, and others Our faithful Subjects ſticking faithfully and conſtantly to Us (as you have certified Us) We accounting their loſſes as Our own, and their enemies as Ours; and ſeeing theſe My aforeſaid faithful Subjects, for the keeping of their fidelity, do aſſiſt Us manfully and faithfully againſt your unfaithfulneſs: We therefore care not for your fidelity or love, but defie you as our and their enemies, Witneſs My Self at Lewis the day and year aforeſaid.

Alſo Richard King of Almain, and Lord Edward the Son of King Henry writ to the Barons in this wiſe:

The Letter of Richard King of Almain and Prince Edward ſent to the Barons.

Richard by the Grace of God, King of the Romans, always Auguſtus, and Edward eldeſt Son of the King of England, and all the other Barons and Nobles conſtantly and faithfully in heart and deed cleaving to the foreſaid King of England, To Simon Mountfort and Gilbert de Clare, and to all and ſingular others their adherents in their conſpiracy. By your Letters which you ſent to our Lord the Noble King of England, we have underſtanding that you deſie us, although before any ſuch word, your defiance towards us was apparent enough by your cruel perſecution in burning our poſſeſſions and ſpoiling our goods. We therefore give you to wit, that we all and every one of us, as your enemies, do deſie you all as our open enemies. And further, that we will not ceaſe, whereſoever it ſhall lie in our power, to the uttermoſt of our force and might, to ſubvert your perſons and all that you have. As touching that you lay to our charge, that we give neither faithful nor good counſel to our Lord the King, you ſay not the truth. And if your Lord Simon Mountfort or Gilbert de Clare, will affirm the ſame in our Lord the King's Court, we are ready to get ſafe conduct for you to come to the ſaid Court, to try and declare the truth of our innocency, and the falſhood of you both, as forſworn Traitors, by ſome Man equal with you in Nobility and Stock. All we are contained with the Seals of the foreſaid Lords, the Lord Richard and the Lord Edward. Dated the day aforeſaid.

The Battel of Lewis, betwixt the King and the Barons begineth.

Both which Letters being read, they drew near to the King; for they were not far diſtant from the place which is called Lewis. And for that there wanted to the Kings Bone proviſion for their Horſes, it was commanded them, on Tueſday to go forth to ſeek for Hay and Provender: which when they were gone forth, were prevented of their enemies, and moſt of them killed; but the reſidue returning ſaw their enemies coming very early on the Wedneſday Morning, and making out-cries, ſtirred up the King and his Hoſt to arm themſelves. Then the Barons, coming to the full Plain, deſcended thereto, and girding and trimming their Horſes, made fit their Harneſs to them. And there the Earl Simon made the Earl of Gloceſter, and Robert de Veere, and many other new Knights. Which being done, he divided and diſtinguiſhed his Hoſt into four ſeveral Battels, and he appointed Noblemen to guid and govern every Battel. And over the firſt Battel were ordained Captains, Henry Mountfort the Eldeſt Son of the Earl Simon, and Guido his Brother, Lord John de Bruch the younger, and Lord Humfrey de Boſum. Over the ſecond Battel, Lord Gilbert Clare Earl of Gloceſter, Lord John the Son of Lord S. John, and Lord William of Mountcherſie. And over the third, in which the Londoners were, at their requeſt, the Lord Nicholas Segrave was aſſigned: which required alſo very inſtantly, that they might have the firſt ſtroke in the Battel, at the adventure, come what come would. But over the fourth Battel, the Earl himſelf was Captain, with the Lord Thomas of Pineſton. In the mean ſeaſon, came forth the Kings Hoſt, preparing themſelves to the Field in three Battels, of which Edward the Kings Son led the firſt, with the Earl of Warwick, and Valence the Kings Brother, and the ſecond the King of Almain guided, with his Son Henry; but the King with his Nobles guided the third; and the fourth Legion the King appointed not, by reaſon he had left many of his chief Soldiers behind him to keep the Caſtle and Town of Tunbridge againſt the Earl of Gloceſter. And the moſt part of the Kings Army were but young Men, for the King thought not that his Barons had been come ſo nigh hand. Their Armies being on both ſides ſet in aray and order, they exhorted one another on either party to fight valiantly: and after they buckled together, the Battel was great, and many Horſemen were overthrown even in a moment. But by and by Edward the Kings Son with his Band, as a fierce young Gentleman and valiant Knight, fell upon his enemies with ſuch force, that he compelled them to recoil back a great way, ſo that the hindmoſt (thinking by reaſon of their giving back, that the foremoſt were ſlain) ran many of them away, and taking Water to paſs over, were almoſt threeſcore Soldiers drowned, and a few of them being ſlain, all the reſt fled. Straitway the Londoners which had aſked the firſt fight, knowing not how the Battel went, took their Heels: whom Edward purſued with his Band, killing the hindmoſt of them the ſpace of two or three Miles; for he hated them, becauſe they had rebelled againſt his Father, and diſgraced his Mother, when ſhe was carried by Barge upon the Thames, from the Tower to Windſor, as is before touched.

Whilſt that Prince Edward was thus in the chaſe of the Londoners, who had the Vaward of the Barons Battel; in the mean time, the main Battel of the Barons ſet upon the Kings main Battel, of the which the King of Almain the Brother of King Henry had the leading, which being ſoon diſcomfited, and he with his Son Henry and Robert de Brus, John Cowen, with divers other Captains taken Priſoners, the reſt would never the King himſelf fought, being immediately ſo hardly beſet, and he ſeeing his Knights and Soldiers on every ſide about him beaten down and ſlain, and divers others of his Soldiers to forſake the field and ſhift for themſelves, though good to take again the Town, and ſo retired into the Abby by from whence he came, ſhutting and rampering up the Gates, and cauſed the ſame to be ſtrongly warded with Soldiers. To be brief, the Barons thus getting the field, after long fight, and many Men on either ſide ſlain, entred alſo the Town of Lewis, purſuing in chaſe ſuch Soldiers as thither fled for ſuccour.

The Kings main Battel at Lewis diſcomfited and the K. fain to take the Abby.

In the mean time, Prince Edward returning from the chaſe of the Londoners, as ye heard, who delired to give the firſt on-ſet, and eſpying the Chariot of the Earl Simon (which he cauſed purpoſely to be made for him) and the Horſes in the ſame, without either Waggoner, or any other to govern the ſame, fell immediately upon the Chariot, and brake it all in pieces, and flew two Burgeſſes that were within the ſame. But when he came neareſt to the place where the bloudy Battel had been fought, and ſaw the great diſcomfiture and overthrow, which in his abſence, with great mortality and slaughter had happened, his heart was much dismaied, and his countenance altered. Yet notwithstanding, comforting and encouraging his Knights and Soldiers, of whom he had a valiant company, in Battel-array he marched toward the Town; against whom came the Barons again with all their power. And thus was begun betwixt them a fresh Field and new Battel, and many Men slain on either side. But at length the Earl de Warenia, with the Kings two Brethren, forsook the Field and fled: after whom went more than seven hundred chosen Soldiers, which were of their House and Family, who the same day came to Pevensie, and there took shipping over the Sea. Also Hugh Bigot with divers others fled, and left the valiant Prince fighting in the field: which thing he also perceiving took the Town. And when he found not the King his Father at the Castle, he went from thence to the Abby where he was. In the mean season in the Town was divided in parts, some tighting, some spoiling, some getting of booties, neither could scarcely one of them know and discern another, whether he was his friend or enemy. But when within a while the Barons had assembled some company, they gave an assault upon the Castle, thinking to have rescued John Gifford and others, whom the Kings Soldiers had taken Prisoners and put therein. But the Soldiers within manfully defended the same, and in throwing out Balls of Wild-fire, as for the defence thereof they had, they also fired part of the Town. Then the Barons retired and left the Castle, and purposed to have set upon the Abby where the King and Prince Edward his Son was, which also was set on fire by the assault given to the Castles: but yet it was shortly recovered and quenched. Then Edward the Kings Son, perceiving the bold enterprise of the Barons, prepared with couragious Knights and Soldiers, as were yet remaining and within the Abby, to have issued out, and to have given a new charge upon them. But the Barons, perceiving that, sent unto the King messengers to intreat a truce for that day, and on the morrow to talk and conclude of a further peace between them. This Battel was fought upon the nineteenth day of May, being the year of our Lord 1264.

Prince Edward returning from the purſuit of the Londoners, and finding all togither diſcomfited.

The Prince fighteth a new Battel.

Prince Edward also put to the worst, and fain to take the Town.

The Castle of Leew besieged.

The next day, which was Thursday, there were sent on either side two preaching Friers between the King and the Barons, with certain Articles and demands of Peace, so that with certain others, these conditions were agreed on: that on the morrow being Friday, the Prince should give himself in Hostage for the King his Father, and others of his part. And Henry the Kings Son of Almain also should give himself the like for his Father. That those things which should be concluded upon for the benefit and commodity of the Realm, and peaceable quietness thereof might be performed, and that all such Prisoners as were taken on either side, should be freely ranisomed and sent home.

A peace intreated between the King and the Barons.

The two Princes given in Hostage.

The next day which was Saturday, the King discharged all his Soldiers, and others that were with him in the Abby, licensing them to depart whither they listed. And furthermore, by the advice of his Son and the Barons, he gave commandment to those which he had appointed to the keeping of Tunbridge, that they should make no attempt to the prejudice or hurt of the Barons; but in hope of the peace which was now at the point to be concluded, they should also depart every Man to their houses and habitations. But they giving no credit thereunto, went with their furniture to Brisson, where they kept themselves in Garison, until the escaping of Edward the Kings Son out of Prison. But first before that, when they heard at Tunbridge, that the King was vanquished in Battel, and that the Londoners in the foreward were put to flight by Prince Edward (by a Messenger that scaped from the same) and that also the same Londoners were at Crowdown, they set upon them in the evening tide, and taking from them much spoil, slew also many of them.

The Kings Soldiers in Tunbridge, after they had spoiled the Londoners at Crowdown, keep themselves in Garison at Brisson.

But when Roger Mortimer's part began to decrease, and Simon the Earls part on the other side to increase, he bare himself more stout, for that both the King and all that was his, did depend upon the good will and favour of the Earl, and led with him the Kings Son to such Holds and Castles, as he thought to be most strong; as though all were in his hands to do as him liked; and he kept the Hostages more straitly than he was wont to do. Informuch that when it was blown abroad that the Kings Son was kept as Prisoner, divers that were his friends, counselled him, that he should desire to disport himself at the Barriers, that the people might have a fight of him. But he, being narrowly guarded as he knew, and fearing some tumult to arise, thought good to refuse their counsel, and so did.

Earl Simon after this Victory, beareth himself so stout, that he imprisoneth the Hostages of the King.

{ KING Hen. 3

In this troublesome year, which was Anno 1264, as the Londoners with the Nobles were thus occupied in War and Dissention, the malignant Jews, thinking to take vantage of that time, with privy Treason conspired against the whole City and state of the Nobles; who being taken with the manner, were almost all slain that dwelt in the City of London.

¶ In this year also Boniface Archbishop of Canterbury the Son of Peter Earl of Savoy, and a stranger, having been certain years beyond the Seas in disgrace with the King of England, upon occasion of some misdemeanor belike (for he was, as Matthew Parker writeth of him, Ut moribus gestisque peregrinus, sic nomine ipso & appellatione exterus Archiepiscopis dissimilis) the King being of a relenting nature, and bearing much with Clergy-mens insolencies (which for a while he might perhaps gainstand, but at last bare with them as supported by the Court of Rome) did consult with his Nobles about the return of the said Boniface into England, conditionally as followeth.

Acts passed in the Kings Council, touching the Archbishop of Canterbury's return into England, under certain conditions.

ANNO Domini 1264. Mense Martio, in præsentia illustris Regis Angliæ, de concilio Procerum & Magnatum ejusdem Regni actum est, quod venerabilis Pater Bonifacius Dei gratia Cantuariensis Archiepiscopus, totius Angliæ Primas, in Angliam revertatur, sub conditionibus infra scriptis, in Regno pacifice moraturus. In primis igitur, &c. Tertia Lect.

In English thus:

In the year of our Lord 1264. in the Month of March, it was Enacted in the Presence of the renowned King of England, by the counsel of the Peers and States of the said Realm, that the Revered Father Boniface, by the Grace of God Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England should return into England, and abide in the Realm peaceably, upon the Conditions under-written.

First, Therefore it is Enacted, that the Archbishop at his return, do without any difficulty release in form of Law his Sentences of Excommunication, published against all persons whatsoever, occasioning much trouble in the Realm of England; but yet so, that they, which shall be found excommunicate, be ready to make satisfaction for their excesses and defaults, and for the same receive, as they are bound by the Canonical Commandments of the Archbishop, in form hereunder in the next Article contained.

Secondly, It is Enacted, That in making amends for defaults done to the Churches and Churchmen, within such places as are immediately subject unto his Jurisdiction, the Archbishop may arbitrate according to the Council of all his Suffragans, or the greater and sounder part; and of weighty affairs belonging to the Church and Realm of England, may in time to come after his return, order and dispose likewise by their counsel, and the counsel of other discreet Men of the Realm.

Thirdly, It is Enacted, that he bring with him Master *Henry * Mortimer* Archdeacon of Canterbury, and *Pont * Hiberus de morris Sabler* his familiar Clerks or houshold Chaplains, and these Clerks only being strangers born, he keep and retain of his Council and Houshold.

Fourthly, It is Enacted, That other Clerks whereseever, beneficed in the Church of England, meaning and willing to return with the Archbishop, may safely return and abide in their Benefices, and dispend the Church goods within the Realm as they are bound, carrying or sending { KING 1 Hen. 3 } sending nothing out of the Realm, unless necessary occasion, and allowed of the Kings Council do so require.

Fifthly, It is Enacted, That the Archbishop or the Clerks coming with him, shall bring nothing with them in Letters, Message or Commandment, nor shall procure any thing else, during their abode in this Realm, either by themselves, or by others, whereby any damage danger or prejudice may redound to the King, or to any of his Realm. And for memory of the premisses, the Seal of the said renowned King of England is hanged unto these Presents.

By the whole Council.

Notwithstanding this conclusion, the Archbishop did not presently return, but continued in Provence and elsewhere, behaving himself imperiously as a Prelate of the right Romish stamp. In the mean time many matters incident to this place, were omitted and neglected, which personally by him should have been executed; but by reason of his absence the same were dispatched by deputation, and the same ordered likewise according to his own fancy, which he preferred before the Kings Authority and Commandment. This to be true, the Copy of a Letter describing the contumacy of the said Boniface doth sufficiently testifie, the same being set down agreeable to the Prototypon.

A Letter of the King to Boniface Archbishop of Canterbury, charging him to return into England, there personally to discharge his Archiepiscopal Function.

Tertia Lect. REX Bonifacio Cantuariensi Archiepiscopo, totius Angliæ Primati, salutem. Licet hactenus per patientiam pluries sustinuerimus electos in Episcopos, Abbates, ac Prælatos alios in regno nostro, &c.

In English thus:

Against the Archbishop of Canterbury in foreign Countrys abiding.

The King to Boniface Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, greeting. Although hitherto by patience we have suffered oftentimes Bishops elect, Abbots, and other Prelates in our Realm, for the benefit of their confirmation to be obtained, to pass over beyond Sea unto you, we thought not to receive at your hands any such reward, as that against the right and custome of our Realm, to the which we mean not by this our patience that prejudice shall any way be procured or bred, you should attempt this to be followed. We do marvel therefore, and are moved that you, at the request of us, have refused to commit the examination of the election of our welbeloved in Christ, Master Walter Gifford late of Bath and Wells Bishop Elect, and the confirmation of the same Election, unto some discreet persons of our Realm, we having detained and as yet detaining the same Gifford against his will, that he might not repair personally unto you: wherunto common right and the very custome of the Realm ought to have lead you unrequested, whilst you abide out of the Realm. Lest therefore our too much patience might breed to you a contempt, we will you to understand, that henceforward we mean to bear less with such dealing, especially in these days, wherein there is no safe passage for Englishmen unto you through the parts of France, as it is reported. Wherefore we thought good to desire your fatherhood, and also to admonish you, giving you moreover in charge and commandment, and upon the Fealty wherein you are bound unto us firmly enjoyning, that in respect of the foresaid Election, and other Ceremonies, you come personally unto England, to execute your office and charge, or send some other in your room; or at least procure and cause some discreet persons of our Realm, whom you shall repute more meet for this matter, to serve the turn for you in this behalf: lest if with contumacy you refuse to hear our requests and commandments the second time, which you are by duty bound to obey, we be compelled to take indignation against you, as a contemner of the rights, liberties and the customs of our Kingdom, and so to proceed against you more sharply by way of revenge: neither will we suffer, if you should do otherwise, that the revenues of your said Archbishoprick shall henceforth be conveyed unto you out of our Realm; but as you refuse the burthen, so will we in like sort do what we can to withdraw hereafter the profits and commodities from you during your abode out of our Land. Finally, we, if need shall be, are ready to give you a sure and safe conduct. Witness the King at St. Pauls of London, the 25 of June, and the 48 year of our Reign.

Now after all this ado, we read that at last Boniface returned, and becoming more holy towards his end, he went with other Bishops to the King, requesting him, that being mindful of the decay of his Kingdom, by Ecclesiastical Livings bestowed upon strangers, he would hereafter prefer learned and godly men of his own Nation. To whom the King answered that he would willingly do it. Wherefore I think it meet that you, which are a stranger and unlearned, and also my Brother Ethelmer Bishop of Winchester, whom I have preferred to such dignities only for kindreds sake, should first give examples to others, and for sake your Churches, and I will provide other learned men to serve in them. Which answer of the King so pierced this Boniface, that he always after lived a wearisome life in England. Wherefore perceiving himself to be misliked of the King and the People, he desired to return into his Country. And thereupon first selling and selling the Woods, letting out the Archbishoprick, taking great Fines of his Tenants, and making a great mass of Mony of the Clergy of his Province, he went with, the curse of all Men unto Savoy, where in the Castle of S. Helens, after he had misgoverned the See six and twenty years, six months, and sixteen days from his Consecration, being nine and twenty years from his first election, he died the fifteenth Kalends of August. And so ceased the troubles between the King and the said Bishop, whose contumacy in stories, with others of the like brood, doth largely appear in this Book.

Boniface his advice displeasant to himself.

Boniface maketh himself odious to the Archbishop, wicked, he is hated, and dieth.

¶ But to leave Boniface now dead, note ye this, that in this year, after the death of Pope Urban, succeeded in the said year of our Lord Anno 1265. Pope Clement the fourth; which Clement, as affirmeth Nic. Trivet, was first a Married Man, and had Wife and Children, and was the Solicitor and Counsellor to the French King; then after the death of his Wife, was Bishop, intituled Podensis; after that Archbishop of Narbon; and at last made Cardinal: who being sent of Pope Urban in Legacy, for reformation of peace, in his absence was elected Pope by the Cardinals. About this time flourished Thomas of Aquine, Reader at Paris among the Dominick Friers, and Bonaventure among the Francisean Friers. Ex Nic. Trivet.

* Now after all the forefaid tumults and broils of the King and his Barons, to the vexation of the whole Land, it was thought meet and necessary that all parties at variance should be reconciled, Whereupon it was concluded amongst them as followeth.

A form of Peace between the King and his Barons.

In English thus:

'This is the form of peace allowed of the King our Lord, 'of the Lord Edward his Son, of all the Prelates and Peers, 'and the whole Commonalty of the Realm of England, 'with common consent and agreement; to wit, that a 'certain Ordinance or Decree made in a Parliament holden 'at London about the Feast of the Nativity of St. Johns Baptist last past, for the maintaining and keeping of the peace 'of the Realm, shall continue all the days of the said King 'our Sovereign Lord, and the time of the Lord Edward, 'after he shall be received as King, even till the end and 'term that shall be thought meet and convenient. The said 'Ordinance or Decree is this:

'For the redreising of the state of the Realm of Eng'land, let there be chosen or named three discreet and trusty

'persons of the Realm, which may have authority and pow'er, from the Lord the King, to chuse or name in the Kings
'behalf nine Counsellors: of which nine, three at least by 'course or turns may always be present in the Court. And 'let the Lord the King, by the counsel of the said nine,
'order and dispose of the keeping of Castles, and the ma'naging of all the affairs in his Realm. Let the Lord the 'King also, by the advice of the foresaid nine, appoint Ju'stices, Chancellors, Treasurers, and other Officers, greater
'and lesser in those matters that pertain to government of 'his Court and Realm.

'The choosers or namers shall swear first, that according 'to Conscience they will choose or name such Counsellors,
'as they verily believe will be profitable and trusty in respect
'of Gods honour, the Church, the Lord the King, and his 'Realm. The Counsellors likewise, and all the Officers
'greater and lesser in their creation shall swear, that to the 'uttermost of their power they will faithfully execute their 'Offices to the honour of God and of the Church, and to
'the profit of the Lord the King and his Realm, without
'bribe or gift; meat and drink, which are commonly wont
'to be set upon the Table, excepted. And if so be that the 'foresaid Counsellors, or some or any of them, in the charge
'to them committed (whether they be he or she) have be'haved themselves ill, or that upon some other occasion such 'officers are to be changed; the Lord the King, by the coun'sel of the three former choosers or namers, may remove such
'as he shall see meet to be removed; and in their rooms
'by the same mens advice may appoint and place other 'persons trusty and serviceable.

'And if so be that either the greater Officers or the lesser
'do disorderly demean themselves in their Offices, the Lord
'the King, by the counsel of the foresaid nine, may displace
'them, and without delay by the same advice set others in 'their room. And if so be that the three first or chief cho-
'sers or namers, in the choise or naming of Counsellors, or
'perhaps the Counsellors in the creating of Officers, or in 'other affairs of the Lord the King and the Realm to be 'ordered or done, shall be at disagreement, then whatsoever
'by consent of two parts shall be concluded or decreed, let
'the same be firmly kept and observed; so that of those
'two parts, one be a Prelate of the Church in the business
'belonging to the Church: And if it so happen, that two 'parts of the said nine in some matter disagree; then shall
'they for their variance stand to the ordinance of the three
'first chusers or namers or the greater part of them.
'And if so be it seem expedient to all the Prelates and Ba'rons, by consent that some or one in place of some or one
'of the three first namers be put and appointed: then let
'the Lord the King, by the counsel of all the Prelates and Ba-
'rons, ordain some others, or one other. And let the Lord
'the King do all the premisses by the advice of the said nine
'in manner above mentioned, or let them do it in the Lord
'the Kings behalf, and by his authority by this present ordi'nance to continue and hold out till such time as this agree'ment, made and afterwards sealed by the parties, be perfect-
'ed by consent, or some other proviso be had, which the 'parties by consent shall judge allowable.

'This Ordinance was made at London, by the consent,
'will and commandment of the Lord the King, and allo of
'the Prelates, Barons, with the Commonalty then and there
'present. In witness whereof R. Bishop of Lincoln, and H.
'Bishop of Ely, R. Earl of Norfolk and Marshal of Eng-
'land, Robert de Vere Earl of Oxford, Humfrey de Bohune,
'William de monte Canisio, and the Maior of London, to
'this Writing have set their Seals. Acted in the Parlia'ment at London in the Month of June in the Year of our 'Lord 1264.

Reformation of the Church.

'It is also ordained, that the state of the English Church
'shall be reformed into a state meet and convenient.

No strangers to be keepers of the Kings Castles, &c.

'It is also ordained, that the three chusers abovesaid and 'Counsellors, of whom mention is made in the said Ordi-
'nance at London, and the keepers of Castles and others the 'Kings Bailiffs be homebred. And as for strangers born, let 'them come, tarry and depart peaceably, as well lay-men
'willing to dwell upon their possessions, as Clergy-men re-
'siding upon their Benefices.

'Merchants also, and all others to further and see to their 'affairs, shall come freely, and tarry peaceably; but yet con-
'ditionally, so they come without armor and a suspected
'multitude. And that none of them be received in any sort
'into any office or Bailiwike in the Realm, or otherwise
'into the Kings house and service be entertained. As for 'the Charters of general Liberties and Forests granted un-
'to the homebred of late by the King, and the Statutes
'made upon revoking of grievances, which the Lord the 'King the third year past in every Shire by his Letters Pa-
'tents hath caused to be published, with the commend'able Customes of his Realm, and a long time allowed, let
'be for ever observed: and that it might be provided how 'they may be better and more soundly observed: It is also 'provided, that the Lord the King, and the Lord Edward,
'the Barons and those that stand with them, let go all in'jury and rancour, so that they neither grieve, or suffer to
'be grieved by any of theirs, no one of them by occasi-
'on of things done in the hurly-burly past; and also cause
'all their Bailiffs at the undertaking of their Bailiwikes,
'that they shall grieve none by the occasion aforesaid, but
'shall do justice and right to every body with equality.
'And let there be good security provided how all these 'things may be firmly observed.

KING Hen. 3.

¶ When this agreement was dispatched, to set the Realm in some quietness, a little leisure was allowed to look into the losses and damages of the Church, whereupon it was provided as followeth.

Of the repairing of Trespasses committed against the Church.

IT is provided by common assent of the King, of the Prelates, Earls and Barons of the Land, that the trespasses which are committed against the Church of England, by reason of the tumults and wars that have been in this Realm of England, shall be reformed and amended in this manner.

There shall be chosen by the Earls and great Estates of the Land, with the liking and assent of the Prelates, three Bishops authorized, and having full power to establish and provide for such reasonable amends, as are to be made for the foresaid trespass committed against holy Church, so far forth as shall be fit and convenient.

Those that shall be found excommunicated, shall be absolved in form of right by such as have power and authority so to do.

The authority of the Prelates shall be established in this manner: First, it shall be faithfully undertaken by the Earls, Justices, and the other Lay-men of the Kings Council, and other great Barons of the Realm, that all those things which the Prelates, that shall be chosen shall reasonably ordain and appoint by way of reformation, they themselves shall observe and fulfil, and shall do their indeavour faithfully to cause the same to be observed by others, and thereof they shall deliver their Letters Patents.

Moreover, unto the Prelates, after they shall be chosen, full power shall be granted by the King, and the Commonalty, the Earls, Barons, and great men of the Land, to ordain those things which are needful and profitable to the full reformation of the estate of holy Church, to the honour due to the fealty of our Lord the King, and to the profit of the Realm. And that the promise made by the King, and by the Earls and Barons aforesaid, and by the other great Men of the Land, may appear to be made in good faith, they shall thereof make their Letters Patents, to wit of things that have been done a year past before the last Easter.

If any be found that will not stand to the ordinance and appointment of the foresaid Prelates in the causes aforesaid, and according to the form aforesaid, he shall be compelled thereunto by doom of holy Church; yea, if need be, he shall be thereunto forced by the Secular power. And that it may the better be done, the Justice shall have an hundred or more of choice men at Armes, or Serjeants, Soldiers elect, to distrain the Malefactors when by the said Prelates he shall be required. Those Soldiers to be sustained of the common goods of holy Church, during the time they shall be employed in that business. And this Ordinance shall continue for a year or two, till such time as matters be quieted, and that the provisions of the Prelates, and the peace of the Land be well observed.

Provided always, that the profits of Benefices of holy Church belonging to aliens, and others that have been enemies enemies to the land, shall be collected and safely kept in the hands of the Prelate, until such time as order be taken by common advice what is to be done therewithal. And for the more assurance and further testimony hereof, the King and the High Estates of the Land have unto this writing set their Seals.

¶ Besides all this it was confidered, that Non-residency being a default blame-worthy, deserved reformation. Whereof the King having special regard wrote his mind to the Bishop of Hereford for the redress of the same; whose Letter because it is memorable, and convenient matter therein contained for Non-residents of our time, we have here intertexed according to the Record.

A Letter of King Henry the Third directed to the Bishop of Hereford concerning Non-residents.

Tertia Lond.

EX Episcopo Hereford, salutem. Pastores gregibus præponuntur ut dies noctisque vigilias exercendo, &c.

In English thus:

Against Non-residence of Prelates.

The King to the Bishop of Hereford sendeth Greeting: Pastors or Shepherds are set over Flocks, that by exercising themselves in watching over them day and night, they may know their own Cattel by their look, bring the hunger-starved sheep into the meadows of fruitfulness, and the straying ones into one fold by the Word of Salvation, and the rod of correction; and to do their endeavour, that unity indissoluble may be kept. But some there be who damnably despising this Doctrine, and not knowing to discern their own cattel from others, do take away the milk and the wool, not caring how the Lords flock may be nourished; they catch up the temporal goods, and who perisheth in their Parish with famishment, or miscarrieth in manners, they regard not; which men deserve not to be called Pastors, but rather hirelings. And that even we in these days removing our selves into the Marches of Wales, to take order for the disposing of the Garrisons of our Realm, have found this default in your Church of Hereford, we report it with grief; for that we have found there a Church destitute of a Pastors comfort, as having neither Bishop nor Official, Vicar nor Dean, that may exercise any Spiritual function and duty in the same. But the Church it self, which in time past was wont to flow in delight, and had Canons that tended upon days and nights service, and that ought to exercise the works of Charity, they forsaking the Church, and leading their lives in Countries far hence, hath put off her stole or robe of pleasure, and fallen to the ground, bewailing the loss of her widowhood, and there is none among all her friends and lovers that will comfort her. Verily whiles we beheld this, and considered it diligently, the prick of pity did move our bowels, and the sword of compassion did inwardly wound our heart very sore, that we could no longer dissemble so great an injury done to our Mother the Church, nor pass the same over uncorrected.

Non-residents charged to be peremptorily required and abiding upon their Cures: Note.

Wherefore we command and straitly charge you, that all occasions set aside, you endeavour to remove your selves with all possible speed unto your said Church, and there personally to execute the Pastoral charge committed unto you in the same. Otherwise we will you to know for certainty that if you have not a care to do this, we will wholly take into our own hands all the temporal goods, and whatsoever else doth belong unto the Barony of the same Church, which goods for Spiritual exercise sake therein, it is certain our Progenitors of a godly devotion have bestowed thereupon. And such goods and duties as we have commanded hitherto to be gathered and safely kept and turned to the profit and commodity of the same Church, the cause now ceasing we will seize upon; and suffer no longer that he shall reap temporal things, which feareth not unreverently to withdraw and keep back Spiritual things, whereunto by office and duty he is bound; or that he shall receive any profits which refuseth to undergo and bear the burthens of the same. Witness the King at Hereford, the first of June, in the 48 year of our raign.

About this time (as appeareth by course of Record, and thereby may well be gathered) a redress of certain Sects was intended, among which one by name especially occurreth, and called the assembly of Harlots; a kind of people of a lewd disposition and uncivil. Of whose manners and life the King having been informed, addressed his Letters to the Sheriff of Oxfordshire, a place which they haunted; and wherein they practised their evil conversation: Whose Letter here followeth.

An assembly of ill disposed people called Harlots, whereby may be gathered the ancientness of that name.

A Letter of King Henry the Third to the Sheriff of Oxfordshire, concerning the banishment of an unlawful assembly called Harlots, out of that Country.

Tertia Lond

EX Vic. Oxon. salutem. Quia intelleximus quod quidam, qui se Harlotos appellant, vagi & otium foventes, in diversis partibus regni nostri, Congregationes & conventicula, necnon contractus illicitos, &c.

In English thus:

Against unlawful assembly or meeting of men which called themselves Harlots.

The King to the Sheriff of Oxfordshire sendeth Greeting: Because we understand that there be certain vagrant persons which call themselves Harlots, maintaining idle nest in divers parts of our Realm, most shamelessly making their meetings, assemblies, and unlawful matches against the honesty of the Church and good manners, which abuse we will not, neither ought we to suffer; we charge thee that on our behalf thou forbid the said Harlots henceforth in the said Countries to make any more such meetings, conventicle, or contracts; or to presume according to their lewand manner and wonted fashion to Rogue about our Realm; and hereto thou shalt (if need be) bind them, as by Law may be done. Wherein so behave thy self in this behalf, as we may commend thy diligence. Witness the King at Reading the 23 of November, in the 48 year of our Reign.

What manner of persons these were, or what their conversation was, it doth not further appear; nevertheless by the premisses it may seem to be some pretensed order of Religion. And it is most probable that the reproachful name of Harlot had his beginning from hence.

To conclude with special matters of the Church, wherein we have made somewhat the longer delay, by occasion of such necessary Records as came to hand, and brought with them their necessary use, this one remembrance notwithstanding remaineth, no less note-worthy than the rest, and falling within the revolution of the forty eighth year of this Kings reign, a year of great trouble, as by the premises may be gathered.

You are therefore to note that at this time the Prelates of England stood upon their Pantophles, and jolly fellows (I tell you) they would be known to be. For in an inquisition made after the death of one Alureduc de Lincoln, being as is suppofed, a Baron of this Realm, there is found (Inter alia) as followeth: Quod præditus Alureduc tenuit quandam particulam parcæ de Dunetsih & Tilei de Abbate de Cerne, per servicium tenendi stropeim suum, quando Abbas debet ascendere equum suum, & dare ei locum in comitatu quando præsens fuerit. That is, That the forenamed Alureduc held a certain piece of the Park of Dunetih and Tilei of the Abbot of Cerne, by service of holding his stirrup when the Abbot should take horseback, and to give him place in the Shire at such time as he should be present. The circumstances hereof being considered, together with the time wherein it was done, giveth probable cause to conjecture that the occation of this matter came by this means: viz. That whereas the said Alured was desirous to enlarge his Park, and could not so do but by purchasing of part of some other ground next adjoyning, whereof the said Abbot was owner; he was therefore constrained either to lack that he liked, or to admit such conditions as pleased my Lord Abbot; who like a Lord (as you see) was content to let him have his land, reserving such service as is aboveraid. Wherein would be noted the pomp of Prelates in those days, and how near they drew in imitation to the Pope, in whose treading they traced.

But

But leaving these affairs of the Church, and Churchmen, wherein we have been somewhat large, we will now enter into other troubles of the Temporal state. You heard before of a pacification concluded between the King and his Barons in the year of our Lord 1264. the same having been admitted by mutual and common consent of the Temporalty and Clergy. Nevertheless, as a sore not well searched and tented, but superficially and overly skinned, doth break out into a more dangerous botch; so it came to pass among the Lords and Barons, betwixt whom no such firm reconciliation was made as was like long to last. Whereupon insued after secret grudge and privy hatred, open Arms and Conflicts. For in this year 1265. the Sons of Simon the Earl, to wit, Henry, Simon and Guido, being all puft up, and with the pride of their success elevated, did that which nothing contented the Earl of Gloucester: insomuch that he challenged Henry the eldest Son of the Earl Simon Mountfort at the Barriers, to be tried at Northampton. But that challenge was taken up, left some further inconvenience might have risen thereof. But the Earl of Glocester, being moved therewith in his mind, sent unto his Father the Earl, that he should deliver him such Prisoners, being Noblemen, as he took at the Battel of Lewis; among whom the King of Almain was named first. But he by countermand answered him, and said, that it might content and satisfie him for that he had saved and preserved to him his Lands, that day the Battel was fought at Lewis; and that furthermore, he would not send him such Prisoners as he demanded; and that he himself kept more noble than they in the Castle of Dover: among them was John Basset, which undermined and burst down the Walls of Northampton at that Conflict, as is said before and specified.

Dissention between Earl Simon and the Earl of Gloucester.

The Earl of Gloucester & as he heard this, sent incontinently to the Lord Roger Mortimer, which always took the Kings part, desiring that they two might talk together touching the benefit and commodity of the King. Who, doubting some deceit, desired Sureties and Pledges for his safe return, and he would come to talk with him, and so had. When they met, and had a while talked familiarly, the Earl of Glocester shewed him all that he was purposed to do, and that further he lamented he had so much and so greatly offended the King; and that he would with all his power and ability make amends for that offence, in the restitution of the King again to his Kingly dignity, as much as he possibly might. Therefore they sent secretly to Robert the Brother of the Earl of Glocester, which was near about the Earl Simon, and made him to consent with them therein. And to work this thing more circumspectly, when opportunity served thereunto, Roger Mortimer sent unto the Kings Son an Horse excelling all others in footmanship, unto whom he might be sure to trust, when he saw convenient time thereunto. After which things thus contrived, Prince Edward desired leave of the Earl to prove his Courser against such time as he should ride at the Tilt, as they might when they listed. Affoon as he had gotten leave, and that with galloping and ranging the field, he had wearied divers of their Horses: at the last, getting up upon that Horse which for that purpose was sent, and spying a Servant on Horseback coming toward him with two Swords, he turned about unto his Keeper, whose name was Robert de Rose, and to others his Play-fellows that were with him, saying, My loving Lords, thou long have I kept you company, and have been in your custodies; and now not purposing to use your companies any longer, I betake you to God. And quickly turning his Horse about, put to the Spurs, and away went he. The other pricked after apace, but yet came far enough behind, and overtake him they could not. At last, when they saw Roger Mortimer coming from his Castle of Wigmore, accompanied with many armed Men to meet him, as before it was appointed, they returned again home as wise as when they came forth. And when this the Princes escape was divulgated, much people came unto him out of every Quarter, with great joy thereof. Amongst whom, the first was the Earl of Glocester, and the other Soldiers of the King, which had now long lain at Bristow, and thereabouts, and within a short space he had a great and a mighty Host.

Prince Edward escapeth from out of the custody of Earl Simon by a train.

Which thing when the Earl Simon understood, he much doubted and mistrusted himself; and sending into Wales, he got from thence a great many Men, and augmented his power as strongly as he might from every part of England. He sent also Simon his Son to the Noblemen of the North parts, and with all possible speed he might bring them with him; who with a great company came with him, and at Kenelworth a while they staid, and there pitched their Tents. But leaving Kenelworth for a certain time, they went to Winchester, and spoiled the same, and then returned again to Kenelworth. And when this was declared to Edward the Kings Son, who then was at Worcester, by a certain Spial, which he had gotten after he came from Glocester a little before; he prepared himself with his Soldiers, in the night season, to go to the place where the Spy should bring him, which was into a deep Valley, near unto the place where Simon and his company had pitched. And when in the morning they were very early about to arm themselves, and prepare their Horses, they heard a great noise of their enemies coming towards them. Then thinking that they had prepared themselves against their coming, and so had been betrayed, they set forth in Battel array, marching forwards, till that they met certain of their enemies straggling in long Wings, thinking to have gone a foraging, and to have fought for Victuals; whom they took, and with their fresh Horses new horsed their Soldiers that had their Horses tired with long travel. And so marching forward, came very early in the morning upon their enemies, whom for the most part they found sleeping, and laying lustily about them, they slew divers; some they took, the rest they put to flight; and fifteen of their chiefest Ensignes they took, with many other rich spoils. But young Simon himself lodged in the Castle, who with a few with him escaped and fled. And this was the fourth day before the nones of August. An. 1265.

The first encounter of Prince Edward after he escaped his keepers.

But when Edward heard that Earl Simon was coming toward Kenelworth, to joyn with his Sons Battel, he marched forward to meet him the third day after at Eusham, where he divided his Host into three Battels, he himself having the leading of one, the Earl of Glocester the second, and Roger Mortimer the third, which came upon their backs. The Kings Son Edward came Northward, as though he came from Kenelworth to Eusham: and because he would not be descried, he caused his own Standards and Ensignes to be taken down, and young Simons, which he had taken before to be advanced. But the Earl Simons Scurier, whose name was Nicholas, shewed the Earl that such bands and companies were marching towards him; who thinking the same to have been Simon his Sons power, not knowing of the overthrow which he had before, gave small credit thereunto, till that the said Nicholas, the better to descry them, went up to the Abby Steeple of Eusham, where he might plainly discern them all and their Standards; for by this time they were mounted the Hill which they laboured to attain, thinking to have that vantage, when they should give their charge as they had purposed, and had also advanced again his own Standards, and pulled down Simons, whereby they were the more easier descried and known. Then he cried aloud to the Earl Simon, and said, We are all but dead men; for it is not your Son, as you suppose, that cometh, but it is Edward the Kings Son that cometh from one part, and the Earl of Glocester from another part, and Roger Mortimer from the third part. Then said the Earl, The Lord be merciful unto our souls, forsomuch as our bodies and lives are now in their hands; commanding that every man should make himself ready to God, and to fight out the field, for that it was their wills to die for their laws, and in a just quarrel. And such as would depart, he gave leave to go their ways, that they should be no discomfiture to the rest.

The Earl Simon finding his enemies, and all advantages, prepareth to battel.

Then came unto him his eldest Son Henry, and comforted him, desiring him to have no despair, nor yet mistrust in the good success of this Victory, with other such cheerful words. No my Son (saith he) I despair not; but yet, it is thy presumption, and the pride of the rest of thy brethren that hath brought me to this end you see; notwithstanding, yet I trust I shall die to God, and in a righteous quarrel. After words of comfort given to all his Host, and the Oration made as is the manner, they all armed themselves. The King also (whom the Earl always kept with him) he armed in an armor of his own; and then dividing their Battels, they marched towards their enemies. But before they they joyned, the Welshmen ran their ways, and thinking to escape over the river of Dee, were these some drowned, and some slain. Then when the battel joyned and came to handy strokes, within short space many of the Earls part fell and were slain; and the King himself being thrucken at, cried with a loud voice to them, saying, Kill me not, I am Henry your King. And with these the Kings words the Lord Adam Mombaux knew him, and saved him. At whose voice and cry came also Prince Edward his Son, and delivered him to the guard and custody of certain Knights. In the mean season the Earl Simon was hard bestead and beaten down, and also slain before Edward the Prince came at him. Howbeit before he fell, when as he fought for life, and Henry his Son, and other Noblemen on his part were about him, he brake out into these words unto his enemies, saying, What is there no mercy and compassion with you? Who again answered, What compassion should there be shewed to Traytors? Then said he, The Lord be merciful unto our souls, our bodies are in your hands. And so soon as these words were spoken, they mangled his body, and divided his members, and cut off his head, which head Roger Mortimer sent unto his wife. And not far off from him also was slain Henry his Eldest Son, the Lord Hugh Spenser, the Lord Radulph Basset, the Lord Thomas de Hastele, the Lord William Mandeville, the Lord John Beauchampe, the Lord Guido Baillofer, the Lord Roger Rowleie, and many other Noblemen besides, with a great multitude of people, the Lord knoweth how many. This battel was fought in the month of August, and continued from one of the Clock till it was night: in the which was not so much as one man on the Earls part, of any estimation, fortitude, and courage, but in that battel loft his life: more than the Lord John, who by the great grace of God escaped death. Neither is this to be forgotten that the same day being Tuesday, at that instant hour, when the Battel began, which was at one of the Clock at Afternoon, there was such a darkness over all, such thunder and such tempest, that the like before that time was never seen, being very calm and fair weather both immediately before and after; which seemed (saith mine Author) to give a plain demonstration of that which afterwards chanced and followed.

After this great slaughter and overthrow there was a Parliament summoned at Winchester by the Earl of Glocester, and others of his part. Here by the way is to be considered, that the King although he was in the Camp of the Earl of Leicester, being then in custody, and his Son Edward with the Earl of Glocester, yet the King was on that side against his will, and therefore in the said Parliament the King was restored to his Kingly dignity, which was before that time under the custody of the Barons. But after the Battel was ended and done, certain of them that loved the Earl, upon an old Ladder gathered up such parts of his body as remained, and covering the same with an old Gown, brought it to Eusham, where they putting the same in a fair linnen Cloth, buried it in the Church. But not long after, such as thought not themselves sufficiently revenged with his death (to wreak them of the dead corpse) took up the same and threw it in another place, saying, That he which was both accursed, and a Traytor, was not worthy of Christian burial.

Prince Edward defieth whosoever shall withstand him.

The same year also died Walter Camilopus Bishop of Winchester, after whom succeeded Nicolas of Ely, the Kings Chancellor.

The same year the King perceiving that unless the Castle of Kenelworth were recovered, and the boldness of them restrained that kept the same, many evils and inconveniences might ensue thereupon, to the prejudice of his Kingdom; for that the number increased every day more and more, wasting and spoiling the Country all about; therefore he gathered an Army and came down to Warwick, where he a while tarried expecting the meeting and assembling of his Marquesses and Lords, with Enfigns and other munition suitable. Who when their bands were furnished and mustered, and all things ready, the morrow after Midsummer day he displayed his Banner, and began his voyage, marching towards Kenelworth, and besieged the same. During which siege, by the advice and counsel of the King, the Popes Legate, and other Noblemen, twelve persons were chosen which should have the disposing of those things that pertained to the state of the Realm, and of those that had lost their lands and inheritances, who amongst other things, made and established this one Proviso, that was commonly called Kenelworth Decree, That all those which had lost their lands by attainder (although not yet attainted) should fine therefore at the King's pleasure, and take their lands of him again; paying some three years, some four years, some two years revenues of the same, according to the quality of the crime and offence committed. All which Provisoes or provisions were established and confirmed as well by the corporal Oath, as by signment of the same with the hands and seals of all the Prelates and Clergy of England, there assembled for that purpose by the Popes Legate upon the Feast of All-Saints. When these things were thus finished, messengers were sent on the Kings behalf, as well to those that kept the Castle of Kenelworth, as also to those that were assembled in the Isle of Ely; willing them to come under the protection of the Kings peace, and yield to the foresaid Provisoes, established by the twelve Commissioners. Who all together answered and said, That they would in no wise condescend thereunto, both for that it was done without their consents, not being called unto it, and also for that the said Decree was over-strait and intolerable. Within short space after, great Famine and Pestilence chanced amongst them which kept the Castle, insomuch that they were without all hope of keeping the same; wherefore soon after the King sending again to them to yield the Castle and take their pardons, they consulting together of their own estate, thus answered the Kings Messengers, If it please the King and his Council to permit us to send our Messenger to the Lord Simon Montfort, which is beyond the Sea, that he may come by a certain day to the defence of this his Garrison and Fort, and that in the mean space we be not disturbed by the Kings Army that hath invironed us, till the return of our Messengers; if by the day appointed he come not, we will yield up the same, so that we may be pardoned of life, limb, and moveables.

Kenelworth Decree established.

Kenelworth Castle yielded up to the King.

When the Messengers were returned, and had declared to the King their answer; he consulting with his Nobles about the matter, agreed unto their Petitions, and caused the Truce to be proclaimed throughout all his Camp, after that sufficient Hostages were on either side given for the performance of the same; whereupon they set forward their Messengers, as before was said they would. But after that many of them within the Castle being very grievously vexed with the Bloody-flux, and other diseases, insomuch that the whole men might not abide the corruption and annoyance of those that were diseased, they delivered up the Castle before the return of the Messengers again, and were permitted to go whither they would to refresh themselves, as men molested with great vexations and miseries. After the rendering up of the Castle, the King committed the custody thereof to his Son Edmund, and so with his Host departing from his siege, came upon Christmas Even to Oxnie, where he with great solemnity and triumph kept his Christmas during seven days, and from thence with his Host came to Windsor, from whence after a few days he marched towards Ely; in which Iland he besieged those which were disherited, and sharply also assaulted them.

The Bishop of Ely beheaded.

The same year Pope Clement the Fourth promoted Master Walter Gifford Bishop of Bath, to be Archbishop of York.

In which year also the Church of England began to pay the Tenths of all their Revenues, as well Spiritual as Temporal, to the King, to continue for three years space; and this was done by the Authority Apostolical.

Within a while after the Barons which were yet remaining, gathered themselves together again; amongst whom John Daiwill (being a lusty and stout man of war) began to have a name, and was well esteemed amongst them; who altogether did what mischief they might, and in the month of May they assembled at Chesterfield, under the said John Daiwill and the Earl of Ferrarence, upon whom the Kings Souldiers coming sudden-ly in the night, took them sleeping, and flew many of them. Then the said John Daiwill quickly arming himself came forth, thinking with more defence both to save himself and to escape. Who in the way struck the Lord Gilbert Humfard such a blow with his Demi-lance, that he fell'd both him and his horse to the ground, and so fled with a few more after him. And thus while the poor Soldiers fought and were slain, the Barons fled away, and saved themselves. Also the Earl Ferarence fled, and hid himself in a Church; but being betrayed by a woman, he was taken forth, and led away prisoner. After this the King kept a Parliament at Northampton, where he dishersited all those that took part with the Earl Simon, and all their Children. Where also the Popes Legate Ottobonus held a Convocation, and Excommunicated all such Bishops as had taken any part with Simon against the King; of whom divers he sent up to Rome, to be absolved of the Pope; and further the said Legate caused to be proclaimed certain Decrees, which he himself had made, and also the new grant of Pope Clement to the King and Queen, of all the Tenths for seven years to come. And shortly after, a Tax also was fined upon the Country of Norfolk; to the gathering whereof Walter the Bishop of Norwich was appointed. Ex Scala Mundi.

After this in the year of our Lord 1267, King Henry besieged again the Castle of Kenelworth, from the seventh day before the first day of July, until the beginning of December; whither came Ottobonus the Popes Legate, by whose intreaty Henry Hastings delivered the same unto the King, which stoutly had defended the same, and resisted the King, having pardon granted both for him and his, of his life, lands, goods and cattels. In which time also the Barons again assembled with John Daiwill in the Isle of Axioline, and so proceeded till they came to Lincoln, which they also took, and spoiled the Jews, and slew many of them; and entring their Synagogue, tare and rent the Book of their Law, and burnt the same, and all other writings and obligations which they could come by. Which thing when the King heard, he sent thither his Son Prince Edward; but as soon as they heard that, they fled into the Isle of Ely, and fortified the same with Bulwarks as strongly as they might, at every entrance into the same. This was in the month of April, when Edward the Kings Son came thither; who for the great abundance of waters in the same, could by no means enter the Island, till at length by the counsel of the inhabitants of that Province he caused with a number of workmen great Trenches and Ditches to be made, somewhat to convey away the water; and so long they used the counsel of them in making Bridges with Planks and Hurdles, till at the last they entred the Island; who as soon as they were entred, the Barons fled to London, where they were of the Londoners well entertained. The rest which were in the Island yielded themselves (amongst whom was Roger Wake, Simon the younger, and Peeches) having their lives and members. After this, both the King and Edward his Son came to London with a great power, but yet were kept out of the City by the Barons and Citizens for the space of forty days. And Ottobonus the Legate (who for fear was fled into the Tower) they narrowly laid for, that he should not escape. At length by the intreaty of the Earl of Gloucester, and other Earls that were his friends, both the Barons and Citizens were pardoned, and admitted to the Kings favour. And four Bishops, and eight other Noblemen were chosen, such as were at Coventry first nominated, that they should order and dispose all matters betwixt the King and such as had lost their inheritance, as also the form of their peace and raniome. And Proclamation was made upon the Feast of All-Saints, of perfect peace and accord throughout all the Realm.

A peace concluded between the Barons and the King.

In the fifty second year of this King Henry's reign, eight days after the Feast of St. Martin, he held a Parliament at Marleberge, in the year of our Lord above recited; where by the advice of wife and discreet men, and with all the consents of the Nobles, he ordained and Enacted divers good and profitable Statutes for the reformation and bettering of the State of the Realm and execution of common justice, which are called the Statutes of Marleberge.

The same year upon St. John's day the Baptist, Edward the Kings Son, and divers other Noblemen of England took upon them the Cross by the Legates hands at Northampton, to the relief of the Holy Land, and the subversion of the enemies of the Cross of Christ. Which done, the Legate (the same year went out of England, not purposing after that to return again. This holy Legate saith (mine Author) which might well be resembled to Lynx the monstrous beast, whose quick sight penetrateth every thing, inrolled to perpetual memory the valuation of all the Churches in the Realm of England so narrowly, as by any means possible he might inquire the certainty thereof. The same was done he that made all the Cathedral and Conventual Churches Legate. to pay Pensions; so that those Churches which gave not Pensions out the vacancy of their Benefices to their Clerks and strangers, deral and should pay unto them a certain yearly pension, during the Conventual vacancy of the Benefices which they should have.

The same year was the Body of Saint Edward the King and Confessor, by Walter Gifford Archbishop of York, and other Bishops, Intombed in a new and rich Shrine of Gold and Silver, beset with precious stones, in the presence of Henry the King of England. In which year also fell a great rain and inundation of waters, such as hath not lightly been seen, which increased and continued the space of forty days, and more.

The same year died Walter de Laiwill, Bishop of Sarum, the third day before the Nones of January. After whom succeeded Robert of Northampton, the Dean of the same Church. And because the See of Canterbury was then vacant, he was confirmed by the Chapter of Canterbury; which Chapter had always the jurisdiction in Spiritual causes, during the vacancy of that See, in as ample manner as the Bishop himself had being alive. After this, the Bishop Elect coming thither, thinking to have had his Confecration, was notwithstanding put back for two causes; one was, for that there was present then no more but one Bishop; the other was, for that all the other Bishops had appealed, that he might not be confecrated to their prejudice; that is, by the authority of the Chapter of Canterbury, saying, That they would not be under the obedience of the Monks.

After this solemn Messengers were for this cause sent to the Cardinals of Rome, for that then the See of Rome was vacant; who received answer, That during the vacation of that See, the Confirmation and Confecration of the Bishop Elect pertained to the forefaid Chapter of Canterbury.

The same year also was the Lord Henry, the Son and heir of the Lord Richard King of Almain, and Brother to King Henry the Third, slain at Viterbium, in a certain Chappel hearing Mass, by the Lord Simon and Guido, the Sons of the Lord Simon Mountfort Earl of Leicester.

The death and Slaughter of Archbishop of Canterbury.

About the time when Prince Edward was preparing his journey toward Asia, Boniface of whom ye heard before, the Archbishop of Canterbury ended his life in the Country of Sabaudia, going belike to Rome, or coming thence. After whose death the Monks of Canterbury proceeding to a new Election granted by the King, agreed upon the Prior of their house, named Adam Chelenden, But the King and his Son Prince Edward consenting and speaking in the behalf of Robert Burnell their Chancellor, did sollicite the matter with the Monks, partly intreating, partly threatning them, to chuse the said Robert to be Archbishop. Notwithstanding, the Monks being stout, would neither relent to their courteous request, no yet bow to Prince Edward being now on his journey, and feeing himself thus frustrated of the Monks, writeth back to the King his Father, devoutly praying and beseeching him in no wise to admit the Election of the forefaid Monks. And so passing to Dover with Henry, the Son of Richard his Uncle King of Romans, with their wives, they took their passage in the month of August. After this the Prior thus elected, as is foretold, but not admitted by the King to be Archbishop, went up to Rome.

In the mean time the Monks in the absence of their Elect, ordained one Geffrey Pomenall to be their Official; who seeing himself advanced to that dignity, and bearing belike some old grudg against the Prior of Dover, caused him to be cited up to appear in the Chapter-house of Canterbury. The Prior of Dover seeing this Citation to be prejudicial to him and to the Church of Dover, and knowing that the Monks of Canterbury have no such jurisdiction (the See of Canterbury being vacant) but that all things appertaining to that Church, ought to be reserved whole to the Confecration of the new Archbishop, therefore for the state both of him, and of his Church, he appealed up also unto Rome. The Concordance.

About this time came out the great Concordance by an English Frier, called John Dernington. Ex Eulogio.

It was above declared how a general Voyage being proclaimed to war against the Turks, and a Subsidy being collected in England upon the same: Prince Edward with others was appointed to take their Voyage, and now were onward in their journey. Who at Michaelmas following, with his company came to Egermont, which is from Marlia eight Leagues westward, and there taking Ship again, (having a merry wind and prosperous) within ten days arrived at Sunes at Tunicium, where he was with great joy welcomed and entertained of the Christian Princes that were to this purpose assembled, as of Philip the French King, whose Father Ludovicus died a little before, of Carolus the King of Sicilia, and the two Kings Navar and Aragon. And as the Lord Edward came thither for his Father the King of England, thither came also Henry the Son of the King of Almain for his Father; who at his return from the Voyage was slain in a Chappel at Viterbium hearing Mass, by the Lord Simon and Guido, the Sons of the Lord Simon Mountfort Earl of Leicester.

When Prince Edward demanded of these Kings and Princes what was to be done, they answered him again, and said, The Prince of this City, said they, and the Province adjoyning to the same, hath been accustomed to pay tribute unto the King of Sicilia every year. And now for that the same hath been for the space of seven years unpayed and more, therefore we thought good to make invasion upon him. But the King knowing the same tribute to be justly demanded, hath now according to our own desires satisfied for the time past, and also paid his tribute before hand.

Then said he, My Lords what is this to the purpose? Are we not here all assembled, and have taken upon us the Lords Character to fight against the Infidels and enemies of Christ? What mean you then to conclude a peace with them? God forbid we should do so, for now the land is plain and hard, so that we may approach the holy City Jerusalem. Then said they, Now have we made a league with them; neither is it lawful for us to break the same, but let us return again to Sicilia, and when the Winter is past we may well take Shipping to Acra. But this counsel nothing at all liked him, neither did he shew himself well pleased therewith; but after that he had made them a Princely Banket, he went into his Closet or privy Chamber from amongst them, neither would be partaker of any of that wicked money which they had taken. They notwithstanding continuing their purpose, at the next merry wind took Shipping, and for want of Ships, left two hundred of their men ashore, crying out and pitiously lamenting for the peril and hazard of death they were in. Wherewith Prince Edward being somewhat moved with compassion, came back to the land, and received and stowed them in his own Ships, being the last that went aboard. Within seven days after, they arrived in the Kingdom of Sicilia, over against the City Trapes, casting their Anchors a league from thence within the Sea, for that their Ships were of great burthen, and throughly fraught. And from the haven of the City they sent out Barges and Boats to receive and bring fach of the Nobility to land as would; but their Horses for the most part, and all their Armor they kept still within board. At length towards the evening, the Sea began to be rough, and increased to a great tempest and a mighty inforuach that their Ships were beaten one against another sides; and drowned there were of them, at that tempest lying at Anchor, more than an hundred and twenty, with all their armour and munition, with innumerable fouls besides; and that wicked money also which they had taken before, likewise perished and was drowned. But the tempest hurt not so much as one Ship of Prince Edward's, who had in number thirteen, nor yet had one man loft thereby; for that as it may be presupposed, he consented not to the wicked counsel of the reft. When in the morning the Princes and Kings came to the Sea-side, and saw all their Ships drowned, and saw their men and horses in great number cast upon the land drowned, they had full heavy hearts, as well they might. For of all their Ships and Mariners, which were in number fifteen hundred besides the common Souldiers, there were no more saved than the Mariners of one only Ship, and they in this wife: There was in that Ship a good and wife Matron (a Countess or an Earls wife) who perceiving the tempest to grow, and fearing her self, called to her the Master of the Ship, and asked whether in attempting to the shore, it were not possible to save themselves? Who answered that to save the Ship it was impossible, howbeit the men that were therein by Gods help he doubted not. Then said the Countess, For the Ship force no whit, save the souls therein, and have to thee double the value of the Ship. Who immediately hoising the sails, with all force run the Ship aground to near the shore as was possible. Thus with the vehemency of the weather and force he came withal, he braft the Ship, and saved all that was within the same, as the Master of the same Ship had shewed and said before.

Then the Kings and Princes (altering their purpose after this so great a shipwrack) returned home again every one unto their own lands; only Edward the Kings Son remained behind with his Men and Ships, which the Lord had faved and preserved. Then Prince Edward (renovating his purpose) took Shipping again, and within fifteen days after Easter arrived he at Acra, and went aland, taking with him a thousand of the best Souldiers and most expert, and tarried there a whole month, refreshing both his Men and Horses, and that in this peace he might learn and know the secrets of the land. After this he took with him six or seven thousand Souldiers and marched forward twenty miles from Acra, and took Nazareth; and those that he there found he slew, and afterward returned again to Acra. But their enemies following after them, thinking to have set upon them at some strait or other advantage; they were by the Prince premonished thereof, and returning again upon them, gave a charge, and slew many of them, and the reft they put to flight. After this about Midsummer, when the Prince had understanding that the Saracens began to gather at Cackbow, which was forty miles from Acra; he marching thither set upon them very early in the morning, and slew of them more than a thousand, the reft he put to flight, and took rich spoils, marching forward till they came to a Castle named Castrum Peregrinorum, situate upon the Sea-coast, and tarried there that night, and the next day they returned toward Acra. In the mean season the King of Jerusalem sent unto the Noblemen of Cyprus, desiring them with speed that they would come and aid the Christians; but they would not come, saying, they would keep their own land and go no further.

Prince Edward arrived with at Acra and taketh Nazareth.

Then

The Noblemen of Cyprus shew their fidelity to the Prince and King of England.

Then Prince Edward fent unto them, defiring that at his requeft they would come and joyn in aid with him. Who immediately thereupon came unto him with great preparation and furniture for the war, faying, that at his commandment they were bound to do no leſs, for that his Predeceſſors were fometimes Governours of their land, and that they ought always to fhew their fidelity to the Kings of England. Then the Chriſtians being herewith animated made a third Voyage or Rode, and came as far as the Fort called Vincula S. Petri, and to St. Georges: and when they had ſlain certain there,not finding any to make reſiſtance againſt them, they retired again from whence they came.

When thus the fame of Prince Edward grew amongſt his enemies, and that they began to ſtand in doubt of him; they deviſed among themſelves, how by ſome policy they might circumveng him, and betray him. Whereupon the great Prince and Admiral of Joppa ſent unto him, feigning himſelf under great deceit to become a Chriſtian, and that he would draw with him a great number beſides, ſo that they might be honourably entertained and uſed of the Chriſtians. This talk pleaſed the Prince well, and perſwaded him to finiſh the thing he had ſo well begun, by writing again to who alſo by the ſame meſſenger ſent and wrote back unto him divers times about the ſame matter, whereby no miſtruſt ſhould ſpring. This meſſenger, ſaith mine Author, was one Ex eate nutritus, one of the ſtony-hearted, that neither feared God, nor dreaded death. The fifth time when this Meſſenger came,and was of the Princes ſervants ſearched, according to the manner and cuſtom what weapon and armor he had about him, as alſo his purſe, that not ſo much as a knife could be found about him, he was had up into the Princes Chamber, and after his reverence done; he pulled out certain Letters, which he delivered to the Prince from his Lord, as he had done others before. This was about eight days after Whitſuntide, upon a Tueſday ſomewhat before night; at which time the Prince was laid upon his bed bare headed in his Jerkin, for the great heat and intemperature of the weather.

The meſſenger ſearched before he came to the Princes preſence.

When the Prince had read the Letters, it appeared by them, that upon the Saturday next following, his Lord would be there ready to accompliſh all that he had written and promiſed. The report of theſe news by the Prince to the Standers by liked them well, whereby ſomewhat back to conſult thereof amongſt themſelves. In the mean time the Meſſenger kneeling and making his obeiſance to the Prince (queſtioning further with him) put his hand to the Belt, as though he would have pulled out ſome ſecret Letters, and ſuddenly he pulled out an envenomed Knife, thinking to have ſtricken him into the belly therewith as he lay; but the Prince lifting up his hand to defend the blow, was ſtricken a great wound into the arm. And being about to fetch another ſtroke at him, the Prince again with his foot took him ſuch a blow that he fell'd him to the ground. With that the Prince gat him by the hand,and with ſuch violence wreſted the Knife from him, that he hurt himſelf therewith in the forehead, and immediately thruſt the ſame into the belly of the Meſſenger and ſtriker, and ſlew him. The Princes ſervants being in the next Chamber not far off,hearing the buſtling, came with great haſt running in. And finding the Meſſenger lying dead on the Floor, one of them took up a ſtool and beat out his brains; whereat the Prince was wroth, for that he ſtruck a dead man, and one that was killed before. The rumor hereof, as it was ſtrange, ſo it ſoon went throughout all the Court, and from thence amongſt the common people; wherefore they were very heavy and greatly diſcouraged. To him came alſo the Captain of the Temple,and brought him a coſtly and precious drink againſt poyſon, leſt the venom of the Knife ſhould penetrate the lively blood, and in blamingwiſe ſaid unto him, Did I not ſhew your Grace before of the deceit and ſubtilty of this people? Notwithſtanding, ſaith he, let your Grace take a good heart, you ſhall not die of this wound, my life for yours. But ſtraightway the Surgeons and Phyſicians were ſent for, and the Prince was dreſſed, and within a few days after the wound began to putrifie, and the fleſh to look dead and black; whereupon they that were about the Prince began to mutter amongſt themſelves, and were very ſad and heavy. Which thing he himſelf perceiving, ſaid unto them, Why mutter you thus amongſt your ſelves? What ſee you in me, can I not be healed? Tell me the truth,be ye not afraid. Whereupon one ſaid to him, and like your Grace you may be healed, we miſtruſt it not; but yet it will be very painful for you to ſuffer. May ſuffering,ſaid he again,reſtore health? Yea, ſaith the other,on pain of loſing my head. Then, ſaid the Prince, I commit my ſelf unto you, do with me what you think good. Then ſaid one of the Phyſicians, Is there any of your Nobles in whom your Grace repoſeth ſpecial truſt? To whom the Prince anſwered me, naming certain of the Noblemen that ſtood about him. Then ſaid the Phyſician unto the two whom the Prince firſt named,the Lord Edmund, and the Lord John Veiſe: And do you alſo faithfully love your Lord and Prince? Who anſwered both, Yea undoubtedly. Then ſaith he,Take you away this Gentlewoman and Lady (meaning his wife) and let her not ſee her Lord and Husband until ſuch a time I will you thereunto. Whereupon they took her out of the Princes preſence, crying out and wringing her hands. Then ſaid they unto her,Be ye contented good Lady and Madam, it is better that one woman ſhould weep a little while, than that all the Realm of England ſhould weep a great ſeaſon. Then upon the morrow they cut out all the dead envenomed fleſh out of the Princes arm,and threw it from them, and ſaid unto him, How cheereth your Grace? We promiſe you within theſe fifteen days you ſhall ſhew your ſelf abroad (if God permit) upon your Horſe-back, whole and well as ever you were. And according to the promiſe he made the Prince, it came to paſs, to the no little comfort and admiration of all his ſubjects. When the great Soldan heard of it,and that the Prince was yet alive,he would ſcarcely believe the fame: and ſending unto him three of his Nobles and Princes, he excuſed himſelf by them, calling his gods to witneſs, that the ſame was done neither by him, nor his conſent. Which Princes and Meſſengers ſtanding aloof off from the Kings Son worſhipping him,fell flat upon the ground. You (ſaith the Prince) do reverence me, but as for you love me not. But they underſtood him not, becauſe he ſpake in Engliſh unto them, ſpeaking by an Interpreter. Nevertheleſs he honourably intreated them, and ſent them away in peace.

The Victory of the Prince and Engliſhmen againſt the Earl of Chalons and the French-men.

The Prince returned to health, and the Soldan ſent to search himſelf.

Thus when Prince Edward had been eighteen months in Acra, he took Shipping about the Aſſumption of our Lady (as we call it) returning homeward, and after ſeven weeks he arrived in Sicilia at Trapes, and from thence travelling through Paleſtina and Metmes, and ſo through the midſt of Aquila, till he came to Rome, where he was of the Pope honourably entertained; from thence he came into France, whoſe fame and Noble proweſs was there much bruted among the common people, and envied of the Nobility, eſpecially of the Earl de Chalons, who ſent unto him and required him that he might break a ſtaff with him at the Tilt in his Country. Which thing to do, for that the Prince would not diminiſh his honour and fame (although he might have well alledged a ſufficient cauſe and excuſe by means of his travel) yet he would not, but willingly conſented thereunto; whereupon it was proclaimed, that Prince Edward by ſuch a day, with thoſe that were with him, had challenged all comers at the Tilt and Barriers. Whereupon great Aſſemblies were made in the Country all about; and divers as well Horſe-men as Footmen, had conjured amongſt themſelves, and conſpired againſt the Engliſhmen, felling their Horſes and Armor aforehand, and thinking one to another in boun voyage of the ſpoil of them whom they would take as their priſoners. Prince Edward in the mean time ſent into England for divers Earls and Barons, which come unto him. When the day appointed was come, the Prince had with him more than one thouſand Horſemen, which were Knights, beſides his Footmen, but yet there was as many more on the other ſide both in Horſemen and Footmen. When the parties ſhould meet, the French Footmen which had before conſpired, began both to ſpoil, rifle, and kill. The Engliſhmen rallied and defended themſelves both with Bows and Slings; many of them they ſlew, and drave them to the Gates of their City, the other they chaſed over a river, where many of them were drowned. In the mean ſeaſon the Earl with fifty of his Knights which followed him, came forth and joyned together ſo many for ſo many, and a long time together they tried it with their ſwords,laying one at another. At the laſt the Earl perceiving himſelf not able to match with him at the arms end, incloſ'd with him,&tailing him about the neck,held him with his Hereat Prince Edward, being aſcorned, lifted up himſelf, and gave him ſuch a blow, that therewithal he, forſaking his Horſe, hung ſtill about the Princes neck, till that he ſhook him off to the ground. Herewith the Prince, being ſomewhat in a heat, left the preaſe to take the Air, thereby to refreſh himſelf. But when he ſaw the injury of the French-men towards his men, and how they had ſlain many of them, he then ſaid unto them, that they uſed rather the exerciſe of battel, than of tourney. Spare ye not therefore (ſaith he) from henceforth any of them all, but give them again as good as they bring. Then they aſſailed to kill each other freely on either part, and let their Swords walk.

Exerciſe of battels inſtead of Barriers and tourney.

And when by this time the Engliſh footmen were again returned, and ſaw the conflicts of Horſemen, and many other Engliſhmen overthrown; they put themſelves amidſt the preaſe; and ſome Panching the Horſes, ſome cutting a ſunder the girths of the French-mens ſaddles, they overthrew the Riders and gave them holy Bread. Then when the foreſaid Earl was Horſed again by ſome of his men and amongſt the throng, Prince Edward alſo ruſhed in amongſt the thickeſt, and coupled again with him: To whom he often ſpake and cried, that he ſhould yield himſelf as vanquiſhed; but that he would not do. Notwithſtanding, when his ſtrength began to fail him, he was fain to yield himſelf unto a ſimple Knight, according as Prince Edward him bade, and all the reſt of his Horſemen and Knights fled and ſaved themſelves. Howbeit, many of them in that place were ſlain, and our men returned having the victory. But when after this they thought themſelves to be quiet and at reſt, they were killed of the Citizens, by two and by three at once as they went in the ſtreets. Which thing when the Prince heard, he ſent for the Maior and Burgeſſes, commanding them to ſee the ſame redreſſed, and that immediatly: For otherwiſe, of his Knighthood he affured them, that upon the morrow he would fire the City, and make it level with the ground. Whereupon they went their ways, and ſet watchmen in divers places of the ſame to keep peace, by which means the Prince and men were in ſafety and quiet. Thus in this paſtime of tornying and barriers, much blood was ſpilt, whereupon the name of the place was changed: So that it is not called Torniamentum de Chalons, but Parvum bellum de Chalons.

Prince Edward ſojourneth in Veſconia at the time of his Fathers death.

From thence the Prince came to Paris, and was of the French King Honourably entertained: And after certain days, he went from thence into Vaſconia, where he tarried till that he heard of the death of the King his Father.

{ Anno 1272 } Pope Clement the Fourth. Pope Gregory the Tenth.

In the year of our Lord 1272. died Pope Clement the Fourth: after whom ſucceeded Pope Gregory the Tenth; who in the next year following, which was the year of our Lord 1273. called a general Council at Lions, about the controverſie between the Greek Church and the Latin Church, and for the vacancy of the See Apoſtolical, &c.

Certain notes of other occurrents chancing in foreign Countries abroad, within the compaſs of the years and Reign of the foreſaid King Henry the Third.

HAving thus accompliſhed the life and Hiſtory of King Henry the Third, with ſuch accidents as happened within this Realm, I thought good to adjoyn unto the ſame ſome other foreign matters not unworthy the note, incident in other Countries during the time of the ſaid King: namely from the year of our Lord 1217 unto this year 1272. which I thought the rather not to be omitted, for that, even from and about the beginning of this Kings Reign, ſprung up the very well-ſprings of all miſchief, the Sects of Monkiſh religions and other ſwarms of Popiſh Orders, which with their gyrds and horrible ſuperſtitions have incumbred the Church of Chriſt ever ſince.

Firſt, to omit the repetition of Pope Innocentius the Third, the great Grandſire of that foul Monſter Tranſubſtantiation and auricular confeſſion, Friers Dominick, and Franciſcan Friers, Thomas Aquinas, Jacobus de Voragine, Vincentius, with Pope Honorius the Third, Coiner of the Canon Law, and the Cardinal Poſtienſis, as alſo Bonaventure, Albertus Magnus, with Pope Urban the Fourth, firſt founder of the feaſt of Corpus Chriſti, and procurer of the adoration of the body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, beſides Durandus and many more: it followeth further to be noted,that the Tartarians about the year 1240. iſſuing out of Muſcovia into the parts of Polonia, made great waſte in Chriſtendom, ſo much the rather, becauſe the Princes about Polonia, being at variance amongſt themſelves,uſed none other remedy for their defence but heaps of Maſſes, invocation of the dead,and Worſhipping of Images, which indeed did nothing relieve them, but rather increaſe their trouble.

Ex Annalibus Sileſiæ. The Tartarians make great ſpoil in Chriſtendom.

The next year following, the whole Nation of the Scythians (muſtring like locuſts) invaded the parts of Europe with two mighty Armies, whereof the one entring upon Polonia, made great Havock and carried away many Chriſtians from thence Captives; the other, overrunning Hungaria, made no leſs ſpoil there. Add hereunto another freſh Army of Tartarians,to the number of 5000000. who at the very ſame time joyning themſelves together, entred into Muſcovia and Cracovia, and made moſt horrible ſlaughter, ſparing neither Sex nor Age, noble nor unnoble within the Land. From thence paſſing to Uraſtlavia, they made great ſpoil there alſo, and thinking there to win the Caſtle, were by the miraculous working of the Lord, at the inſtance and prayers of good people, diſcomfited beyond all expectation of Man, by Thunder and Lightning falling upon them from Heaven in moſt terrible wiſe.

The Scythian Army like locuſts.

The ſame year immediatly after Eaſter, another Army of Tartarians were gathered againſt Lignicium, drawing near to Germany; by the brute whereof, the Germans, being put in great fears, were altogether diſmaied, but yet not able to help themſelves, by reaſon they lacked a good guid and governor amongſt them. All which came to paſs, ſpecially by the miſchievous practice of the Roman Popes, railing variance and diſcord among them. Notwithſtanding, Henry Prince of Polonia and Sileſia, gathering a power as well as he could, did incounter with him; but in fine, his whole Army was vanquiſhed, and the King himſelf ſlain. Notwithſtanding, which overthrow of Chriſtians, it pleaſed God to ſtrike ſuch a fear into the hearts of the ſaid Tartarians, that they durſt not approach any further or neerer into Germany, but retired for that time into their Country again: Who recounting their victory, by taking each man but one ear of every one of the Chriſtians that were ſlain, found the ſlaughter ſo great, as that they filled nine great facks full of ears. Nevertheleſs, after this in the year 1260. the ſame Tartarians, having the Muſcovites to their guids, returned again into Polonia and Cracovia, where in the ſpace of three months, they overran the Land with fire and ſword to the Coaſts of Sileſia, and had not the Princes of Germany put to their helping hand in this lamentable caſe, they had utterly waſted the whole Land of Polonia, and the Coaſts thereabout.

King Henry ſlain, and his Army vanquiſhed.

Nine facks full of Chriſtians ears being ſlain.

This year alſo in the month April, Richard King of Almain died at the Caſtle of Barkhamſted, and was buried at the Abbey of Hailes, which he built out of the ground. The ſame year alſo at Norwich there fell a great controverſie between the Monks and the Citizens, about certain tallagies and liberties. At laſt, after much diſtraction and wrangling words, the furious rage of the Citizens ſo much increaſed and prevailed, and ſo little was the fear of God before their eyes, that altogether they ſet upon the Abbey and Priory, and burned both the Church and Biſhops Palace. When this thing was heard abroad, the people were very ſorry to hear of ſo bold and naughty an enterpriſe, and much diſcommended the ſame. At the laſt, King Henry calling for certain of his Lords and Barons, ſent them to the City of Norwich, that they might puniſh and fee execution done on the chiefeſt Malefactors; inſomuch that ſome of them were condemned and burnt, ſome of them hanged, and ſome were drawn by the heels with Horſes throughout the ſtreets of the City, and after in much miſery ended their wretched lives. The ſame year Adam the Prior of Canterbury, and Biſhop Eleſt, in Wherefore the Pope gave the same Archbishoprick to Frier Robert Kilwarby the provoft of the Preaching Friers, a man of good life and great learning. He was consecrated at Canterbury the fourth day of March, by Six Bishops of the same Province. The same year also at Michaelmas, the Lord Edmund, the Son of King Richard of Almain, married the Sister of Gilbert Earl of Glocester. Also in this year of our Lord 1273. the fixteenth day before the Kalends of December, upon Saint Edmunds day the Archbishop and confessor, died King Henry, in the fix and fiftieth year of his Reign, and was buried at Westminster, leaving after him two Sons, and two Daughters, to wit, Edward the Prince, and Edmund Earl of Lancaster and Leicester: Beatrice and Margaret: which Margaret was married to to the King of Scots. This King Henry in his life time began the building of the Church and Steeple at Westminster, but did not throughly finith the same before his death.

The death of King Henry the Third.

King Edward the First.

Edward the First.

IN the time of the death of King Henry, Edward his his Eldeft Son was absent in Vascovia, as a little before you heard; yet notwithstanding, by Robert Kilwarby Archbishop of Canterbury, and other Bishops and Nobles, he was ordained Heir and Succesor after his Father; who, after he had heard of his Fathers death, returned home to his Country, and was Crowned in the year of our Lord 1274. Who then laid down his Crown, saying, he would no more put it on, before he had gathered together all the Lands appertaining to the same. This Edward as he had always before been a loving and natural Child to his Father, whom he had delivered out of prison and captivity; and hearing afterward both together of the death of his Son, and of his Father, wept and lamented much more for his Father, than for his Son, saying to the French King (which asked the cause thereof) that the loss of his Child was but light; for Children might after increase and be multiplied, but the loss of his Parent was greater, which could not be recovered: Robert Averbury. So Almighty God, for the same his Piety to his Father shewed, rewarded him again with great succes, Felicity, and long Reign: Insomuch that he being young, as he was playing at Chess with a certain Souldier of his, suddenly having occasion given, rose up and went his way; who was not so soon voided the place, but incontinent fell down a mighty stone from the vault above, directly upon the place where he fate, able to have quathed him in peices, if he had tarried never so little more. In the preservation of whom, as I see the present hand and mighty providence of the living God: So in the Kings Order again, I note a fault or error worthy of reprehention for that he, receiving such a living benefit at the hand of the living Lord, going therefore on Pilgrimage to Walsingham, gave thanks not only to our Lord, but rather to a rotten block. Ibidem. Of the gentle nature of this courageous Prince, sufficient proof is given by this one example: that what time he being in his disport of Hawking, chanced sharply to rebuke the negligence of one of his Gentlemen, for what fault I cannot tell, about his Hawk; the Gentleman being on the other side of the River, hearing his menacing words, was glad (as he said) that the River was between them. With this answer the courageous blood of this Prince being moved, upon present heat he leaped fraight into the flood, both of a swift stream and of a dangerous deepnes, and no less hard in getting out. Notwithstanding, either forgetting his own life, or neglecting the danger present, and having a good Horse, venturesh his own death, to have the death of his man. At length, with much difficulty recovering the bank, with his sword drawn he pursueth his provoker. Who having not to good an Horse, and seeing himself in danger of taking, reineth his Horse, and returning back barehead into the Prince, submitteth his neck under his hand to strike. The Prince, whose fervent stomack the water of the whole River could not quench, a little submission of his man did so cool, that the quarrel fell, his anger ceased, and his sword was put up without any stroak given. And so both returned to their Game, good friends again. Aveth. Nico. Trivet.

Example of Princely clemencie to be learned of Kings and Princes. Ex Chron. Nico. Trivet. & Thom. Walsingham.

In the first beginning of his Reign, the King had much ado in Wales, where he had divers conflicts with the Welsh-men, whom at last he subdued, and cut down their woods, suppressed rebellions, and vanquishing their Kings Lewsline and his Brother, ordained his Eldeft Son Edward, born in the same Country, to be Prince of Wales. This Lewsline Captain of the Welsh-men here mentioned, rebelling against King Edward, asked Counsel of conjuration, what event should come upon his attempt. To whom it was told, that he should go forward boldly, for doubtless he should ride through Cheapside at London, with a Crown on his Head. Which so came to pass. For being slain, his Head was carried through Cheap, with a Crown of Silver to London Bridge. Whereby men may learn not to seek nor flick to these vain Prophecies, which though they fall true, yet are they trains of the Divel to deceive men.

Vain Prophecies not to be sought to.

About this time was a great Earthquake, and such a Rot, that consumed a great multitude of Sheep in the Land, through the occasion (as they say) of one scabbed Sheep that came out of Spain. The King returning from Wales to England, ordered certain new Laws for the wealth of the Realm. Among many others, this was one; that Authority was given to all Maiors, Bailiffs, and other Officers to see execution and punishment of all Bakers making Bread under the Size, with pillory. Of Millers stealing Corn, with the Tumbrel, &c. And within two years after the Statute of Mortmain was first enacted, which is as much to say, that no man should give unto the Church any Lands of Rents, without especial Licence of the King.

Punishment for Bakers and Millers. The Statute of Mortmain first Enacted.

About which time also, being the seventh year of his Reign, 1279. Jews for Money chipping were put to execution. In which year began first the foundation of the Black-Friers by Ludgate. And the Town of Boston was greatly wasted the same year with fire. The half penny and farthing began first to be coined the self same time, which was the Eighth year of his Reign. The great Conduit in Cheap began the Fourth year after to be made, Anno. 1284. And the next year following, the new work of the Church of Westminster (begun as is afore premonished in the Third year of Henry the Third) was finished, which was sixty fix years in edifying. The Jews were utterly banished this Realm of England the same time, for which the Commons gave to the King a fifteenth, &c.

{Anno 1279 Black-Friers by Ludgate builded. Boston miserably wasted with fire. The great Conduit in Cheap. Westminster Church finished. After in Fabian corrected. Ex Tho. Walf. & Gualter Guisburnef.

After that the Countrey of Wales was brought in a full order and quiet, by the hewing down of the Woods, and casting down the old holds, and building of new; which all was brought to perfect end, about the 24. year of this Kings Reign. Then ensued another broil as great or greater with Scotland, to the great disquiet of the King and the Realm of England many years after. This trouble first began by the death of Alexander King of Scots, who died without Issue left alive behind him. Although Fabian in the 7. Book of his Chronicles affirmeth; that he left three Daughters, the Eldeft married to Sir John Baliol, the second, to Robert Bruce, the third, to one Hastings. But this in Fabian is to be corrected, as which neither standeth with it self, and is clearly convicted by the witness and History of Rob. Aveth. and also of Guisburn.

For first, if King Alexander had left his Eldeft Daughter married to Sir John Baliol, then what controversie might rise among the Lords about succession, needing so diligent and anxious deciding by the King of England? Secondly, what claim or title could the King of Norway have to the Crown of Scotland, which was one of the Challengers, claiming the faid Crown in the behalf of Margaret the Niece of the forefaid King Alexander her Grandfather, if the Eldeft Daughter of the Father had been left alive? Thirdly, what can be more plain, when by the affirmance of the forefaid Story it is testified, that King Alexander had two Wives? Of the second whereof he had no issue. Of the first he had two Children; Alexander which died before his Father; and Margaret married to the King of Norway, which died also before her Father, of whom came Margaret the Niece of Alexander, and Daughter to the King of Norway afore mentioned. And she also died in the journey between Norway and Scotland, the fourth year after the decease of her Grandfather. Wherefore, as this matter standeth most clear, so let us now, returning from whence we digressed, prosecute the rest that with other Officers of the Land, and so returned unto Barwick, and so into England, and lastly to Westminster.

These Martial Affairs between England and Scotland, although they appertain not greatly to the purpose of our story Ecclesiastical, yet so much by the way I thought briefly to touch, whereby, that which followeth in the sequel hereof, might the better be understood by these premisses. As the Scots were thus warring and raging against the King, and saw they could not make their party good, they sent privily to Pope Boniface for his aid and counsel: who immediatly sendeth down his Precept to the King, to this effect, that he should hereafter forcease to disquiet or molest the Scots, for that they were a people exempt, and properly pertaining to his Chappel. And therefore it could not otherwise be, but that the City of Jerusalem must needs defend his own Citizens; and as the Mount Sion, maintain such as trust in the Lord, &c. Whereunto the King briefly maketh answer again, swearing with an Oath, that he would to his uttermost keep and defend that which was his right, evidently known to all the world, &c. Thus the Scots bearing themselves bold upon the Popes Message, and also confederating themselves with the Frenchmen, passed over that year. The next year after that (which was the 29th year of the Kings Reign) the said Pope Boniface directeth his Letters again to the King, wherein he doth vindicate the Kingdom of Scotland, to be proper to the Church of Rome, and not subject to the King of England. And therefore it was against God, against Justice, and also prejudicial to the Church of Rome, for him to have or hold Dominion over the same, which he proved by these Reasons:

Ex Chron. Tho. Walf.

The Kings answer to the Pope.

The Pope challengeth the Realm of Scotland to be free from the Dominion of England.

First, That when King Henry, the Father of this King received Aid of Alexander King of Scots in his Wars against Simon Montford, he recognized and acknowledged in his Letters Patents, that he received the same of King Alexander, not of any duty, but of special favour.

Item, When the said King Alexander, coming to England, did Homage to the said King Henry; he did it not as King of Scotland, but only for certain Lands of Tindal and Penteth, lying in England.

Item, Whereas the said King Alexander left behind him Margaret his Heir, being Niece to the King of England, and yet underage; yet the tuition of the said Margaret was committed not to the King of England, but to certain Lords of Scotland, depited to the same.

Moreover, when any Legacy was directed down from Rome to the Realm of England, for collecting of Tenths or other causes, the said Legacy took no place in the Realm of Scotland, and might well be refisted (as it was in King Alexander his days) except another special Commission touching the Realm of Scotland, were joyned withal. Whereby it appeareth, that these be two several Dominions, and not subject under one.

Adding Furthermore, that the Kingdom of Scotland first was converted by the reliques of the blessed Apostle Saint Peter, through the divine operation of God, to the unity of the Catholick Faith.

Wherefore upon these causes and reasons, Pope Boniface in his Letters to the King, required him to give over his claim, and cease his Wars against the Scotish Nation: and to release all such both of the spirituality and Laity, as he had of them Prisoners. Also to call home again his Officers and Deputies, which he had there placed and ordained to the grievance of that Nation, to the slander of all faithful people, and no less prejudice to the Church of Rome. And if he would claim any right or title to the said Realm, or any part thereof, he should send up his Procurators specially to the same appointed, with all that he could for himself alledge, unto the See Apostolick, there to receive what reason and right would require.

The King, after he had received these Letters of the Pope, assembled a Council or Parliament at Lincoln: By the advice of which Council and Parliament, he addressed other Letters responsal to the Pope again; wherein first in all reverend manner he declareth him not to give light ear to the sinister suggestions of false reports, and Imaginers of mischief. Then he declareth out of old Records and Histories from the first time of the Britains, that the Realm of Scotland hath always from time to time been all one with England, beginning first with Brutus in the time of Helt and Samuel the Prophet: which Brutus, coming from Troy to this Isle called then Albion, after called by him Britannia, had three Sons; Locrinus, to whom he gave that part of the Land, called then of him Loegria, now Anglia; Albanactus his second Son, to whom he gave Albania, now called Scotia; and his third Son Cambet, to whom he gave Cambria, now called Wales, &c.

And thus much concerning the first division of this Isle, as in ancient Histories is found recorded. In which matter, passing over the death of King Humber, the Acts of Dunwald King of this Realm, the division of Belyn and Brenne, the Victories of King Arthur, we will resort (saith the King) to more nearer times, testified and witnessed by sufficient Authors, as Marianus Scotus, William Malmesbury, Roger Abyndon, Henry Huntington, Radulph de Bicoto and other. All which make special declaration, and give manifest evidence of the execution of the our right (saith he) and Title of Superiority ever continued and preserved hitherto.

And first to begin with Edward the Senior, before the Conquest, Son to Alured King of England, about the year 1111. 907. of our Lord, 900. it is plain and manifest, that he had under his Dominion and Obedience the King of Scots: And here is to be noted, that this matter was so notorious and manifest, as Marian the Scot, writing that story in those days, granteth, confesseth and testifieth the same: and this Dominion continued in that state 23 years. At which time, Athelstane succeeded in the Crown of England, and having by battel conquered Scotland, he made one Constantine King of that Party, to Rule and Govern the Country of Scotland under him, adding this Princely word, That it was more honour to him to make a King, than to be a King.

Twenty four years after that, which was the year of our Lord, 947. Eldred the King our Progenitor, Athelstanus Brother, took Homage of Irile then King of Scots.

Thirty years after that, which was the year of our Lord, 977. King Edgar our Predecessor took Homage of Kynald King of Scots. Here was a little trouble in England by the death of S. Edward King and Martyr, deftroyed by the deceit of his Mother in law, but yet within memory.

Forty years after the Homage done by Kynald to King Edgar, that is to say, in the year of our Lord, 1017. Malcoline the King of Scots did Homage to Knute our Predecessor. After this Homage done, the Scots uttered some piece of their natural disposition, wherenpon (by War made by our progenitor S. Edward the Confessor, Thirty and nine years after that Homage done, that is to say, the year of our Lord 1056.) Malcoline King of Scots was vanquished, and the Realm of Scotland given to Malcoline his Son by our said Progenitor S. Edward, unto whom the said Malcoline made Homage and Fealty.

Within Forty years after that, William Conqueror entred this Realm, whereof he accounted no perfect conquest until he had likewise subdued the Scots: and therefore in the said year (which was in the year of our Lord 1068.) the said Malcoline King of Scots did Homage to the said William the Conqueror, as his Superiror by conquest King of England.

Twenty and five years after that, which was the year of our Lord 1093. the said Malcoline did Homage and Fealty to William Rufus, Son to the said William Conqueror: and yet after that, he was for his offences and demerits deposed, and his Son Substitute in his place: who likewise failed in his duty, and therefore was ordained in that Estate, by the said William Rufus, Edgar Brother to the last Malcoline, and Son to the first, who did his Homage and Fealty accordingly.

Seven years after that, which was in the year of our Lord 1100. the said Edgar, King of the Scots, did Homage to Henry the first our Progenitor.

Thirty seven years after that, David King of Scots did Homage to Matild the Emperatrice, as Daughter and Heir to Henry the first. Wherefore being after required by Stephen, then obtaining possession of the Realm, to make his Homage: He refused soto do, because he had before made it to the said Matild, and thereupon forbare. After which Davids death, wich insued shortly after, the Son of the said David made Homage to the said King Stephen.

Fourteen years after that, which was in the year of our Lord 1150. William King of Scots, and David his Brother, with all the Nobles of Scotland, made Homage to Henry the seconds Son, with a reservation of their duty to Henry the second his Father.

Twenty five years after that, which was in the year of our Lord 1175. William King of Scotland, after much rebellion and resistance, according to their natural inclination (King Henry the second then being in Normandy) knowledged finally his error, and made his peace and composition, confirmed with his great Seal, and the Seals of the Nobility of Scotland, making therewith his Homage and Fealty.

Within Fifteen years after that, which was in the year of our Lord 1190. the said William King of Scots came to our City of Canterbury, and there did Homage to our Noble Progenitor King Richard the First.

Fourteen years after that, the said William did Homage to our Progenitor King John, upon a Hill besides Lincoln, making his Oath upon the Cross of Hubert, then Archbishop of Canterbury, being there present, and a marvellous multitude assembled for that purpose.

Twenty six years after that, which was in the year of our Lord 1230. Alexander King of Scots married Margaret the Daughter of our Progenitor Henry the Third, at our City of York, in the Feast of Chriftmas: At which time the said Alexander did his Homage to our said Progenitor, who Reigned in this Realm 56. years. And therefore between the Homage made by the said Alexander King of Scotland, and the Homage done by Alexander, Son to the said King of Scots, to us at our Coronation at Weftminfter, there was about Fifty years. At which time, the said Alexander King of Scots repaired to the said Feast of our Coronation, and there did he his Duty as is aforesaid.

¶ Besides theſe Letters of the King, the Lords Temporal alſo, in the name of the whole Commonalty and Parliament, wrote another Letter to the Pope anſwering to that, whereas the Pope Arrogated to him to be Judge for the title of the Realm of Scotland, which the King of England claimed unto himſelf; which Letter I thought good alſo here to annex, containing, as in the words of the ſame here followeth to be read and ſeen.

The Lords Temporal, and the whole Barony of England to the Pope.

A Letter of the Lords temporal to the Pope.

THe Holy mother Church by whoſe miniſtry the Catholick See is Governed, in her deeds (as we throughly believe and hold) proceedeth with that ripeneſs in judgment, that ſhe will be hurtful to none: But like a mother would every mans right to be kept unbroken as well in other, as in her ſelf. Whereas therefore in a general Parliament, called at Lincoln of late by our moſt dread Lord Edward, by the Grace of God the Noble King of England: the ſame our Lord cauſed certain Letters received from you to be read openly, and to be declared ſeriouſly before us, about certain buſineſſes touching the condition and ſtate of the Realm of Scotland: we did not a little muſe and marvel with our ſelves, bearing the meanings concerning the ſame, ſo wonderous and ſtrange, as the like we have not heard at any time before. For we know moſt holy Father, and it is well known as well in this Realm of England, as alſo it is not unknown to other perſons beſides, that from the firſt beginning of the Realm of England, the certain and direct Government of the Realm of Scotland in all Temporal cauſes, from time to time, belonged to the Kings of the ſame Realm of England, and Realm of Scotland; as well in the times of the Britains, as alſo of Engliſh-men. Yea rather, the ſame Realm of Scotland of old time was in fee to the Anceſtors of our ſaid Lord Kings of England, yea and to himſelf. Furthermore, the Kings of the Scots, and the Realm have not been under any other than the Kings of England; and the Kings of England have anſwered, or ought to anſwer for their rights in the foreſaid Realm, or for any his temporalities before any Judge Eccleſiaſtical or ſecular, by reaſon of free preheminence of the ſtate of his Royal Dignity, and Cuſtom kept without breach at all times. Wherefore, after treaty had and diligent deliberation of the contents in your foreſaid Letters, this was the common agreeing and conſent with one mind, and ſhall be without fail in time to come by Gods grace; that our foreſaid ſaid Lord the King ought by no means to anſwer in judgment in any caſe, or ſhould bring his foreſaid right into doubt; nor ought to ſend any Proctors or Meſſengers to your preſence; eſpecially ſeeing that the premiſſes tend manifeſtly to the diſheriting of the right of the Crown of England, and the plain overthrow of the State of the ſaid Realm, and alſo hurt of the Liberties, Cuſtoms and Laws of our Fathers: for the keeping and defence of which we are bound by the duty of our oath made, and we will maintain them with all power, and will defend them (by Gods help) with all ſtrength. And further, we will not ſuffer our foreſaid Lord the King to do, or by any means to attempt the premiſſes, being ſo unaccuſtomed, unwont, and not heard of afore. Wherefore, we reverently and humbly beſeech your Holineſs that ſe would ſuffer the ſame our Lord King of England (who among other Princes of the World, ſheweth himſelf Catholick and devout to the Romiſh Church) quietly to enjoy his Rights, Liberties, Cuſtoms, and Laws aforeſaid; without all impairing and trouble, and let them continue untouched. In witneſs whereof we have ſet our ſeals to theſe preſents, as well for us, as for the whole Commonalty of the foreſaid Realm of England. Dated at Lincoln in the year of our Saviour 1301. & Anno Edwardi primi 28.

{KING Edw. I

{ANNO 1301. The Pope ſtirreth King againſt King.

The year following, which was from Chriſt Anno 1303. the ſaid Pope Boniface the eighth of that name, taking diſpleaſure with Philip the French King, did excite King Edward of England to War againſt him, promiſing him great aid thereunto. But he (as mine Author faith) little truſting the Popes falſe unſtable affection toward him well proved before, put him off with delaies.

Ex Rob. Avesh.

Ex Rob. Avesh. Whereupon, the French King fearing the power of King Edward, whom the Pope had ſet againſt his friendſhip, reſtored unto him again Vaſcone, which he wrongfully had in his hands detained. Concerning this variance here mentioned between the Pope and the French King, how it began firſt, and to what end it fell out, the ſequel hereof (Chriſt willing) ſhall declare, after that firſt I have finiſhed the diſcourſe begun between England and Scotland.

Another Scotiſh rebellion ſuppreſſed.

In the year 1303. the foreſaid William Waleis which had done ſo many diſpleaſures to the King before, continuing ſtill in his rebellion, gathered great multitudes of the Scots to withſtand the King, till at length the year following he was taken, and ſent up to London, and there Executed for the ſame. After which things done, the King then held his Parliament at Weſtminſter, whither came out of Scotland the Biſhop of Saint Andrews, Robert Bruſe above mentioned, Earl of Dunbare, Earl of Arles, and Sir John Comming, with divers other: The which voluntarily were ſworn to be true to the King of England, and to keep the Land of Scotland to his uſe againſt all perſons. But ſhortly after the ſaid Robert Bruſe, who, as is ſaid, married the Second Daughter of Earl Patrick, forgetting his Oath before made unto the King, within a year or two after this, by the counſel of the Abbot of Stone, and the Biſhop of Saint Andrews ſent up unto Pope Clement the fifth, for a diſpenſation of his Oath made; inſinuating to him, that King Edward vexed and grieved the Realm of Scotland wrongfully. Whereupon the Pope wrote unto the King to leave off ſuch doings. Notwithſtanding which inhibition of the Pope, the King proſecuting his own right, after he had the underſtanding of the doings of the Scots, and of the miſchief of Robert Bruſe, (who had ſlain with his own hands Sir John Comming, for not conſenting with him and other Lords at his Parliament) arreated his power and ſtrength of men, preparing himſelf toward Scotland, where he joyning with the ſaid Sir Robert and all his power of Scotland in a plain, near unto Saint Johns Town, put him to flight, and ſo chaſed the Scots, that of them were ſlain to the number of ſeven Thouſand. In the which Victory, ſuch Biſhops and Abbots as were taken he ſent to the Pope; the Temporal Lords and other Scots he ſent to London, &c. Sir Robert Bruſe after this diſcomfiture, when he had thus loſt both the Field and his chief Friends, ſeeing himſelf not able to make his party good, fled into Norway, where he kept his abode during the time while King Edward lived. When this Noble Edward had thus ſubdued the Scots, he yielded thanks to God for his Victory, and ſo ſetting the Land in a quiet, and an Order, he returned unto London, which was the 35th year, and laſt of his Reign, &c.

The Pope diſpenſeth with due and true obedience of faithful towards their Prince.

The Popes inhibition neglected in England.

Another rebellion of the Scots repreſſed.

The Scots again ſubdued.

Now to return to that which I promiſed before touching the variance and grievous diſſention between Philip the French King, and Pope Boniface the eighth of that name: After the Biſhoprick of Rome had been long void through the diſſention of the Cardinals, for the ſpace of two years and three months; at length Pope Celeſtine was choſen ſucceſſor to Pope Nicholas the fourth. Which Celeſtine in his firſt conſiſtory began to reform the Clergy of Rome, thinking to make it an example to all other Churches. Wherefore, he procured to himſelf ſuch hatred among his Clergy men, that this Boniface, then called Benedictus, ſpeaking through a Reed in his Chamber wall, nightly admoniſhed him, as it had been a voice from Heaven, that he ſhould give over his Papacy, as being a burthen bigger than he could weild.

A grievous variance between Philip the French King and Pope Boniface.

Pope Nicholas the 4. Popedom vacant two years.

Pope Celeſtinus 5.

This Pope Celeſtin after he had ſate ſix months, by the treachery and falſhood of this Boniface, was induced to give up and reſign his Biſhoprick, partly for fear (as before is ſpoken of before, partly for fear; being told of certain craftily ſubomned in his Chamber, that, if he did not reſign, he ſhould loſe his life. Who then after his reſignation going to live in ſome ſolitary defart (being a ſimple man) was wilely taken and thruſt into perpetual priſon by Pope Boniface, craftily pretending that he did it not for any hatred unto Celeſtine, but that ſeditious perſons might not have him as their head to raiſe up ſome ſtir in the Church. And ſo he was brought to his death. Wherefore, this Pope was worthily called the eighth Nero: of whom it was rightly ſaid, He came in like a Fox, Reigned like a Lion, and died like a Dog.

Crafty lugling among Popes and Cardinals. Ex Meſſeta.

The 8 Nero.

Pope Boniface, ſucceeding, or rather invading after Celeſtine, behaved himſelf ſo imperiouſly, that he put down Princes, Excommunicated Kings, ſuch as did not take their confirmation at his hand. Divers of his Cardinals he drove away for fear, ſome of them as ſchiſmaticks he depoſed and ſpoiled of all their ſubſtance. Philip the French King he Excommunicated, for not ſuffering his money to go out of the Realm; and therefore curſed both him and his to the fourth Generation. Albertus the Emperor not once or twice, but thrice fought at his hands to be confirmed, and yet was rejected, neither could obtain, unleſs he would promiſe to drive the French King out of his Realm. In the factious diſcord in Italy between the Guelphs and Gibellines, which the part of a good Biſhop had been to extinguiſh, ſo little he helped to quench the ſmoak, that he of all other was the chiefeſt firebrand to increaſe the flame. Inſomuch that upon Aſhwedne/day, when Perchetus an Archbiſhop came and kneeled down before him to receive his Aſhes, Pope Boniface looking upon him, and perceiving that he was one of the Gibellines part, caſt his handful of aſhes in his eyes, ſaying, Memento homo quod Gibellimus es, &c. That is, Remember man that a Gibellime thou art, and to aſhes thou ſhalt go. This Pope moreover ordained firſt the Jubile in Rome, in the ſolemnizing whereof, the firſt day he ſhewed himſelf in his Pontificalibus, and gave free remiſſion of ſins to as many as came to Rome out of all the parts of the World. The ſecond day (being arraied with Imperial Enſigns) he commanded a naked ſword to be carried before him, and ſaid with a loud voice; Ecce poteſtatem utriuſque gladii. That is, Loe here the power and authority of both the ſwords, &c.

Pope Boniface fact & Author of the Book of decrees.

Jubile firſt begun in Rome.

The Pope claimed power of both Swords.

From the which very year (as moſt Stories do record) the Turks do begin the firſt Count of their Turkiſh Emperors, whereof the firſt was Ottomannus, as you ſhall hear diſcourſed hereafter by Gods grace in the Hiſtorie of the Turks.

By this ſaid Pope Boniface divers conſtitutions extravagants of his Predeceſſors were collected together, with many of his own newly added thereto, and ſo made the Book called Sextus decretalium &c. By whom alſo firſt tale, ſprang up pardons and indulgences from Rome.

Romiſh pardons firſt begun by Pope Boniface. Extra. Sixt.

Theſe things thus premiſed of Boniface the Pope, now will I come to the occaſion of the ſtrife between him, and the French King. Concerning which matter, firſt I find in the Hiſtory of Nicholas Trivet, that in the year of our Lord, 1301. the Biſhop of Oppanahum, being accuſed for a conſpiracy againſt the French King, was brought up to his Court, and ſo committed to priſon. The Pope hear-hearing this, ſendeth word to the King by his Legate to ſet him at liberty. The French King, not daring to the contrary, looſeth the Biſhop. But when he had done, diſchargeth both the Biſhop and the Legate, commanding them to void his Realm. Whereupon, Pope Boniface revoketh all the Graces and Priviledges granted either by him or his Predeceſſors before to the Kingdom of France; alſo not long after he thundred out the ſentence of his Curſe againſt him. Moreover, he citeth all the Prelates, all Divines, and Lawyers both civil and canon, to appear perſonally before him at Rome, at a certain day, which was the firſt of November. Againſt this Citation the King, again provideth, and commandeth by ſtrait Proclamation, that no manner of perſon ſhould export out of the Realm of France either Gold, or Silver, or any other manner of Ware or Merchandiſe upon pain of forfeiting all their goods, and their bodies at the Kings pleaſure: providing withall, that the ways and paſſages, ſhould diligently be kept, that none might paſs unſearched. Over and beſides, the ſaid French King defeated the Pope in giving and beſtowing Prebends, and Benefices, and other Eccleſiaſtical Livings, contrary to the Popes profit. For the which cauſe, the Pope writeth to the foreſaid King in form and effect as followeth.

Philip the French King Excommunicated.

Boniface Biſhop, and Servant to Gods Servants, to his beloved Son Philip, by the Grace of God, King of France, Greeting and Apoſtolical Bleſſing.

Ex lib. Stephan. Aurelienſi.

BOniface the Servant of Gods Servants, &c. Fear God, and obſerve his Commandments. We will thee to underſtand, that thou art ſubject to us both in Spiritual things, and Temporal; And that no gift of Benefices or Prebends belonged to thee; and if thou have the keeping of any being vacant, that thou reſerve the profits of them to the Succeſſors. But if thou have given any, we judge the Gift to be void, and call back how far ſoever thou haſt gone forward. And whoſoever believeth otherwiſe, we judge them Hereticks.

Unto this Letter of the Pope, King Philip maketh anſwer again in manner and order as followeth, which is this:

Philip by the Grace of God King of France, to Boniface not in deeds behaving himſelf for Pope, little Friendſhip or none.

A Letter of King Philip of France to Pope Boniface.

TO Boniface bearing himſelf for chief Biſhop, little health or none. Let thy fooliſhneſs know, that in Temporal things we are ſubject to no man, and that the Gifts of Prebends and Benefices, made and to be made by us, were and ſhall be good, both in time paſt and to come. And that we will defend manfully the Poſſeſſor of the ſaid Benefices, and we think them that believe or think otherwiſe, Fools and mad men. Given at Paris the Wedneſday after Candlemas, 1301.

After theſe aforeſaid and other writings paſſing to and fro, between the French King and the Pope; within a year and an half after, the King ſummoneth a Parliament, ſending down his Letters to his Sheriffs and other Officers, to ſummon the Prelates and Barons of the Realm unto the ſaid Court of Parliament, according to the tenor of the Kings Letters here following:

A Parliament ſummoned by King Philip at Paris.

PHilip by the Grace of God King of France, &c. Whereas we would take counſel with the Prelates, Barons, and other our faithful, about weighty matters and hard, and ſuch as belong greatly to our Right, and touching our Honour, State, Liberties, and Laws of this our Realm, Churches, and Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, and would alſo go forward and proceed in the foreſaid matters according to their counſel: We command you, that ye diligently in our behalf require and ſtraightly charge all the Prelates in your Bayliwick, and alſo all and ſingular Abbots and Priors of the ſame your foreſaid Bayliwick, (to certain of the which we have directed down our ſpecial Letters for the ſame cauſe) that as they favour our Honour, the good ſtate both of the KING. Edw. I. Realm, of themſelves and of the Church, they repair to us KING. Edw. I. in their own perſons, all lets and delays ſet aſide, and all other buſineſs left off. Shewing to them moreover, that we can judge none of them to be either to us faithful Subjects, or Friends to the Realm, which ſhall fail herein, or withdraw himſelf in the foreſaid buſineſs, counſels, and helps in time. Wherein if peradventure any ſhall ſlack or refuſe to reſort and come toward us within eight days from the time of this Charge given by you, or your Commandment; then we require you to ſeize all his temporal goods in our hand, and ſo ſeized to hold them until you receive other Commandment from us. Given at Paris the Monday before the Nativity of S. John Baptiſt, in the year of our Lord, 1303.

A Declaration of Maſter William Nagareta, made againſt Pope Boniface the Eighth, with his Appellation alſo made at Paris, before the King and his Council in the Church of Paris.

IN the Name of God, Amen. In the year of our Lord, 1303. Indictione ſecunda, the 12. day of March, and the ninth year of the Popedom of the moſt holy Father the Lord Boniface the Eighth, by Gods Providence Pope, and in the preſence of us common Notaries, and witneſſes under written, the Nobleman Maſter William Nagareta Knight (a worſhipful Profeſſor of the Laws) ſtanding before the moſt excellent Prince the Lord Philip, by the Grace of God moſt noble King of France, ſpake with lively words, and gave in writings theſe things that follow:

The appeal of Nagareta made againſt Pope Boniface the eighth.

There have been falſe Prophets among the people, as there have been alſo among you falſe Teachers, &c. Saint Peter the glorious Prince of the Apoſtles, ſpeaking to us by the Spirit, told us things to come; that likewiſe as there were falſe Prophets aforetimes, ſo there ſhould come among you falſe Teachers, bringing in Seds of deſtruction; by the which the way of truth ſhall be defaced, and covetouſly they ſhall make Merchandiſe of you with fained words; and further addeth, that ſuch Maſters did follow the way of Balaam, of Boſor, which loved the reward of wickedneſs, and had his bridled Aſs to correct his madneſs, which ſpeaking in a mans voice, did ſtop the fooliſhneſs of the Prophet. All which things as they be ſhewed to us by the greateſt Patriach himſelf; your eyes ſee them fulfilled the day according to the Letter. For there ſitteth in Saint Peters Chair the Maſter of Lyes, cauſing himſelf to be called Boniface, i. a well-doer, where he is mockable in all kind of evil doing, and ſo he hath taken to himſelf a falſe name; and where he is not a true Ruler and Maſter, he calleth himſelf the Lord, Judge, and Maſter of all men. And coming in contrary to the common Order appointed by the holy Fathers of Paris, contrary to the Rules of reaſon, and ſo not entring in at the door into the Lords Sheepfold, he is not a Shepherd nor Hireling, but rather a Thief and Robber. For he (the true Husband of the Romiſh Church as I ſuppoſing) deceived him that was delighted in ſimplicity, and entiſed him with fained flatterings and gifts to let him have his Spouſe to be his wife, againſt truth, which crieth, Thoſe whom God hath coupled, let no man ſeparate: and at length laying violent hands upon him, perſwading him falſly that thing which the Deceiver ſaid to come from the holy Spirit, was not aſhamed to join to himſelf with wicked practice that holy Church, which is Miſtreſs of all Churches, calling himſelf her Husband, whereas he cannot be: for Celeſtinus the true Romiſh Biſhop agreed not to the ſaid Divorce, being deceived by ſo great ſubtilty: nothing is ſo contrary to agreeing as error and deceit, as mans Laws bear witneſs, that I need not to ſpeak of his violence. But becauſe the Spirit inſpireth where he will, and he that is led with the Spirit, is not under the Law; the holy univerſal Church of God, not knowing the craftis of that Deceiver, ſtumbling and doubting whether it came from the Holy Ghoſt that Celeſtinus ſhould leave off his Government, and the ſins of the people deſerving it, for fear of a Schiſm ſuffered the foreſaid Deceiver: although, according to the Doctrine of our Lord, By his fruits he might be known, whether he came to the ſaid Regiment by the Holy Ghoſt or otherwiſe: his {KING Edw. I} his fruits (as it is plainly here written beneath) are now manifeſt to all men, by which it is apparent to the world, that he came not in by God, but otherways; and ſo came not in by the Sheepfold. His fruits are moſt wicked, and his end is death; and therefore it is neceſſary that ſo evil a Tree (according to the Lords ſaying) ſhould be cut down and caſt into the fire. Thus cannot avail to his excuſe, which is ſaid of ſome men, that is, that the Cardinals did agree upon him again, after the death of the ſaid Celeſtinus the Pope, ſeeing he could not be her Husband, whom it is manifeſt that he defiled by Adultery, her firſt Husband yet living, and ſhe being worthy to have the promiſe of marriage kept unto her: therefore, becauſe that which is done againſt the Lord turneth to the wrong of all men; and eſpecially in ſo great a miſchief, by reaſon of the conſequence by which ſhe is judged of the people both a woman adulterous or defamed: Like a bridled Aſs, by the power of the Lord, and not by the voice of a perfect man, being not able to bear ſo great a burthen, take in hand to rebuke the madneſs of the ſaid falſe Prophet Balaam, which at the inſtance of King Balack; that is, of the Prince of Devils, whom he ſerveth, ready to curſe the people bleſſed of the Lord. I beſeech you moſt excellent Prince, and Lord Philip, by the Grace of God King of France, that like at the Angel of God in time paſt met in the way with a Sword drawn, the Prophet Balaam going to curſe Gods people; ſo you (which are unwilling to execute Juſtice, and therefore like the Angel of the Lord, and Miniſter of Power and Office) would meet with a naked Sword this ſaid wicked man, which is far worſe than Balaam, that he perform not that evil which he intendeth to the people.

The Pope well compared to Balaam which was wont to curſe Gods people for reward of money.

Articles propounded againſt Pope Boniface.

First, I propound that the foreſaid man, that nameth himſelf Boniface, is no Pope, but wrongfully keepeth the Seat which he hath, indeed to the great damage of all the Souls of Gods holy Church. I ſay alſo, that his entring many ways was faulty, and he entred not in at the door, but other ways, and therefore is to be judged a Thief and a Robber.

2. I propound alſo, that the ſaid Boniface is a manifeſt Heretick, and utterly cut off from the body of the holy Church, becauſe of many kinds of Hereſies, which are to be declared in convenient time and place.

3. I propound alſo, that the ſaid Boniface is an horrible Simoniack, and ſuch a one as hath not been ſithence the beginning of the world: and the miſchief of this ſin in him is notorious to all the world (which thing is manifeſt to all that will plainly underſtand) inſomuch that he, being openly ſlandered, ſaid openly, That he could not commit ſimony.

The nature of this Pope and all Popes by his Image painted out.

4. I propound alſo, that the ſaid Boniface, being wrapt in infinite manifeſt hainous ſins, is ſo hardned in them, that he is utterly not poſſible to be corrected: and lieth in dungeon of miſchief ſo deep, that he may not be ſuffered any longer without the overthrow of the ſtate of the Church. His mouth is full of curſing, his feet and ſteps are ſwift to ſhed blood. He utterly teareth in pieces the Churches, which he ought to cheriſh: waſting wickedly the goods of the poor, and making much of wicked men that give him Rewards: perſecuting the righteous, and among the people not gathering but ſcattering, bringing in new Sects of Deſtruction that have not been heard of: Blaſpheming the way of Truth, and by robbery thinking himſelf equal to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt which is bleſſed for ever. And he being moſt covetous thirſteth for Gold, coveteth Gold, and by ſome device getteth Gold of every people: and utterly not regarding the worſhipping of God, with fained words, ſometimes by flattering, ſometimes by threatning, ſometimes by falſe teaching, and all to get money withall, he maketh Merchandiſe of us all; envying all things but his own; loving no man, nouriſhing War, perſecuting and hating the peace of his Subjects. He is rooted in all unſpeakable ſins, contrarying and ſtriving againſt all the Ways and Doctrines of the Lord. He is truly the abomination of the people, which Daniel the Lords Prophet deſcribed.

An Invective againſt the placing of Boniface the eighth, in the Papal Sea.

The Pope thinks himſelf equal with Chriſt.

Abominatio deſolationis Dan.

Therefore I anſwer, that Laws, Weapons, and all the Elements ought to riſe againſt him, which thus overthroweth the ſtate of the Church; for whoſe ſins God plagueth the whole world. And finally nothing remaineth to him, being ſo unſtable to ſatisfie him withall, but only the unſatiable mouth of Hell, and the fire that cannot be quenched, continuing for ever. Therefore ſeeing that in a General Council it ſo becometh, and I ſee this wicked man to be damned, which offendeth both God and all men: I aſk and require as inſtantly as I can, and beſeech you my Lord and King aforeſaid, that you would declare thus much to the Prelates, Doctors, People, and Princes your Brethren in Chriſt, and chiefly to the Cardinals and all Prelates, and call a Council. In the which (when the foreſaid wicked man is condemned) by the worſhipful Cardinals, the Church may be provided of a Shepherd: and for that Council I offer my ſelf ready lawfully to purſue the foreſaid things. And whereas the ſaid man, being in the higheſt Dignity, in the mean time cannot be ſuſpended of his Superiors; therefore he ought to be taken, ſuſpended indeed for the things aforeſaid, ſeeing his ſtate is called into Judgment, by the means aforeſaid.

I beſeech and require the ſaid Cardinals by you, and I preſently require them and the Church of God, that this wicked man being put in priſon, the Church of Rome may be provided of a Vicar, which may miniſter thoſe things that ſhall appertain, until the Church of God be provided of a Biſhop, utterly to take away all occaſion of a Schiſm. And leſt the ſaid wicked man ſhould let and hinder the proſecuting thereof, I require theſe things of you my Lord King aforeſaid, affirming you to be bound to do this for many cauſes. Firſt, for the Faiths ſake. Secondly, for your Kingly dignity, to whoſe Office it belongeth to root out ſuch wicked men. Thirdly, for your Oath ſake, which ye made for the defence of the Churches of your Realm, which the foreſaid Ravener utterly teareth in pieces. Fourthly, becauſe ye be the Patron of the Churches, and therefore ye are not bound only to the defence of them, but to the calling for again of their goods, which this foreſaid man hath waſted. Fifthly, ye following the footſteps of your Anceſtors, ought to deliver your Mother the Romiſh-Church, from ſo wicked a Band wherein by Oppreſſion ſhe is tyed and bound. I require that a publick Inſtrument may be made of theſe Requeſts by the Notaries here preſent, under the witneſs of the worſhipful men that be here preſent. Theſe things were done and ſpoken as is aforeſaid at Paris in the Kings Houſe of Lupara.

After this Proteſtation of Maſter Nagareta, immediately inſued the Appeal of the King, pronounced and publiſhed againſt the ſaid Boniface, in form as followeth:

The Appeal made by the King and the Lovers of the Realm againſt Boniface.

The Appellation of the French King and Nobles againſt Pope Boniface the Eighth.

IN the Name of God, Amen. In the year of our Lord, 1303. Indictione prima, 13. day of June, and the ninth year of the Popedom of Boniface the eighth. By the tenor of this publick Inſtrument be it unto all men known, that the moſt noble Prince and Lord, Philip by the Grace of God, King of France, the famous and reverend Fathers in Chriſt, Archbiſhops and Biſhops, religious men, Abbots and Priors here under-named, in the preſence of us common Notaries here under written, eſpecially called and required for this purpoſe, as it is contained in the Subſcriptions here under, the famous and Noblemen, the Lord Lewis, Son of the French King; Guido of Saint Paul, and John Drocem Earls, and William of Pleſiano Lord of Vitenob Knight: Moved as they ſaid with a fervent faith, with affection of ſincere love and zeal of Charity to be ſhewed to the holy Romiſh Church, and having pity from their heart, on their Mother the univerſal Church, which, as they ſaid, is oppreſſed dangerouſly under the rule of the ſaid Lord Boniface, and ſuffereth outragious defacing and loſs; and pitying the right Faith (as they ſay) in which ſtands the Salvation of Souls, and which (alas for pity) in theſe times miſerably pineth away, and periſheth for the lack of wholſome government of the Church through all Chriſtendom, and earneſtly taking paine, as they ſaid, for the repairing and enhauncing of the Catholick Faith: eſpecially ſeeing it was neceſſary for the ſame Church, for the foundation of the Faith, and health of the Souls that none ſhould rule the Fold of the Lords Flock, but the true and lawful Shepherd; and alſo becauſe the ſame Church was the Spouſe of Chriſt that hath no ſpot nor wrinkle, all error, offence, wickedneſs and wrong ſhould be put away; and ſalvation, peace and quietneſs through Gods mercy might be procured to the whole world, which they ſay, lieth in wars and darkneſs by the wicked Deeds, curſed Works, and hurtful Examples of the ſaid Boniface: They ſaid and laid againſt the ſaid Boniface Hereſie, and other divers horrible and curſed faults, wherein they affirmed him to be tangled, and commonly and notoriouſly reported, the King himſelf being preſent with Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates and Church-men (which were aſſembled to intreat of their own matters, and matters of their Churches) beſide Barons, Earls, and other Noblemen, whoſe names are under-written.

The ſaid William propounded and objected againſt him, ſwearing by the holy Goſpel of God, which he corporally touched, that he could prove all and every the premiſſes to be true. And the ſaid William of Plefiano ſware further this Oath, that he believed he could prove the premiſſes, and that he would purſue to the full end againſt the ſaid Boniface in the General Council, where, when, and before whomſoever of right it ought to be done: requiring earneſtly the ſaid King as a Champion of the Faith, and Defender of the Church; that for declaring of that truth to the praiſe of Gods Name, to the increaſe and promoting of the Catholick Faith, to the honour and wealth of the univerſal Church, and of all Chriſtian people, and the Congregation of the ſaid General Council, he would help and beſtow his profitable labour, with Souldiers and other like, for the love of men, and zeal to Juſtice (becauſe his Kingly houſe was ever a Ruler of the Truth) and that he would earneſtly require the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates, and that he would be effectually inſtant with them. The Earls and Knights themſelves beſought earneſtly many of the ſame Prelates (as they were Pillars of the Church and the Faith) that they would help and effectually beſtow their labour to the calling and aſſembling of the ſaid Council, by all ways and means lawful, according to the Ordinances of the holy Fathers, and Decrees of the Canons. But when the Prelates heard and fully underſtood ſuch Objections, Oppoſitions, and Requeſts, as is aforeſaid; and conſidered that ſuch a matter was not only moſt hard, but needed wiſe counſel, they departed out of the ſame place. But on the Friday next following, the fourteenth day of the ſame month of June, the foreſaid Lord King being preſent, and alſo the Lords, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and many witneſſes here under written the ſame time being preſent, and in the preſence of us common Notaries here ſubſcribed, and being ſpecially called and required for this purpoſe: the foreſaid William of Plafiano Knight, ſaid, propounded, affirmed, objected, and read; as was contained more fully in a certain Paper which he held in his hand, whoſe tenor was after this ſort:

I William of Pleſiano Knight, ſay, propound, and affirm, that Boniface which now ruleth the Apoſtolical See is a rank Heretick in Hereſies, and by Hereſies, outragious Deeds; and wicked Doctrines hereafter to be declared, which things to be true, I believe I am able to prove: or elſe, ſuch things as theſe ſhall be ſufficient to prove him a full Heretick, in a convenient place and time, and before whom of right this can or ought to be done. This thing I ſware on the holy Goſpel of God preſently touched of me.

1. Firſt, that he believeth not the immortality of men, and of Chriſtian Souls, but thinking much like as the Sadducees did believe, that there is no everlaſting life, and that men cannot get at the length Joy, but that all the lot and part of comfort and gladneſs is in this world: and by this means he affirmeth, that it is no ſin for the body to live daintily in all dainties. And out of the abundance of this leven, he was not aſhamed to ſay and openly to confeſs, that he had rather be an Aſs, or a Dog, or any other beaſt, than a French-man; which thing he would not have ſaid, if he believed a French-man had a Soul that could enjoy everlaſting life. This thing he taught many men, which acknowledged this at the point of death, and the common report goeth on him thus in theſe things.

Pope Boniface had rather be a Dog than a Frenchman.

2. Alſo, he believeth not faithfully, that by the words ordained of Chriſt, and ſpoken over the Hoſt, after the faſhion of the Church by a faithful Prieſt that is lawfully ordered, the body of Chriſt to be there: and therefore it cometh to paſs, that he giveth no reverence to it (no not a little) when it is lifted up of the Prieſt, yea, he riſeth not to it, but turneth his back to it, and makes himſelf and his Seat to be honoured where he ſitteth, rather than the Altar where the Hoſt is conſecrate: and he is commonly reported to do this.

3. Alſo, he is reported to ſay, that Whoredom is no ſin, no more than rubbing of the hands together, and thus commonly runs the voice and brute.

4. Alſo, he faid often, that to thruſt down the King and Frenchmen (if it could not be otherwiſe done) he would overthrow himſelf, the whole world and the whole Church. And when he had ſaid ſo, ſome that ſtood by ſaid, God forbid; he anſwered, God grant. And when good men that heard the words replied againſt him, that he ſhould not ſay ſo, becauſe the Church of God and all Chriſtian-men ſhould ſuffer great ſlander ſo: he anſwered, I care not what ſlanders ſoever come, ſo that the French*-men and their pride be deſtroyed; for it is neceſſary that ſlanders and offences come.*

5. Item, he called again and allowed a Book made by M. Arnold of Newton, containing and ſmelling of Hereſie, condemned by the Biſhop of Paris, and reproved by the Maſters of Divinity, and burned openly by Boniface himſelf: and in the full Conſiſtory of Cardinals being likewiſe reproved, condemned, and burned, yet he allowed it being written again, and containing the ſame fault.

6. Item, that he might make the moſt damnable remembrance of him perpetual, he cauſed his Images of ſilver to be ſet in the Church, by this means bringing men to Idolatry.

7. Item, he hath a private Devil, whoſe counſel he uſeth in all things, and through all things.

8. Item, he ſaid once, that if all men were on one ſide, and he on another, they could not deceive him neither in law nor in deed, which thing could not be done except he uſed a deviliſh Art: and of this he is openly thus reported.

9. Item, he is a Witch, asking counſel at Soothſayers both Men and Women, and thus he is commonly judged.

10. Item, he ſaid openly, that the Romiſh Pope could not commit Simony, which is heretical to ſay. This is a ſin reproved as well in the Old Teſtament as in the New, and generally in the holy Councils. Alſo he is wont to make Merchandiſe of Prelates Livings, Dignities, Superiorities, and Benefices, to the which holy Orders be neceſſarily joyned, and of Abſolutions and Diſpenſations, like as Uſurers and Merchants uſe to buy and ſell common things in the Market, and of this the common brute reports him.

11. Item, he letteth with all his might among Chriſtian men the ſpecial Embaſſage of Chriſt, made to his own Sons, ſaying, Peace I leave to you, and ſoweth diſcord and wars: Wherefore once it was ſaid before him, that certain parties would friendly agree after a good ſort, but he letted the peace: and when the other party did humbly beſeech him, that he would give licence to agree (he ſaid) he would not: yea, if the Son of God or Peter the Apoſtle would come down into the Earth and command him; he would ſay, I will not believe thee.

12. Item, becauſe the French Nation (being manifeſtly a moſt Chriſtian Nation) followeth not his errors in the Faith; he reckoneth and openly calleth all and every of them Paternani.

13. Item, he is infect with Sodomitical ſin, keeping with him Boys for Concubines, and of this fault he is moſt commonly and openly reported.

14. Item, he hath cauſed many murthers of Clerks to be done in his preſence, commending it and rejoycing at their death: and if they were not deadly wounded at the firſt by his Servants, as oft as he ſaw them ſmiting, he ſaid, Smite, Smite; by which example many were ſlain.

15. Item, when he had condemned a certain Noble man, he forbad the Sacrament to be given him at the point of death, he deſiring it and being penitent, ſaying, That the Sacrament of Penance was not neceſſary to Salvation.

16. Item,

{KING Edm.} {KING Edm.}

16. Item, he compelled certain Prieſts to ſhew unto him the confeſſions of men, and he publiſhed them openly afterward contrary to the will of them that were confeſſed, to their ſhame and confuſion, and compelled them to redeem their ſins. Inſomuch that once he depoſed a certain Biſhop of Spain, for the faults that he confeſſed to a certain Cardinal, confeſſing unto him a certain privy horrible fault under Benedicite, and compelled the Cardinal againſt his will to declare his confeſſion: and yet afterward he reſtored the ſame Biſhop again to his place for a little money. Wherefore he is thought to play the Heretick in the Sacrament of Penance.

17. Item, he faſteth not on the faſting-days, nor Lent, but eateth fleſh indifferently, and without cauſe ſuffereth his Houſhold and friends to eat, ſaying, It is no ſin: Doing in this thing againſt the general ſtate of the holy Church.

18. Item, he oppreſſed the Order of the Cardinals, and hath oppreſſed the Order of black and white Monks, of gray Fryers and Preachers: and ſaid oft, That the world was deſtroyed by them, and that they were falſe Hypocrites, and that never good could chance unto any that would be confeſſed to them, or would be familiar with them, or would keep them in their houſe. And he never ſaid good word of any Prelate, religious man, or Clerk; but ever rebuketh and ſlandereth them, taking away their good name; and, to compel them to redeem their faults, he is glad of their Accuſations: and this is the common voice and report of him.

19. Item, of old time, he going about to deſtroy the Faith, conceived a hate againſt the French King, even to the abhorring of the Faith: becauſe of the light of Faith which is there, and becauſe of the great witneſs and example of Chriſtianity, which is and hath been there. And before he had this Seat, he is proved to have ſaid, that if he were Pope, he would rather overthrow all Chriſtendom, but he would overthrow and deſtroy the Nation, which he calleth the pride of the French.

20. Alſo, it is reported, that when the Embaſſadors of the King of England, in the name of the ſaid King did require and intreat for the tenth of the Realm of England to be given him; he anſwered, That he would not give them the tenth, but on theſe conditions, that he would make War with them againſt the French King. And beſides this, he is reported to have given great ſums of money to certain perſons, to hinder that peace ſhould not be betwixt the ſaid Kings. He himſelf alſo with all his might hath letted it, by Meſſengers, Letters, and other ways that he could, yea by giving Bribes.

21. Item, he is reported alſo to have commanded Frederick which keepeth the Iſle of Sicil, that if he would betray Charles the King, and break the peace which he made, and ſware that he would keep with him, and would ſtir againſt the King, and kill the French-men, that then he would give him aid, help, and counſel; and for ſo doing he would give and grant him the ſaid Kingdoms.

Pope Boniface forcaring to the Frenchmen.

22. He confirmed alſo the King of Almain to be Emperor, and ſaid openly, That he did it to deſtroy the Nation, which he calleth the pride of the French-men; which ſay, That they are ſubjects to none in Temporal things. Wherein ſaith he, they lied on their heads, declaring moreover, that whoſoever (yea if it were an Angel from Heaven) would ſay, that all Kings of the world were not ſubject to the ſame King of Almain, he were accurſed.

Pope Boniface no enemy to the pope.

23. Further, he brake the Agreements of peace betwixt the King of Almain and the French King: in which, either of them ſhould have their own ſaved. And what encroachings ſoever had been on either ſide, ſhould be brought to a due ſtate, and under an Oath orderly given and taken: he is reported to have commanded the ſame King of Almain, that he ſhould not keep theſe conditions of peace, but be an enemy, and go about to ſow debate among Chriſtian men.

24. Item, it is openly reported, that the holy Land was betrayed through his fault, and came to the enemies of God and of Faith; and that he ſuffered this for the nonſt, and denied to give Aid to the Chriſtians which defended it; ſpending the treaſures and money of the Church (which ſhould have been beſtowed on that uſe as the Patrimony of Chriſt) in perſecuting of faithful Chriſtians and Friends of the Church, and therewith would enrich his Friends.

25. Item, he is openly reported to uſe Simony, not only in beſtowing of Benefices, but in giving of Orders, and making Diſpenſations. He hath ſet to ſale all Benefices of the Church, and would beſtow the Church commonly on him that would offer moſt: and he made his Servants Prelates of the Church, not for wealth of the Faith, nor to thruſt down Infidels, but to oppreſs the Faithful, and to enrich his Kindred by the Church-goods, and of the Patrimony of him that was crucified; and preferred to make them Marqueſſes, Earls, and Barons, and was not afraid to build them ſtrong Holds, rooting out and oppreſſing many Noblemen and others.

26. Item, it is commonly reported, that he hath divorced many Marriages lawfully made, to the contempt, hurt, and ſlander of many; and he did promote his Nephew to a Cardinalſhip, being married, unlearned, and altogether unworthy to live; and openly married one that was divorced, and compelled him to make a vow of chaſtity, and after that he is reported to have had two Baſtards by her, and ſo goeth the common bruit of him.

Pope Boniface a Murderer of his Predeceſſor.

27. Item, it is commonly reported, that he handled ungently his Predeceſſor Celeſtinus of holy memory, leading an holy life (peradventure knowing in conſcience that he could not forſake his Popedom, and therefore Boniface himſelf had no lawful entrance to the See) and priſoned him, and there quickly and privily cauſed him to die. And of this the common brute and report is through all the world, that he cauſed many and great men living a regular life (which diſputed of this, whether he might renounce the Popedom or not) to be ſet in priſon, and there to die.

28. Item, he is reported to have railed at religious perſons leading a regular life, without a reaſonable cauſe to the world, to the ſlander of many.

29. Item, he is reported to have ſaid, that he would within ſhort time make all the French-men either Martyrs, or forſakers of their Faith.

30. Item, it is commonly reported, that he ſeeketh not the health of the Souls, but the deſtruction of them.

Theſe things being propounded and read, the ſame William proteſted, ſaid, declared, appealed, and added theſe words, reading them in writing.

The groſſeſt reputation of William Pleſiano.

I William of Pleſiano, Knight, proteſt that I do not propound nor ſpeak the foreſaid things for any ſpecial hate of Boniface himſelf (for I hate not him, but his foreſaid evil deeds) nor do I ſeek his injury or ſlander, or any mans elſe: but I ſpeak it for the zeal of the Faith, and for the devotion that I have to the holy Church of God, and the holy Romiſh See; as well for thoſe things that I have ſeen and heard of credible men of his doings, and by likely preſumptions gathered of the foreſaid things, and many and divers other things to be declared in his due place and time. And I ſware by the holy Goſpel of God (which I touch with my hand) That I believe him to be a rank Heretick; and that I alſo believe that the foreſaid things, and ſuch other, may prove againſt him ſuch things as ſhall be ſufficient to prove him an Heretick, according to the ſtate of the holy Fathers. I ware alſo that I will purſue againſt him by the Laws, the foreſaid things in the General Council that ſhall be aſſembled, in a place that ſhall be ſafe and ſure for me, to the honour of God, and increaſe of the Chriſtian Faith, ſaving the right, honour, and ſtate of the holy Apoſtolical See in all things. Wherefore, earneſtly and with reverence I require you, my Lord the King (to whom belongeth the defence of the holy Mother the Church, and the Catholick Faith, for of that ye ſhall make account in the laſt Judgment) and you my Lords the Prelates which be the pillars of the Faith, and which ought to be Judges of the foreſaid things, together with other reverend Fathers, the Catholick Prelates of the holy Church, in the General Council to be aſſembled; that ye would procure and take diligent pain that a General Council may be gathered in a fit and ſafe place, and convenient time, before which the foreſaid things may be propounded, brought forth and proved againſt the ſaid Boniface, as is premiſed. And I earneſtly alſo require you, my Lord King, that ye would require the ſame Prelates preſent and abſent, in what Country ſoever they be, or to whom it belongeth.

and that ye would effectually induce them manfully to' labour, and to require others faithfully, that the foresaid Council for the aforesaid matters might be gathered in fuch fort as is foresaid. And because so long as this is deferred to be proved, I suspect Boniface himself, lest he being angry and moved for the foresaid things against me and my Partakers, Procurers and Helpers, my Friends and Familiars, should go about by some means to stay and stop my good purpose and theirs for going forward: therefore, by these writings before you my Lord the King and divers Prelates, and before your common Notaries here present, I provoke and appeal to the said holy General-Council Apostolical and Catholick that shall be, and to the holy Apostolical See, and to him and them to whom of right I may or ought: and I earnestly require, once, twice, and thrice, that testimonial Letters may be given me from you; supporting my self, my Followers, Favourers, Familiars, Friends, my Procurators, and all them that will hereafter follow me, my goods and theirs to be under the protection and keeping of Saint Peter and Paul, and the said holy Council to be assembled by the holy Romish See, and the Catholick Apostolical Pope that shall be: flicking nevertheless and willing to flick to the Appellation and Appellations, Process and Processes made hereupon by the Nobleman Master William of Nagareta Knight, in as-much as they shall be found and made lawful, and yet not forsaking this present Appellation.

When these things were thus read and done, the foresaid King answered and required the foresaid Prelates, provoking and appealing and making request, Provocation and Appellation, as is contained in the Paper under written, both there and then with other Prelates: which things all are more fully contained in these writings following, and were read to them that heard it, whose tenour is such:

The Kings answer. The Appeal of Philip the French King from the Pope.

" We Philip by the Grace of God, hearing and understanding the Objections propounded by our beloved faithful Knight, W. of Nagareta against Boniface, now having the Regiment of the Romish-Church: although we would gladly cover with our own Cloke, the filthy parts of such a Father; yet for the love of the Catholick Faith and great devotion that we bear to the holy Romish and universal Church our Mother, and all faithful men, and Spouse of Christ, following the steps of our Ancestors, which doubted not to shed their own blood for the increase and defence of the Churches Liberty and the Faith; and coveting to provide for the purity of the Faith and State of the Church; as also to avoid the hurt of the general slander, being not able to pass over any longer the premisses with winking and dissembling, and my conscience driving to the same; seeing this climate and opinion of him in these matters is not rashly of us conceived, but vehemently and plainly increased by many and continual cryings of credible men, and great authority oft and oftentimes beaten into us, fearing moreover the destruction of the Faith, both of us and of all other Subjects, and specially of Kings and Princes of the world, which ought to reprove negligence, which acknowledge that we have received power given us from the Lord, to the promoting and increasment of it; we agree to your Requests in his behalf, and to the calling and assembling a Council for the Glory of God (saving the honour and reverence that is due to the holy Romish-Church in all things) whereby the truth may appear in the premisses, and all error avoided: that the state of the universal Church, and all Christianity, and the matters of Faith, and the holy Land may be provided for, and the slanders and jeopardies hanging over us may be withstanded; we be ready and offer our selves gladly, as much as in us is, to bestow our labour and diligent pain thereabout: Earnestly requiring and beseeching in the mercifull bowels of Jesus Christ, you Archbishops and other Prelates here present, as Children of the Church and Pillars of Faith, called of the Lord to the promoting, increase and preserving thereof, to care for the same, that with all diligence ye would give heed, as becometh you, and effectually you would labour by all ways and fit means, to the calling and assembling of this Council, in which we intend to be personally present. And left the said Boniface, which hath boldly and wrongfully many times threatned to proceed against us, stopping and hindring our purposes and intent, left any of his works of darkness (if there be any) should come to light, directly or indirectly hindring the calling and gathering of this Councilnor left any state being in the same Realm that will indeed proceed against us, or our state, Churches, Prelates, Barons, and other faithful Vassals, our Subjects, our Lands, or our Realm, and the state of the Realm, by abusing any spiritual Sword, in Excommunicating, Suspending, or other ways by any means: for us and our well-wilters, and them that will follow us, we provoke and appeal in writing to the foresaid General-Council (which we infantly define to be called) and to one lawful chief Bishop that shall be, or to any other to whom we should appeal; and yet not going from the Appellation made by M. William of Nagareta, to whom we flicked then, and also yet flick: requiring earnestly a witness of our Appellation of you Prelates and Notaries, expressly to renew such Provocation and Appellation when and before whom it shall be thought meet to you. {KING Edw. I.}

Then the Archbishops within written, Bishops, Abbots, and Priors, answered the premisses (as it is found in the acts) provoked and appealed, agreed to and protested, and made Provocation and Appellation, Agreement and Protestation, as is contained more fully in a certain Paper there openly and plainly read, whose tenour followeth with these words:

The protestation of Prelates.

W. Archbishop of Nicosen, Remen. Senorem, Narbonem, Turonem, and Bishops of Landviren, Belnacen, Catolacen, Antifiodorem, Meldimen, Nurmen, Carnotem, Aurelianen, Ambiaven, Morinen, Silanen, Andeganen, Abricen, Constant, Ebroicen, Lexonicen, Sagien, Caloromonti, Lemonicen, Avicen, Masticonen: And we Abbots of Cluniack, Premonstraten of the greater Monastery of the Court of S. Dionese in France, camped S. Victors, S. Genoveve, S. Marten, Landmoen, Figiacem, and Bellicem in Lemocinio, and Fryer Hugh, Visitor of the Houses of the Order of Knights of S. John in Jerusalem in France, and the Father Prior of S. Martin in the field, bearing these things which were said, propounded, and objected yesterday, and to day by you the Lords, Earls, and Wil. aforesaid, against the Lord Boniface the Eighth and Pope, being moved with such sayings, purposes, assertions, and your Oaths, your request and other lawful causes, and compelled by need, considering that the matter of our Faith, which is Christ's, is handled in the premisses: we that be called to part of this care, to the defence and maintenance of the faith of Souls of the Realm, although unworthy, yet coveting to withstand the jeopardies that hang over us by reason of the premisses and other causes, thinking the calling and gathering of the said Council profitable and necessary, that the innocency of the Lord Boniface himself may clearly be discussed, as we desire (our consciences bearing witness) that it may be determined on him by the Council, touching such things as are laid against him, and that which they decree may be done according to the Canons: We answer you our Lord King, and you our Lords, Earls, and William, that (the honour and reverence of the holy Romish-Church saved in all points) we agree to your due request in this behalf for the calling of the Council, and are ready to give help and diligent labour to the calling and gathering of the said Council, according to the Decrees of the holy Fathers, and to the lawful Orders of the Canons: not intending by any means to make Parties of this matter, nor to stick to any that maketh Parties. Yet lest the said Boniface being moved by these things, as we fear, by likely conjectures and threatnings made against us for the foresaid things, that he will proceed against our Parish-Churches and our Subjects by some means, or cause to proceed against us by some Authority of his own or others, by Excommunication, Suspension, Interdicting, Depriving, Depriving, or by some other means and colour sought to some impeachment or trouble of the said Council; and that we may sit in the same Council to judge and do all other things, that belong to the Office of Prelates; that our friends that stick to us, and would stick to us in all things, may remain safe for our selves, our Parish Churches, our Subjects, and them that stick to us, or would stick to us in this behalf, we provoke and appeal in writing to the foresaid Council, that is to be gathered, and to him that shall be the true and lawful highest Bishop, {KING Edw. I.}

Bishop, and to him or them to whom of right we should appeal, and earnestly require our Appellations; committing us, our Parish-Churches, our Subjects, Friends, and them that stick to us, our State and theirs, our right, goods, to the godly defence of the foresaid Counsel, and of him that shall be true and lawful highest Bishop: and we protest to renew his Appellation, where, when, and before whom it shall be thought meet. {KING Edw. I.}

This was done at Paris at Lupara in the Chamber of the said Lord our King, Indictione prima, the ninth year of his Popedom, the days of Thursday and Friday aforesaid, these Noblemen being present; The Lords of Avia and Bolone, the Lords Martins and other Earls named before, Matthew Doteva, Peter the Lord Chamberlain, Philip the Lord of Wirtmos, and Henry of Bologna Knight, and also M. Philip Archdeacon of Bengem, Nicholas Archdeacon of Remein, William Treasurer of Anjou, Philip Beafteare, Rainold of Bourbon and John Momagre, and many more both Clerks and other specially required and called to be Witnesses to this.

After these things thus in the Parliament decreed and agreed, the Prelates of the Clergy consulting with themselves what was to be done in so doubtful a matter, and dreading the Popes displeasure for this which was done already; to clear themselves in the matter, contrived among themselves a Letter to the Pope, partly to certifie him what there was done, and partly also to admonith him what he should do: the tenor of which their Letter contained these words following.

The form of a Letter which the Prelates of France as well secular as religious, sent to Boniface, that he should cease his Enterprise, wherein he proceeded against the King.

To the most holy Father and their deareft beloved Lord, the Lord Boniface, the chief Bishop of the holy Romish Church, and the universal Church, his humble and devout Archbishops, Abbots, Priors, Conventuals, Deans, Provosts, Chapters, Covents and Colledges of the Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, regular and secular, of all the Realm of France, being gathered together, do offer most devout kissings of your blessed feet.

The Letter of the French Prelates to Pope Boniface.

WE are compelled, not without sorrow of heart and bitter tears, to signifie unto your Holiness that the most famous Prince our most dear Lord Philip, by the Grace of God, the noble King of France, when he heard and saw the Apostolical Letters sealed, which were sent to him of late, on your behalf by the worshipfull man the Cardinal of Narbo your Notary and Messenger, and were presented by the same Cardinal to him, and certain other of the Barons: Upon the sight and perusing of those so bloody Letters, being read and declared to them sitting by him; both our Lord the King and the Barons themselves were highly moved with great marveling and great trouble. Insomuch that the said our Lord the King, by the advice of his Barons, commanded to be called before him the other Barons then absent, and us also; that is to say, All Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Conventuals, Deans, Provosts, Chapters, Covents and Colledges, as well of Cathedral or Collegiate Churches, regular and secular, and also all the Universities and Communalities of the Towns of his Realm; that we Prelates, Barons, Deans, Provosts, and two of the learneds of every Collegiate and Cathedral Church, should appear personally, and should procure the rest likewise to appear, by their Stewards, Officers, and sufficient Procters, with full and sufficient Commission at the appointed place and time. Further, when we and the other Ecclesiastical Persons aforesaid, and also the Barons, Stewards, Officers, and Procters, and other of the Community of the Towns were then called, and when, according to the form of the foresaid calling by the King's Commandment, we stood before the King the Wednesday, the tenth of this present April, in Saint Maries Church in Paris: Our Lord the King caused to be propounded openly and plainly to all men, that it was signified to him, from you among other things by the foresaid Cardinal and Letters, that for his Kingdom (which he and his Ancestors hitherto do acknowledge they hold of God only) now ought in Temporalties to be subject to you: and that ye were not content with these, so marvelous and strange words, and not heard of from the beginning of the world of any Dwellers within the same Realm, but that ye went about to put them in practice; and that ye called to appear before you the Prelates of the said Realm, and Doctors of Divinity, and such Professors of both Laws, as were born within the said Realm, for the correcting and amending of such Excesses, Faults, Arrogancies, Wrongs, and Harms, as ye pretend to be done to the Ecclesiastical Prelates and Persons Ecclesiastical both regular and secular, abiding within the Realm and elsewhere, by our Lord the King himself and his Officers or Bayliffs, by his Peers, Earls, Barons, and other Nobles, with the communalty and people of the said Realm: To the intent, by this means the foresaid Realm might be made strong, with precious Jewels and durable Treasures, which are to be preferred before the Bucklers or any armor of strong men, that is to say, by the wisdom of Prelates, and wise men, and others; through whose ripe faithful counsel, and circumspect foresight, the Realm might be ruled and governed, the Faith might be stablished, the Ecclesiastical Sacraments might be ministred, Justice might be executed; which by them being robbed of their goods and riches, and utterly spoiled, is in a doubtful case and in jeopardy of miserable decay, and for ever to be destroyed.

Among these and divers other griefs, which were done by you and the Romish Church, to him, to his Realm, and the French Church, both in reserving and wilful ordering of Archbishoprics, Bishoprics, and bestowing of great Benefices of the Realm upon strange and unknown persons, yea, and oft upon suspected persons, never being at the Churches or Benefices aforesaid: by reason whereof the decay of Gods Worship ensued; the godly wills of the Founders and Givers are defrauded of their godly purpose; the accustomed Alms-giving is withdrawn from the poor of the said Realm, the impoverishing of the Realm followeth, and Churches run in danger to be defaced, while they remain destitute of Service: the Prophets being taken away, and the fruits of them that serve them, being appointed to the commodity of strangers. And while Prelates have no way to give yea to reward men for their deserts; Noblemen (whose Ancestors founded the Churches) and other learned men, cannot have Servants; and that for these causes, devotion began to be cold, and there was none at these days that would fretch out a liberal hand towards the Churches; and furthermore by the premises an evil example was given. Also he complained of new Taxes, of Pensions, newly laid on the Churches, of immeasurable Bondages, Exactions, and divers Extortions, with other prejudicial and hurtful Novelties, by which the general State of the Church is changed, in giving Suffragans, as helpers to the higher Prelates, whereby neither the Bishops themselves nor the Suffragans can do their duties, but for them they must run with Gifts to the Apostolical See. He complained also of divers Causes and some Articles long since, but true in the time that they presented, that were done, and be done continually: and also not purposing to suffer so great a disheriting of him and his Successors from the Realm, and so manifest a grief, they could not suffer any longer the evident loss of the Honour of him and the Realm, and said, That he was certain that it was known to the whole world, that he did maintain in this matter a just cause, as he had learned by the agreable Sentence of Doctors in Divinity, and Masters of both Laws, that were born within his Realm, and others, which among the Doctors and cunning men of the world were counted of the learned sort and more famous. Therefore he required us, all and every one; both Prelates and Barons, and other, earnestly as our Lord; he prayed and gently begged as a friend, to consult and take diligent pains, that he might Ordain wholsome things, both for the keeping of their old liberty, the Honour and State of the Realm, and of the Inhabitants thereof, for the easing of the Griefs aforesaid, for redressing of the Realm and the French Church, by our counsel and his Barons, to the praise of God: name, the encrease of the Catholick Faith, the honour of the universal Church, and promoting of Gods Religion: specially seeing such griefs were done by his Officers and others of the Realm, to the Churches and Church-men, for the which he purposed a remedy of wholsome Correction, before the coming of the foresaid

Cardinal

Cardinal, and would now have put it in execution effectually, but that he might be thought to have done that for fear, or at your commandment, which thing ye cannot ascribe to your self. Furthermore, he would spend not only his goods, but also his Realm, yea his Children if the case required: and therefore we should regard to be ready with counsel and help in season as we are bound by the duty of fidelity in these things: wherein it is manifest, that as all and every mans case is handled, generally and particularly their case is promoted, and every mans own interest is touched. And then he demanded by and by to be answered plainly and finally in these things, of all and every one.

Then the Barons sitting aside with the Officers and Proctors aforesaid, at the length after they had taken counsel, coming to our foresaid Lord the King, and praising greatly and heartily thanking him for his laudable purpose and good will, answered with one voice: that for those things they were ready not only to spend their goods, but offered the same goods, riches, and also their persons to death, and not to flee any kind of torment. And said further with one voice, That if our foresaid Lord the King would (as God forbid) suffer, or else willingly pass over those, they themselves would in no case suffer it.

Then when answer was asked of us afterward, although we defired longer respite of deliberation of the King himself our Lord, and of the greatest of the aforesaid Barons; and that for this intent, that in the mean while the Popes Letters might have come to our Lord the King; we answered, That we would not offend against the Liberty of the Realm, nor by any means innovate things contrary to the Kings Honour in this behalf.

We went about also to inform him with many goodly words, and earnest persuasions, and with many kinds of help, and by sundry ways to bring him to keep the special bond of Unity, which is known to have continued to these present days, betwixt the holy Romish-Church, and his Predecessors. But when we were denied any longer delay, and it was plainly and openly told to all men, that if any man were of a contrary mind, from thence-forth he should be manifestly counted for an Enemy of the King and the Realm: We considering warily, and seeing plainly, that except our Lord the King, and the Barons aforesaid were content with our Answer, besides other dangers and great offences (whereof there could neither be number nor end) and then the devotion both of the Romish and French Church, and also the whole Obedience of the Laity, and all the people from thence-forth should be taken away without recovery, nor without great fear and doubt; we therefore thought good to answer thus:

That we would help our Lord the King with due counsel and convenient help for the preserving of his Person and of his earthly Honour, and the Liberty and Laws of the said Realm, like as we were (certain of us) by the duty of Allegiance bound to him, which hold of him Dukedoms, Earldoms, Baronies, Fees, and other noble parts of the said Realm, by the form of the Oath, as all others do: yet we made humble suit to the same our Lord the King, that seeing we were bound to obey the Popes Holinefs and your holy feet, he would suffer us to go according to the tenour of your forefaid Calling.

Then on the King's and Barons behalf followeth Answer, That in no case they would suffer us to go out of the Realm, and that by no means they would bear to be handled so dangerously, yea rather to be altogether wasted.

Then we considering so great an anger, and so perilous a jeopardous, and so great that none could be greater, both of the King, the Barons, and other Lay-people of the Realm; and now knowing plainly, that the old Enemy of Peace, which goeth about from the beginning of his Fall, with sowing of Darnel, to break the Unity of the Church; by troubling of peace, would break Charity, and infect the sweetness of good works with the poison of bitter envy, and would overthrow Mankind utterly, and would trouble with wickedness the band of lovely Unity, and singular Friendship, which hitherto have had a happy increase betwixt the Romish-Church and our Lord the King, and his Predecessors, and the Realm, to the praise of the highest God, the increase of Christian-Faith, and the setting forth of the Honour of the Church, of the King and the Realm; and that now (alas) a door was open, to the lamentable breaking and pitiful separating, of great offences to rise on every side, dangers are attempted against Churches and Church-men, to spoil their goods and riches, with jeopardy of life, seeing that the Laity now do abhor and utterly flee the Obedience of Clerks, utterly banishing them from their counsels and doings; and have taken courage to condemn the Ecclesiastical Censure and Process: all which jeopardies, with other sundry and divers dangers (which neither Tongue is able to tell, nor Writing can declare) we seeing at hand, thought good in this point of greatest necessity, to run with weeping voice, and lamentable sighs to the circumspect wisdom of your Holiness: beseeching your fatherly mildness, and humbly praying you, that some wholsome remedy may be provided in the premisses; by which, the sound profitable agreement and mutual love, which hath continued so long time betwixt the Church, the King, and the Realm, might be maintained in that old sweet Concord; the state of the French-Church might continue in godly and quiet peace; and that he would vouchsafe to foresee how to withstand the dangers and offences aforesaid, that we and our States may be provided for, by the foresaid Commandment of your Calling, by the study of your Apostolical Wisdom, and fatherly love. The Almighty preserve your Holiness to his holy Church a long time.

{ KING Edw. 3.

These things thus discoursed and done, then followed the year of our Lord, 1304. In the which year, about the Nativity of our Lady, came a Garrison of hamessed Souldiers well appointed, sent partly by the French King, partly by the Cardinals of Columpna, whom the Pope before had deposed, unto the Gates of Arvagium, where the Pope did hide himself, because he was born in the Town. The Captains of which Army was one Schaira, Brother to the foresaid Cardinals; and another, William de Longareto, High Steward to the French King. Who invading the Popes Town, and finding the Gates open, gave assault to the Popes Frontire, where the Pope with his Nephew, a Marquess, and three other Cardinals were immured. The Townsmen, seeing all their intent and strength to be bent against the Pope, caused the common Bell to be rung, and so, assembling themselves in a Common-Council, Ordained Adulphus, one of the chiefest Rulers of the Town, for their Captain; who (unknowing unto them) was a great Adversary to the Pope. This Adulphus bringing with him Reginaldus de Supino, a great Lord in Campania, and the two Sons of John Chitan, a Nobleman, whole Father the Pope had then in prison; it length joyned with the French Company against the Pope, and so befet his Palace on every side. And first, setting upon the Palaces of the three Cardinals, which were then chief about the Pope, they rifled and spoiled all their goods. The Cardinals by a back-door hardly avoided their hands: but the Popes Palace, through munition and strength of the Marquess, was something better defended. At length the Pope, perceiving himself not able to make his party good, desired truce with Schaira and his Company, which was to him granted from One till Nine. During which time of truce, the Pope privily sendeth to the Townsmen of Arvagium, desiring them to save his life: which if they would do, he promised so to inrich them, that they should all have cause never to forget or repent their benefit bestowed. To this they made answer again, excusing themselves, that it lay not in their ability so to him any good; for that the whole power of the Town was with the Captain. Then the Pope, all destitute and desolate, sendeth unto Schaira, befeeching him to draw out in Articles, wherein he had wronged him, and he would make him amends to the uttermost. Schaira to this maketh a pain answer, signifying to him again, That he should in no wise escape with his life, except upon these three Conditions. First, To restore again the two Cardinals of Columpna his Brethren, whom he had before deprived, with all other dignities of their Stock and Kindred. Secondly, That after their Restitution, he should renounce his Papacy. Thirdly, That his body should remain in his Power and Custody. These Articles seemed to the Pope so hard, that in no case he would agree unto them: wherefore the time of truce expired, the Captains and Souldiers, in all forcible means bending themselves against the Bishop, first fired the Gates of the Palace, whereby the Army, having a full entrance, fell to rifle and spoil the house. upon hope to have his life, and the life of his Children, yieldeth him to the hands of Schaira and the other Captain: which when the Pope heard, he wept and made great lamentation. After this, thorow windows and doors, at length with much ado they braft in to the Pope, whom they intreated with words and threats accordingly. Upon this he was put to his choice, whether he would presently leave his life, or give over his Papacy. But that he denied flatly to do, to die for it, saying to them in his vulgar tongue, Ecco col, ecco cape; That is, lo here my neck, lee here my head: protesting, That he would never while he lived renounce his Popedom. Then Schaira went about, and was ready to slay him, but, by certain that were about him, he was staied; whereby it happned that the Pope received no harm, although divers of his Ministers and Servants were slain. The Souldiers, which ranged in the mean time through all the corners of the Popes House, did lade themselves with luch treasure of gold, silver, plate and ornaments, that the words of my Author (whom I follow) do thus expresse it: Quod omnes reges mundi non possent tantum de thesauro reddere infra unum annum, quantum fuit de Papali Palatio asportatum, & de palatiis trium Cardinalium, & Marchionis: That is, That all the Kings of the earth together were not able to disburse so much out of their treasure in a whole year, as then was taken and carried out of the Popes Palace, and of the Palace of the three Cardinals, and the Marquess. Thus Boniface, bereaved of all his goods remained in their custody three days. During which space, they had set him on a wild unbroken Colt, his face turned to the Horse tail, causing the Horse to run coutle, while the Pope was almoft breathless. Moreover, they kept him so without meat, that he was thereby near famished to death. After the third day, the Arvagians and people of the Town muftering themselves together (to the number of ten thousand) secretly braft into the House where the Pope was kept, and so slaying the Keepers, delivered the Pope by strong hand. Who then being brought into the middle of the Town, gave thanks with weeping tears to the people for his life saved: promiling moreover, That forthmuch as he was out of all his goods, having neither bread nor drink to put in his mouth, Gods blessing and his, to all them that now would relieve him with any thing, either to eat or drink. And here now see what poverty and affliction can work in a Man: the Pope before in all his pomp and moft ruffling wealth was never so proud, but now he was as humble and lowly, that every poor simple Man (as mine Author teltifieth) might have a bold and free access to his person. To make the story short, the Pope, in that great distress of famine, was not so greedy of their victuals, as they were greedy of his blessing. Whereupon, the Women and people of the Town came so thick, some with bread, some with wine, some with water, some with meat, some with one thing, some with another, that the Popes Chamber was too little to receive the offering; insomuch, that when there lacked cups to receive the wine, they poured it down on the Chamber floor, not regarding the loss of wine to win the Popes Holy Blessing. Thus Pope Boniface, being refreshed by the Town of Arvagium, took his journey from thence, accompanied with a great multitude of hamessed Souldiers to Rome, where he shortly upon the same, partly for fear which he was in, partly for Famine, partly for sorrow of so ineltimable a treasure lost, died. After whom succeeded Benedictus the 11th. of whom these Verses are written: Ave nomen habe, benedic, benefac, benedicte. Aut rem perverte, maledic, malefac, maledicte, &c. And thus have ye the whole story of Pope Boniface the 8th. Author of the Decretals. Which story I thought the more diligently to set forth, that all the Latine Church might see what an Author he was, whose Laws and Decretals so devoutly they follow.

Now, after the long debating of this matter between the French King and Pope Boniface, let us proceed in our English story. About this time, in the days of King Edward, the Church of Rome began daily more and more to rise up, and swell so high in pride and worldly dominion, that no King almoft in his own Country could do any thing, but as pleased the Pope, who both had, and ruled all in all Countries, but chiefly here in England, as partly by his intolerable tallage and pillage before signified may appear, partly by his injunctions and commandments sent down, also by his Donations and reservations of Benefices and Church Livings; also in deposing and disposing such as him lifted, in place and Office to bear rule: insomuch, that when the King and the Church of Canterbury in their Election, had chosen one Robert Burnhil Bishop of Bath, and Clerk of Canterbury, Pope Boniface of his own singular presumptuous authority, ruling the matter after his pleasure, frustrated their Election, and transferred the named John Pecham: for among all other, this had always been one practice of the Court of Rome, ever to have the Archbishop of their own setting, or such one as they might be sure of on their side, to weigh against the King and other, whatsoever need should happen. To this John Pecham Pope Boniface directed down a solemn Bull from Rome, as also unto all other quarters of the universal Church. In the which Bull was contained and decreed, directly against the rule of Scripture and Christian Obedience: That no Church nor Ecclesiastical person, should henceforth yield to his King or Temporal Magistrate, either any giving or lending, or promising of Tribute or Subsidy, or portion whatsoever, of the goods and possessions to him belonging; but should be clearly exempted and discharged from all such subjection of Tallage or subvention to be exacted of them in the behoof of the Prince and his affairs. Which decree manifestly rebelled against the commanded Ordinance of God, and the Apostolical Canon of S. Peter, and all other examples of Holy Scripture. For as there is no word in the Scripture that excludeth Spiritual Men more than Temporal from obedience and subjection of Princes: so if it chance the Prince in his exacting to be too rigorous or cruel in oppreflion, that is no cause for the Clergy to be exempted, but to bear the common burthen of obedience, and to pray to God to turn and move the Princes mind, and so (with prayer and patience, not with pride and disobedience) to help and amend that which is amiss. Concerning the Bull of Boniface, if any there be that either do not credit the same, so to contain, or would see his mind see and read the same, the words hereof follow.

Boniface chideth the Poet to dissuade him to give over his Popedom.

The Clergy denied to give tribute to the King.

This Bull being dereſted (as is ſaid) from Rome to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and likewiſe thorow the whole Univerſal Church, under the Popes authority; it chanced not long after, the King held his Parliament at S. Edmundsbury; where was granted to him of all Cities and Boroughs an eighth, and of the Commons a twelfth of their goods. Only the Clergy, by vertue of his Bull, ſtood ſtout, denying to pay any thing to the King. This anſwer not well pleaſing the King, he willeth them to deliberate better with themſelves upon the matter; and after long adviſement, ſo to give him anſwer againſt the next Parliament, which ſhould be holden the next Hillary Term at London.

The Clergy forbidden from the Kings protection.

In concluſion, the Parliament came, the Clergy perſiſteth ſtill in the denial of their Subſidy, alledging the Popes Bull for their warrant and diſcharge. Whereupon the King likewiſe ſecludeth them under his protection and ſafeguard of his Laws. And as concerning the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, above mentioned, becauſe he was found more ſtubborn than the reſt, and was the inciter to the others, he ſeized upon all his goods, and cauſed an Inventory of the ſame to be inrolled in the Exchequer. Notwithſtanding, divers of the other Biſhops relented ſoon after to the King, and contributed the fifth of their goods unto him, and were received again to favour.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury for his ſtubbornneſs, had his goods confiſcate to the King.

In the life of this Kings Father, it was declared before how the ſaid King Henry the Third, Father to this King, after divers Wars and commotions had with his Barons, had granted certain liberties and freedoms written and contained in Magna Charta, and in Charta de Foreſta. Concerning which matter, much ſtrifneſs happened in this Kings days alſo in the Realm, between the King and his Barons and Commons. The occaſion was this: A pack of Wool which before payed but a Mark to the King, was now by this King raiſed up to forty ſhillings. After this the King having a journey to make into Flanders, ſent to his Barons and divers others to give their attendance, and ſervice in the ſame, which they refuſed and denied to do. Notwithſtanding, the King perſiſting in his purpoſe, with ſuch a power as he had, prepareth toward his journey. To whom being in his way at Wincheſter, the foreſaid Earls and Barons, and Commons, ſent certain petitions contained in writing under the name of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots and Priors, Earls and Barons, with the Commanalty of the Realm. In which writing, firſt lamenting and complaining of their afflicted ſtate and miſery, after humble manner they deſired their Lord the King to redreſs and amend certain grievances among them. And firſt they declared in the name of the whole Commons, that the promotion or Writs directed to them for their attendance upon his Grace into Flanders, was not ſufficient: for that there was no certain place in the ſaid Writs ſpecified unto them, whether to come for making their proviſion, and preparing money and other things according to the ſame. And if the place had been to them ſignified, yet, becauſe none of their Anceſtors ever ſerved the King over into Flanders before, the Commons therefore thought themſelves not bound to any ſervice in that Country. And albeit they had been ſo bound thereunto, yet they were not able to do it, being ſo heavily oppreſſed with ſo many Tallages, Taxes, Tolls, Cuſtoms, and prices of Corn, Ores, Tin, Wool, Leather, Oxen, Kine, Flefh, Fiſh, &c. And beſides all this, having no penny of wages given them to relieve their charges: Over and beſides, the lack of the Kings wages not paid them, their own poverty like an heavy burthen did ſo miſerably lie upon them, that ſome of them had no ſuſtentation, ſome of them were not able to till their own ground. They alledged moreover, that they were not now handled after the old Laws and cuſtoms of the Land, as their anceſtors were wont. Many alſo found themſelves grieved in that they were not uſed according to the Articles contained in Magna Charta; and again that the Charta de Foreſta was not obſerved nor kept, as it was wont to be. Wherefore moſt humbly they beſeeched the King, both for his own honour and for the wealth of his people, that of theſe things they might find redreſs. For the Cuſtom moreover of Wool, the whole Commons bewailed to the King their grief, in that for every Pack of Wool was fined the King, forty ſhillings, and for every fack of toſed Wool, ſeven marks. The which Wool of England, as it doth riſe up to the value of half the Realm; ſo the Tollage of the ſame ſurmounteth to the fifth part of the valuation of the whole Land. And becauſe therefore the Commons wiſhed the honor and preſervation of their King (as they were bound to do) they thought it not good for his Grace to fail over to Flanders, unleſs he had better aſſurance of their fidelity, eſpecially at this time the Scots being ſo buſie: who if they began to rebel, he being at home in his Land, much more were they like to ſtir, he being abroad out of the Land. And that not only for the Scots, but alſo for that the like peril was to be doubted of other Foreign Nations and Kingdoms, which as yet were in no firm peace with England, &c.

Petitions of the Barons and Commons to the King.

To theſe petitions, the King ſaid that he could as yet make no reſolute anſwer, for that ſome of his Council was gone over already to Flanders, ſome were at London. Notwithſtanding, at his return again from Flanders (which he truſted ſhould be ſpeedily) they ſhould then hear his anſwer, and know more of his mind concerning the ſame. In the mean time this he required of them, to keep good rule at home while he was forth. What anſwer the King had minded to make them at his return, it is uncertain, which peradventure had turned to a bloody anſwer: but occaſion ſerved otherwiſe, and turned all to agreement. For the Scots with their Captain William Waleis above ſpecified, in the mean time, the King being abſent, invaded the Realm with ſuch violence, that Prince Edward the Kings Son, who was left to rule in his Fathers ſtead, was forced to Aſſemble a Parliament, and to call for the Earl of Hereford, the Earl of Northfolk, High Marſhal of England, Earl of Eſſex, High Conſtable, with other Earls, Barons, Knights, and Eſquires, to intreat peace and concord between his Father and them. Who coming up to London with 1500 well armed Souldiers, and obtaining the Gates of the City with their own Men, fell at length to agreement with the Prince, upon compoſition to have the Articles of Magna Charta, and of Charta de Foreſta confirmed; and that by his means and mediation they might be aſſured of the Kings diſpleaſure to be removed from them. The which foreſaid Articles of Magna Charta, with the other Articles adjoyned withal, here follow under written.

The variance between King Edward and his Barons and Commons.

Firſt, No Tallage or Subſidy by the King or his heirs to be impoſed or levied hereafter within the Realm of England, without the common aſſent of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots and other Prelates, Earls, Barons, Knights, Burgeſſes, and Commons of the Realm.

The Articles contained in Magna Charta.

Item, No Taker or Servitor of the King, or of his heirs, henceforth within this Realm, to take Grain, Wool, Leather, or any goods of any Man, without the will and conſent of him which is the owner.

No taking to be hereafter, in name of tribute, for any Pack of Wool.

Item, To be granted by the King and his Heirs after him, both to the Clergy and Laity of this foreſaid Realm, to have to and enjoy their Laws, Liberties and Cuſtoms, in as ample manner as they were wont at any time heretofore.

Item, If any Decrees or Statutes ſhall hereafter be made and ſet forth contrary to theſe foreſaid Articles, the ſame to ſtand void and of no effect for ever.

Beſides theſe Articles alſo, in the ſame compoſition was contained, that all grudge and diſpleaſure between the King and Barons for not going to Flanders ceaſing; the Earls and Barons might be aſſured to be received again into the Kings favor.

Agreement concluded and ſealed between the King and his Barons.

Theſe things thus agreed upon, and by mediation of the Prince alſo confirmed and ſealed with the Kings Father, Seal: ſo was all the variance pacified, to the great comfort of the people, and no leſs ſtrength of the Realm againſt their enemies: and moſt chiefly to the commendation of the gentile, and wiſe nature of the King, who as he was gentle in promiſing his reconcilement with his ſubjects,

Robert Winchelſey, Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

After the death of John Pecham Archbiſhop of Canterbury, above mentioned, who in the Parliament had refuſed the King in the right of certain liberties pertaining to the Crown, touching Patronages and ſuch Church matters, ſucceeded Robert Winchelſey; with whom alſo the King had like variance, who accuſed him to the Pope for breaking the peace, and took part with them that rebelled againſt the King about uſages and liberties of the Realm. Wherefore, the King being cited up to the Court of Rome, and there ſuſpended by the means of the ſaid Archbiſhop, directed his Letters again to the Pope, taken out of the Parliament Rolls, where I find divers Letters of the King to Pope Clement, againſt the ſaid Robert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the contents whereof here follow, Videlicet, Qualiter idem.

K. Edward was troubled with two Archbiſhops of Canterbury.

And as this King was troubled in his time with both the Archbiſhops, John Pecham, and alſo Robert Winchelſey; ſo it happened to all other Kings for the moſt part, from the time of Lanefrancus (that is, from Pope Hildebrand) that every King in his time had ſome buſineſs or other with that See. As William Rufus, and Henry the Firſt were troubled with Anſelmus; Henry the Second with Thomas Becket; King Richard and all England with William Biſhop of Ely, the Popes Legate; King John with Stephen Langton; King Henry the Third with Edmund Archbiſhop, called Saint Edmund, Polyc. lib. 7. likewiſe this King Edward the Firſt, with John Pecham and Robert Winchelſey aforeſaid. And ſo other Kings after him, with ſome Prelate or other: whereby ye have to underſtand, how and about what time the Church of Rome, which before time was ſubject to Kings and Princes, began firſt to take head above, and againſt Kings and Rulers, and ſo hath kept it ever ſince.

The Kings anſwer to the petitions of the Barons and Commons.

Faiths to have but one Biſhop.

By this John Pecham aforementioned, it was ordained, That no Spiritual Miniſter ſhould have any more Benefices than one, which alſo was decreed by the conſtitutions of Otto and Octobonus, the Popes Legates the ſame time in England.

Variance between the Archbiſhop of York and the Clergy of Durſme.

About the beginning of this Kings Reign, after the deceaſe of Walter Archbiſhop of York, William Wickewanger ſucceeding in that See, minding to go on Viſitation, came to Durſme to viſit the Church and Chapter there. But the Clergy and the people of the City ſhut the Gates againſt him, and kept him out, whereupon roſe no ſmall diſturbance. The Archbiſhop let fly his Curſe of Excommunication and Interdiction againſt them. The Biſhop of Durſme again with his Clergy, deſpiſed all his Curſings, grounding themſelves upon the conſtitution of Innocentius the Fourth, De cenſibus & exactionibus. And ſo they appealed to Rome, ſaying, That he ought not to be received there, before he had firſt begun to viſit his own Chapter and Dioceſs, which he had not done. For to ſay the words of the Conſtitution: We Ordain and decree, That every Archbiſhop, that will viſit his Province, firſt muſt procure to viſit his own Church, City, and Dioceſs, &c.

Inquiſition made againſt the rulers and falſe Officers.

Among other things in this King to be noted, that is not to be paſſed over; That where complaint was made to him of his Officers, as Juſtices, Majors, Sheriffs, Bailiffs, Eſchetors, and ſuch other, who, in their Offices abuſing themſelves, extortioned and oppreſſed the Kings Liege people, otherwiſe than was according to right and Conſcience: the ſaid King, not ſuffering ſuch miſorder to be unpuniſhed, did appoint certain Officers or Inquiſitors, to the number of twelve, which Inquiſition was called Trailbaſton, or Trailbaſtoun; by means of which Inquiſition, divers falſe Officers, were accuſed, and ſuch as were offenders were either removed from their place, or forced to buy again their Office at the Kings hand; to their no ſmall loſs, and great gain to the King, and much profit to the Common-wealth.

Trailbaſton.

Ex Chron. Tho. Walſingham.

In the Chronicle of Robert Ameſbury, it is Recorded of the ſaid King. That he being at Ameſbury to ſee his Mother (who was then in that Monaſtery profeſſed) there was a certain Man, that ſained himſelf blind a long time, brought to the preſence of the ſaid Elinor the Kings Mother, ſaying, how that he had his ſight again reſtored at the Tomb of King Henry her late Husband, inſomuch that ſhe was eaſily perſwaded the Miracle to be very true. But King Edward her Son, knowing the Man a long time to be a vile diſſembler, and a wicked perſon, uſed to lying and crafty deceiving, perſwading his Mother not to give credit to the vile vagabond, declaring that he knew ſo well of the juſtice of his Father, that, if he were alive, he would twice rather pluck out both his eyes, than once reſtore him one. Notwithſtanding, the Queen his Mother, remaining ſtill in the former fond perſwation, would hear or believe nothing to the contrary, but was ſo in anger with her Son, that ſhe bid him depart her Chamber; and ſo he did. By the example whereof may eaſily be conceived, how and after what ſort theſe blind Miracles in thoſe days, and ſince, have come up among the blind and ſuperſtitious people. For had not the King here been wiſer than the Mother, no doubt but this would have been rung a Miracle, and percaſe King Henry been made a Saint.

A falſe miracle well found out of the King.

& true Miracle.

But as this was a fained Miracle, and falſe no doubt, ſo in the ſame author we read of another manner of Miracle, founding more near the truth, and ſo much the more likely, for that it ſerved to the Convertion unto Chriſtian Faith: to which uſe properly all true miracles do appertain. The Miracle was this: In the Reign of this King, and the later year of his Reign, Caſſanus King of the Tartarians (of whom come theſe whom now we call Turks) fighting againſt the Soldan King of the Saracens, in the plain of Damaſcus, ſlew of them a hundred thouſand of Saracens: and again at Babylon, fighting with the ſaid Soldan, ſlew him in the field, and 200000 of the Saracens, calling upon the help of Chriſt, and thereupon became Chriſtian. This Caſſanus, I ſay, had a Brother a Pagan, who being in love with the Daughter of the King of Armenia, a Chriſtian Woman, deſired of her Father that he might marry with her. Whereunto the King her Father would not agree, unleſs he promiſed to be a Chriſtian. Notwithſtanding, the other being ſtronger in power, and threatning to get her by War; the King at length was forced to agree. In concluſion, it happned that the Child being born betwixt them was overgrown, and all rough with hair like the ſkin of a Bear: which Child being brought to the Father he commanded it to be thrown into the fire and burned. But the Mother, deſiring firſt to have the Child baptized, cauſed all things thereunto to be prepared. The infant being three times in water plunged, after the Sacrament of Holy Baptiſm received, incontinently was altered and turned from all his hairy roughneſs, and feen as fair and ſmooth-skinned as any other. The which thing after the Father ſaw and beheld, he was chriſtned himſelf and all his Houſe, &c.

Victory as againſt the Saracens.

Kings of England commonly troubled with Archbiſhops of Canterbury.

In the Reign of this King, Walter Merton Biſhop of Rocheſter builded Merton Colledge in Oxford. In whoſe Raign alſo lived Henricus de Gandavo, Arnoldus de Villa Nova, Dantes, and other more, and Scotus called Duns. Who in his fourth Book of Sent. Diſt. 18. complaineth of the abuſe of Excommunication and of the Popes Keys. Whereas before, Excommunication was not uſed, but upon great and juſt cauſes, and therefore was feared: now, faith he it is brought forth for every trifling matter, as for not paying the Prieſts wages, &c. and therefore, ſaith he, it groweth in contempt. Under the ſame King, about the beginning of his Reign, was the year ſo hot and ſo dry, that from the month of May, until the month near of September, fell no raign: inſomuch that many died for heat, and the vulgar people, in their reckoning of years, did count the time from the faid dry year long after.

After Pope Benedictus above mentioned, ſucceeded Pope Clement the Fifth, who tranſlated the Popes Court to Avignion in France, where it remained the term of 74. years after. At the Coronation of this Clement was preſent Philip King of France, Charles his Son, and Duke John Duke of Brittany, with a great number of other Men of State and Nobility. At which Coronation, they being in the middle of the pomp, or proceſſion, a great Wall brake down and fell upon them: by the fall whereof Duke John with twelve other were ſlain, King Philip hurt and wounded, the Pope ſtrucken from his Horſe, and loſt out from his Mitre upon his head, a Carbuncle, eſteemed to the value of 6000 florence, Plat. de vit. Pont. By this Clement was ordained, that the Emperor, though he might be called King of the Romans before, yet he might not enjoy the title and right of the Emperor, before he was by him confirmed. And that the Emperors ſeat being vacant, the Pope ſhould Reign as Emperor, till a new Emperor was choſen. By him the Order of the Templars (who at that time were too abominable) was put down at the Council of Vienne, as ſhall be hereafter hereafter (Christ willing) shall be declared. He also ordained and confirmed the Feast of Corpus Christi, assigning Indulgences to such as heard the Service thereof. And as Pope Bonifacius before heaped up the Book of Decretals, called Sextus Decretalium, so this Clement compiled the Seventh Book of the Decretals, called of the same Clement, The Clementines. In the time of this Pope, Henricus the sixth of that name, Emperor, was poisoned in receiving the Sacrament, by a false dissembling Monk called Bernard, that fained himself to be his familiar friend; which was thought to be done not without the consent of the Popes Legate. The Emperor, perceiving himself poisoned, warned him to flee and escape away; for else the Germans would sure have slain him; who although he escaped himself, yet divers of his order after that with fire and sword were slain.

Sixtinus de Decretalium called the Clementines, Henricus 6. Emperor poisoned by the Host.

Paleologus Emperor of Constantinople Excommunicated with all his adherents by Pope Clement, for not suffering the Greeks to appeal to Rome.

As this Pope Clement the 5. had well provided now (as ye have heard) against the Empire of Rome to bring it under his girdle, insomuch that, without the Popes benediction, no Emperor might take the state upon him, &c. now he proceedeth further to intermeddle with the Empire of Constantinople. Where he first exerciseth his tyranny and power of Excommunication against Andronicus Paleologus, Emperor of Constantinople, An. 1306, declaring him to be a Schismatick and Heretick, because he neither would nor durst suffer the Grecians to make their appeal from the Greek Church to the Pope, neither would acknowledge him for his Superior, &c. Whereby it may appear, that the Greek Church did not admit the Popes superiority as yet, nor at any time before: Save only about the time of Pope Innocent the third, An. 1202. at what time the French-men with their Captain Baldwinus, Earl of Flanders, joyned together with the Venetians, were set against the Grecians, to place Alexius in the right of the Empire of Constantinople, upon condition (as writeth Platina) to subdue the Greek Church under the Church of Rome. Which Alexius being restored, and shortly after slain, the Empire came to the French-men, with whom it remained the space of 58. years, till the coming of Michael Paleologus in the days of Pope Gregory the ninth, who restored the Empire from the French-men unto his pristine state again. During all which time of the French Emperors, the Greek Church was subject to Rome, as by the Decretals of Pope Gregory the ninth may appear. Then followed after this, that the foresaid Michael Emperor of Constantinople, being called up to a Council at Lions by Pope Gregory the tenth, about the controversie of the proceeding of the Holy Ghost (as is above specified) and obedience to the Church of Rome: there because the said Michael the Emperor did submit himself and the Grecians to the subjection of Rome (as testifieth Baptist Egnat.) he thereby procured to himself such grudge and hatred among the Greek Monks and Priests, that after his death they denied him the due honour and place of burial. The Son of this Andronicus was Michael Paleologus above mentioned: who, as ye have heard before, because he was constrained by the Grecians, not to admit any appellation to the Bishop of Rome, was accursed by the Popes censures for an Heretick. Whereby appeareth, that the Grecians, recovering their state again, refused all subjection at this time unto the Church of Rome, which was the year of our Lord 1327, &c. After this Clement the fifth followed Pope John the 22. with whom Ludovick the Emperor had much trouble. After whom next in course succeeded Pope Benedict the 12. Which Benedict upon a time, being desired to make certain new Cardinals, to this answered again; that he would gladly so do, if he also could make a new world. For this world (said he) is for these Cardinals that be made already. Ex scripo Engelhusensis. And thus much of the Popes: now to return a little back to the Kings story again.

Platina in vit. Innocentii.

When and how long the Greek Church was subject to Rome.

Ba. Egnat. Rom. princ. l. 7.

The Greek Church doth obey subjection to the Church of Rome.

In the year of our Lord 1237. which was 34th. of the Reign of this King, in the beginning of Hilary Term, the King kept a Parliament at Carliel, where great complaints were brought in by the Nobles and antients of the Realm, concerning the manifold and intolerable oppressions of Churches and Monasteries, and exactions of money by the Popes Legate William Testa (otherwise termed Mala Testa) lately brought into the Realm of England. The coming of which William Testa was upon this occasion, as followeth: Pope Clement, who, as ye heard before, had translated his Court from Rome into France, where he had been Archbishop before, because he contemned to come and remain at his own See; the Princes of Rome thought him therefore unworthy to enjoy Peters Patrimony. And so by that means, falling into barenesse and poverty, he lived only of such money of Bishops as came to him to be confirmed, and with such other shifts and gifts. So that by this means, partly of Bishops and other Religious Men and persons, partly under the name of courtesie and benevolence, partly under the pretence of borrowing; he had within the first year 9500. Marks of silver, all his other charges and expences, which he largely that year bestowed, clearly born. Besides this, he sent moreover the foresaid Legate William Testa into England with his Bulls: in the which he reserved the first fruits of the first year of all Churches being vacant at any time, or by any Man within the Realm of England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland, and also the fruits of Abbies and Priories within the said Realms, &c. Whereupon the King with his Nobles, seeing the inconvenience and harm thereof ensuing to the whole Realm: in the foresaid Parliament, holden at Carliel, withstood the said Legate, charging and commanding him by the assent of the Earlsand Barons, that henceforth he should abstain from all such exactions. And as concerning his Lord the Pope, he would direct certain his Messengers unto him purposely for the same matter appointed: by the which Ambassadors, the King wrote unto the foresaid Pope, declaring and monithing the Pope, as right and reason was, That he should not exact the first fruits of the Churches and Abbies, by his prelecessors and Noble men of the Land, founded for the honour and maintenance of Gods Service, for Alms and Hospitality: which otherwise, in so doing, should all be overthrown. And so by this means, the Pope at that time changed his purpose as concerning Abbyes. But after that the fruit of English Churches was granted to the King for two years, in which space he obtained the fruits of the foresaid Churches, &c.

An Epistle of Cassiodorus to the Church of England, concerning the abuses of the Romish Church.

Ex vetere Chronico Alberici.

TO the noble Church of England, serving in Clay and Brick, as the Jews did in time past under the tyranny of the Egyptians; Peter the Son of Cassiodorus a Catholick Souldier, and devout Champion of Christ, sendeth Greeting, and wisheth it to cease off the yoke of bondage, and to receive the reward of liberty.

To whom shall I compare thee, or to whom shall I liken thee, O Daughter of Jerusalem? To whom shall I match thee, O Daughter of Sion? Great is thy perturbation, like unto the Sea. Thou sitest alone without comfort all the day long, thou art confounded and consumed with heavinesse. Thou art given up into the hands of him from whence thou canst not rise without help of one to lift thee up: for the Scribes and Pharisees sitting upon the Chair of Moles, the enemies of the Romans are at thy heads and Rulers: inlarging their guarded Phylacteries, and seeking to be inriched with the marrow of thy bones, laying heavy burthens, and not able to be born upon thy shoulders, and of thy Ministers, and they set thee under tribute, (which of old time hast been free) beyond all honesty or measure. But marvel not thereat, for thy Mother, which is the Lady of people, like a Widow having married and coupled her self to her subjects, hath appointed him to be thy Father: that is to say, the Bishop of Rome, who sheweth no point of any Fatherly love towards thee. He magnifieth and extendeth to the uttermost his authority over thee, and by experience he declareth himself to be the Husband of thy Mother. He remembreth oft with himself the Prophetical saying of the Prophet, and well digested the same in the inward part of his breast: Take to thee a great Book, and write therein quickly with the pen of a Man: Take the spoil, rob quickly. But in this it which the Apostle saith, that he was appointed for, where he writeth thus? Every Bishop, taken from among Men, is appointed for Men in those things that belong to the Lord: not to spoil, nor {KING Edw.} now to lay on them yearly Taxes, nor to kill Men, but to offer gifts and sacrifices for sins, and to sorrow with them that be ignorant and do err. And so we read of Peter the Fisher (whose succesor he boasteth himself to be) that after the Resurrection of Christ, he returned with other Apostles, to the office of Fishing: who when he could take nothing on the left side of the Ship, at the bidding of Christ, turned to the right side, and drew to land a net full of Fishes. Wherefore the profitable ministry of the Church is to be exercised on the right side, by the which the Devil is overcome, and plenty of souls be lucrified and won to Christ. But certainly the labor on the left side of the Ship is far otherwise: for in it the faith stumbleth, heavinesse heareth rule, when that thing that is desired by seeking, is not found. For who is so foolish to think, that he can both at one time serve God and Mam, and to satisfie his own will, or to stick to the revelations of flesh and blood, and to offer worthy gifts to Christ? And doubtless that sheepherd that watcheth not for the edifying of the flock, prepareth another way to the roaring Lion, seeking whom he may devour. And now behold, I say, O Daughter, the deeds of him that is called thy Father, such as have not been heard of before: he driveth away the good sheepherd from the sheepfold, and placeth in their stead Bishops, to rule, but not to profit (his Nephews, Cousins, and Parents) some that know no Letters, and otherwhile dumb and deaf, which understand not the plain voyce of the sheep, not curing their wounds, that be hurt of the Wolves: but like hirelings, plucking off the fleeces apace, and reaping that which other Men have sown, whose hands moreover be always ready in their Baskets and Pouches, but their backs are turned from their burthens. By which thing it is manifest, that the Priesthood is clean changed at these days, the service of God decayed, Alms diminished and brought to naught, the whole devotion of Kings, Princes, and Christians, is banished. May not this be thought wonderful in the eyes of all Men: that whereas Christ commandeth tribute to be paid to Kings for him and for Peter, he now goeth about by dominion of his stile, to subdue to him both Realms, and Princes of Realms (against his will, whose Vicar he saith he is, and who refused the Realms and judgments of the world) which this Bishop contrariwise challengeth, claiming all that which be in his stile writeth to be his? Alack, O Daughter, what doth he yet more against thee? mark, he draweth from thee whatsoever pleaseth him, and yet he thinketh not himself content, to have the tenth part only of thy goods from thee: except he have also the first fruits of the Benefices of the Ministers, whereby he may get a new patrimony, as well for himself as for his kindred, contrary to the godly wills of the first founders. Over and besides all this, he inferreth other execrable taxes and stipends for his Legates and Messengers, whom he sendeth into England; which not only take away the feeding and clothing of thee and thine, but also tear in pieces like Dogs your flesh and skins. May not this Prince be compared to King Nebuchadnezer, which despoyled the Temple of the Lord, and robbed away the silver and golden Vessels thereof? The very same acts this Man also's be robbed the Ministers of God his House, and left them destitute of due help. In like manner doth he: Truly they be better that are killed with the sword, than they which be pined with hunger; for they are dead straight, but these are wasted with the barrenness of the Earth. O Daughter, all they that pass by, let them have pity and compassion on thee, for there is no sorrow like thy sorrow. For now thy face is blacker than coals, through much sorrow and weeping, and thou art no more known in the streets: by forsaid ruler hath placed thee in darkness, and hath given thee wormwood and gall to drink. O Lord, hear the sorrow and sighings of thy people, behold Lord, and descend, for the heart of this foresaid Man is more indurate than the heart of Pharaoh. For he will not suffer the people to depart, except in the fortitude only of thy hand. For he scourgeth them not only miserably upon the Earth, but also after their death, he intendeth to incroach the goods of all Christians under the name and title of dying intestate, or making no Will. Therefore, let the Chevalry of England well remember, how the French*-men in times past, directing their greedy eyes on the Realm of* England, laboured with all their power how to bring the same under their subjection. But it is to be feared, lest the new devices and practice of this new enemy supply that which hitherto hath been lacking in them. For in diminishing of the treasure of the Realm, and spoiling of the Church goods, the Realm shall be brought into such inability, that it shall not be able to help it self against the enemy. Therefore, O Daughter, and you the Ministers thereof suffer not your selves to be led any more into such miserable bondage. Better it is for the wealth of thee and thine, that the Christian King and the powers of the Realm, which have indued thee with great benefits, and you also which are indued with their benefits, do labour with all your power how to resist the devices, conspiracies, arrogancy, presumption, and pride of the foresaid person: who not for any zeal of God, but for the inriching of his Parents, and for his own Kindred (exalting himself like an Eagle) by these and such other exactions goeth about, after another kind of extortion, to scrape up and devour all the money and treasure of England. Now, lest the dissembled simplicity of the Realm in this behalf do bring utter subversion, and afterward be compelled to seek remedy when it is too late: I beseech the Lord God of Hosts to turn away the veil from the heart of that Man, and to give him a contrite and an humble mind, in such sort as he may acknowledge the ways of the true God, whereby he may be brought out of darkness, and be inforced to relinquish his old finster attempts; and that the Vineyard, which the Lords hand hath planted, may be replenished continually with the Preachers of the Word. Let the words of the Lord, prophesied by the mouth of Jeremy, stir up your minds to wisedom and resist the subtil practices of this Man, by the which words the Lord speaketh: O thou Pastor which hast scattered my people, and hast cast them out of their habitations, behold I will come and visit upon thee, and upon the malice of thy studies: neither shall there be any of thy seed which shall sit upon the seat of David, neither which shall have power any more in Judah. So that thy nest shall become barren, and utterly subverted, like Sodom and Gomorah.

And if he being terrified by these words, do not leave off from this which he beginneth, and doth not make restitution of those which he hath received, then let all and singular persons sing for him being indurate, to him that seeth all things, the Psal. 108. Deus laudem, &c. For truly as favor, grace, benevolence, remitteth and neglecteth many things; so again the gentle benignity of Man, being too much oppressed and grieved, seeking to be delivered and freed from the same, striveth and searcheth to have the truth known, and casteth off that yoke by all means possible that grieveth him, &c. Hæc Cassiodorus.

What effect this Letter wrought in them to whom it was directed, is not in story expressed. This by the sequel may be conjectured; That no reason or perswation could prevail, but that the Pope retained here still his exactions, whatsoever was said or written to the contrary notwithstanding.

And thus much being written hitherto of these acts and doings here in England; now to flip a little into the matters happning the same time in France, under the Reign of the foresaid King Philip above mentioned: For although as about this time, An. 1307. was commenced a Parliament by the said King of France against the Pope, touching the jurisdiction both Temporal pertaining to Princes, and Ecclesiastical belonging to the Church; I thought it not improfitable for the Reader to hear and learn the full discourse and tradition hereof, according as we have caused it to be excerpt faithfully out of the true Copy and Records of Peter Bertrand Bishop of Edvenen, and chief doer and Prolocutor in the said Parliament upon the Popes side, against the King and State Temporal.

A Parliament in France 40 assembled, wherein is discussed the jurisdiction Ecclesiastical, how far it extendeth. {Anno 1307}

Forasmuch as the High Prelate of Rome, otherwise called Antichrist, being then in his chief ruff, extolling himself above all Princes and Potentates of the world, as in other Countries, so also in France extended his usurped jurisdiction, above the Princely authority of the King, claiming to himself full government of both the States, as well Secular as also Ecclesiastical: the King therefore, not suffering the excessive proceedings of Pope Clement the 5. above specified, directeth his Letters Mandatory to the Prelates and Barons of the Realm of France, to Convent and Assemble themselves together at Paris, about the beginning of December, the year above prefixed: The tenor of which Letters of the King directed to the Prelates, followeth in this form and manner.

The summons of a Parliament by Philip the French King.

The Letter of Philip King of France, to the Bishops and Prelates.

PHilip by the Grace of God King of France, to our well-beloved Bishop of Edvens, Greeting and Salutation. Reverend Father in God, right trusty and welbeloved, we greet you well. The more sight and knowledge you have in Divinity and the Holy Scriptures of God, with the practice and experience of other good qualities and vertues; you know the better a great deal, how that the Clergy and Laity of this our Realm (as members of one body) ought to cleave and stick together; and how by their helping hand, unity and peace should be maintained of all, and the contrary eschewed and avoided, every State contenting it self, and not incroaching one upon another. And because we are advertised, how that our Barons and Officers (as well in time past as of late) have diversly in divers points injured you, as semblably you and yours in many causes have wrongfully damaged them; by occasion whereof, the knot of unity and concord, which ought to have flourished among you, is quite loosed and undone: To the end therefore by Gods Grace some good reformation and redress may be had herein; We most studious of unity and concord, require you, and by those our Letters command you, to appear personally before us at Paris the 15th. day of December next ensuing the date hereof, and there before us to make relation of such wrong as ye have received at the Laities hands. And we likewise straitly charge and command you, our Barons, Bailiffs, and Officers, not to fail, but to make your personal appearances, before us, the day and place above written, and there to exhibit before us a Bill of such complaints, wherewith you burden our Prelates and Clergy, with their Officials: that we with our Council, consulting thereupon, with due regard may see redress therein; whereby perpetual love and charity may ever hereafter reign and remain among them for ever. Given at Paris the first day of September, An. 1309.

The Parliament convented.

At the day in the Letters above specified, the Prelates and Clergy Assembled themselves before the King at his Palace in Paris, that is to say, the Lord Bituricen, the Lord Auxitan, the Lord Tironen, the Lord Rothom, and the Lord Senon, all Archbishops: the Lord Belvacen, the Lord Caihalen, the Lord Laudun, the Lord of Paris, the Lord Noviomen, the Lord Carnoten, the Lord Constan, the Lord Andegaven, the Lord Pictaven, the Lord Meldens, the Lord of Cameracen, the Lord of S. Feri, the Lord Briocc, the Lord of Cabulion, and the Lord of Edven, all Bishops. Where after due reverence done unto the Kings Grace there sitting in his own person, with his Barons and Council about him; a certain Noble and wise person, Lord Peter de Cugneriis, (being one of the Kings Council) rose up, and openly in the Parliament House spake in the Kings behalf on this wise, taking for his Theam, Reddite quæ sunt Cæsaris, Cæsari & quæ sunt Dei, Deo: which is to say, Give and render unto Cæsar, that which is his; and unto God, that which is Gods: which he very artificially profecuted and applied, dividing it into two parts. First, That obedience and reverence is due unto the King. Secondly, That there ought to be a difference between the jurisdiction of the Clergy and Laity, so that spiritual matters should be defined and ordered by the Prelates and Spiritual Men, and Temporal Causes ruled and determined by the King, his Barons and Temporal Men. Which all he proved by many reasons both of Fact and Law, as more fully appeareth beneath in the answer of the Bishop of Edven: Finally, he concluded, That the Clergy ought only to deal and have to do with Spiritual matters; in defence whereof, the Kings Highness would stand their good Lord and maintainer. His Oration being ended, he repeated certain words in the French Tongue, which imported, That the Kings will and pleasure was in some points to renew the temporal state and jurisdiction; and therewith he exhibited a certain Bill in French, whereof also he gave a Copy to the Prelates, containing certain points and Articles under written, the contents whereof he affirmed not to appertain to the order and jurisdiction of the spiritualty, but only to the temporalty, complaining that the Clergy had wrongfully proceeded in the same. But notwithstanding the premises, and for all this his complaint, he said that the Prelates should have time to consult and deliberate thereupon with the King. The Copy of which Articles, with answer ensuing upon same, and the grievances of the Kingdom of France, wrought by the Clergy, and exhibited to the King, hereafter followeth.

Lord Peter speaks in the Parliament.

The Theam of his Oration.

The Oration divided into two parts.

Obedience to the King.

Difference between the jurisdiction of the State Temporal and Ecclesiastical.

1. First, The cognition of causes real, whether they touch possession, or their propriety, or not, by Common-Law appertaineth to the jurisdiction temporal. But the Prelates with their Officials, to the end to infringe the temporal jurisdiction, take upon them the determination of such causes real, especially concerning possession and all other interdicts.

Article in the Parliament propounded, concerning the just complaints of the Laity against the Clergy.

Causes real.

2. Item, When a temporal man is sued by any Clerk or spiritual Man for the possession of his Land, obtaining an adjournment of the secular power, in the cause of Novelty or otherwise: the Prelates Officials, stopping hereby the temporal jurisdiction, at the instance of the Clerk, calleth by Process before them both the secular Judge and the party, inhibiting them to proceed any further in the cause, under pain of Excommunication and forfeiture of a certain summ.

3. Item, Although the secular Judge have the cognition of all Lay-mens matters (except in spiritual causes) yet will the Bishops Officials, at the instance of any party, call such before them. And if the temporal men do except against their jurisdiction, alledging the incompetency of the judge; or else if they require the cause to be remitted to them (under whom they are) as the right Judges, yet do the Officials refuse this to do, yea and by Excommunication compel the parties to proceed before them.

Prelates intermeddle in temporal mens matters.

4. Item, The Bishops Officials at the instance of the Clerks, alledging that they are injured in matters of inheritance by a Lay-man, call by Process the Laity. And if it be alledged that those causes stand upon reality, being so indeed, and that for that consideration the cause ought to be remitted to the Temporal Law; this notwithstanding, the Officials prohibite them under pain of Excommunication, or some great forfeit, not to proceed but before them.

5. Item, The Bishops Officials take upon them to hear the plea of such contracts, as either be conceived in writings, or made by word of mouth in the Temporal Law; sending out their monition of Excommunication against them that stand bound concerning the same contracts.

6. Item, The Bishops and Prelates decree Provincial Councils and Synodal Statutes, enacting and ordering therein many things to the high and great prejudice of the temporal jurisdiction, wherein they ought to have no cognition at all, neither to intermeddle themselves therewith.

7. Item, The forefaid Officials take upon them, before Notaries to swear persons for performance of contracts and bargains (made by them in places under the jurisdiction temporal) concerning the sale of inheritance or otherwise; incroaching thereby upon their jurisdiction, when verily they have nothing to do with any contracts and obligations, but with such as are made and agreed upon within the compass of their own seat and jurisdiction.

Ex Officio.

8. Item, The said Officials, of their meer Office, call before them the Laity, to answer to such matters of correction as shall be laid to their charge, the cognition whereof, as they say, doth appertain unto them. And when the said persons do appear before them, and deny the crime objected against them, the Officials detain them and put them in prison, although in such cases they are to be released; and although imprisonment appertaineth only to the temporal power, and not to them.

Imprisonment appertaineth not to the Clergy.

9. Item, In the cases aforesaid, although by making of their purgations and other the process therein, they be found clear of that which is laid to their charge, and are acquited; these yet the said Officials will in no wise discharge and dismiss, before they have to the uttermost paid for the writings and process in that behalf, a good piece of money, when by Law it ought to be done gratis, and for nothing.

10. Item, It must not be forgotten to talk of the sentence of Excommunication, which is decreed by vertue of one only citation, so often as a Man falleth in his appearance.

11. Item,

{KING Edw. I.} {KING Edw. I.}

11 Item, Mention is to be made of those kind of Obligations De nisi. Whereby a man is Excommunicated by and by, if he make not payment at the day prefixed, although he be not able so to do.

12 Item, Whosoever by Virtue of Excommunication in the Bishops Court is Excommunicate, and he so Excommunicate do not satisfy the sum due about the Excommunication, by and by the sum is doubled. And the Secular power is charged by the Bishops or their Officials, that they under pain of Excommunication compel the Excommunicate, by Attaching their Goods, to pay the said sum, and not to miss a jot: which Monition if the Laity refuse to put in execution, they themselves are then Excommunicate, and in no wise to be Absolved, before they disburse that mony, the which the principal Excommunicate person should have paid.

13 Item, If the Bailiffs, Headborows, or other the Kings Officers and Judges of the Temporalty, receiving the foresaid monitions, do put the same in execution, and find those that be Excommunicate, to be beggerly and nothing worth; the said Officers are bound at their own proper costs and charges, to resort to the Bishops See or Consistory, wheresoever it is, and there to take a Corporal Oath, That the Parties Excommunicate are nothing worth. This if they fail, those Officers are sure to be Excommunicate, and thereby inforced to disburse the due of the first Excommunicate persons.

Action real, personal.

14 Item, If two Lay-men be in Sute together before a Temporal Judge, about an Action either real or personal, and one of them after contestation of Law, and great proces thereing, do Appeal unto an Ecclesiastical Judge, he will presume then to detain before him the Plea of such Cases and Actions, both real and personal, causing, by vertue of his Monitions and Authority, the Temporal Judge to cease and leave off from medling therein: which if the Secular Judge obeyeth not, he is pronounced Excommunicate and compelled to make satisfaction; by occasion whereof, the Temporal Jurisdiction is much anoided and clean loseth the Prerogative thereof; because by Law no man may Appeal from a Spiritual Judge to the Temporal Law.

15 Item, If a Lay-man, inhabiter of any of the Kings Towns, procureth his Debtor, being also a Lay-man, to be Arrested by virtue of Secular Justice in that place: and he which is so Arrested appealeth, and causeth also his Creditor to be Arrested, the Officials will take upon them to hear this matter; and if any thing be attempted concerning the Appeal, they miss not to demand cost and satisfaction both of the Justice, and also of him to whom the Arrest was made. And if any of the Princes Retinue compelleth them to refuse this injury, they are straightways pronounced Excommunicate.

Deans of the Clergy.

16 Item, If the said Bishops have a number of Officials under them, whom they term Deans of the Clergy, which usually causeth all sorts of people through the Kings Dominions, only by word of mouth, to come afore them, and that sometime without Commission: when that in every Diocess there ought only to be but one Seat or Consistory, wherein matters should be heard and decided. And hereby it happeneth divers times, that many are wrongfully and without cause cited; to the end that they may pay mony enough, to rid themselves thereof: which is to the no small prejudice of the Kings Majesties Subjects, and the Temporal Jurisdiction.

17 Item, The said Rulers of the Clerks, Seal up the Houses of their Clergy, which are situate in the Kings Towns, and otherof his Noble Mens Villages, to the prejudice of the Kings Majesties Jurisdiction, and other of his Nobility: for that in such kind of places the Bishops have no such kind of Jurisdiction.

Married Clerks.

18 Item, The said Prelates or their Officials, do presume to Seal up the moveable Goods of married Clerks, and of Merchants; whereas in such Cases the order thereof appertaineth to the Temporal Law.

19 Item, They compel the Laity to put in surety to answer Clerks before them in the Spiritual Court, yea, and chiefly the Kings own Servitors.

20 Item, They presume to hear and have the cognition of Actions, which are real, or at least-wise mixt, that is, both real and personal.

21 Item, The said Prelates go about to have cognition of such Temporal mens matters as dwell in Hospitals, Almshouses, and the Kings peculiars, and in Villages of his Subjects, although the Plea thereof appertaineth to the King himself, and his subjects: forbidding under pain of Excommunication, and great forfeits, any man to be so hardy as to commence any Sute against any of them, but before themselves, in pain of a great sum of mony.

22 Item, To the end the Clergy and Ecclesiastical Rule should be multiplied, they confer a number of Tonsures to Children under age, some of them being Sons of bondmen, other some Bastards born; yea and to many more married folks insufficient, unable, and unlearned.

23 Item, They do cause by the Governors of their Clerks, Widow-women to be inforced and defiled, and will have the discussing thereof: as in like manner, they will determine the matters of Pupils, applying their Goods when they died, as they do the Goods of them which die intestate, to their own use; the cognition whereof belongeth to the King himself, because those kind of persons with their Goods are in ward to the King and under his tuition.

Gifts to get mony.

24 Item, They procure through the said Deans of the Clergy, of malice, Temporal men of the Kings Dominions or other where (without all order of Law) to be apprehended; objecting against them that they have straied from some Article of Christian Faith; and therewith shut them up; when as their Imprisonment appertaineth to the King till they be convicted thereof.

25 Item, They exercise their Jurisdiction in all places, having no regard, neither to the Kings peculiar Towns, nor yet to his Subjects; but run in every hole, when by Law they ought to have no Jurisdiction, without their own limits and precinct.

26 Item, When these Prelates or their Officials by virtue of their Monitions do charge the Kings Officers and his Justices to execute any thing; if they do not perform that, which is prescribed unto them, the forfeit (which the Monition containeth) is taken: yea and Excommunication denounced. And this is a new invention sprung up of late amongst them, much to the prejudice of the King and his Subjects.

27 Item, When the Bishops or their Officials do prosecute a matter of Office before themselves against any Temporal man, and have no proof thereof; they compel many of the Laity to be deposed therein what they know, having no respect whether they be the Kings Bargeffes, or no, or what they be, and yet will they not allow any charges and expences for their pains taken in that behalf. But if they appear not at their day, they are sure to be Excommunicate.

28 Item, If malefactors be apprehended by any of the Kings Justices, and Indicted of Theft, and he (whose Goods they were which were stollen) cometh before the Kings Sheriffs, and proveth them to be his, and that therefore the matter ought to be ordered by them: if afterwards the Bishops or their Officials affirm the said Felon or Malefactor to be a Clerk, they will by virtue of their Decrees or Monitions compel the Kings Sheriffs to restore and bring in the stollen Goods: and if they do it not, they are pronounced Excommunicate.

29 Item, If it happen the Kings Sheriff or Bailiff to take an offender for his offence, and he affirmeth himself to be a Clerk: although he never took any kind of Tonsures, or Orders, wearing no Habit appertaining thereunto; yet the Bishops or their Officials will cause the detainers of them by their censures to deliver unto them the said malefactor as their Clerk.

30 Item, If it happen the Kings Sheriff or other his Justices to take a Thief or Murderer, which beareth a Clerks Mark and Tonsure, and therefore delivereth him to the Clergy to be ordered; it shall not be long before he be acquainted by them, although he afterward Recognize his Fact; yea, and notwithstanding that his fellows and partners of that Office, being meer Temporal, received Justice for the same, and appeached him thereof; and so the like Malefactors are encouraged thereby to commit after the like.

31 Item, If any complaineth and saith that he is spoiled, by and by the Officials will Decree a Monition against the spoiler: by virtue whereof, some one of the Deans of the Clergy shall monish him to restore the things comprized in the Monition, and also minister to him an Oath whether he hath not spoiled the Plaintiff of such things, as he saith he was spoiled of. But if he refuse to take an Oath before him, then the Dean will straightways Seal up the Monition and and Excommunicate him, and by no means shall he be Absolved before he restore and satisfy the Contents in the Motition, whereof the Plaintiff faid firft he was fpoiled.

32 Item, If any for his offence be cast into Prifon by the Secular power, although at the time of his taking he wear Temporal Habit, and was in no Orders, but all the days of his life lived like a Temporal man: yet if he fhall Avouch and Vow himfelf to be a Clerk, to the intent to have more expedition at the Clergies hands, and to efcape unpunifhed; the Clergy will incontinently give to the Laity in commandment to reftore unto them the malefactor, or elfe fufpenfion fhall be denounced throughout the whole Townfhip, where the faid malefactor fhall be fo Imprifoned. And for avoiding the jeopardy which might arife of the faid feifement; the Secular Judge of neceffity is compelled to deliver them the offender, to the great prejudice of the Kings Temporal Jurifdiction, to whom the cognition thereof might appertain, in cafe of refort and prerogative. Reftitum.

33 Item, When any offender is delivered by the Temporal Magiftrates to the Clergy, as their Clerks; his friends will make fute to the Bifhops Officials for him, and compound with them, by reafon whereof they difmifs them unpunifhed, and fo do worfe and worfe, although their Fact was never fo notorious 34 Item, So foon as any married Clerk, being a Merchant or of whatfoever other Science he be of, for any his offence by him committed, is called before the Secular Judge: the faid Clerk obtaineth of the Officials a Monition, bringing with them fome Prieft, who doth inhibit the Secular Judge under pain of 100 or 200 Marks, yea and of Excommunication too, not to proceed further, nor to meddle in fuch Caufes, and not to moleft fuch Parties, neither in Body nor Goods: But if the Judges obey not, they fhall be fufpended from hearing of Mafs in that place, although the matter concerneth the Fact of Merchandife.

35 Item, The faid Officials grant Citations without number againft the Laity in Cafes of Warranties perfonally to affize before them perfons unknown. But if they be known, it is contained in the Citation, that in no wife, and that under a great pain, he caufe his adverfary to be called before a Secular Judge, during the return of the Citation.

36 Item, When one is Excommunicated in any place, the Officials grant out perfonal Citations againft them, which do participate, and are converfant with the excommunicate: caufing a whole Country by the fpace of eight miles about to be cited together. And further, the friends and acquaintance of the Party fo excommunicate (fometimes by 40, fometimes 60, yea and fometimes by a 100 at once) are compelled to make their purgation before them, that they do not participate nor keep company with their friends the excommunicates. Whereby enfueth that many honeft, old and ancient men, for avoiding of troubles and expences, do pay fome twelve pence, fome two fhillings. By occafion whereof many Vines are unlooked to, much Ground untilled, yea, and many good men conftrained to lay the Key under the door, and run away.

37 Item, The faid Officials do burden many perfons of good name and fame, to be Ufurers: whereby they are conftrained to agree with them, for avoiding the infamy that thereby might infue.

38 Item, The forefaid Officials call by Citation afore them, the honeft wedded (as well Man as Woman) charing them, that they have committed Adultry to the perpetual infamy of their Husbands and Wives. And for nothing elfe but by extortion to wring money from them.

39 Item, Mention muft be made of the multitude and number of Proctors, which eat and devour up all the world with their Citations, catching up Clients, and keeping abroad in the Country Courts and Affizes; who for money return not the Citations, which by extortion they receive of them which are cited.

40 Item, There be many other griefs and enormities, which the Chapters, Abbots, Priors, Provofts, and other Eccleiiaftical perfons in the Realm of France, practice againft the people. As when they caufe to be cited before them, many of the Kings Burgeffes, and others in divers places being priviledged: that is to fay, Batocenfes, Manmeclans in Britain, Lugdons, Mofticons, with other more. But fpecially the Provofts of Hofpitals ufe more commonly this trick, than any other do, whereby the people is much indamaged, and will be every day more and more, if remedy be not had therein. {KING Edw. I}

41 Item, Eccleiiaftical Magiftrates labour to have cognition of Caufes of injury, in whatfoever Caufe it be: whether the injury be committed by word or fact. Likewife they take upon them to hear the Caufes of married Clerks, and of their Wives, although they both ufe Merchandize. And if at any time fuch couples be taken by the Secular Magiftrates, the Official cauſeth a fufpenſion to be denounced in that Parifh, by force of the Council Silvanectен.

42 Item, They challenge to have cognition concerning Widows Goods, both moveable and unmovable. And if it happeneth at any time that a Merchant Widow, in any of the Kings peculiars by way of Arreſt, procure that any Temporal man to be convented before the Secular Judges and the matter be fo far traverfed, that he fhould have been condemned by the Sentence of the Secular Judge, and then it come to the ear of the Eccleiiaftical Magiftrates, how and before whom the Widow did convent him: the faid Temporal Judge fhall be conſtrained to withdraw the fame. And by their monitions and cenſures they will correct the fame; and this oftentimes happeneth.

43 Item, Many of the Tenants and Inhabiters of the Bifhops Lands call one another to the Court of the Officials, by a kind of appellation: by virtue whereof the Officials take upon them to proceed in the fame, and to have cognition thereof, to the prejudice of the Temporal Jurifdiction of our Sovereign Lord the King.

44 Item, if any man be apprehended by Secular Juſtice in ſhedding of blood; he is to be ordered by them, if he be Lay: if he be a Clerk he is to be reſtored to the Eccleſiaſtical Judge. But whether he be a Temporal man or Clerk that is ſo taken, and appealeth to the Officials Court; they will be ſo bold to have cognition thereof, requiring herewith amends of the Secular Court, which enterpired the foreſaid apprehenſion. If this be ſuffered, the malefactor ſhall never be puniſhed. For by and by they will Appeal, and immediately after the appellation fly and avoid away. The Clergy preſidial to common Juſtice.

45 Item, When they cauſe many of office to be cited before them, they will admit them to have no Proctors: to whom when they come at the day of appearance, they object the crime of Uſury. And except they anſwer as the promoters will themſelves, they are trodden under feet (although they be meer Lay) and ſhall not be diſmiſſed before they Fine even as the Officials liſt themſelves, although they be no Uſurers. But if any be Uſurers, they take of them ſatisfaction and bribes: and ſo they be permitted to uſe their Uſury, no leſs than before; So that they may have their old fees and bribes. Ex officio.

46 Item, They procure their Officers to apprehend Clerks in whatſoever ſoil they be found: albeit by Juſtice they may appeal therefrom. But if by any they be let of their will herein, they do forthwith, by ſentence of Excommunication, cauſe them to deliſt therefrom. Uſury conſtitutionally abolished by the Clergy againſt Lay-men. Title Preſcription againſt the Church of Rome.

47 Item, As oftentimes as any Temporal Magiſtrate doth apprehend any perſon, which afterward, being required of the Clergy, is quietly delivered unto them: yet for all that, the Officials cauſe thoſe Magiſtrats to be denounced Excommunicate by Law.

48 Item, The Prelates give order of Tonſures as well to men of thirty years as upward, as alſo to married men, when they come unto them, for fear of Imprifonment and puniſhment due unto them for their criminal offences, before committed; and this is oftentimes put in practice.

49 Item, If it happen any of the Kings ſervants or any other to be Excommunicate, who would fain be Abſolved, being glad to pay reaſonably for the ſame: the Clergy will not receive ſatisfaction but ſuch as ſhall pleaſe them, whereby many of them remain ſtill Excommunicate.

50 Item, When two perſons have been at Striſe and Law together for the Poſſeſſion of Land, and the matter contentious be put into the hands of the King by ſome ſervant or officer of the King, for the taking up of the matter: then do the Prelates admonith the one part not to trouble the other which is in poſſeſſion. Otherwiſe if he do, they do Excommunicate him.

{KING Edw. I} 51 Item, The foreſaid Prelates, Deans, Chaplains, and other the rout of the Clergy, put the Kings Officers to ſo much travel and expences in trying out the Kings uſurped Juriſdiction, as they term it; that oftentimes many of them ſpend and conſume, in the travel of the Right and Title thereof, all that they have and more too.

52 Item, If any Secular Juſtice in a true and juſt Cauſe, at the requeſt of the party, putteth in his helping hand concerning the Inheritance of Clerks: the Eccleſiaſtical Judges, and their Miniſters, ſend out Monitions in writing againſt the ſaid Juſtices; yea, under pain of Excommunication and forfeiture, to take away his hand and leave off: enjoyning him further to ſuffer the other party quietly to enjoy the ſaid things. Otherwiſe they denounce him Excommunicate, and he ſhall not be Abſolved before he have well paid for it, even as pleaſeth Maſter Official, to the high prejudice of the Authority of our Sovereign Lord the King.

Note the preſſure of Officials to get money.

53 Item, The Eccleſiaſtical Magiſtrates, ſo ſoon as they hear any rich or fat cob to die, or think that he will not live long, ſend out forthwith Letters under Seal to their Chaplain, commanding him in any wiſe not to preſume to bury him, although he made his Teſtament, and received the Rites of the Church. And when afterward the Friends and Kinſfolks of the dead reſort unto them to know the cauſe of their inhibition; they declare unto them that he was an Uſurer, and that he kept not the commandments of holy Church: and ſo long keep they the Corps of the dead unburied, till the Friends of him buy it out with good ſtore of money, heaping and hording by theſe means abundance of riches.

54 Item, If there be any violent ſhedding of blood in any Church-yard, whereby the interdict taketh place, the Clergy cauſeth a certain impoſition to be Levied of the Pariſhioners there, for the Salary towards the reſtoring thereof: Although ſome of the Pariſhiones be of an exempt Juriſdiction; yea, and although he which ſhed blood be able to pay the whole Tax which they Levied, and more too.

55 Item, Certain Chaplains affirm themſelves to have certain Apoſtolical priviledges, by virtue whereof they may appoint what Judges they will (yea and oftentimes of their own Houſe) and ſo they be Judges in their own Cauſe; which is plain againſt the Law. Whereby oftentimes it happeneth, that after great proceſs and expences laid and made in any great Cauſe of Inqueſt (more often about realty than otherwiſe) when they have notice by the Proctors and Advocates that they ſhall have the foil therein; they revoke forthwith thoſe named Judges, and ſo the Kings ſubjects are damaged, and can have no juſtice nor redreſs at their hands.

56 Item, If any Temporal man call a Clerk before a Secular Judge in caſe of Inheritance; the Eccleſiaſtical Judge preſenteth a ſtop to be made therein, attributing to themſelves the cognition thereof: and ſo by adjourning and removing, the Lay-man is conſtrained to make ſatisfaction.

57 Item, The Clergy challengeth the cognition of ſuch Cauſes as married Clerks being Merchants and Artificers do commence: when by Law it doth appertain to the Temporalty, eſpecially about the Trade of Merchandize.

58 Item, They oftentimes make Interdictions in many of the Kings Towns and Holds, and cauſe the Divine Service to ceaſe; againſt the Priviledges granted by many of the high Biſhops of Rome to our Sovereign Lord and Maſter the King.

59 Item, To and for the maintainance and keeping of their Temporalties, they appoint Bailiffs and other Officers: who, if they do offend, may not condignly be puniſhed according to Law and Juſtice.

60 Item, The Eccleſiaſtical Judges have promoters belonging to them: whom, when any man is Excommunicated (be it right, or be it wrong) they cauſe to be made, that no man ſhall work or do any thing for him that is Excommunicate: whereby the Lands and Vines are oftentimes unlooked to and untilled, to the no ſmall prejudice of the King and his common people.

61 Item, The foreſaid prompters cauſe Citations to be made out, by virtue whereof they call in one Citation twenty, thirty, forty perſons to appear, for participating with ſuch Interdicted perſons; taking of ſome ten, of other-ſome twenty ſhillings, as much as they be able to make: whereby the common people are much oppreſſed.

62 Item, The Eccleſiaſtical Judges cauſe all the Advocates of their Courts to be Sworn, That none ſhall retain them of their Counſel againſt any of them, without their Licenſe: whereby oftentimes the poor man quite loſeth his right, and the Kings Cauſe is delaied; becauſe his Solicitors cannot freely retain Counſel, without ſpecial Licenſe.

63 Item, They will make Inventories of their Goods which die Inteſtate, or without making of Will; and will have the poſſeſſion of their Goods, as well movable as unmovable, in their own hands to diſtribute to the Heirs, or to whom they liſt.

64 Item, The execution alſo of Teſtaments they take into their own hands, taking Inventories of dead mens Goods, and keeping and diſpoſing them to the Heirs after their pleaſure. And they have Officials properly deputed for the execution thereof.

65 Item, They will not give credit (ſometimes) to Teſtaments made before witneſs, unleſs they be firſt by their own Officials approved.

After he had thus ſpoken, the Prelates required to have time to anſwer thereunto. Whereupon the Friday next inſuing, was appointed for the ſame: On the which day the Biſhop Edven, and Archbiſhop of Senon Elect, in the name of the whole Clergy anſwered for them all before the King, holding his Parliament as that day at Vicenas, and thus he there propounded: Foraſmuch as the Lord Peter Cugner of late propounding againſt the Church of France took to his Theme that which is written in the 22 of Matthew; Render unto Ceſar that which is Ceſars, and unto God that which is Gods; by which words, he ſaid, two points were to be noted: Firſt, The reverence and ſubjection of the Prelates, that they ought to have to the King their Soveraign: Secoudly, The diviſion of the Temporal Juriſdiction from the Spiritual. The which firſt part he proved out of the firſt Epiſtle of Peter in the ſecond Chap. where it is written: Submit your ſelves unto every creature, for the Lords ſake, whether it be unto the king, as unto the ſuperior, or unto governours, as unto them that are ſent of him, for the puniſhment of evil doers, and for the praiſe of them that do well. The ſecond point he proved by the words of our Saviour Chriſt in the 22 of Luke, where the Apoſtle ſaith, Lord, behold, here are two ſwords. And he ſaid unto them, It is enough; ſignifying by the two ſwords the two Juriſdictions. And likewiſe out of the 17 of Matth. where Chriſt would pay Tribute for him and Peter; Giving hereby an example, how that Eccleſiaſtical perſons were bound to pay and yield to the Temporal power the Temporalties; which alſo is proved in the 11. queſt. prim. cap. Si tributum & cap. magnum. Biſhop Edven and Archbiſhop of Senon Elect in the name of the Clergy propounded for the Prelates. Repetition of the Lord Peter's Oration above touched, Pag. 402. Luk. 22. Mat. 17.

And further, becauſe this is proved by mans-law, where it is ſaid, two great gifts are beſtowed, Prieſthood and Empire; the Prieſthood to rule over matters Divine; the Empire to bear domination over human matters. Whereby he concluded, that ſeeing theſe Juriſdictions are diſtinguiſhed of God; the one being given and limited to the Church, and the other to the Temporalty: the Church in no wiſe ought to intermeddle, or to have any thing to do with the Temporal Juriſdiction. For it is written in the 22 of the Provs. You ought not to paſs the old limits and bounds, which the fore-fathers have ſet. And well by the way he bringeth in this word, old and ancient: becauſe cuſtoms brought in to the contrary, be of no force, but rather are counted abuſes and corruptions. Neither can preſcription take place, for that Jus fiſci is imprefcriptible, neither can the King abrogate from himſelf ſuch Law, nor renounce his right, proving the ſame by many Chapters contained in the 10. Diſt. Wherefore ſeeing the King, at what time he was Crowned, ſwear not only not to alienate or infringe the Laws of his Realm, but alſo to call in ſuch Laws as were alienated and uſurped either by the Church, or by any other; the King was bound by his Oath to revoke the ſame abuſes. Two gifts given, Prieſthood, Empire. Prov. 22. Diſt. 10.

In eſpecial he did exhibit many Articles in writing, wherein (as he ſaid) the Church did uſurp upon the Juriſdiction Temporal. To anſwer theſe Premiſes with reconciling of the places, under proteſtation that whatſoever I ſay or ſhall ſay, it is not to ground or make any final judgment or determination herein; but only to inform the Conſcience of our Sovereign Lord the King and his aſſiſtants here aſſembled, alledging the firſt Epiſtle of Peter, the ſecond Chapter, where he ſaith, Fear God and honour the King. By which words, the holy Apoſtle St. Peter teacheth us two things: Firſt, that love, fear, and obedience, is due unto God for the mightineſs and puiſſance of his Majeſty, ſaying, 1 Pet. 2.

ſaying, Fear God. Secondly, That ſpecial honour and reverence is due to the King, for the excellency of his dignity; ſaying, Honour the King. But note you by the way, how the Apoſtle placeth his words: Firſt he ſaith, That fear is due unto God, becauſe principally and in chief we ought to fear God. For if the King or any other ſhould command things contrary to God, we ought to have no regard thereof, but to contemn the King and fear God. For it is written in the fifth of the Acts of the Apoſtles; We ought rather to obey God than man: and alſo in the 7*th* Chapter of Machabees the ſecond Book, where it is ſaid, I will not obey the commandments of the king, but the law.

2 Mac. 7.

The reaſon whereof St. Auguſtine giveth both in the Gloſs upon the Romans, and alſo in the 11. Queſt. 1. He that reſiſteth the Superior power, reſiſteth the will and ordinance of God. But put caſe thou art commanded to do that which thou muſt not do, or not to do that which thou oughteſt to do. Doubtleſs, thou muſt neglect the leſſer power, and fear the higher, learning the degrees of worldly things.

11. 2. q. 1.

As for example, be it ſo that a Proctor commandeth thee any thing, and the ſame be againſt the Proconſul, thou oughteſt not to follow it. Yea, and further, put caſe the Proconſul commandeth one thing, the Emperor another, and God willeth the third: Thou muſt not care for them, but obey God, for God is the greater power. For they may threaten thee with Priſon, but God threateneth thee with Hell fire: they may ſlay and kill thy Body, but God may ſend thee Body and Soul to perpetual Hell fire. And therefore worthily it is put firſt, Fear God. And here the place in the laſt of Eccleſiaſtes is to be adjoyned, where it is written, Fear God and keep his commandments.

Fear of God ſtandeth in three points

And me thinketh that man is bound to fear God chiefly in three ſorts. That is to ſay: Firſt, in the bountiful beſtowing of his Gifts and Benefits. Secondly, In the evident promoting of his Servants. And laſtly, In the full rendring and reſtoring unto man that is his.

Firſt, I ſay, in the bountiful, &c. and for this cauſe the Emperor Juſtinian writeth: Although there is nothing to be accounted good, which doth exceed and is too great, yet for a Prince to beſtow accordingly upon the Church, it is very good. For why, the King and Emperor is bound to beſtow ſo much the more ſubſtance, how much the more God hath given to him, and to beſtow the ſame both frankly, and eſpecially to famous Churches, wherein the beſt and greateſt meaſure is of the Lords gifts; that is, a great gift. And to this end Gregory enacteth a Law, cap. 1. de extra. de donationibus, that Nobility ought in manner to preſcribe this Law to himſelf, to think himſelf bound to give, when he giveth freely; and unleſs he increaſe in giving ſtill, to think that he hath given nothing.

Wherefore Abel, as appeareth in the 4*th* Chapter of Geneſis, who offered of the beſt to the Lord, was bleſſed of God. And therefore other Kings, the more they offered to God, the more they were both Spiritually and Temporally bleſſed of him: as we read of Joſhua, David, Solomon, and others in the Book of the Kings, and therefore it is ſo written in the 18*th* of Numbers: and ye ſhall ſeparate unto the Lords treaſury, things that be cheiſeſt and moſt principal. As likewiſe David ſaith in the firſt of Paralipomenon the laſt Chapter: I have given all this with a glad heart, even with a good will, and now have I had joy to ſee thy people which here are preſent offer with a free will unto thee. And no marvel, for David ſaith in that place: For of thy hand we have received all, and to thee we give. And therefore it ſeemeth to me, becauſe that the Kings of France, and Barons of the ſame, have given to God and his Church more than any other; therefore they were happy and bleſſed above all other Kings, and the more they did give to God, the more they received at his hands.

Numb. 18.

1. Paral. cap. ult.

What benefit cometh by giving to the Church.

Examples whereof we have of Clovedo, Charles, and St. Lewis: the more one giveth to God, the more he receiveth of him: For he in the 6*th* of Luke hath promiſed, Give and it ſhall be given unto you: Wherefore a gift that a Prince beſtoweth upon the Church is rendred again with triple encreaſe, and that no leſs in time of War, than in time of Peace. I ſay in War time, becauſe Victory proceedeth of no other, but only of God: for it is written in the firſt of Machabees, the third Chapter: the victory of the battel ſtandeth not in the multitude of the hoſt, but the ſtrength cometh from heaven. And likewiſe, in the ſeventeenth Chapter of Exodus, it is declared, that when Moſes held up his hands, Iſrael had the victory: but when he let down his hands, Amaleck had the victory. To this end alſo ſerveth the laſt Chapter of 2 Machabees 2. Where Judas being at the point to have the victory, thought he ſaw Onion and Jeremy (which had been high Prieſts and very vertuous men) holding up their hands towards heaven, and praying for their people and all the whole city, &c. Likewiſe in Peace time now, the long days of the King and of his Sons, their Peace, Proſperity, and Obedience (by the prayer of the Church) is maintained and ſupported in the Realm. For as long as Solomon was bent and given in building the Houſe of God, ſo long he had Peace: who thus in the 10*th* Chapter of the Proverbs teacheth us: When a man's ways pleaſe the Lord, he maketh his very enemies to be his friend: And alſo in 1 Eſdr. the 6*th* Chapter, where it is read, how the prieſts were commanded to offer ſweet ſavours to the God of heaven, and pray for the kings life and his children. And well therefore may it be called a gift both favourable and irrevocable, whereby victory is given, life granted, and peace with ſecurity conſerved. To ſerve God therefore, and liberally to give toward the worſhipping of him, is the chiefeſt ſign and token of Divine fear and love. Eccleſ. Chap. 2. O ye that fear the Lord, believe him, and your reward ſhall not be empty.

Eccleſ. 2.

Secondly, Concerning the fear of God, to you to underſtand, That among the Precepts of the Lord, the firſt and chiefeſt Commandement of the ſecond Table is, to honour thy Father: Which Precept is very well expounded in the 12*th* Chap. to Heb. Where it is not only meant of the Fathers of our Bodies, but alſo of the Father of Spirits. For ae ſpiritual things do far exceed temporal matters; ſo much more a great deal the ſpiritual Son is bound to reverence the ſpiritual Father, and to be in ſubjection unto him, that he may live. And that the Prieſts and Prelates be the ſpiritual Fathers, it is proved in the fourth Book of the Kings, the 6*th* Chapter: Where the King of Iſrael ſaid, 4 Kin. 6. led Eliſeus Father, ſaying: My father, ſhall I ſmite them? Unto this effect ſerveth the tenth of Luke, where Luke 10. our Saviour ſaid to the Apoſtles (whoſe ſucceſſors the Biſhops are) He that heareth you, heareth me, and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. Alſo in the firſt to the Theſſalonians the fourth Chap. He that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth not men, but God. Wherefore Juſtinian the Emperor in another place ſaith, We have great care to the Church of God, that therein may be true Doctrine and Integrity of Prieſts life. Which having, we truſt that for our great gifts we ſhall receive ſuch rewards at Gods hands, both as be durable, and ſhall remain: yea, and alſo that hitherto have not happened. Bleſſed St. Hierome in his Regiſter writing to a certain Emperor, which is alſo to be ſeen in the Decrees, Decret. 11. queſt. 1. faith, Let not the Emperor diſdain Prieſts, but have ſpecial regard on them for his ſake whoſe ſervants they be: and ſo ler him rule over them that due and condign reverence be given unto them. For they in Divine Scriptures are ſometime termed God, ſometimes named Angels, Exod. 22. Then ſhall both their cauſes come before the Gods. Alſo Malac. the ſecond, the prieſts lips ſhould be ſure of knowledge, that men may ſeek the law at his mouth: for he is a meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts. And therefore it is no marvel, if we ſhould vouchſafe to honour them, when God himſelf in his ſpeech attributing to them honounour, tearmeth them Gods and Angels. And here is to be noted, how Conſtantine the Emperor, when certain of his ſubjects preſented unto him Libels accuſatory againſt the Biſhops, received them at their hands. But calling before him thoſe Biſhops which were accuſed therein, in their ſight he caſt thoſe Libels into the fire, ſaying, Depart you hence and diſcuſs thefe matters within your ſelves. For it is not convenient and meet that we judge Gods, becauſe it is written; God ſtood in the Synagogue of Gods, and in the midſt of them he did judge Gods. In which Chapter it is declared, how that the Pagans, who worſhipped golden and wooden gods, attributed great honour to the prieſts. What marvel is it then, if the godly and great and Chriſtian Emperors do honour and reverence the Prieſts of the true God? And doubtleſs, it is their duty ſo to do. And it is reaſon, which the Lord Peter the laſt day ſaid in this point; That there are two powers, Prieſthood and Dominion, the one Spiritual, the other Temporal which {KING} {1 Edw. 1.} which no leſs differ one from the other, than the Sun from the Moon, the Heaven from the Earth, and Gold from Lead. And therefore if honour is due to be given to the leſſer power, by them that be underneath him: he that is chief of the higher power, of right good duty, is to be honoured and reverenced of all under him, as expreſly is declared, Cap. Solit. De ma. & ob. In which Chapter anſwer is fully made to the allegation of the Lord Peter (alledged by him to make for his purpoſe) that is to ſay, Be ye ſubject to all Creatures for Gods ſake, &c. There he ſpeaketh of the ſubjection which ſtandeth upon the merit of vertue, and not upon the duty of neceſſity. For elſe if he ſhould ſpeak of the ſubjection which is by duty of neceſſity; then muſt it needs follow, that every Biſhop ought to be ſubject to every beggerly Raſcal in the City of Paris. For the Text is, Be ye ſubject to all human creatures: but a Raſcal is a human Creature: Ergo, Biſhops muſt be ſubject to a Raſcal. Of the Dignity of a Biſhop, Ambroſe talketh in his Paſtoral. The honour, ſaith he, and the majeſty of a Biſhop is without all compariſon. If you compare it to the Royalty of a King, it is even as you would compare Metal or Lead to the beauty of Gold: For that is to be ſeen, that Kings and Princes ſtooping under the knees of Prieſts and kiſſing their right hand, think themſelves to be defended by their prayers. And beauſe the Kings of France have more than other honoured and reverenced the Prelates, they have above all other flouriſhed and proſpered. It is ſaid in Eccleſ. 4. He that honoureth his father, ſhall rejoyce in his ſons. And it followeth there, He that honoureth his father, ſhall live a long life. This is therefore the ſign of the fear of God. And as it is written in Eccleſ. 4. He that feareth God honoureth his parents.

Eccleſ. 4.

The firſt part of fearing God.

Thirdly, I ſay, That a man ought to fear God, in the full reverencing and reſtoring unto man that is his: For he that doth not give to another that is his, but goeth about to uſurp, doubtleſs he feareth not God. Contrary, he that reſtereth all again, he is ſaid to love and fear God. Eccleſiaſt. 18. He that feareth God will do good things. And in the Pſalm, I have been afraid of thy judgments, and have done judgment and juſtice. For as the Lawyers ſay, which is true, A thing may be made mine divers ways, as by ſucceſſion, commutation, preſcription, or any other acquiſition, either by Law or Cuſtom; And ſo of the reſt. And whereas the Lord Peter the laſt day, by diſtinction of Juriſdiction Temporal and Spiritual, endeavoured to prove that he which had Spiritual Juriſdiction, ought not to have Temporal; otherwiſe there were no diſtinction thereof, but rather a confuſion of Juriſdictions: I will therefore prove the contrary, that theſe Juriſdictions are compatible both in one perſon, eſpecially in an Eccleſiaſtical man. And this will I prove by the Law of God, by the Law of Nature, Canon Law, Civil Law, by Cuſtom and Priviledge. But firſt I alledge, that accidental forms (ſome of them are diſtinct, that they are not clean contrary, but diſlike; as whiteneſs and ſweetneſs. Other forms there be which are ſo diſtinct, that they are clean contrary one to the other, and are not compatible in one ſubject. For one contrary expels another, and importeth the Negative of the other. Wherefore thoſe things be contrary, which one from another are moſt of all diſtant and diſagreeing, and in one ſuſceptible may come one after the other, but not together, as the Philoſopher teacheth in the Predicaments. But thoſe forms which are ſo diſtinct that they be not contrary, but diſlike, are compatible in one ſubject, as quantity and quality, which, being diſtinct in reſpect of their Genus generaliſſimum, yet may be in one perſon. And fortitude and temperance, being under one kind of moral vertue, are found to be in one man, as Logick and Grammer, which are alſo ſpecies and kinds in one genus, viz. of intellectus. Therefore it is no good argument: Theſe forms be diſtinct, Ergo, they be not compatible in one ſubject. And therefore that the Juriſdictions Temporal and Spiritual are ſo diſtinct, that they are not contrary but compatible, it is evident hereby, becauſe things contrary be ſo, that the one cannot be ordained ſo conew with the other, but rather the one confoundeth and deſtroyeth the other: but in this caſe Juriſdiction Temporal is ordained for the Spiritual; and contrary, the Spiritual for the Temporal. Or rather, the one ſo dependeth on the other, as the clearneſs of the Moon doth on the brightneſs of the Sun. Alſo the one Juriſdiction ſo helpeth and comforts the other, that there is no contrariety in them. And therefore it is no good conſequence, becauſe they are diſtinct: Ergo, they are not compatible in one perſon. This alſo is to be proved de facto. For the Earth is the Lords, and the plenty of the whole univerſal World; and all that dwell therein. It is proved likewiſe by this reaſon: For if the Juriſdictions be not compatible, it ſhould follow, that no Eccleſiaſtical perſon ſhould have any jot of Temporal Juriſdiction, neither Land, Tower, Caſtle, Lordſhip, nor any thing elſe; which is moſt abſurd: and ſo by this means it ſhould follow, that no Eccleſiaſtical perſon ſhould be in ſubjection unto the King, which were to the great derogation of the Kings Majeſties Crown and Dignity. It muſt needs be therefore that theſe Juriſdictions be compatible, notwithſtanding the diſtinction of them one from another. And thus much for anſwer to all theſe reaſons, by the which Lord Peter proved the diſtinction of theſe Juriſdictions.

Theſe things premiſed, thus I proceed further to prove that a perſon Eccleſiaſtical, which hath Juriſdiction Spiritual, may alſo have Temporal Juriſdiction: and that the Juriſdiction Temporal may be in an Eccleſiaſtical perſon, I will prove it by the Scriptures; and firſt out of the Old Teſtament, to the evident probation whereof, it is to be underſtood: That God, after the Creation of the World and Man, even unto Noah's time, would govern the World himſelf as King by the Miniſtry of Angels. By reaſon whereof he gave and pronounced Sentence himſelf againſt Caiu, Geneſis the fourth. Noah alſo which offered burnt Offerings unto the Lord, and built an Altar, as teacheth the eighth of Geneſis (which thing appertained only unto the Prieſts) had the government and rule of all things, as well Spiritual as Temporal, which were in the Ark of Noah. Melchiſedech likewiſe, the which was the Prieſt of the moſt high God, and alſo King of Salem, as appeareth in the fourteenth of Geneſis, had both the Juriſdictions in his own hands. For Magiſter Hiſtoriarum, in the ſaid fourteenth of Geneſis, declareth, That all the firſt begot of Noah, even unto Aaron's time, were Prieſts: which at Meals and Offerings bleſſed the people, and which only had the Jus primogenituræ, whereby the Regiment of others was due unto them. Moſes in like manner (of whom it is ſaid in the Pſalm, Moſes and Aaron in ſacerdotibus ejus) conſecrated Aaron and his children to be prieſts; which Aaron did judge the whole people in Temporal matters, yea and that in Cauſes of Inheritance and meer real, as appeareth in the ſeven and twentieth Chapter of Numbers, and many other places. To which purpoſe ſerveth the ſeventeenth Chapter of Deuteronomie; where it is ſaid, If a matter be too hard for thee in judgment betwixt blood and blood, betwixt plea and plea, betwixt plague and plague, then ſhalt thou riſe and go up to that place, that the Lord thy God hath choſen, and ſhalt come to the Prieſts, the Levites, and to the Judge then being, and ſhalt ask, who ſhall ſhew unto us the truth of the judgment, and ſhalt follow their ſentence. And if any man preſumptuouſly ſhall refuſe to obey the Prieſts Commandments and Decree of the Judge, the ſame ſhall die. Behold how manifeſtly it doth appear, how not only the Judgment appertaineth to a Prieſt, between Plague and Plague, concerning the circumſtances and regularity of the Law; but alſo betwixt Blood and Blood, in matters criminal; yea, and betwixt Plea and Plea in civil matters: which thing doth appear to be in many Judges out of the Book of Judges. For Samuel, which was both a Prophet and Prieſt, was appointed Judge of long time over the People in matters Temporal. And when the peopledeſired a King, the Lord was highly offended with them, and ſaid unto Samuel; They have not refuſed thee but me, that I ſhould not be king over them. Furthermore as long as Kings among the people of God, uſed the Advice and Counſel of Prieſts and Biſhops, it was well with them and their Kingdom: But when they forſook and left the Counſel of Biſhops and Prieſts, then was their Kingdom divided, and finally they brought into Captivity. In which Captivity, the people were altogether governed and ruled by the Prieſts and Prophets, as by Eſdras and Nehemias. And laſt of all, by the means of the Machabees, the Kingdom and Government was devolved and brought into the Prieſts hands, who were the Kings and Captains over the people, and had the Government as well of Spiritual matters

1 Mac.2. ters as of Temporal, as is read in the firſt Book of Machabees, the ſecond Chapter; Of Mattathias and his Sons, viz. delicet, of Juda, Machaby, Jonathan, Simon, and John the Son of Simon, which, in all Spiritual and Temporal matters, were Governors over the people of God. More-

Beſides this, in the time of Judge Eliah, a Prieſt in like manner had the Judgment of Temporal matters. And ſo much concerning the proof hereof, out of the Old Teſtament.

Secondly, I prove my former propoſition by Authorities taken out of the New Teſtament. For Chriſt had not only by Divine Nature both the Powers, whereby he Created all things of nothing; and by conſequence was God of all, but alſo by his humanity and both powers. For Apoc.19 he was the Prieſt, ſecundum ordinem Melchiſedech (as it is ſaid in the Pſalmes, had alſo, is alledged to the Hebrews) which had both in his Veſture and Thigh written, King of kings, and Lord of lords. By this Veſtiment or Thigh was meant his Humanity, which was joyned to his Divinity, as the Garment is to him that weareth it. He ſaid of himſelf in the laſt of Matthew: Unto me is given all power both in Heaven and in Earth. As alſo to the Hebrews in the firſt Chapter: Whom he made and conſtituted heir of all univerſal things. And likewiſe in the ſecond Chapter to the Hebrews, He hath made him not much inferior to the Angels. He hath crowned him with glory and honour, and hath ſet him above the works of his hands: Thou haſt put all things in ſubjection under his feet, ſheep and oxen, and all the whole cattle of the field. When therefore it is ſaid, He made all things ſubject unto him; He excludeth nothing as the Apoſtle there ſaith. Whereby it is apparent, that as concerning his Human Nature, in the which he was made leſs than the Angels, all things were ſubject to him.
Philip.2. Alſo this appeareth in the ſecond Chap. to the Philippians: He humbled himſelf, wherefore God exalted him, &c. And it followeth, That in the Name of Jeſus, ſhould every knee bow, both of things in Heaven, and of things in Earth, and of things under the Earth. Behold here, that in Nature, in which he did humble himſelf, he was exalted, becauſe every knee ſhould bow down to him. This in like

Mat.18. of Matthew expreſly declareth, where it is ſaid: If thy brother treſpaſs againſt thee, go and tell him his fault between him and thee: if he hear thee, thou haſt won thy brother: But if he heareth not, then take with thee one or two, that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes all things may be eſtabliſhed: if he hear not them, tell it unto the congregation: if he hear not the congregation, take him as an heathen man and a Publican. Verily I ſay unto you, whatſoever you bind on earth, the ſame ſhall be bound in heaven: and whatſoever you looſe on earth, the ſame ſhall be looſed in heaven. Behold, how expreſly it is commanded, that whenſoever in any matter one offendeth the other,
E. he being firſt charitably admoniſhed, the matter muſt be publiſhed and referred to the order of the Church and Congregation. But if the offender do not obey and hear the admonition, he is to be taken as an Heathen and a Publican: which is as much to ſay, like one that is Excommunicate by the Church and Congregation, ſo that he may have no communion or participation with it. And that this was the intention of Chriſt, this ſeemeth much to prove it, where in giving the reaſon hereof, he immediately addeth:
Omnis ter-minus diſtributionis. Verily, I ſay unto you, Whatſoever, &c. (where note this tearm diſtributive, whatſoever) ſo as the Apoſtle argueth to the Hebrews the ſecond Chapter, that if he ordained all things to be ſubject unto him, he excludeth nothing unſubjected. Wherefore thus I may argue: If all things
F. that the Church and Congregation doth loſe, be loſed, and every thing that the Church bindeth, is bound: There is nothing that the Church may not loſe and bind. Or by Logick thus I may reaſon; There is nothing bound by the Church, that is not bound in Heaven: which argument is good by a certain rule of Logick, which ſaith, That contraries, if the the Negation be put after, are equivalent. For every thing and nothing, whatſoever thing, and no manner of thing, be contrary one to the other. And ſo nothing not, is as much to ſay, as all things. Secondly, I do prove it out of another Text of St. Luke, Chap. 22. Which place he alledged to make for his purpoſe; but I will ſtrike him Luk. 22.
with his own weapon. For where he ſaid, That by the two ſwords the two powers temporal and ſpiritual were to be underſtood; it was ſo indeed: but to whoſe hands would he (I pray you) have theſe two Swords committed? Truly to the hands of Peter and other the Apoſtles, &c. But the holy Father the Pope ſucceeded Peter and the other Apoſtles, the Biſhops, Diſciples, Curates, Perſons, as in the Gloſs
G. appeareth. Luke 10. whereby thus I argue: That by the two Swords, the two powers are meant: But Chriſt willed thoſe two Swords to be put into the Churches hands: Ergo, likewiſe the two powers. But you may reply and ſay, That Chriſt did reprehend Peter becauſe he ſtrook with a Temporal Sword, and cut off an Ear, ſaying unto him, Put up thy ſword, &c. Which reaſon is of no force: for Chriſt
H. did not will Peter to caſt away quite from him the Sword, but to put it into the Scabbard and to keep it, giving to underſtand thereby, that ſuch power, although it be in the Churches hands; yet the execution thereof (ſo much as appertaineth to bloodſhedding in the new Law) he would have to appertain to the Secular Judge; nothwithſtanding yet perhaps, according to the diſcretion and will of the Clergy.

Thirdly, I prove this by the intent of St. Paul, in the 1 Cor.6.
1 Cor. 6. where he ſaith, That they which have ſecular buſineſs, and contend one againſt another, ought to be judged by the Saints. And that they ſhould Judge therein
I. therefore he made this Argument: Know you not that the Saints ſhall judge the world? And if the World be Judged by you, are ye not good enough to Judge ſmall trifles? As though he would ſay, Do ye not know how that ye ſhall Judge the Angels? How much more then may you Judge things ſecular? And it followeth: If you have judgment of ſecular and worldly matters, take them which are deſpiſed in the Church and Congregations, and make them Judges. Neither doth it make any thing againſt it, becauſe the Apoſtle in the ſame place inferreth; Ad verecundiam veſtram dico; Iſay it to your ſhame: for that is to be referred to thoſe, where he ſaith, Appoint thoſe which are deſpiſed. Wherefore the Apoſtle ſpeaketh ironically in this matter, as meaning thus: Sooner and the rather you ought to run to the judgment of the deſpiſed which be in the Church, than to the judgment of thoſe which be out of the Church.

Ergo, the rather to reſort to the judgment of the wiſe, who remain in the Church and Congregation. Wherefore the Apoſtle by and by added, when he ſaid, I ſpeak to your ſhame: What not one wiſe man amongſt you that can judge between brother and brother? Meaning thereby that there were ſome. By theſe therefore and many other like reaſons (which for brevity I omit) it appeareth that both the powers may be in an Eccleſiaſtical mans hand: and that an Eccleſiaſtical man, is Capax both of the Temporal and Spiritual Juriſdiction. Nor is it any matter if it be objected, that Peter, and other Apoſtles, and Chriſt himſelf uſed little this Temporal power: for in them was not the like reaſon as now is in us, as is proved in the
K. 22. Q. 1. cap. and in many other places of the Law. The Apoſtles at the firſt beginning took no receit of Lands and Poſſeſſions, but the price only thereof; which now the Church with very good reaſon doth receive, and that to the great merit both of the giver and offerer, as it appeareth in Conſtantine and others: in the which foreſaid
L. 1. cap. the reaſon of diverſity is well proved: for that the Apoſtles did foreſee, that the Church ſhould be among Gentiles, and not be only in Judea, &c. And further, at the beginning Chriſt and his Apoſtles were wholly bent and given to our health, ſalvation and erudition; little flicking or ſtanding upon the exercife of every Churches Juriſdiction, having regard to that which is written in the ſixth Chapter to

{KING Edw.1} to the Corinthians, All things are lawful unto men, but all things are not expedient. And likewiſe in the 8th. Chap. of Eccleſ. it is read, that every thing hath his time. But now (through the grace of God) the whole People of the Realm of France have ſubmitted themſelves to the Chriſtian Faith; worthily therefore the Church is occupied about miniſtring of Juſtice, and puniſhing of vice; for peace ſhall
Eſay 33. be the work of Juſtice, Eſay Chap. 33. And in theſe Judgments this only is to be conſidered, that the life of man be reformed, &c. Thus you ſee how this our concluſion ſomewhat is confirmed by the Scriptures. Now will I prove it by natural law and reaſon, and firſt after this
M. manner: He ſeemeth moſt fit to play a good Judges part, Probation, by civil law and reaſon. which followeth neareſt God; for properly God is the ruler and directer of all Judgments, who ſaith Proverb. ca-pite octavo, By me the law-maker ſhall decree juſtice and juſt things: But Eccleſiaſtical Perſons follow next to God, and be neareſt him; for that they be elected of God
1 Pet. 2. into a peculiar people, whereof it is ſaid, 1 *Pet.*2. You are a choſen Generation, a royal Prieſthood, a holy Nation, and a peculiar People, that you ſhould ſhew the vertues of him that called you, &c. Ergo, It is moſt fit that perſons Eccleſiaſtical, and Church-men ſhould judge of ſuch matters. Moreover, none doubteth, but that the correction and puniſhment of ſin belongeth to Eccleſiaſtical perſons; wherefore when ſuch things be not committed without fin & offence of the one party, it is evident that the Church may have cognition thereof. Alſo, whoſo hath power to judge of the end, hath alſo power to judge of things ordained to the end; for the conſideration of the things ordained to the end, riſeth of the end. When therefore the body is ordained for the life and ſoul, and temporal things for ſpiritual, as for the end; the Church which doth judge of ſpiritual things, may in like manner lawfully judge of temporal things. All which is ſufficiently confirmed In extr. c. Judicia. where it is ſaid, that the accuſers followeth the nature of the principal, which appeareth ſufficiently by example. For ſomuch therefore, as theſe two Juriſdictions be compared to two lights, that is to ſay, to the Sun and to the Moon, and all the whole clearneſs and brightneſs of the Moon, both in form and vertue, dependeth of the Sun, and in the Sun; and that the brightneſs of the Sun is not of the Moon, or in the Moon it is plain that ſpiritual Juriſdiction, which is compared to the Sun, hath in it, both in form and vertue the Juriſdiction temporal, and not contrary. Many other like reaſons might be brought in. But for that the time waxeth ſhort, I will omit them.

Thirdly, I prove it by the Civil Law, Auth. Diſſe. Jud. ℭ Si tamen ix. col. where it is ſaid, If a Secular Judge be ſuſpected, let the Biſhop of the City be joyned unto him. But if he be negligent, then let the whole judgment be referred to the Biſhop. In like ſort Theodoſius the Emperor enacted ſuch a Law, that whatſoever ſuter being Plaintiff in any kind of matter, whether at the beginning thereof, or after conteſtation of Law, or when the matter came to confirmation, or to ſentence; if the Plaintiff had once choſen the Court and Juriſdiction of the holy See, there without all doubt, though the Defendant reſiſted and diſſented, the matter before the Biſhops and other Eccleſiaſtical Judges ſhould be determined and ended. Which Law afterward Carolus the Great, who was King of France, confirmed in theſe words, We will and command, that all our Subjects, as well Romans and Frenchmen, as others under our Dominion whatſoever, be by law and cuſtom henceforth bound and charged to keep this for a perpetual and preſcript law; That whoſoever began, or commenced a Suit, &c. as is above mentioned. &c. 11 quæſt. 1. Quicunque, &c. 22. But you may object and ſay, that this Law is abrogated, as the Gloſs ſeemeth there to touch. But all will not ſerve; for although this Law is not redacted into the body of the law, yet for all that it is not abrogated. But ſurely it is a privilege honourably granted to the whole Univerſal Church, which the Emperor cannot take away, no more than any other liberty of the Church. By the Canon Law alſo this Probation of the Canon law. N. privilege is confirmed, extra. de iud. c. timor. Novit. and moreover, it ſeemeth to be confirmed by the Civil Law, C. de ſacroſ. Sa. Eccle. privilegium: although it be not expreſly, but generally named. And ſo it is clear by the Civil Law, that ſuch Juriſdiction doth pertain to Eccleſiaſtical perſons. By Canon Law in like manner in places infinite: Diſtinct. 22. cap. Omnes Patriarchæ. 2. quæſt. 5. ca. Si quis Preſbyter. 11. quæſt. 1. cap. Relatum. 25. diſtinct. cap. eccl. Extrav. de judiciis. Novit. De competenti foro. cap. Licet; with many other places infinite. Yea and further, the Canon Law ſo far proceeleth, that whoſoever goeth about by cuſtom to interrupt or hinder any, having ſuch Juriſdi- Cuſtom. ction, incurreth ſentence (ipſo facto) of Excommunication, as is proved ca. Quoniam intelleximus de immunitate Eccle. lib. ſext. Which is moſt plain by the notorious cuſtom, O. time out of mind, in the days of the good and Chriſtian Princes, where to violate ſuch cuſtom, it is plain, Sacrilege, 11. quæſt. 1. Tit. 1. &c. 2. For by the Law, Cuſtom winneth and gaineth Juriſdiction, eſpecially to him that is Capax thereof: yea and further, Cuſtom (time out of mind) is amongſt all perſons in place of written and confirmed law. Now ſeeing the Church of France hath in common uſed with the Temporalty, to judge and decree both of actions perſonal and real touching the Church, it is plain, that ſuch Cuſtom winneth Juriſdiction to it. Ergo, &c. But the Lord Peter avouched, that the Cuſtom could not prevail in this caſe, becauſe here lacked true dealing. Beſides, the ſaid law is called inpreſcriptible, for that it is Jus fiſci. But this maketh nothing againſt us; for the Church of France rather challengeth this law by cuſtom than by preſcription. Which cuſtom ſeemeth rather to be brought in of the free will and election of the people, frequenting more the Eccleſiaſtical Conſiſtories than the Secular Courts. Beſides this, cuſtom in that it hath been oftentimes decided in judgment contradictory, (many of the Barons diſſenting, and not conſenting thereunto) is much thereby confirmed. This cuſtom Judicium contradictorium. I ſay, of the Church, hath been faſt eſtabliſhed by the conſent and aſſent of the Prelates, and then confirmed by the Kings of France your Predeceſſors, and ſo peaceably obſerved of the Church.

And yet may the Church challenge this by preſcription; for that there are but three things which are required in preſcription: that is to ſay, title, true dealing, and continu- 3 things pertaining to preſcription 1. Titulus. 2. Bona fides. 3. Temporis continuatio. ance of time. And it is without doubt, that the Churches both purely have, and in times paſt had a good Title, as appeareth by the priviledge granted of Theodoſius the Emperor, and confirmed by Charles, who gave in commandment, to keep the ſame inviolably, which title it hath both by divine, natural and humane Law, as before is mentioned. Wherefore it muſt needs have true dealing, when ſo many great and clear Titles are known to confederat thereunto. Alſo there concurreth ſuch continuance, of time, Jus fiſci. that even againſt Jus fiſci it is preſcriptible: for it hath not only continued by the ſpace of an hundred years, but The Church not ſubject to the King. alſo more than 600 years paſt. Neither is this always true, this Law is inpreſcriptible, eſpecially of the Church; to the which, inaſmuch as it appertaineth to the Spiritualty, is not ſubject to the King, but is much more noble, and far excelleth; even no leſs than the Sun doth the Moon, Gold Lead, and Heaven the Earth. And this is certain, and no leſs reaſon, that the higher and equal may duly preſcribe law againſt him that is either equal or lower in degree; as one King may do to another. Wherefore it appeareth, that the Church may preſcribe this although it were Jus fiſci, as indeed it is not.

Finally, This is proved by priviledge granted by Carolus the Great King of France, as before, and by Ludovick the ſecond, and by Philip your Uncle, and Ludovick and Philip your Kinſmen, which priviledges we have here ready to ſhew. But perhaps you will ſay, that theſe things cannot Objection. agree: That the Church hath this Juriſdiction both by law, cuſtom and priviledge, which all cannot well hang together; for if the Church have it by one of theſe, it ſhould follow, that the Church lacketh it by another. But this may I anſwer two manner of ways; Firſt, That the priviledge may be double, one as a bringer in of a new law, and thus Anſwer. it cannot be reconciled: The other, as a confirmative and declarative of the old law; and this way it may well be agreed, which diſtinction may alſo take place in cuſtom. Wherefore it may thus be anſwered, that although this Juriſdiction is due unto the Church by law, it appertaineth alſo unto the ſame by priviledge and cuſtom, but yet not by ſuch kind of cuſtom and priviledge which induceth a new law; but which declareth and confirmeth the old law. And if any will reply, demanding wherefore the Church of France ſhould more challenge this, than any other Churches in other Realms, which have no ſuch Prerogative; I can ſoon anſwer them. If the Kings of France (whom God with ſingular grace, honour and priviledge, far above all other Princes: hath blessed and indued for three speciall causes, to wit, for their great faith and devotion unto God, for their honour & reverence to the Church, & for their good justice shewed unto the people) have granted to the Church speciall liberties, or have permitted those which before were granted, peaceably to be kept and observed; why then they should have them, it is no marvel. Yea and further, their devotion unto the Church hath been such, that the nearer the Churches were unto them, the more liberties they enjoyed; and yet had these Princes never the less therefore, but rather the more; which is evident, and redoundeth to the great honour and nobility oth the King and his Realm.

The French King more blessed than other in 3 things. 1. Faith to God. 2. Honour to the Church. 3. Justice to the People.

I have oftentimes heard of other, how that four or five things do especially nobilitate and adorn this Realm.

Five things do nobilitate the Realm of France.

First, Their sincere and inviolable faith; for it was at no time read, that the Kings of France (since the receiving of the faith) did ever swarve from the same.

The blood of France came out of Priamus K. of Troy.

Secondly, The nobility of blood, which descended from Priamus the King of the Trojans, and successively from Caballus and other Royal Kings.

Thirdly, The unity and peace of concord, which especially above all other reigned and flourished in the Realm of France.

Fourthly, The solemnity and pomp of the Prelates and Clergy.

Fifthly, The good disposed readiness of the Barons and Subjects to obey.

If therefore the Prelates of this Realm should not have this law and Priviledge, but should be deprived thereof; then should the King and his Realm lose one of his Noble Estates, whereby they are highly magnified, I mean the bravery, solemnity and royalty of the Prelates: for then, they should not only be neither pompous nor royal, but more beggerly and miserable than any other, the most part of their living consisting herein. I do conclude therefore, that it is proved both by divine law, natural law, canon law, civil law, custom and priviledge, that the right of determining such Temporal matters of the Church may of right appertain to the Church of France; and so I return the Lord Peter's Theam against himself. Besides this, I will propound that which is most-plain and manifest; that whatsoever things be offered up to the Church, and are converted to the dominion and property of the same, be Gods, and appertain to him; forsomuch as they are said to be dedicated and sanctified by him, as sufficiently throughout the Levites may appear, as declared in the 21 cap. 1 Reg. 21. gum, concerning the Bread offered to God, where it is said, I have no common bread under my hands to eat, but holy bread. Wherefore it was not lawful for the Laity to eat of the same bread, but in time of great necessity; which is also proved in Daniel the fifth Chapter, where it is read, Dan. 5. Because King Balthazar, and his Lords, with his Queen, drunk in the golden and silver Vessels, which his Father Nabuchadonezer had taken out of the Temple of Jerusalem; in the same very hour there appeared Fingers, as it had bin of a Mans hand, writing right over the Candlestick upon the plain Wall in the Kings Palace. And the King saw the palm of the hand that wrote; and that which was written was Mene, Thekel, Phares; the interpretation whereof is this, as there it appeareth: Mene, God hath numbred this Kingdom and brought it to an end: Thekel, Thou art weighed in a balance, and art found too light: Phares, Thy Kingdom is deals in parts, and given to the Medes and Persians. The very self same night was Balthazar the King of the Chaldees slain, and Darius succeeded in the Kingdom of the Medes; the Monarchy of the Assyrians being then translated unto the Medes. Whereby it appeareth, that those things which are offered up to the Church, belong to God, and are so dedicated to him, that no Layman may use them; which if they do, they must look to receive vengeance at Gods hand, as Balthazar did. These things now ended, I will argue out the Lord Peter's Theam (which was) Give unto the Emperor that is the Emperors, and unto God that is Gods. But this Jurisdiction, which (as I proved before) is diverily converted to the dominion and property of the French Church, is now Gods; and therefore to be referred to and for him. Wherefore, whensoever any goeth about to take away the same, the Ambrose in case of doubt to obey the Emperor. Gorbeo Soldiers sent to him by the Emperor, which was good and godly ought to answer, as Ambrose did to the to this effect; If the Emperor (quoth he) had requested that which had been mine, I would not have denied him. [KING Edw. I.] albeit that whatsoever I have, all is the poors; but because he demandeth those things which belong to God (wherein he hath no right or interest) I had rather he should imprison me, yea and cut off my head, than to condescend to his request therein: alluding to the History of Naboth, which is to be seen, 3 Reg. 21. how Naboth the holy man, possessor of his Vineyard, was requested by the King to give up his Vineyard; who made answer, I will not give unto thee the inheritance of my Fathers: at which answer the King was marvellously offended: Wherefore (quoth Ambrose) if Naboth would not deliver his Vineyard, shall we deliver to you the Church of Christ? No, God forbid, that I should deliver you Christs Heritage. Naboth did not deliver the Vineyard, nor surely will I deliver Christs Church. And further he addeth a good saying, I can neither diminish nor add any thing to the Church of God, for that I took not upon me the charge of keeping it: besides this, it is my duty and office to consult with the high Emperor of salvation in this matter what is to be done: and doubtless I may not deliver any thing to him, nor yet he receive any thing of me, as is proved 24 quæst. ultimo capite convenior. qui. Wherefore, by these and the like reasons it appeareth, that not only Jurisdiction Spiritual (as the Lord Peter falsly hath suggested) doth belong to God; but also all other kind of Jurisdiction whatsoever touching the Church, whether it be by law, custom or priviledge: insomuch that neither may we surrender the same to any, nor yet may the King at our hands take the same. Further, the Lord Peter affirmed, that Christ for example sake did pay tribute; which is untrue, as appeareth in Genesis the 48th. chap. For the Lands of Priests were free from paying of all kind of Tell and Tribute. And if the Lord Peter well considered the 17th. of Matthew, he should have found there, how that Christ did not only not pay Tribute for example sake, but rather proved, how he was not bound to pay any at all. To conclude therefore, the children he free; but to pay, to avoid slander and offence: wherefore the Text saith: Lest we should offend them, go to the Sea, &c. But peradventure it may be answered, that by the example of Christ (to avoid offence) ye ought to pay. But this is untrue, because there is double offence of the weaklings and of the Pharisees: for as concerning the offence of the weaklings, which cometh of ignorance and not of malice, some things are to be omitted for a time, while they be better instructed; as the Apostle saith to the Romans in the 14th. chap. But for the offence of the Pharisees, which commit and offend of a pretended malice, there is nothing to be omitted, as Christ saith in Mat. 16. Whereto his Disciples saying, Do you not know how that the Pharisees hearing this word are offended? he answered, Behold, suffer them, they are blind, and leaders of the blind: For that in the time of Christ, the offence then was of little ones: but now is the offence of the Pharisees. Wherefore, then it was to be paid for avoiding of offence; but now not so. Now therefore it is apparent that the third token of the fear of God consisteth in the whole true reforting of goods: And of him which hath such fear whereby he reffored to God his own, it is spoken in Eccles. 15. chap. The seed of the man that feareth God shall be brought to honour: but the seed which transgresseth the commandment of the Lord shall be shamed. And thus it fully appeareth, how loving fear and obedience is due unto God, for the excellency of his Majesty; because the words be, Fear God.

[KING Edw. I.]

Secondly, I do say, that especial honour and reverence is due unto the King, for his dignity sake; which followeth in the Theam. Now it is said, Honour the King. I will allege the 10th. of Ecclesiast. where it is specified, In the midst of the Brethren the Ruler is holden in honour among them. Wherefore it feemeth to me that there are two kinds of honours, one which proceedeth from the lips, and that is named flattery, whereto refer it is spoken in Mat. 17. Chap. This people doth honour me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me. There is another kind of honour which is real, and cometh from the heart. And this is the very true honour indeed, wherewith the King ought to be honoured. But me thinketh, that he doth really, and de facto in very deed honour the King; which witheth and counselleth him to keep and do those things, whereby his Dominion is beloved, his Royalty not diminished, his Honour and Fame preferved, and his Conscience not Double honour viz. the lips and the heart.

[KING Edw. I.] not burdened; and he that perswadeth him contrary to these, I think doth not honour the King. To proceed therefore further; I say first, that he doth de facto honour the King, who perswadeth him those things whereby he may be beloved of his Subjects; for a Prince ought to study rather to be beloved than feared. And what greater treasure can a Prince wish, than to have the hearts of his Subjects? According to the saying of Seneca, The love of the Citizens is a fortress invincible, and a bulwark not faultable. What thing is more to be wished for? What better, than to live and reign, every Man willing and rejoicing thereof? And in my opinion, there is nothing which causeth a Prince more to be beloved, than if he keep and maintain his ancient liberties, and bring in no alteration. Prov. 22. Wherefore it is said in the 22d. of Prov. Thou shalt not remove the Land-marks, which thy fore-elders have set. This place the Lord Peter alledged to make for himself, which I will prove to make against him, and that by this reason, Ye ought not to transgress the old limits and bounds which the fathers have set; for novelty and alteration doth ingender discord. And for this cause, in making of new alterations there ought to be both evident utility, and urgent necessity. If therefore the Prince will abrogate and take away the liberties granted by his forefathers and predecessors, he shall not be of his Realm beloved, as it appeareth by Rehoboam in the 11th. Chap. of 3 Reg. All which likewise is to be seen in the Chronicles, how that by these means many Kingdoms and Dominions were translated from Nation to Nation, and from their own native Regiment to the rule of strange people. And now for this time, certain it is, that your grand predecessors Charles the great, Saint Ludowick, Philip the fair, Ludowick and Philip his Sons, with many others, have sealed and confirmed this liberty of the Church. Wherefore for a Man to counsel and perswade your Highness to spoil the Church of any thing; it is even the next way to spoil and undo your self, and bereave you of that by which your dominion is beloved. And for this cause I thought good to put your Grace in remembrance of the 20th. of Matthew, where it is written, Remember the works of your forefathers, which they have done in their generations, and you shall receive great glory and renown for ever. Note here, your Highness by the way, how that King Philip, Grandfather to S. Lewis, softered and kept in his Realm S. Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury; who, for that he stoutly defended the liberties of his Church, was banished out of England. How much more therefore are you bound to defend and maintain your own Prelates in their liberties ratified and confirmed by your Graces Predecessors, according to the saying of Gregory in 25. quæst. cap. Si. If I should destroy and pull down those things which my predecessors have built and ordained, I should not be called a builder and maker, but justly accounted a stroy-good and puller down, as the voice of the Lord saith, Every king dom divided within it self shall be confounded. All knowledge and learning divided one against the other, shall be destroyed. In another place he saith, It is oversharp, and against all good manner and civility (upon what reason and excuse soever) to break and subvert those things which are well ordained: or by his example, to teach others at their pleasures to dissolve old constitutions. Mark here a story about a Castle which was given to S. Remige, to the Churches use, by Clodovy the King, which afterward King Pipin desired to have by exchange and recovery. To whom the said S. Remige appeared in his Dream, and highly blamed him therefore, saying, A better man than thou gave it me, and yet will thou take it away from me? And with that he smote him, who the next day was found all black; since which time, no King of France durst even lie in that Castle. Verily therefore, he doth not honour the King, which giveth him counsel to pass the old limits that his old fathers did set. Yea rather, the Kings Majesty ought to say unto them, that which is written in S. John. Chap. 8. I do honour and glorifie my Father; that is, in keeping the liberties of the Church, as they did which granted them: but you have dishonoured me, in counselling me that which seemeth best to please your selves, as it is written in Eccles. 4. The worship of a man is his father is his own worship, and where the father is without honour, it is the dishonour of the son.

25. q. 2. cap. Si.

Secondly, I say, That he truly doth honour the King, who counselleth him, whereby his power and dignity is not diminished. For as it is great honour to the Kings Highness to increase and augment his power; so is it as much dishonour for him to diminish any jot thereof. And therefore the Emperors were wont to call themselves victorious, of augmenting and increasing their Common-wealth. And to say that you and your predecessors could not grant these things to the Church, it were too too absurd, and to the too much derogation of your Majesties most honourable estate. And therefore for you (most sovereign Lord) who hold and possess so ample right and title in the Realm of France, both by Election and Inheritance, not to grant and leave this to your posterity, it were to the great debasing of your Majesties honour Crown and dignity. Yea, if it were (as God forbid) it would follow, that your predecessors lived continually in sin; yea and further it were as much to say (which were too vile) that bleffed S. Lewis, by whom all France is beautified, could not be justly canonized.

For as the Lord Speaker declared, if he took his Oath at his Coronation both to alienate nothing, and also to call in that which was before alienated, which is inseparable from the Crown, it should follow that he was forsworn, and consequently committed deadly sin, and so could never be Canonized, which is too too absurd to be talked of. And if reply be made, that he might have repented; it is soon to be answered, That his Sin is read of, but of his Repentance it is not found, as it is said of Solomon. But put case it be true that the Lord Peter said, then it must needs follow, that your Grace could beftow nothing, neither Country, Town nor Tower. And yet there be few, which willingly would not receive them, notwithstanding their Allegiance and Homage, which they pretend to your Highness. Keep therefore and confirm (most renowned Prince) that which was granted by your noble Progenitors, otherwise your Royal Honour shall decrease; that it may be verified in you which is read of, in the 11th. to the Romans, I will honour my Ministry.

Its alteration what is to be confirmed.

Thirdly, I do affirm, that he rightly honoureth the King, which perswadeth him that whereby his honour and renown is preferved. For in matters of weight and of great importance, next after conscience we must have regard to name and fame, as it is written in the 22. of Prov. It is better to have a good name than riches. A good name far passeth all things, and is above Silver and Gold. And S. Augustine saith, Two things are necessary for thee, and good Conscience and Name; Conscience for God, and Name for thy Neighbour. And therefore it is written in the 41th. chap. of Eccles. Labour to get a good name, for that will continue surer by thee than many great treasures of Gold. A good life hath a number of days. Which renown and name the Lord (who anointed your Grace with the oyl of gladness) hath in so little time more abundantly bleffed you withal, than any other Prince; wherefore you ought to be more vigilant and careful how to keep and enjoy the fame still: for it is no less vertue to keep that which is gotten, than to seek and get; whereby not only while you live, but also when you are dead, your glorious renown may live for ever; yea and further, that by you nothing be done, whereby any blot or foil should creep into that your so great renown; applying that to your Grace which is said in the 10th. of Prov. The memorial of the just shall have good report, &c. Beware therefore, most Noble Prince, and take heed, that in your days and time, the liberties of the Church be not taken away (which God forbid) or diminished in any jot; for if your glorious name should be blotted therewith, there be thousands which would Chronicle the same to perpetual Memory. Wherefore most Christian Prince, if such (as truste after their death for no other life, but only for fame and renown) lived a life most godly and vertuous: how much more ought we Christians, which look after another life, by our well-doings here, to win us a perpetual name and memory after our death? And you besides, if you should dishonour your name and fame, what a matter were it? considering how the Kings of France were ever counted the most Christian Princes, and most bountiful towards the Church, giving examples to other Princes how to inrich their Churches and liberties thereof. And now especially, if your Grace, the Church in some places being in great perfection (which God forbid) should shew light to other to pull and take away that which was given by your forefathers to the Church; what might the World say? For then by the like reason might the Emperor deprive the Church of all, which was given to it by Constantine the Emperor. Alſo other Kings would do the like in their Realms. God forbid, that your Highneſs ſhould give ſuch example. And for my part, I would rather with my ſelf to be dead, than give you ſuch counſel, that in ſo pernicious and naughty a matter you ſhould be example to other; eſpecially, when the Kings of France, your predeceſſors, were defenders always againſt ſuch as went about to take away the liberties from the Church, which is the office of a King. Hieronymus ſaith upon 24. q. 1. cap. Regnum. Jeremy, which is found alſo in the 24. queſt. 5. ca. Regnum & C. princeps, after this manner, Let the Princes of the World know and underſtand, how they are bound to make an account to God for the Church which they take upon them to keep. Note you alſo, and read ſome examples out of Stories and Commentaries, what regard the Kings of France had in obſerving thoſe things; and ſee you by their example, to follow and do the like; and then ſhall it be verified in your Grace which is written in the 37 Chapt. of Eccleſ. 3. Eccl. A wiſe man ſhall obtain honour amongſt his people: As alſo in the third of the ſame, He that honoureth his Mother, is like one that gathereth treaſure together.

Ecclo. 37.

The 4th honouring of the King. Fourthly, I ſay, That he indeed doth honour the King, which perſwadeth him to do that whereby his Conſcience is not hurt. For above all things, a Chriſtian Man ought to beware how he do that thing, which ſhould be a grudge unto his Conſcience, becauſe the life is more than is meat,

Matth. 6. Mat. the 6 Chap. And aſſuredly I believe, that your Grace would not commit that thing willingly, wherewith your Conſcience ſhould be burdned, for all the Worlds good, and that juſtly. For the more miraculouſly God hath called your Highneſs to the ſtate of a King, and hath endued you with his grace; ſo much the more care ought you to have, and take heed that you offend him not. Nor is it to be doubted, whether in doing the contrary, he will not be the more grieuouſly diſpleaſed with you, as he was with Saul, 1 King

The Oath of the French Kings. following, and no other. Firſt, That you would defend and maintain the Canonical Law, priviledge and juſtice, granted to the Biſhops and the Church, and, as much as in you did lie, to inlarge and amplifie the ſame. Alſo, That by your arbitrement all Chriſtian People, at all times, ſhould keep the true peace of God and his Church. Alſo, That you ſhould forbid to all Nations all kind of facrileges, ſpoilings and iniquities. Alſo, That in all kind of Judgments, you ſhould will and command equity and mercy. Alſo, That throughout your whole Territory and Juriſdiction, you ſhould ſincerely, with all your endeavour, ſtudy to exterminate, and cut off from the Church the noted Hereticks: Which all, and no other, your Majeſty ſware to fulfil, at the time of your Coronation; under the leave and correction of the Lord Peter, which affirmed you were ſworn to ſome other thing beſides. Now therefore, ſeeing it is a Canonical priviledge of the Church, and in the heart of the whole. Cano. 6. q. 1. Quicunque litem habens, incorporate; when alſo by Cuſtom, which is Canonical, it came in, that the Church and Spirituality, may have cognition in a number of caſes, againſt which divers Articles have been here laid in: If this amongſt the Laity ſhould not be obſerved in the Church, your Graces Conſcience thereby might ſomewhat be burdened. In like manner, if you be bound with all your whole might and power to procure, that all whole Chriſtendom ſhould keep the true peace of God and his Church: much more, have you to procure the ſame amongſt your own Barons and people, who evermore were all one with the Church. And always, where any Church was in honour and eſtimation, there were belonging to it 20 ſtout Barons and Knights, whoſe office, as it was to defend the Church; ſo was it the part of the Church to pray for them, and to offer ſacrifice for them unto God. And to this end, that bleſſed S. Lewis ſo much laboured in his time: who, when the greateſt Barons of his Realm had confederate to ſuppreſs theſe liberties of the Church, and had conſulted to give him (to that end) the hundredth part of their goods, would never condeſcend thereunto, but always diſſwaded them therefrom: and finally, by his authority ſealed and confirmed theſe liberties of the Church. Conſider here your Majeſty, how that Pope Innocent at that time proceeded againſt thoſe Barons, &c. I dare be bold to ſay, that if there ſhould be now diſſention between the Prelates and Barons, it would not be long before the Commonalty would uſurp to rule and bear domination. As 1 KING 1 Edw. 11 by experience it hath been ſeen in many places, and likewiſe by practice we of late time might have ſeen; at what time the people ſtomaking the Spiritualty in the parts of Campania and Burgundy, at laſt roſe, and made in every Town a King; and therewithal cauſed the Officers, which brought Citations and Abſolutions from the Pope and other, to be well banged; and not long after, made inſurrection againſt the Lords Temporal, and ſerved them with the like ſauce; until that by the Kings power they were ſuppreſſed, and many of them hanged. And this doubtleſs was in the days of Lewis laſt King of that name. Truly the Nobleſmen ought not to be grieved with that that the Church is poſſeſſed withal, for that there be few of them, who have not their Brothers and Kinſfolks which live, and are maintained by the goods and revenues of the Church. Amongſt whom if they ſhould divide their inheritance, perhaps they would bring a little to nothing at all. Let the Barons alſo conſider, how that there are but few which believe not in the Church; for the Church is one, as in the 6 of Cant. My Dove and Dearling is one. Wherefore without great peril of tranſgreſſion can they not in perſwade and counſel ſuch liberties of the Church to be abrogated and taken away.

Arg. By the poſſeſſions of the Church nourished and kinſmen of the Nobles be maintained. Ergo, Such poſſeſſions are not to be grudged at.

To believe in the Church, is not in our faith.

That therefore your Majeſties Conſcience may remain pure and immaculate, pleaſeth it your Highneſs by your authority to ſeal and confirm this good ancient and Canonical priviledge; and contrary attempts (if any be made by way of Proclamation or otherwiſe) to revoke and call them in. And further, to keep your Mother the Church of France in her ancient frank choice, liberty and cuſtoms. And then by you in all things God ſhall be glorified and honoured; to whom be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen. Who then will honour you, as is ſaid, 1 Reg. 2. 1. Whoſoever ſhall honour me, I will crown him with that glory, in which conſiſteth the true honour, and is granted to none unworthy. Whereunto alſo none is admitted but worthy, as bleſſed S. Auſtin ſaith, which honour grant he unto you and us, who is bleſſed world without end. Amen. And becauſe a Bill of many Articles was exhibited, whereof part did infringe the whole Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, to the defence thereof we will according to the 24. Chap. of Eccleſiaſtica. ſtand even to the death, it is ſaid, For the truth ſhrive thou unto the death, and God ſhall fight for thee againſt thine enemies. Some other of them contain only abuſe, and we believe none ſuch to be. But if there be, we will fee redreſs therein. Therefore for the honour of God, for the unburdening of our conſciences, for the Kings Majeſties reverence, and for the peoples profit and peace, all we here aſſembled have concluded to ſee remedy, that the aforeſaid abuſes, if any ſuch be, ſhall be left, to the quietneſs of the people, and praiſe of Almighty God. To whom be honour and glory world without end. Amen.

Another Sitting in the Parliament.

Another days ſitting in the Parliament.

The next Friday following being the 29th. of December, the Prelates aſſembled themſelves again together at the Kings Palace in Paris, where the Reverend Father the Lord Peter Bertrand, by Gods permiſſion Biſhop of Edven, ſpake openly there before the King, ſitting with his Counſellors and Barons about him; taking to his Theam that which is written in the 18th of Geneſis, O Lord be not angry that I ſpeak yet more, &c. the which he applied to this end; that for the Majeſty of the King, the prudency of his Council, and inſufficiency of himſelf (conſidering the weightineſs of the cauſe) he trembled and was afraid to ſpeak; yet nevertheleſs, truſting upon his acccuſtomed clemency, he took to him audacity, and preſumed that which was appointed to him by the Prelates. Beginning with the 89th. Pſal. Lord thou art our refuge, &c. Which he proſecuted in extolling the Kings Perſon, and his miraculous attaining to the Crown of France; preaching further, how he ought to be the Champion and Defender of the Faith; all which he proved in few words, by many reaſons and authorities. Afterward, he touched thoſe propoſitions which were propounded by the foreſaid Lord Peter of Cugner, and for no other cauſe, as he proteſted, but only to inform the conſcience of his Sovereign Lord and King, and to adviſe his Grace concerning the ſame; not going about to make any final judgment, determination or anſwer, whereby either ſentence, order, ſtatute, right to any man, or other proceſs, might thereof enſue or be grounded. And namely, the firſt beginning with the Theam of the Lord Peter; firſt affirmed (Render unto the Emperor which is the Emperors,

1 KING 1 Edw. 11 Mat. 12. Mar. 12. perors, and unto God which is his; Mark 12.) By which words was ſignified the obedience and ſubjection to the King, with the difference of the Spiritualty from the Temporalty; whereof the firſt member is proved by the 1 Pet. 2. where it is ſaid, Be ye ſubject to every humane creature, &c. Alſo by the Cap. ſolite, extra. de maio. & ob. and by the c. novit extra. de judiciis cap. de ſacerdotibus 10. q. 1. with the notes about the ſame. Moreover, as touching the diſtinction of both Juriſdictions, whereof the Lord Peter proved the Temporal Juriſdiction to pertain to Secular Men, the Spiritual to the Clergy, by the words of our Saviour Chriſt, Luke 22. where he ſaid; Behold two Swords. Alſo for that Chriſt did pay tribute; teaching thereby, how that the Temporalties were to be reſerved to the Temporal Men, Mat. 17. 11. q. ca. Si tribut. ca. Magnum.

Why Chriſt paid tribute.

In like manner, by the Law of Juſtinian, where it is written, that two great gifts were ordained and granted of God; a Biſhoprick and a Kingdom: the firſt to bear rule over Gods matters, the other over worldly things, &c. And ſaid moreover, that theſe two be the caſes which in no wiſe could be altered or changed. Prov. 20. de Tion mo. lib. 1. & ult. And affirmed alſo, that of ſuch princely right the King could not abrogate and deprive himſelf; for that it was imprecriptible, appertaining to the Crown and his Regal Seat (conſidering how he took his Oath at the time of his Coronation) not only not to break or alienate the Laws of his Realm, but alſo to reſtore and revoke ſuch as were broken and alienated. To which his reaſons it was anſwered, that the juriſdiction and determination of civil cauſes (whereabout the controverſie now ſtandeth) belongeth to the Church, both by Gods Law and Mans Law. By Gods Law it was proved, even from Adams time to Chriſts coming; per Innoc. ca. licet extra de foro, compe. And from Chriſts coming, to Peters time and his ſucceſſors, 22 di. c. omnes patriarchæ, Matth. cap. 16. But how the Church, in the Realms of Catholick Princes, attained unto this right and intereſt which at this preſent it doth enjoy, the Law proveth, 2. q. ca. 5. Si quis Presbyter 11. q. 1. Relatum 25 diſt. Ecce. Which alſo is confirmed by the Emperors in the body of the Law, ff. 3. ¶ Si cauſam. col. 9. 23. q. ult. c. hic, & a quibus. The Canon furthermore teacheth, how that S. Peter commanded all the Princes of the Earth, and others, to obey and give place to the Biſhops: c. omnes, extra de major. & ob. 16. diſt. duo ſunt. Wherefore it was concluded, that in no wiſe this right is to be ſeparated and taken away from the Church. And albeit, in the Realms of tyrannous Princes, this ſtate of the Church is violated and not kept; yet in this bleſſed Realm of France it hath been always, even to theſe days duly obſerved: c. novit. extra. de judiciis. This Juriſdiction the Laws of Theodoſius the Emperor, and Carolus the great, hath alſo confirmed: extra. de judiciis. c. nonne. 11 Ed. cap. 1. & 2. 11. q. 1. quæcunque & c. de ſententia & re judicata. c. expreſſe. Where it is mentioned, that the ſame Carolus King of France (and Emperor) eſpecially conſtituted the ſaid Law. And likewiſe to ſpeak of Cuſtoms, it hath been known from time out of mind, the ſame to have belonged to the Church of France: He therefore which ſhall go about to violate this Law, commitreth Sacrilege, 11. q. 1. ca. 1. & 2. And let not the Kings Majeſty marvel, if that in this moſt noble Realm of France this prerogative be due unto the Church; As when hereby his power and nobility is beautified. Anth. ut. ind. ſine quoquo ſuffra. in principio col. 2. Beſides this, our Sovereign Lord and King, at what time he was crowned, was ſworn by the Evangeliſts to keep and obſerve this canonical priviledge of the Church. Further, the Barons, who in a manner are all ſworn to the Church, ſwore fidelity to the ſame: by which Oath of fidelity they are bound to keep theſe Liberties and Rites of the Church. When therefore every Oath, which tendeth not to the peridition of the ſoul, is to be kept, a fortiori that Oath, which is taken in the favour of the Church, is much more to be obſerved: c. Si vero extra de jure jurando, 22. queſt. 4. c. ult. Beſides this bleſſed Ludovick. Philip of Arragon, Philip the fair, Ludovick, Carolus the Great, and Philip, confirmed theſe priviledges, cuſtoms and liberties of the Church, which all were ſworn at their Coronations, as before, &c. Theſe thing conſidered, who can adviſe the Kings Majeſty, without damning of his own ſoul, contrary to theſe liberties granted, and ſo confirmed to the Church? To him belongeth great reward, whoſoever beſtoweth any thing upon the Church: Ambro. de non alie. ac permut. re. ecce: ſſ. ſi minus col. 3. Neither maketh it againſt us, where it is ſaid, that there are two Swords, &c. Neither yet the diſtinction between the Biſhoprick and Kingdom; becauſe it is true that there are two Swords, the power whereof is left to the Churches hand, although the execution of the material Sword is committed to the temporal and ſecular Men, Matth. 26. where Chriſt ſaith to Peter, Convert and put up the Sword into the place. But as touching the diſtinction betwixt the Biſhoprick and Kingdom, indeed it is true as much as appertaineth to the end; and to the execution of blood, but not concerning the beginning and ſubject: for that in one ſubject, both the powers are, may be, and ought to be, as is before proved. To that point, where it is ſaid, that Chriſt paid Tribute; it is anſwered, that not therefore he paid it, becauſe he ought, or was bound thereunto, becauſe it is certainly true, that the Sons of the King (as he was) ought not to pay; but this he did to avoid offence; yea alſo the Clergy is not bound hereunto, Eſtræ 1. & ult. Wherefore, ſuch things do not infer a conſequence. Neither yet maketh that againſt us, where it is ſaid, that the King our Sovereign Lord and Maſter cannot abdicate from himſelf this right, eſpecially for that he was ſworn thereunto at the time of his Coronation, &c. For it is anſwered, that he may well abdicate the ſame. And how doth he abdicate it from himſelf, which he giveth and beſtoweth to God and the Church? The land is the Lords. And doubtleſs, to give, is nothing elſe, but to render to God and the Church their own; for then by that reaſon, the gift given to the Church by Conſtantine, is naught and nothing worth, which is falſe; and this is proved 16 diſt. ea. Conſt. Whereby it appeareth, that an Emperor and King may alienate things of the Empire; ff. de Conſtitutio. legatæ 1. l. apud Julianum ſſ. ult. and yet hereby the Empire or Kingdom not be damaged; for that the thing returneth to the priſtinate ſtate, ff. de pactis l. omnes ſſ. pactæ 35 diſt. 35 Diſt. ea. ab exordio. Furthermore, by this reaſon propounded, all the Kings of France which ever were, and eſpecially bleſſed Ludovick, ſhould be ſpotted; for if that were true, as God forbid) then all they were periured and died in mortal ſin; which is too abſurd. Laſt of all it hurteth not where it is ſaid, that ſuch things are imprecriptible. It is true indeed, they cannot of Subjects, or otherwiſe than of the Church be preſcribed: but in this cauſe we talk not of Subjects. Alſo ſeeing they may be alienated, they may be preſcribed, eſpecially (the Kings thus conſenting, who confirmed the ſame ſo long a time) which excludeth all right both Fiſcal and Eccleſiaſtical. The Prelates therefore, all with one conſent agree and affirm to the ſame as a verity to be maintained and defended; beſeeching the Kings Majeſty their Lord, both for his ſouls health, and peace of the Church, to maintain the ſame, and to keep the liberties of the Church; deſiring him to conſider what commodity daily he receiveth by the Church; and that his Church never failed him yet, when he had need of the Laity, ſhewing the dangers and examples of them who did to the contrary. Further he beſeeched his Highneſs to weigh how entirely his Lord the Pope doth and hath loved his Perſon and Realm; affirming, that never any placed in the ſeat of Peter, loved better his Realm, than he doth. After this, in the ſaid Seſſion, the foreſaid Biſhop of Edven Prolocutor inferred many things beſide, and anſwered particularly to the Articles above ſpecified, and exhibited by the Lord Peter in writing to the King and Parliament; which, becauſe they touch more the ſubtilty of the Law, and ſtiles of the Courts, than are neceſſary to this our Hiſtory, and becauſe we would not burden the Volume with them, they containing no great profit in them, we have here of purpoſe for brevities ſake, omitted them, paſſing to the next ſitting, which was the Friday next following the ſame, as enſueth.

Special anſwers to the Articles preſented by Biſhop Edven.

The next Friday after this, the Prelates aſſembled at Vincenas before the King, to hear their anſwer: where the foreſaid Lord Peter of Cugner (being Prolocutor for the King) ſpake on this wiſe, taking for his Theam; I am peace unto you, do not fear, &c. which he proſecuted, monſhing that they ſhould not be troubled in any thing that there had been ſpoken for that the intent and mind of the Sovereign Lord their King was, to keep the Rites of the Church and Prelates, lates, which they had by law and by good and reasonable custom: Where between the first and second conclusion, he went about to prove, that the cognition of civil causes ought not to appertain to the Church; for that such things were temporal, and ought to pertain to the Temporalty, as spiritual things to the Spiritualty. And besides his other reasons, he alledged the 86 dist. declaring for a truth, that for this intent first the Clerks Crowns were shaven, in sign that they should be free from all worldliness, and forsake all temporal things. Alledging to that end, the 12, q. 2. Furthermore, he declared, that the Bishops had cognition in certain cases expressed by Law, wherefore, these said cases minuted a certain rule against him, alledging for the proof thereof. De Reg. juris. ff. de lege. l. L. tiete reprorum. Also he affirmed, that by reason of sin, the Decretal Novit. could not make for them. For the same did speak of the King of France his state, which hath no superiour; but in other persons it was (he said) otherwise. And these things thus being proved, then said he, and concluded; That nevertheless, their Lord and King was ready to hear the information of them, which would instruct him of any custome; and those customes which were good and reasonable he would observe. Which answer because it did not seem to please and suffice the Prelates, incontinently the Bishop of Edven answered for them all in manner following; First, commending the good and general answer, he spake in this wise; The Prince of the people, (said he) shall be praised for the prudence of his talk, commending therewith, as touching the former good general answer of the King, his purpose and talk propounded. But as concerning the words of the Lord Peter, which ingendred and brought darkness and obscurity, and might give occasion to the Temporal Lords to break and infringe the Rites and Customs of the Church, his answer seemed not full and plain to the Prelates. Speaking moreover, to the said Peter, he alluded to the words of the Virgin speaking in the Scripture thus to her Son, why did you so to us? And so he protecuted the same, both marvelling with himself, and yet covertly complaining of his answer. Afterward answering to those things which the Lord Peter affirmed, and first to the Chapter. Ad verum, he said, that it was before answered, touching the division of the two Jurisdictions, that they may be in one subject, as before is proved. Neither doth it let which the Lord Peter said, that these two Jurisdictions could not be in one subject, because that things which be in themselves diverse, and be under one Genus, as a Man and an Asse cannot be in one subject. But if they were under divers kinds, as whiteness and sweetness in Milk, they might be well in one subject. It was answered, that this rule was not true, becaue justice and temperance are two divers vertues and under one kind, and yet be in one subject. Besides these differing Species, a Man and an Asse be not compatible in one subject. Also to that which was spoken concerning the shaving of the Crown, it was answered, that the Crown did betoken rule and excellency; and the shaving did signifie, that they ought not to heap up store of temporal things, to apply their hearts thereunto; but that the temporal things ought to be subject to them, and not they to the temporalty, as is proved in the said Chapter, duo sunt genera. Also as concerning the thing which was talked of de regula: he answereth, that this maketh for the Church, as before was proved; yea also the Custom doth make the rule for the Church. Also Laws in all kind of sense do always except the Custom. And therefore his saying makes nothing against it. And now to that place which the Lord Peter spake about the Decretal Novit. That the case was only in the Kings Person; yet for all that it is expressly said in the same Text of every Christian Man. And although their Law doth speak only of the Pope, yet the same is applied to all Bishops in their Dioces. Wherefore the said Bishop concluded and beseeched the King, that it would please his Grace to give unto them a more plain and comfortable answer, and that they might not depart from his presence all pensive and sad, whereby occasion might be given to the Laity to impugne the Rites and Liberties of the Church, and that they doubted nothing hereof in the good nature and conscience of their Sovereign Lord and King. In the end, it was answered to them in the behalf of the King, that his mind and intent was not to impugne the Customs of the Church.

The Sunday following, the Bishops assembled themselves again before the King at Vicenar, where the Lord Bishop of Edven repealed their last suppostition, with the last answer made unto them in the behalf of the King, when the Bishop of Byturien had given them to understand how the King willed them not to fear; for that they should suffer no hindrance or damage in his time, yea, and he would defend them in their Rites and Customs, because it should not be said, that he would give ensample to other to impugne the Church, assuring them, that even the Kings Grace willed him so to declare unto them. The said Lord Bishop of Senon in the name of the whole Prelates gave humble thanks to the King therefore, and the said Bishop of Senon beseeched that such Proclamations, which were made to the prejudice of the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction might be repealed and called in. Hereunto the King himself answereth with his own mouth, that they were not published at his commandment, neither did he know of them, nor ratifie them. Thirdly, the Bishop proposed, that those abuses which the Temporalty complained of, should be so ordered and reformed, that every Man should be well contented therewith. Last of all, he beseeched the Kings Highness, that he would of his gracious goodness give them a more comfortable and fuller answer. Then answered the Lord Peter in the name of the King; That if the Prelates and Bishops would fee reformation of those things which were to be amended (whereabouts he would take respite between this and Christmas next following,) his Grace would innovate nothing in the mean season. And if in the foresaid space they would not correct and reform that which was amiss, His Majesty would appoint such order and remedy, that should be acceptable both to God and his Subjects. After this the Prelates had leave of the King to depart, and went home.

A brief recapitulation of the Bishops answer, with certain Notes answering to his Popish reasons unto the Reader.

THE Answer of Bishop Edven, in the name of the other Prelates, to the Oration and Articles before objected by the Lord Peter, consisteth of two parts. First, in declaring the fear due to God. Secondly, the honour due to the King. Whereof the first is, the fear of God, which (he saith) consisteth in three things. 1. In giving to God. 2. In honouring his Ministers. 3. In reforming that which hath been taken away, &c. The second, which is, the honouring of the King, he saith, consisteth in a double sort, that is; in word only, wherein is flattery; and in deed; which deed he divideth into four members. First, when a man counselleth a King to that whereby his dominion is loved. 2. When the King is counselled to that whereby his honour and excellency is not diminished. 3. When the King is counselled to that, whereby his fame and renown is maintained. 4. When a King is counselled to that, whereby his conscience is not wounded, &c. And this is the order of his whole tractation. Now remaineth with like brevity, to recite the reasons and arguments in order, whereby he proveth the premisses, with the subdivision of every member and part thereof. Wherein the studious Reader may note both the subtil proceedings of these Popish Prelates, and also the feeble and impotent ground whereupon they build. Whose building (as by this discourse and many other may appear) wholly and finally tendeth to this, to maintain their Liberties, Pomp and Estimation above all other secular Princes and persons.

3. In maintaining his good name.
4. In maintaining his conscience.

First, As concerning fear to be given to God, which he devideth into three parts, In giving, in honouring, and reforming; for the first, he proveth that Princes ought to give largely and without measure to the Church, by these arguments.

more than three times double the stint of the Kings Crown, Wherefore by the counsel of Justinian, it was so then, and then might stand, quod Religio peperit divitias: But now as the time is altered so that counsel holdeth not, postquam nunc filia devoravit matrem: that is, after that the Daughter hath devoured the Mother. Finally, concerning Mens giving to the Church in these our Popish days, four faults I note:

First, That they give superfluously more than sufficient is to necessity of life.

Secondly, That they give to such as abuse it wickedly.

Thirdly, That in giving to them that need not. Noblemen in mean time defraud their poor Neighbors, which need indeed, and yet do not complain.

Fourthly, Because of this Title of giving, men have used and yet do use to put great hope of salvation therein, contrary to the testament of God in Christs death, whereof examples are before.

Pag. 406. Col. 1. Abel offered of the best to the Lord, and was blessed of God. Ergo, Every great man that would be blessed of God, must offer of the best he hath unto the Church. Answer: This Argument as it is far fet, so it is som answered, wherein three notes are to be observed.

First, That he which offereth unto the Church of God, doth not therein offer unto God immediately as Abel did.

Secondly, Neither is this to be granted, that he which offereth to all Churchmen, offereth by and by to the Church of God; for many times the Church-men are one, and the Church of God is another. Lawrence the Martyr shewing forth the Church of God, brought out the poor of the Parish, and not of the Priests of the Church.

The third note is; That if noble persons should offer unto God (by the example of Abel) that which is the best and fattest of the flock; then should they offer unto the Lord of their flocks only, and not of their Lands. Yea, and to note the very truth, they are taught thereby to offer to God, neither Cattel nor Lands, but that which is the very best, Rom. 12. that is, their own bodies for a lively Sacrifice to God. He that offereth up to God a proud heart, and killeth it with the Ax of humility, giveth unto him the best and fattest Pag. 406. col. 2. Bullock he hath in all his flock. With like reason also I answer the place of Num. 18. and of Paral. cap. ult. that to offer up, or to separate unto the Lords Treasury, is not now to give to Priests and Chaplains of the Church, which peradventure have more than they do well occupy; but to give liberally to the communion of Saints, which are needy, and are the true Treasury of the Church indeed, as Lawrence the true Treasurer said

Pag. 406. col. 2. By Gods commandment we are bound of duty to honour our temporal Fathers. Ergo, By the same duty we are bound much rather to honour our spiritual Fathers, that is, Priests and Prelates. Answer. A Father in common speech is diversly taken, as by Age, by Nature, by Office. And to all these we of duty are bound to yield, honour, reverence, obedience, submission; albeit not all after one sort, nor in like degree. For as we are bound to honour our Fathers and Mothers so aged Men and Elders have also their honour and name of Fathers: So Magistrates and spiritual teachers, in their kind have their honour and reverence. And S. Paul saith, that such are worthy of double honour, qui bene præsunt, & qui laborant in sermone. But in this two things are to be noted, wherein this honour consisteth, and how far it extendeth. These Spiritual Fathers of the Church think they be not honoured enough, unless Kings and Emperors give and surrender unto them all the temporal rule and government, to do what they list, and none to controul them: and unless Noblemen and Subjects endow them with temporal Lands and Possessions so much as they would have. And this they call honour, which they define only by giving temporally: where indeed it rather consisteth in giving spiritually, as to have a reverent opinion of their ministration, to yield a prompt obedience to their Doctrine, reverence to them as the Ministers of God, and not to despise, defame or molest their persons; wherof S. Paul also about the same place speaketh, writing to Timothy, Let no man despise thy youth, &c. Also to Titus, Let no man despise thee, &c. And this is to honour our spiritual Fathers.

Secondly, To consider how far this honour extendeth: As no man doth deny, but these Pastors are worthy their double honour which rule well; so if they administer not their office well, they are under the oversight of the King bearing the Temporal Sword, worthy of double punishment. And yet to consider this double honour in them that rule well, how far it doth extendsif it be compared to the honour due to our Parents, case of necessity will soon decide it. For be it that our parents on the one side, and Pastor of the other, stand in extream need of the Sons supportation, wherein he can help but the one: Nature, I suppose, will and ought sooner run, and the Word of Christ will sooner drive us to our Father, than to the Priests Corban, Mark 7. So that this distinction here may have place; that as the one standeth upon merit of vertue, so the other standeth upon meer duty of necessity.

How far honour given to Priests extendeth. Mark 7.

Pag. 407. col. 1. These Jurisdictions Temporal and Spiritual, are compatible in one person. Answer: I grant pro ratione subjecti: That is, in the subject it self there is no cause to the contrary, but these vocations may be exercised both of one person, as they have been of the Pope, one after the other, (and so may contrary forms also) and yet the Popes person hath been able to sustain them both. But now here is to be considered, not what the nature of the Subject is able to bear by Logick, but what order is taken herein by the will of God, whose order is this: That they, which with Peter are called to the feeding of the Flock, should leave their Fishing-nets, and fish for men, and that they, which labour in the warfare of the Lord, should not intangle themselves with the business of this life, whereby they may be more free to please him, whose Soldiers they are, Tit. 2. &c.

Pag. 407. col. 1. The Jurisdictions Temporal and Spiritual, are so distinct that they are not contrary, &c. Answer: And what let is there then, but our Queen now, and other Kings hereafter may have the government of both states, as well Ecclesiastical as Temporal? Seeing both the forms being compatible, may concur both in one subject; why not as well in the person of the King within the Realm, as in the person of the Pope without the Realm?

If he did it by the Angels his Ministers, whether is more like then that it make for the Pope, or rather for Kings and Princes, whom the Scripture thrice in one Chapter calleth the Ministers of God to execute punishment to him that doth evil,* Rom. 13.

And thus much concerning French matters, which because they be Ecclesiastical, and bear with them some utility to the diligent Reader (such as list to search, note and observe the acts of men, and course of Religion) I thought therefore here to place and adjoyn them next after the other contention before proceeding between Philip the French King, and Pope Boniface. Albeit as touching the perfect keeping of years and time, I am not ignorant that this forefaid Parliament, thus summoned and commenced against the French Prelates, falling in the year of our Lord 1329, was to be referred rather to the raign of King Edward the Second, of whom now remaineth (by the Grace of Christ) in order of History to profecute, declaring first the instructions and informations of his Father given to him in the time of his departing. The year of our Lord 1307, and the last year of the King, the forefaid King Edward, in his journey marching toward Scotland, in the North fell sick of the Flux, which increased so fervently upon him, that he despaired of life. Wherefore calling before him his Earls and Barons, he caused them to be sworn that they should Crown his Son Edward in such convenient time after his death as they might, and keep the laws to his use, till he were Crowned. That done, he called before him his Son Edward, informing and lessoning him with wholsome precepts; and he charged him also with divers points upon his blessing: First, That he should be courteous, gentle, upright in judgment, fair spoken to all men, constant in deed and word, familiar with the good; and especially to the miserable to be merciful. After this, he gave him also charge not to be too hasty in taking his Crown before he had revenged his Fathers injuries shortly against the Scots: but that he should remain in those parts to take with him his Fathers bones, being well boiled from the flesh; and so being included in some fit vessel, should carry them with him till he conquered all the Scots; saying, That so long as he had his Fathers bones with him, none should overcome him. Moreover, he willed and required him to love his Brother Thomas and Edmund; also to cherish and tender his Mother Margret the Queen. Over and besides, he straightly charged him upon his blessing (as he would avoid his curse) that he should in no case call to him again, or send for Peter Gaveston; which Peter Gaveston the King before had banished the Realm, for his naughty and wicked familiarity with his Son Edward, and for his seducing of him with smister counsel. For the which cause he banished both Peter Gaveston utterly out of the Realm, and also put the said Edward his Son in prison. And therefore so straitly he charged his Son in no wise to send for this Gaveston, or to have him in any case about him. And finally, because he had conceived in himself a vow to have returned in his own person to the Holy Land (which for his manifold wars with the Scots he could not perform) therefore he had prepared 32000 pounds of silver; for the sending of certain Souldiers with his heart unto the Holy Land. Which thing he required of his Son to see accomplished: So that the forefaid money, under his curse and malediction be not imployed to other ufes. But these injunctions and precepts the disobedient Son did nothing observe or keep after the decease of his Father. Who forsaking and leaving off the war with the Scots, with all speed hasted him to his Coronation. Also contrary to the mind of his Nobles, and against the precept of his Father, he sent for the forefaid Peter Gaveston, and prodigally bestowed upon him all that treasure which his Father had bequeathed to the Holy Land. He was moreover a proud despiser of his Peers and Nobles; and therefore raigned infortunately, as by the sequel of the Story here following, by the Grace of Christ shall be declared. Thus King Edward first of that name, leaving behind him three Sons, Thomas and Edmund by his third wife, and Edward by his first wife, whom he had sufficiently thus with precepts instructed, departed this mortal life, Ann. 1307, after he had raigned near 35 years. Of whom this Epitaph was written,

Dum viguit Rex, & valuit tua magna potestas,
Frans latuit, pax magna fuit, regnavit honestas.

To the tune of K. Edward.

In the time and raign of this King many other things happened, which here I omit to speak of, as the long discord and strife between the Prior of Canterbury, and the Prior of Dover, which continued above four years together, with much wrangling and unquietnes between them. Likewise another like contention growing between John Romain, Archbishop of York, and the Archbishop of Canterbury upon this occasion, that when John Archbishop of York after his Confecration returned from the Pope, coming to Dover, contrary to the inhibition of Canterbury, he passed through the middle of Kent, with his Cross born up; although the story reporteth that he had the Kings consent thereunto, Ann. 1286.

Item, Between Thomas Bishop of Hereford, and John Pecham, Archbishop of Canterbury, fell another wrangling matter, in the time of this King. Which Bishop of Hereford, appealing from the Archbishop to the Pope, went up to Rome, and in his journey died. Who with less cost might have tarried at home, 1282.

King Edward the Second.

EDWARD the Second of that name, and Son of Edward the First, born, as is aforesaid, at Carnarvan in Wales, after the departure of his Father, entred the Government of the Land, Anno 1307, but was not Crowned before the year next following, Anno 1308, by reason of the absence of Robert Winchelsey, who was banished by King Edward the First. Whereupon the King this present year writeth to the Pope for the restitution of the said Archbishop, for that by an ancient Law of the Realm, the Coronation of the King could not otherwise proceed without the Archbishop of Canterbury. Which Edward as he was perfonable in body and outward shape, so in conditions and evil dispositions much deformed; as unstedfast of his word, and light to disclose secrets of great counsel; also refusing the company of his Lords and men of honour; he much haunted among Villains and vile perfonages; given moreover to over much drinking, and such vices as thereupon be wont to enfue. And as of his own nature he was to the said vices disposed, so was he much worse by the counsel and familiarity of certain evil disposed persons, as first of Peter, or Pierce Gaveston before touched. Then after him, of the two Spensers and others, whose wanton counsel he wickedly following, gave himself to the appetite and pleasure of his body; body; nothing ordering his Commonweal by gravity, discretion and justice; which thing caused first great variance between him and his Nobles; so that shortly he became to them odious, and in the end was deprived of his Kingdom. In the first year he took to wife Isabel, Daughter of Philip King of France; with whom (the year after) he was Crowned at Westminster by the Bishop of Winchester, for that Robert Winchelsey Archbishop of Canterbury was yet in exile not returned home. Notwithstanding the Barons and Lords made first their requeft to the King to put Peter Gaveston from him, or else they would not consent to his Coronation. Whereupon he was inforced to grant them at the next Parliament to have their requests accomplished, and so he was Crowned. In the mean season the forefaid Peter or Pierce, bearing himself of the Kings favour bold, continued triumphing and setting at light all other states and Nobles of the Realm, so that he ruled both the King and the Realm, and all things went as he would; neither had the King any delight else, or kept company with any, but with him; with him only he brake all his mind, and conferred all his counsels. This as it seemed strange unto the Lords and Earls, so it inflamed their indignation so much against this Peter, that through the exciting of the Nobles, the Bishops of the land did proceed in Excommunication against the said Gaveston, unless he departed the land. Upon the occasion whereof the King the same first year of his raign, being grieved with the Bishops, writeth to the Pope, complaining that they had proceeded to Excommunication of the said Peter unless he departed the Realm within a time certain. The which Letter of the King what answer again it had from the Pope, I find not set down in Story. Over and besides, it befell in the said first year of the King, that the Bishoprick of York being vacant, the King gave the office of the Treasure to one of his own Clerks; whereof the Pope having intelligence, writeth to the King, commanding him to call back the same gift, and withal citeth up to Rome the said Clerk, there to answer the matter to a Nephew of one of his Cardinals, upon whom he had bestowed the said dignity; whereunto the King maketh answer, Quod citationes hujusmodi, & illarum executio, &c. i.e. That if such citations, and the execution of the same should proceed to the impeachment of our Kingly Jurisdiction, and to the prejudice of our lawful inheritance, and the honour of our Crown (especially if the deciding of such matters which principally concern our estate, should be profecuted in any other place than within this our Realm by any manner of ways, &c.) Certes, although we our selves would wink thereat, or through sufferance permit matters so to pass our hands; yet the States and Nobles of our Kingdom, who upon allegiance are obliged and sworn to the protection and defence of the dignity of the Crown of England, will in no wise suffer our right, and the Laws of the Land so to be violated.

Besides this, the forefaid Pope wrote to the King, complaining that by certain Counsellors of King Edward his Father lying sick, utterly ignorant thereof, a certain restraint was given out, charging his Nuncioes and Legates (whom he had sent for the gathering of the first-fruits of the Benefices vacant within the Realm) not hereafter to intermeddle therewith, &c. Whereunto the King maketh answer, viz. Pater Sanctiss. Datum fuit vobis intelligi, &c.

In English thus:

Most holy Father, it hath been given you to understand otherwise than the truth of the matter is. For most true it is indeed that the forefaid inhibition was ratified by good Act of Parliament holden at Karlin, upon certain causes concerning the execution of such Collections (the said our Father not only being not ignorant, but also witting, willing, and of his own meer knowledge agreeing to the same) in the presence not only of his own Earls, Barons, and States, and Commons of the Realm, but also your Legates and Liegers being called thereunto.

Item, Upon other Letters brought from the Pope to the King, for the Installing of one Peter de Subaudia his Kinsman into the Bishoprick of Worcester, being then vacant, and withal requiring that if the said Peter would not accept thereof, the Election should be referred to the Prior and Covent of the same place. The King therewith grieved, maketh answer by his Letters to the Pope, and sundry his Cardinals: Quod cum Electiones de futuris Prælatis in Ecclesiis Cathedralibus, &c. That forsomuch as Elections of Prelates, to be placed in Cathedral Churches within his Kingdom are not to be attempted without his license first had and obtained, &c. Therefore he could not abide that any such strange and unaccustomed reservations should, or could take place in his Realm without manifest prejudice of his Kingly estate, requiring further that he would not cause any such novelties to be brought in into his Kingdom, contrary to that which his ancestors before him have accustomed to do.

Thus the time proceeded, and at length the Parliament appointed came, Anno 1310, which was the fourth of this Kings raign. The articles were drawn by the Nobles to be exhibited to the King, which articles were the same contained in Magna Charta, and de Foresta above specified; with such other articles as his Father had charged him with before; to wit, that he should remove from him and his Court all Aliens and perverse Counsellors, and that all the matters of the Commonwealth should be debated by common Council of the Lords both Temporal and Spiritual; and that he should stir no war out of England in any other foreign Realm, without the common assent of the same, &c. The King perceiving their intent to be, as it was indeed, to sunder Peter Gaveston from his company; and seeing no other remedy, but needs he must yield and grant his consent, agreed that the said Gaveston should be banished into Ireland. And so the Parliament breaking up, the Lords returned to their own, well appeased; although of the other Articles they could not speed, yet that they had driven Peter Gaveston out of the Realm, at this time it did sufficie them.

This Peter Gaveston was a certain Gentlemans Son of Gascoin; whom being by young K. Edward the First (for the good service his Father had done him in his wars) received to his Court, and placed him with his Son Edward now raigning. Who in proceis of time growing up with him, incensed and provoked him to much outrage and wantonnes. By whose occasion first he began in his Fathers days to break the Park of Walter Bishop of Chester, then Chancellor of England, and after Executor to the King; for the which so doing, the King (as is partly touched before) imprisoned his Son, and condemned this Peter to perpetual banishment. Notwithstanding the young King after the death of his Father (as ye have heard) sent for this Gaveston again. And withal he so perfecuted this forefaid Bishop, that he clapt him in the Tower, and seized upon all his goods. Moreover he caused most strait inquisition to be made upon him for guiding his Office, wherein if the least crime might have been found, it would have cost him his life. And thus much of Peter Gaveston, and of his origine. Now to the matter.

The King thus separated from his old compeere (that is, from the company of Peter Gaveston now exiled into Ireland) continued in great mourning and penfiveneis, seeking by all means possible how to call him home again, and conferring with such as were about him upon the same; who did intimate to the King, that forsomuch as the Earl of Gloceiter was a man well loved and favoured in all the Realm; if a marriage might be wrought betwixt his Sister and Peter Gaveston, it might be a mean both for him to obtain more friendship, and for the King to have his desire. To make short, Peter Gaveston in all haft was sent for, and the marriage through the Kings procuring, proceeded between the Earls Sister, and the forefaid Peter, albeit sore against the Earls mind. Gaveston thus restored and dignified, was so surprized in pride and exaltation more than ever before, that he disdained and derided all other, whose rule and power more and more increased. Insomuch that he having the guiding of all the Kings Jewels and treasure, conveyed out of the Kings Jewel-house at Westminster a Table and a pair of Treffels of Gold unto Merchants beyond Sea, with other Jewels more; to the great impoverishing both of the King and Queen, and of the land. And over all that he brought the King (by means of his wanton conditions) to manifold vices, as adultery, and such other like. Wherefore the Lords seeing the mischief that daily increased fed by occaſion of this unhappy man, took their counſel together at Lincoln, and there concluded to avoid him again out of England; ſo that ſhortly after he was exiled again, and went into Flanders; for in France or his own Country he durſt not appear, for fear Philip the French King, to whom the Queen of England his Daughter had fent over great complaints of the ſaid Gaveſton, who had ſo impoveriſhed her and the whole Court, that ſhe had not wherewith to maintain her eſtate. Upon which complaint, the French King through all his Dominions laid ſtrait watch to apprehend the ſaid Gaveſton; but he not unwarned thereof, ſecretly coaſted into Flanders, from whence it was not long but he was fet again by the King, as in further proceſs followeth; ſo much was the Kings heart infatuated by this wicked perſon.

Gaveſton again exerciſed out of the land.

The Cremſted-Friers. The Knights of St. John, called the Knights of the Rhodes.

About this year, or the next before, came in firſt the Crowched-Friers; and alſo firſt began the Knights of the Order of St. John Baptiſt, otherwiſe called the Knights of Rhodes, for that they by manly Knighthood put out the Turks from the Ile of Rhodes.

Templars burned at Paris, to the number of 54. The Order of the Templars put down.

In the Hiſtory of King Edward, this Kings Father before precedent, mention was made of Pope Clement the Fifth, who ſucceeded after Benedict; alſo of putting down of the Templars, which in this year hapned by means of the French King; who as he cauſed to be burned in the City of Paris this year fifty four Templars, with the great Maſter of the ſame Order, ſo by his procurement the foreſaid Pope Clement called a Council at Vienna, where the whole Order and Sect of Templars being condemned, was ſhortly after by the conſent of all Chriſtian Kings depoſed all in one day. After whom the French King thought to make his Son King of Jeruſalem, and to convert to him all the Lands of the ſaid Templars. But Clement the Pope would not thereto agree, tranſferring all their Lands to the Order of Hoſpitalers, for the great ſum of money given for the ſame. The cauſe why theſe impious Templars were put down was ſo abominable and filthy, that for reverence of chaſt ears it were better not told, if it be true that ſome write.

The horrible Sect of the Templars.

Another matter worthy to be noted of like abomination I thought here to inſert, touching a certain Nunnery in France called Provines, within the which at the cleanſing and caſting of a Fiſh-pond, were found many bones of young Children, and the bodies alſo of ſome Infants as yet whole unconſumed; upon occaſion whereof divers of the Nuns or the ſaid Nunnery, to the number of twenty ſeven, were had to Paris, and there impriſoned; what became of them afterward I find not in mine Author, Arpontacus Burdegalenſis.

Ciſtercian Monks for money redeem their exemptions of the Pope.

In the ſame Council alſo was decreed by the ſaid Clement That all Religious Orders exempted ſhould be ſubject under the common Laws as other were. But the Ciſtercian Monks with money and great gifts redeemed their Privileges and exemption of the Pope, and ſo had them granted. Tho. Walſ. Theſe Ciſtercians ſped better herein, than did the Minorites of the Franciſcans in their ſuit. Of which Franciſcans when certain of them had offered unto the ſaid Pope Clement forty thouſand Florences of Gold, beſides other Silver, that the Pope would diſpenſe with them to have lands and poſſeſſions againſt their rule: that the Pope asked them where was that money. They anſwered, In the Merchant-mens hands. So the ſpace of three days being given them to bring forth theſe Merchants; the Pope abſolved the Merchants of their Bond made to the Friers, and commanded all that money to be imployed and reverted to his uſe; declaring to the Friers that he would not infringe or violate the rule of St. Francis lately Canonized, neither ought he to do it for any money. And thus the beggarly rich Friers loſt both their money and their indulgence. Ex eodem autore.

The Friers Minorites deceived of Pope Clement. Ex Chron. Tho. Walſ. One thief beguileth another.

Concerning this Pope Clement the Fifth, Sabellicus writeth, that he Excommunicated the Venetians for aiding and preferring of Azzolo unto the State of Ferrarie; and wrote his Letters throughout all Europe, condemning them as enemies of the Church, and giving their Goods as a lawful prey unto all men; which cauſed them to ſuſtain great harm. But Francis Dandulus a Nobleman of Venice, being Ambaſſador from the Venetians to the ſaid Clement, for the obtaining of their abſolution and ſafeguard of their City and Country, and for the pacifying of the Popes fury toward them, was fain ſo to humble himſelf before this proud tyrannical Prelate, that he ſuffered a Chain of Iron {KING 7 Edw. 2.} to be tyed about his neck, and he to lye down flat before his Table, and ſo to catch the bones and fragments that fell from his Table, as it had been a dog, till the Popes fury was towards them aſſwaged; ſo that after that he in reproach (becauſe he ſo humbled himſelf for the behalf and helping of his Country) was of ſome called a Dog. But the City of Venice ſhewed themſelves not unkind again to Dandulus for his gentle good will declared to his Country; for as he had abaſed himſelf before in the vile and ignominious condition of a Dog for his Countries ſake, ſo they extolled him with as much glory again being returned home, decking and adorning him after the beſt array, with the chief Princely ornaments of the City, to make him amends for his former reproach received. Sabel. Enn. 9. l. 7.

The pride and tyranny of Pope Clement, 5. Extravag. de elect. Multi inſolentiæ. His gift of Gifts. Out of the bellum, and he adjudged to be hanged in the Book named the Image of Tyranny. The glory of Dandulus to his Country. Pope Clement thankfully rewarded.

Concerning the Conſtitutions of this Pope Clement, and of his Decretals and Clementines, and how Henricus the Emperor in his days was poyſoned in receiving of the Sacrament, ye have heard before. About this time Robert Winchelſey Archbiſhop of Canterbury (whom this Kings Father had baniſhed before) was releaſed and returned home from Rome.

Robert Winchelſey returneth home from Exile.

Theſe things thus declared, let us proceed (by the Lords Grace) to the next year, which is of the Lord 1311, and the fifth year of this Kings raign. In the which year, counting the year from Michaelmaſs to the ſame Feaſt again, as then the uſage of the Realm was, Peter Gaveſton who had wandred the Countries about, and could find no ſafe reſting place (notwithſtanding he was utterly baniſhed, upon forfeiting life and goods out of the Realm, yet truſting upon the Kings favour, and the good will of the Earl of Glocester, whoſe Siſter he had married) ſecretly returning into England with a certain company of ſtrangers, preſented himſelf to the Kings ſight. At the beholding of whom the King for joy ran to him, and imbracing him, did not only retain him, but alſo for his ſake undid all ſuch Acts as had been in the Parliament before Enacted. The Queen and the whole Court ſeeing this doting of the King, made an heavy Chriſtmas. After this return of Gaveſton was noiſed among the Commons, the Peers and Nobles of the Realm were not a little ſtirred, caſting with themſelves what way were beſt to take. If he were ſuffered ſtill, they ſaw not only themſelves rejected, but alſo that the Queen could not enjoy the love of the King, neither could there be any quietneſs in the Realm. Again to ſtir up war in the land, it were not the beſt; to vex or diſquiet the King, alſo they were afraid. But foraſmuch as they could not abide all the Nobility, ſo to be thruſt out and vilipended for the love of one ſtranger, and alſo the Realm ſo to be ſpoiled and impoveriſhed by the ſame; this way they took, that Thomas Earl of Lancaſter ſhould be elected among them the Chiefrain, and chief doer in that buſineſs; to whom all other Earls and Barons, and Prelates alſo did cordially condeſcend and conſent, except only Walter Biſhop of Coventry, whom Robert the Archbiſhop therefore afterward did Excommunicate. Which Thomas of Lancaſter, by the publick aſſent of the reſt, ſent to the King (lying then at York) humble Petitions in the name as well of the whole Nobility as of the Commons, deſiring his Grace to give the foreſaid Gaveſton unto them, or elſe according to the Ordinance of the Realm, that the land might be avoided of him. But the tyrannous King, who ſet more by the love of one ſtranger than by his whole Realm beſides, neither would hearken to their counſel, nor give place to their ſupplications; but in all haſty fury removeth to Newcaſtle, where he remained almoſt till Midſummer.

How Gaveſton was beheaded. Ex Chron. Tho. Walſ.

The exceſs of Pride condemned in the Kings Maſſe-book at Langley.

The Acts of Parliament at Coventry Excommunicated the Biſhop of Coventry for holding with Peter Gaveſton.

In the mean ſeaſon the Barons had gathered an Hoſt of ſufficient and able Souldiers, coming toward Newcaſtle, not intending any moleſtation againſt the King, but only the execution of the Laws upon the wicked Gaveſton. The King not having wherewith to reſiſt their power, removeth in all ſpeedy manner to Tinmouth where the Queen lay. And hearing there that Newcaſtle was taken, he taketh ſhipping and faileth from thence (notwithſtanding the Queen there, being great with child, with weeping tears, and all inſtance deſireth him to tarry with her, as ſafely he might) but he, nothing relenting to her, took Peter his Compeere with him, and coaſted over to the Caſtle of Scarbrough; where he leaving Peter Gaveſton to the ſafe keeping of his men, himſelf journeyeth toward the coaſt beſide Warwick. The Lords hearing where Peter was, bend thither all their power:

{KING 7 Edw. 2.} power; ſo that at length Gaveſton ſeeing no remedy but he muſt needs come into their hands, yeildeth and ſubmitteth himſelf; requiring none other condition, but only that he might talk but a few words with the King in his preſence. Thus Gaveſton being apprehended, the King hearing thereof ſendeth unto the Lords, requiring his life to be ſpared; and that he might be brought to his ſpeech; and promiſed that in ſo doing he would ſatisfie their minds and requeſts whatſoever. About this advizement was taken: but then the Earl of Pembroke, hearing the Kings promiſe, perſwaded the Barons to grant unto his Petition; promiſing himſelf upon loſing all his lands, to take the charge upon him to be brought unto the Kings ſpeech, and ſo to be recommitted to them again. Which when he had obtained, he taketh Peter Gaveſton with him, to bring him where the King lay. And ſo coming to Dedington, not far from Warwick, he leaveth him in the keeping of his Soldiers, while he that night went to his wife, being not far off from thence.

Peter Gaveſton taken of the Biſhop.

The King lamenteth Peter Gaveſton.

Earl of Warwick.

The ſame night it chanced Guido the Earl of Warwick to come to the ſame place where Gaveſton was left; who taking him out of the hands of his Keepers, carrieth him to the Caſtle of Warwick, where incontinently they would have put him to death; but doubting and fearing the Kings diſpleaſure, a little they ſtayed. At what time one of the company (a man of ſage and wiſe counſel, as mine Author writeth) ſtanding up among them, with his grave Oration declareth the nature of the man, the wickedneſs of his own condition, the Realm by him ſo greatly endamaged, the Nobles deſpiſed and rejected, the pride and ambition of the man intolerable, the ruin of things like to enſue by him, and the great charges and expences they had been at in ſo long purſuing and getting of him; and now being gotten and in their hands, he exhorteth them ſo to uſe and take the occaſion now preſent, that hereafter being out of their hands, they afterward might feek, and ſhould not find it.

Peter Gaveſton put againſt-manded by Guy of Warwick.

Briefly in ſuch ſort he perſwaded the hearers, that forthwith he was brought out, and by common agreement beheaded in a place called Blakelow; which place in Stories I find to be called Gaveſthead; but that name (as I think) was derived upon this occaſion afterward. And thus he that before had called the Earl of Warwick the Black dog of Ardeine, was thus by the faid Dog worried, as ye have heard, &c. His carcaſs the Dominick Friers of Oxford had in their Monaſtry Interred the ſpace of two years; but after that the King cauſed the ſaid carcaſs to be taken up and buried within his own Mannor of Langley.

After this great diſturbance began to riſe between the King and the Lords; who having their power lying about Dunſtable, ſent ſtout meſſage unto the King at London, to have their former Acts confirmed. Gilbert Earl of Glocester the Kings Nephew (who neither did hold againſt the King, nor yet againſt the Nobles) with the Biſhops and Prelates of the Realm, went between both parties with great diligence to make unity. At which time alſo came two Cardinals from Rome, with Letters ſent unto them from the Pope. The Nobles anſwered to the Meſſage of the Cardinals, lying then at St. Albans; that as touching themſelves, they ſhould be at all times welcome to them; but as touching their Letters (foraſmuch as they were men unlettered, and only brought up in war and feats of arms) therefore they cared not for ſeeing the ſame. Then meſſage was ſent again, that they would grant at leaſt but to ſpeak with the Popes Legates, which purpoſely came for the intent to fet quiet and unity in the Realm. They anſwered again, that they had Biſhops both godly and learned, by whoſe counſel they would be led only, and not by any ſtrangers, who knew not the true cauſe of their commotion. And therefore they ſaid preciſely, that they would have no foreigners or aliens to be doers in their buſineſs and affairs pertaining to the Realm. Yet notwithſtanding through the mediation of the Archbiſhop, and of the Earl of Glocester, the matter at length was ſo taken up, that the Barons ſhould reſtore to the King or his Attorney of St. Albans all the Treaſure, Horſes, and Jewels of the foreſaid Gaveſton taken at Newcaſtle, and ſo their requeſts ſhould be granted. And ſo was the matter at that time compoſed.

The Nobles of England cauſe not for the Popes Legates. The Popes Legats are not admitted of the Nobles of England.

Shortly upon the ſame, Iſabel the Queen was delivered of a fair Child at Windſor, whom Lewis the French Kings Son (the Queens Brother, with other Frenchmen there preſent) would have to be called by the name of the French King; but the Engliſh Lords were contrary, willing him to be called by the name of Edward his Father. At the birth of which Edward great rejoycing was through all the land, and eſpecially the King his Father ſo much joyed thereat, that he began daily more and more to forget the ſorrow and remembrance of Gaveſtons death, and was after that more agreeable to the will of his Nobles.

Thus peace and concord between them began to be in a {Anno 1312.} good towardneſs; which more and more might have been confirmed in wearing out of time, had not Satan the Author and ſower of diſcord, ſtirred up his inſtruments (certain Frenchmen, Titvillers and Make-bates about the King) by which ceaſed not in carping and depraving the Nobles, to inflame the Kings hatred and grudg againſt them. By the exciting of whom the old quarrels being renewed afreſh, the King in his Parliament called upon the ſame, began to charge the foreſaid Barons and Nobles with fedition and rebellion, and for ſlaying Peter Gaveſton. Neither were the Nobles leſs ſtout again in defending their cauſe, declaring that they in ſo doing had deſerved rather thanks and favour with the King than any diſpleaſure, in vanquiſhing ſuch a publick enemy of the Realm who not only had ſpoiled and waſted the Kings ſubſtance, but alſo raiſed much diſturbance in the Realm. And foraſmuch as they had begun with the matter to their ſo great labours and expences; they would proceed further, they ſaid, not ceaſing till they ſaw an end thereof. To be ſhort, great threats there were on both parts, and a foul matter like to have followed. But again, through the diligent mediation of the Queen, the Prelates, and the foreſaid Earl of Glocester, the matter was taken up and brought to reconcilement upon theſe conditions, that the Lords and Barons openly in Weſtminſter-Hall ſhould humble themſelves before the King, and aſk pardon there of their doings, and every man there to receive a Letter of the Kings pardon for their indemnity, and aſſurance. And ſo paſſed over that year, within the which year died Robert Winchelſey Archbiſhop of Canterbury. In whoſe room Thomas Cobham was Elected by the King and Church of Canterbury to ſucceed; but the Pope ſtraſtring the Election, placed Walter Reinold Biſhop of Worceſter.

Mediation for making peace.

The King reconciled again with his Nobles.

In the mean time the Scots hearing this civil diſcord in {Anno 1313.} the Realm, began to be buſie, and to rebell of new through the means of Robert Bruis; who being chaſed out of Scotland by King Edward the Firſt, as is above premiſed, into Norway, was now returned again into Scotland; where he demeaned himſelf in ſuch fort to the Lords there, that in ſhort proceſs he was again made King of the Realm, and warred ſo ſtrongly upon them that took the Kings part, that he wan from them many Caſtles and ſtrong holds, and invaded the borders of England. The King hearing this, aſſembleth a great power, and by water entreth the Realm of Scotland. Againſt whom incountred Robert de Bruis with his Scots at Eſtrivelin, where was fought a ſtrong battel; in the end whereof the Engliſhmen were diſcomfited, and ſo eagerly purſued by the Scots, that many of the Noblemen were ſlain, as the Earl of Glocester, Sir Robert Clifford, Sir Edmund Manle, with other Lords to the number of forty two, and Knights and Barons 227, beſides men of name, which were taken priſoners; of common Souldiers ten thouſand, or after the Scottiſh Story, fifty thouſand ſlain. After which time Sir Robert Bruis raigned as King of Scotland.

About which time, and in the next year died Pope Clement, who keeping in the Realm of France, never came to the See of Rome; after whoſe death the Papacy ſtood void two years.

{Anno 1314.}

The Scots after this exalted with pride and fierceneſs, invaded the Realm of England ſo fore, killing and deſtroying man, woman, and child; that they came winning and waſting the North parts as far as to York. Beſides this, ſuch dearth of victuals, and penury of all things ſo oppreſſed the whole land, ſuch murrain of Sheep and Oxen; as men were fain to eat Horſe-fleſh, Dogs, Cats, Mice, and what elſe they could get. Moreover ſuch a price of Corn followed withal, that the King hardly had bread for the ſuſtentation of his own houſhold. Moreover, ſome there were that did ſtal children and eat them, and many for lack of victual died. And yet all this amended not the King of his evil living.

Miſerable dearth and famine in England.

The

A description of an horrible famine in the Realm of England.

The cauſe and origen of this great dearth, was partly the wars and diſſention between them and the Scots, whereby a great part of the land was waſted. But the chiefeſt cauſe was the unſeaſonable ſeaſon of the year, which contrary to the common courſe, was ſo moiſt with abundance of rain, that the grain laid in the earth could have no ripening by heat of the Sun, nor grow to any nourihment. Whereby they that had to eat could not be ſatisfied with fatority, but eſtſoons were as hungry again. They that had nothing were driven to ſteal and rob; the rich were conſtrained to avoid and diminiſh their houſholds; the poor for famine died. And not ſo much the want of victual, which could not be gotten, as the unwholſomeneſs of the ſame when it was taken, ſo conſumed the people, that the quick were not ſufficient to bury the dead. For the corruption of the meats, by reaſon of the unſeaſonableneſs of the ground, was ſo infectious that many died of the Flux, many of hot Fevers, divers of the Peſtilence. And not only the bodies of men thereby were infected, but alſo the beaſts by the putrifaction of the herbs and graſs fell into as great a murrain, ſo far forth as that the eating of fleſh was ſuſpect and thought contagious. A Quarter of Corn and Salt, from the month of Iune to September grew from thirty ſhillings unto forty ſhillings. The fleſh of Horſes was then precious to the poor. Many were driven to ſteal fat Dogs, and to eat them. Some were ſaid in ſecret corners to eat their own Children. Some would ſteal other mens Children to kill them and eat them privily. The priſoners and thieves that were in bands, for hunger fell upon ſuch as were newly brought in unto them, and tearing them in pieces did eat them half alive. Briefly, this extream penury had extinguiſhed and conſumed (as it was thought) the greateſt part of the people of the land, had not the King by the advice of the Londoners given forth Commandment through all his land, that no Corn ſhould at that time be turned to the making of drink. Such a Lord is God, thus able to do where he is diſpoſed to ſtrike. And yet we miſerable creatures in our wealth and abundance will not ſurceaſe daily to provoke his terrible Majeſty.

Ex Chron. Tho. Wolſ. in vita Edwardi 2.

But let us return to the order again of our Story. After the Scots had thus plagued miſerably (as ye have heard) the Realm of England; they invaded alſo Ireland, where they kept and continued war the ſpace of four years. But in fine, the Iriſhmen (by aid ſent to them from England) quit themſelves ſo well that they vanquiſhed the Scots, and ſlew Edward Bruſ, and many of the Nobles of Scotland, with many other, and drove the reſidue out of the Country.

The Scots driven out of Ireland.

{ Anno 1317. } The King about the twelfth year of his raign, aſſembled a new Hoſt, and went into Scotland, where he laid ſiege to Barwick. But in the mean time the Scots by another way, invaded the Merchants of Yorkſhire, robbing and harrying the Country, and they ſlew much people. Wherefore the Archbiſhop of York, and other Abbots, Priors, Clerks, with Husbandmen, aſſembled a great company, and gave them battel at a place called Mitton, where the Engliſhmen were diſcomfited, and many of them ſlain; but the Archbiſhop and the Abbot of Selbie, and divers others there eſcaped. But becauſe there were ſo many Spiritual men there ſlain, it was called therefore the White Battel. By reaſon whereof the King hearing of this, and partly becauſe Winter did approach, was conſtrained to break up his fiege, and ſo returned not without great danger.

The two Spenſers.

At this time the two Spenſers (Sir Hugh Spenſer the Father, and Hugh Spenſer the Son) were of great power in England, and by the favour of the King practiſed ſuch cruelty, and bear themſelves ſo haughtily and proud, that no Lord of this land might gain-ſay them in any thing that they thought good, whereby they were in great hatred and indignation both with the Nobles, and the Commons, no leſs than Peter Gaveſton was before.

Two Legates ſent from Rome. The Popes pillage. The Popes Legates ſpoiled of all their in gotten treaſure. The Popes Curſe contemned of the Scots.

Soon upon this came two Legates from Rome, ſent by Pope Iohn the 22*th*, under pretence to ſet agreement between England and Scotland; who for their charges and expences, required of every Spiritual perſon four pence in every Mark. But all their labour nothing availed; for the Legates as they were in the North parts (about Derlington) with their whole family and train, were robbed and diſpoiled of their Horſes, Treaſure, Apparel, and what elſe they had, and with an evil favoured handling, retired back again to Dureſme, where they ſtaid a while waiting for an anſwer from the Scots. But when neither the Popes Legacy nor his curſe would take any place with the Scots, they returned again to London, where they firſt Excommunicated and curſed as black as foot all thoſe arrogant and preſumptuous robbers of Northumberland. Secondly, for ſupplying of the loſſes received, they exacted of the Clergy to be given and paid unto them eight pence in every Mark. But the Clergy thereunto would not agree, ſeeing it was their own covetouſneſs (as they ſaid) that made them venture farther than they needed. Only they were contented to relieve them after four pence in a Mark, as they promiſed before, further they would not grant. Whereof the King being advertiſed, and taking part with his Clergy, directed his Letters to the ſaid Legates in form as followeth:

{ King Edwa. } The Clergy of England denieth to contribute to the ſaid Legion.

A prohibition againſt ſuch ſtrange Taxes and Impoſitions.

R*EX Magiſtro Rigando de Aſſerio, Canonico Aireli-an. Salutem*, &c.

In Engliſh thus:

The King to Maſter Rigand of Aſſerio, Canon of Aurelia, Greeting: We have taken notice of the clamors and lamentable petitions of the ſubjects of our Realm, perceiving by the ſame that you practiſe many and ſundry inconveniences very ſtrange, never heretofore accuſtomed, nor heard of in this our Realm, as well againſt the Clergy and Eccleſiaſtical perſons, as againſt the Laity, even to the utter oppreſſion and impoveriſhing of many our liege people, which if it ſhould be winked at (as God forbid) may in proceſs of time be occaſion of greater perils to inſue; whereat we are (not without cauſe) moved, and not a little grieved: We forbid you therefore, that from henceforth you practiſe not, ne preſume in any caſe to attempt any thing within this our Realm, either againſt our Clergy or Laity, that may any manner of way tend to the prejudice of our Royal perſon, or of our Crown and dignity Regal. Witneſs the King at Windſor the ſixth day of February, in the 11*th* year of his Raign.

Per Concilium.

Likewiſe in the ſame year the ſaid King writeth to the ſame effect to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as followeth: Rex venerabili in Chriſto Patri, W. eadem gra. Archiepiſcopo Cant. &c.

In Engliſh thus:

The King to the Reverend Father in God, W. by the ſame Grace Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of England, Greeting: We are credibly informed by many our ſubjects, that certain ſtrange Impoſitions, never heard of before within any our Dominions, upon Lands and Tenements, Goods and Cattels, concerning the teſtaments and caſes of Matrimony, are brought into our Realm to be executed upon our ſubjects by you or ſome others; which if it ſhould proceed to execution, would manifeſtly tend to the diſheriſon, and impeachment of our Crown and dignity Regal, and the intolerable damage of the ſubjects of our Realm, to the due preſervation of the which you are bound by ſolemn Oath of Allegiance. We therefore command and ſtraitly charge you, that you proceed not in any caſe to the execution of any ſuch Letters, either in your own perſon, or by any other, nor yet preſume by colour of the ſame to attempt any thing that may be prejudicial or hurtful to our Crown or dignity Regal. And if you or any other in your name have done or attempted any thing by colour of the ſame, that ye call back and revoke the ſame forthwith without delay. Witneſs the King at Shene the 17*th* of February, the 11*th* year of his Raign.

Per ipſum Regem.

The like Letters in effect were directed to the Archbiſhop of York, and to every other Biſhop through England. By force of which Letters the greedy Legates being refrained of their ravening purpoſe, taking what they could get, and ſetling a peace (ſuch as it was) between the King and the Earl of Lancaſter, were fain to pack.

Beſides the reſtraint above mentioned for ſtrange Impoſitions, there followed moreover the ſame year the Kings prohibition for the gathering of Peter-pence, directed to the foreſaid Legate, the tenour whereof followeth.

A

{ King Edwa. }

A Prohibition of Peter-pence.

Rex Magiſtro Rigando, &c. In Engliſh thus:

A Prohibition for paying the Popes Peter-pence.

The King to Maſter Rigand of Aſſerio Canon of Aurelia, Greeting. We are given to underſtand that you do demand and purpoſe to levy the Peter-peny within our Realm, otherwiſe than the ſaid Peter-peny hath been heretofore accuſtomed to be levied in the time of any our Progenitors, exerciſing herein grievous cenſures Eccleſiaſtical to the great annoyance and damnifying of the Subjects of our Realm: for preſent remedy whereof our loving ſubjects have made their humble ſupplication unto us. And for as much as the ſaid Peter-peny hath been hitherto accuſtomed to be gathered and levied upon Lands and Tenements within our Realm after a due manner and form: we not willing that any ſuch unaccuſtomed impoſitions ſhall in any wiſe be made upon the Lands and Tenements of any our ſubjects within our Dominions, prohibite you, upon grievous pain, ſtraitly charging that in no wiſe you preſume to exact, gather, or levy the ſaid Peter-peny in any other form or manner than hath been heretofore accuſtomed to be gathered and levied in the time of our Progenitors, or ſince the beginning of our Reign until further order be taken in our high Court of Parliament by the advice of the Nobles and Peers of our Realm, ſuch as may well be taken without prejudice of our Crown and damage of ſubjects. Witneſs the King at Weſtminſter the firſt day of March.

Per ipſum Regem & Concilium.

To the ſame effect Letters were directed to the Archbiſhops, Deans, Archdeacons, and the reſt of the Clergy.

Touching the firſt original of which Peter-pence though mention be made before in the life of King Offa and others; yet to make a brief recapitulation of the ſame, according to the rolls as they come to our hands, thus it followeth, De Denariis beati Petri ſic ſcriptum, &c. That is to ſay, It is thus found recorded in Ancient Chronicles touching the Peter-pence of Saint Peter, Anno. 187. Offa King of Mercia travelled up to Rome in the time of Pope Adrian the firſt, to obtain the Canonizing of Saint Albane. And having performed his Vow, viſiting the Colledge of Engliſh Students which then florihed in Rome, he did give to the maintenance of the Scholars of England, Students in Rome, one peny out of every Tenement within this Realm that had land belonging to the ſame, amounting to the yearly value of thirty pence. And for this his munificence he obtained of the Pope Adrian, that no perſon within his Dominion publick, repenting him for not performing enjoyned penance, ſhould therefore be baniſhed.

Concerning which Peter-pence, it is touched in the Laws of King Edward the Saint, Chap. 10. when, where, of whom, under what pain this Peter-pence muſt be gathered, being but the Kings meer Almes, as is aforeſaid. And thus much touching Peter-pence. Now for other Letters writen by the King to the Pope, the ſame year, for other matters, as craving the Popes help in compounding the variance betwixt the two Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, for bearing the Croſs from the one Province to the other, thus it followeth: that the King grievoully complaineth, quod tantæ diſſentiones. i. e. that ſuch hurly burly and uproar aroſe thereof, that they could not meet together in one place through the great multitude of Armed men aſſiſtants on both parts in the very bearing of the Croſs, to the great diſturbance of the People.

Now after this long digreſſion to turn to our Engliſh matters again, mention was made before of the variance between the King and the Earl of Lancaſter, and of a peace concluded between them. But this peace did not long endure: which the King by his own default did break; ſending to the Scots a privy Meſſenger (which was taken in the way) to have the foreſaid Earl of Lancaſter, by their means made away.

The pride of the Spenwrought daily both great diſhonour to the King, and hinderance to the Commonweal; in ſuch wiſe confpired againſt them, that gathering their power together, they made a requeſt to the King, that he ſhould remove the Spenſers from his perſon. For the which there was a Parliament called at London, and the Barons came together with a great company. At the which Parliament both the Spenſers were baniſhed the Land for term of their lives: and they took Shipping at Dover, and ſo voided the Land. But it was not long after, but the King (contrary to the Ordinance made in the Parliament) ſent for the Spenſers again, and ſet them in High Authority: and they ruled all things after their ſenſual appetites, nothing regarding Juſtice nor the Commonwealth. Wherefore, the Barons intending again to reform this miſchief, aſſembled their powers: But the King (making ſo haſty ſpeed, and gathering his people ſo ſoon) was ſtronger than they, and purſued them ſo in divers places, that the Barons not fully joyned together (ſome flying, and ſome departing to the King, ſome ſlain by the way) in the end were chaſed ſo eagerly, that in ſhort ſpace, the foreſaid Thomas Earl of Lancaſter was taken and put to death with the reſt of the Nobility, to the number of two and twenty of the greateſt Men, and chiefeſt Captains of this Realm. Of whom only Thomas Earl of Lancaſter, for the Nobility of his Blood, was beheaded: All the other Lords and Barons, were hanged, drawn, and quartered, &c. Which bloody unmercifulnes of the King toward his natural ſubjects, not only procured to him great diſhonor within the Realm, but alſo turned afterward to his much more greater harm and hindrance, in his foreign Wars againſt the Scots: and finally wrought his utter confuſion, and overthrow of his Seat Royal, as in the ſequel of his end, appeared, and worthily.

Twenty two of the greateſt Nobility of the Realm put to death by the King.

{ Anno 1322. } The cruel rejoycing of the King.

After the ruine of theſe Noble Perſonages, the King as though he had gotten a great conqueſt (who then indeed began firſt to be overcome and conquered himſelf, when he ſo oppreſſed and cut off the ſtrength and ſinews of his Chivalry) began to triumph not a little with the Spenſers; and to count himſelf ſure as though he were in Heaven, to exercife more ſharp ſeverity upon his ſubjects, trufting and committing all to the counſel only of the foreſaid Spenſers: Inſomuch, that both the Queen and the reſidue of the other Nobles could little be regarded. Who, as they {Anno 1323.} grew ever in more contempt with the King; so they increased in more hatred against the Spensers: but strength and ability lacked to work their will.

The next year the King being at York, after he had made Sir Hugh Spenser Earl, and Sir John Baldock a Man of evil Fame, to be Chancellor of England; he then arreared a mighty Host against the Scots. But for lack of skilful guiding, expert Captains, and for want specially of due provision of Victuals necessary for such an Army, the great multitude, to the number reckoned of an hundred thousand (wandring through Scotland, from whence the Scots had conveyed all their goods and cattel into mountains, and marshes) were so pinched and starved with famine, that a great part of the Army, there presently perished; and they that returned home, as soon as they tasted of Meats, escaped not. The King not having resistance of his Enemies, and seeing such a destruction of his subjects, was forced without any act done to retire. But in his retiring, Sir James Duglas and the Scots having knowledge thereof, pursued him in such wise, that they slew many English-men, and had well neer taken the King himself. After which distress, the King, thus beaten and wearied with the Scots, would fain have joyned in Truce with the Scots: But because they stood Excommunicate by the Pope, he standing in fear thereof, defired licence to intreat with them of peace, the said Excommunication notwithstanding: which licence being obtained, a treaty was appointed by Commissioners on both parts at Newcastle at the Feast of Saint Nicholas next ensuing; and so Truce was taken for 12. years. Whereupon this is to be noted by the way (gentle Reader) not unworthy of observation, That whereas in former times, and especially of the late King Edward the first, so long as the Scots were under the Popes Blessing, and we in displeasure with his Holiness for dealing with them, so long we prevailed mightily against them, even to the utter subversion in manner of their whole Estate. But now so soon as the Pope took our part, and the Scots were under his Curse and Excommunication, then gat they greater victories against us, than at any time either before or sithence, insomuch as being before not able to defend themselves against us, they now pursued us into the bowels of our Country.

The King purposing to erect a House of Friers Augustines, within the Town of Boston in Lincolnshire, first payed the Popes licence in that behalf.

Polydorus Virgilius among other Histories of our English Nation which he intermedleth withal, prosecuting also the Acts and life of this present King, and coming to write of the Queens going over into France, inferreth much variety and diversity of Authors and story-writers concerning the cause thereof. Otherwise, he giveth himself no true certainty of that matter, neither yet toucheth he that which was the cause indeed. By reason partly, that he being an Italian and a Foreigner, could not understand our English Tongue: And partly again, being but one Man, neither could he alone come to the sight of all our Latin Authors. One I am sure came not to his perusing, an old ancient Latin History fair written in Parchment (but without name) belonging to the Library of William Cary Citizen of London. In which Story, the truth of this matter, without all ambiguity, is there fully and with all Circumstances expressed, as here briefly is inserted.

{Anno 1324.} The King of England had been divers and sundry times cited up to the Court of France, to do Homage to the French King, for the Dukedom of Aquitain, and other Lands which the King then held of France. Which Homage, because the King of England refused to tender, the French King began to enter all such possessions as the King then did hold in France: whereupon great contention and conflicts there were on both sides. At length in this year now present, a Parliament was called at London; Where (after much alteration) at last it was determined; that certain should be sent over, to wit, the Bishops of Winchester, and Norwich, and the Earl of Richmond, to make agreement betwixt the two Kings. For the better help and fortification of which agreement, it was thought good afterward, that Queen Isabel, Sister to Charles then the French King, should be sent over. Where is to be noted first, that the Queens Lands, and possessions and Castles a little before, upon the breach between the French King and the King of England, were seised into the Kings hands, and the Queen put unto her Pension, &c. Thus the Queen being sent over with a few to attend upon her, only Sir John Cromwel Baron, and four Knights, took their passage into France: By whose mediation, it was there concluded, that the King of England (if he would not himself come to do his Homage) he should give to his Son Edward the Dukedom of Aquitain, and the Earldom of Pontine, and so he to come to make his Homage to the King, and to possess the same. This being in France concluded, was sent over by safflage to the King of England, with the Kings Letters Patents adjoyned for the safe Conduct of him or of him Son. Upon this, deliberation was taken in the Council of England. But the two Spensers fearing either to take the Seas with the King, or else without the King to remain behind, for fear of the Nobles, so appointed, that Prince Edward the Kings Son was sent, which happened after to their utter desolation, as it followed. For all things being quieted and ordered according to the agreement in France, King Edward of England, soon after Michaelmas, sendeth for his Wife and his Son again out of France. But the sending home most part of her family, refuseth her self to return. For what cause it is not fully certain, whether for indignation that her possessions and lands were seized to the King, as is before premised; or whether for fear and hatred of the Spensers, as is likely; or else for love and familiarity of Sir Roger Mortimer. For here is to be noted, that the said Sir Roger Mortimer, with divers other of the Barons part, which had broken prison in England, were fled before into France and now reforted unto the Queen. The King seeing this, giveth forth in Proclamation, and limiteth a certain day to the Queen and his Son to return; or else to be proclaimed Traytors to the King and to the Realm. Notwithstanding, the Queen perisiting in her purpose, denieth to return, unless the other Nobles which were fled might be permitted safely also to return with her. Whereupon, the King immediatly caused them both to be proclaimed Traytors, and all them that took their parts.

Here then began great hatred between King and King, between the King and the Queen, much preparation of War, great spoiling on the Sea, much sending between the Pope and them; but that would not serve. Then the King (by the Counsel of the Spensers) feandeth privily to procure the death of the Queen and of his Son; which should be wrought by the execution of the Earl of Richmond, the Queens familiar. But as the Lord would, that imagination was prevented and utterly frustrate. Albeit, the Queen yet notwithstanding, (whether misdoubting what corruption of Money might do in the Court of France: or whether the French King, being threatned by the King of England, and by the Pope durst not detain her) removed from thence, and was received, with Edward her Son, Joyoully and Honorably in the Court or Country of the Earl of Henawde. Where by means of such as were about her, a marriage was concluded between the said Edward her Son being of the age of fourteen years, and Philip the foresaid Earls Daughter. When this was noised in England, divers Men of Honour and name came over to the Queen. And soon after the Earl of Haynawde prepared a Crew of five hundred men of Arms to set over the young Prince with his Mother into England. Of this the Fame sprang shortly through the Realm. Wherefore the King in all defensible ways made provision to have the Havens and Ports of his Land surely kept, to resist the landing of his Enemies. On the contrary side the Queen with no less preparation provideth all things to her expedition necessary. Who when she saw her time, speeding her self to the Sea Coast with Prince Edward her Son, Lord Edmund Earl of Kent the Kings Brother, Sir Roger Mortimer, the Lord Wygmore and other Exiles of England, accompanied also with the foresaid Henawders, of whom Sir John Henawde the Earls Brother was Captain, having with her of English-men and Strangers, the number of 2757. Souldiers: She took shipping in those parts and had the Wind so favourable, that they landed in England at a Port called Orwel befide Harwich in Suffolk, in the Dominion of the Earl Marshal, the month of September. To whom after her landing reforted Earl Marshal, the Earl of Leicester, with other Barons, Knights, and Bishops {KING Edw. 2} Bishops also; namely of Lincoln, Hereford, Duresme, and Ely. The Archbishop of Canterbury, though he came not himself, yet sent his aid and money. Thus the Queen, well furnished with plenty both of men and victual, setteth forward toward London: So that the further she came, the more her number daily increased, and the Kings power contrarily decreased; insomuch that, as mine Author affirmeth, not one almost in all the Realm could be hired with any wages to fight on the Kings behalf against the Queen, neither did the Queens Army hurt any Man or Child, either in goods or any other thing, by the way.

At the arriving of the Queen, the King was in London, which first would not believe it to be true. Afterward (seeing and perceiving how it was) he asketh help of the Londoners. Who after mature advisement, rendred this answer to the King again: That as touching the King, the Queen, and their Son (the lawful Heir of the Kingdom) they were ready with all duty and service, to Honor and Obey. As for Strangers and Traytors to the Realm, they would receive none such within their City gates. Furthermore, to go out of the City to fight, that they said they would not, unless it were so, that according to the Liberties of their City, they might return home again before Sun set. The King hearing this answer (which liked him not well) fortifieth the Tower of London with men and victual, committing the Custody thereof to John Ealtham his younger Son, and to the Wife of Hugh Spenser his Niece. And leaving Walter Stapleton Bishop of Exeter behind him, to have the Rule of the City of London, he himself bearing daily the great recourse of the people that drew to the Queen, for more safegard to himself, fled with a small Company Wetward toward Wales. But before his departing from London, he caused a Proclamation to be made, wherein all and singular persons were charged, upon forfeit of life and goods, every Man with all his power to rise and invade the rebels and destroy them all, only the life of the Queen, his Son, and his Brother reserved. Also that no Man upon pain Pretaxate, should help, sesue, or relieve the said rebels, with goods, victuals, or otherwise. Item, it was also proclaimed, that whosoever would bring to the King the Head and Body of Sir Roger Mortimer, either dead or alive, should have out of the Kings Coffers a Thousand pounds.

In contrariwise, the Queen setteth forth another Proclamation, wherein it was forbidden to take or spoil violently the value of any Mans goods against the will of the Owner, under pain of losing his Finger, if it were three pence: Of his Hand, if it were six pence: Of his Head, if it were twelve pence. Moreover, whosoever would bring to the Queen the Head of Hugh Spenser the younger, Chopt off from his Body, should receive for so doing of the Queen, two Thousand pounds. This done the Queen sendeth her Letters to the City of London for aid and succor to subdue the oppressor of the Realm, to the which Letters full no answer was made. Again, she wrote the second Letter, which was then Tacked upon the Cross in Cheape, which was then called the new Cross. The Copy and Tenor of which Letter was this.

The Queens Letter.

ISabel by the Grace of God, Queen of England, Lady of Ireland, and Countess of Pountife. And We Edward the first Son of the King of England, Duke of Guayn, Earl of Chester, of Pountife, and of Mountfrel, to the Maior and all the Communalty of London, send Greeting. For as much as we have before this time sent to you by our Letters, and how we come into this Land in good Array, and good manner, for the profit of Holy Church, and of our right dear Lord and King, and all the Realm, with all our might and strength to keep and maintain the Realm, as all good people ought to do: and upon that we prayed you and desired you that ye would be helping to us for the health and profit of the Realm; and we have had none answer of you, nor know not your will in that part. Wherefore we send to you again, and pray you, and charge you, that ye bear you so toward us, that ye have nor make us no cause to grieve, but that ye be helping to us in all the ways that you may. And wot you well in certain, that we and also those that come with us into this Realm, intend nothing to be done, but what shall be pleasing to God, and the common profit to all the Realm: nor any thing else, but to destroy the Spensers, Enemies to the Realm, as ye well know. Wherefore we pray and charge you in the Faith that you owe to our Lord the King, to the Crown and to us, and upon all that we may forfeit, that if Hugh Spenser, both the Father and the Son our Enemies, come within your power, that ye cause them hastily to be taken, and safely kept, till we have ordained for them our will, as ye desire Profit and Honour of us and of the Realm. Understanding well, if it be so that ye do our desire and prayer, we shall the more be beholden to you. And also we shall do you profit and worship of that you send us hastily word again of your will. Given at Baldock the sixth day of October.

These aforesaid Letters being published and perused, the Bishop of Exeter, to whom (as ye heard) was committed the Rule of the City, sent to the Maior for the Keyes of the Gates, using so sharp words in the Kings name, that variance began to kindle between him and the Citizens; so far forth that the Commons in their rage took the foresaid Bishop and beheaded him and two of his Houshold at the Standard in Cheape. Then the King went to Bristow, and ordained Sir Hugh Spenser the Father there to keep the Castle and the Town; and the King with Hugh Spenser the Son, and Sir Robert Baldock Chancellor, and the Earl of Arundel went into Wales. And the Queen so pursued them, that first they took the Town yielded up to her; Then they took Sir Hugh Spenser the Father, whom being drawn and torn, they at last hanged up at Bristow in Chains of Iron. As the King was thus flying, the Queen caused to be proclaimed through her Army, that the King should come and appear, and so receive his Kingdom again, if he would be comfortable to his Liege Subjects. Who when he did not appear, Prince Edward his Son was proclaimed high Keeper of the Realm.

In the mean time Henry Earl of Lancaster, and Brother to the good Earl Thomas which before was beheaded, also Lord William Souch, and Master Edward Spenser by the Queen into Wales to pursue the King; and there they took him and sent him to the Castle of Kenelworth: and took Hugh Spenser the Son, and Sir Robert Baldock Chancellor, and Sir John Earl of Arundel, and brought them all to the Town of Hereford. And anon after Hugh Spenser the Son was drawn and hanged on a Gallows Fifty Foot high, and after beheaded and quartered, whose quarters were sent into four quarters of the Realm. Sir John of Arundel was beheaded, Sir Robert Baldock was put in Newgate at London, where shortly after he Pined away and died among the Thieves. This done, a Parliament was Assembled at London, from whence message was sent to the King, that if he would resign up his Crown, his Son should have it after him: If not, another should take it to whom the lot would give it. Whereupon the King, being constrained to yield up his Crown to his Son, was kept in prison, and after had to Barkley; where he is said to take great repentance. After this message being sent, and the King half condescending thereunto (the Parliament notwithstanding prosecuting and going forward) there was a Bill exhibited and put up, containing certain Articles against the said King, then in prison in the Castle of Barkley, touching his misbehaviour and imprudent governing of the Realm: which Bill openly before the Lords and Commons, by the Speaker of the Parliament House was read. After long consultation thereof amongst themselves touching those Articles, and also for the better and more circumspect Government of the Realm from that time forth: it was consulted and agreed upon by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons there Assembled, that the said Edward was a Man not meet to be their King, nor from that time forth any more to bear the Crown Royal or Title of a King: But that Edward his Eldest Son, who there in the same Court of high Parliament was present, as he was rightful Heir and Inheitor thereunto, so should he be Crowned King thereof in his Fathers stead, with these conditions thereunto annexed, That he should take wife, Sage, and true Counsellors unto him, that the Realm might be better and more circumspectly

These and other things thus finished and ended, the Parliament breaketh up, and all things necessary to the Coronation of a Prince appertaining were in speedy wise prepared whereof more hereafter (Christ willing) shall be specified.

In the mean time as touching the King which was yet in prison, it is thought by some Writers, that the next year following by the means of Sir Roger Mortimer he was miserably slain, with a Spit (as is said) being thrust up into his body, and was buried at Gloucester, after he had Reigned nineteen years.

In the time and Reign of this King, the Colledge of Cambridge, called Michael House, was founded and builded by Sir Henry Stanton Knight, to the use and increase of learning, a thing in a Commonwealth very profitable and necessary to be had; the want and need whereof, many sundry times, is sooner felt in this Realm of ours and other Realms abroad, than is the discommodity thereof of most Men commonly understood.

About the same time also was Nicolaus de Lyra, which wrote the ordinary Glosa of the Bible. Also Gulielmus Ockam a Worthy Divine, and of a right sincere Judgment, as the times then would either give or suffer.

In the tractation of this Kings History, before was declared what grudge did kindle in the Hearts of the Barons against the King, for revoking such Acts and Customs, as had been before in the Parliament established, both for Peter Gaveston, and for the two Spensers. Also what severe punishment the King did execute upon them for the same in such cruel and rigorous sort, that as he spared none of them, whom he could there find; so he never ceased all his life after to enquire out, and to be revenged of all such, as had been in any part, or consenting to that matter. For the which his extream and implacable Tyranny, he was in such hatred of all the people; that as he said, he could not find one of all the Commons to take his part, when need required. Among all other which were for that matter troubled, was one Adam Bishop of Hereford: who being impeached of Treason with other more, was at length arrested to appear and answer to that which should be to him Objected. Many things there were laid against him, for taking part with them that rose against the King, with matters more, and Haynous rebukes, &c. Whereunto the Bishop a great while answered nothing.

Ex Tho. Walsing.

At length the Bishop claiming the Liberties and Privileges of the Church, answered to the King in this Form. The due Reverence of your Princly Majesty ever saved, Ego Sanctæ Ecclesiæ Dei Minister humilis, membrum ejus, & Episcopus consecratus, licet indignus, ad tam arduta nequeo respondere, nec debeo, absque D. After which words by him pronounced, the Archbishop and other Bishops with him were ready to make humble Intercession for him to the King, and did. But when the King would not be won nor turned with any supplication; the said Bishop, together with the Archbishop and the Clergy, coming with their Crosses, took him away, Challenging him for the Church, without any more answer making; Charging moreover, under the Censures of the Church and Excommunication, none to presume to lay any further hands upon him. The King, moved with this boldness and stoutness of the Clergy commandeth notwithstanding to proceed in Judgment, and the Jury of twelve Men to go upon the inquiry of his Cause: who finding and pronouncing the Bishop to be Guilty, the King caused immediatly all his goods and possessions to be confiscate unto himself: Moreover, he made his Plate and all his Houshold Provision to be thrown out of his House into the Street; but yet he remained so still under the protection and defence of the Archbishop &c.

This Archbishop was Walter Winchelsey, after whom succeeded Simon Mepham in the same See of Canterbury, Anno 1327. Ex Thom. Walsingham.

{KING Edw. 3. Simon Mepham Archbishop of Canterbury.

After Pope Clement the Fifth, by whose decease the Romish See stood vacant (as ye have heard) two years and three months, next was Elected Pope John the two and twentieth, a Cistercian Monk, who sate in that Papacy eighteen years. He was stout and inflexible, given so much to the heaping of riches, that he proclaimed them Hereticks, which taught that Christ and his Apostles had no possessions of their own in this world. At this time was Emperor Ludovicus Bavarus, a worthy Man; who with this Pope, and other that followed him, had no less contention, than had Fredericus before mentioned in the time of King Henry the Third. Insomuch that this contention and variance continued the space of four and twenty years. The cause and first origine of this Tragical conflict, rose upon the constitution of Clement the fifth Predecessor to this Pope; by whom it was ordained, as is afore mentioned, that Emperors, by the German Princes elected, might be called Kings of the Romans, but might not enjoy the Title or right of the Empire, to be Nominated Emperors, without their confirmation given by the Pope. Wherefore, this aforesaid Emperor, because he used the Emperial Dignity in Italy, before he was Authorised by the Pope; the said Pope therefore Excommunicated the Emperor. And notwithstanding the Emperor oftentimes did proffer himself to make entreaty of peace and concord; yet the Pope inflexible would not bend. The writings of both parts yet be extant, wherein the said Bishop doth make his vaunt, that he had full power to create and depose Kings and Emperors at his pleasure. In the same time were divers learned Men, which seeing the matter, did greatly disallowed the Bishops of Romes doings; among whom was Gulielm Ockam, whose Tractations were afterward condemned by the Pope, for writing against the Temporal Jurisdiction of their See. And another named Marsilius Patavinus, which Wrote the Book intitled Defensor Pacis, which was given into the Hands of the said Emperor; wherein the controversie of the Popes unlawful Jurisdiction in things Temporal is largely disputed, and the usurped Authority of that See set forth to the uttermost. It is found in some Writers, that a great cause of this variance first began, for that one of the Emperors Secretaries, unknown to the Emperor, in certain of his Letters had likened the Papal See to the beast rising out of the Sea in the Apocalypse. At length when the Emperor after much fine made to the Pope at Avinion, could not obtain his Coronation; coming to Rome he was there received with great Honour, where he with his Wife were both Crowned by the full consent of all the Lords and Cardinals there; and moreover, another Pope was there set up, called Nicolas the fifth. After which things done, the Pope not long after departed at Avinion in France; after whom succeeded then Benedictus the twelfth a Monk of Benedictins order, and Reigned seven years. Who by the Counsel of Philip the French King, confirmed and prosecuted the censures and cursings that John his Predecessor had published against Lewes the Emperor: Moreover, he deprived him of his Emperial Crown, and also of his Dukedom of Bavaria. The Emperor upon this cometh to Germany, and Austria. Then calling the Princes Electors, Dukes, Bishops, Nobles, and the learned in a Council at Frankford, there declared before them out of the Ancient Laws and Customs of the Empire, how it standeth only in the Princes Electors, and in none other to Elect the Kings or the Emperors of the Romans, for in both these names was no difference) so that the same Electors, in choosing the King of the Romans, did also Elect and chuse the Emperor. Which Emperor so by them constitute had lawful right, without any Information of the Apostolical See, to exercise the Administration of the Empire. And if he were lawfully Elect, he ought to be annointed of the Roman Bishop: which if he do refuse, then might he be annointed and declared Emperor and Augustus by any other Catholick Bishop thereunto appointed; (as by the old manner and custom hath been) especially seeing these Injunctions are but certain solemnities added and invented by the Bishops, only for a token of unity between the Church and Empire, to govern and defend the Faith together. Wherefore in that the Emperor swear-sweareth to the Bishop of Rome; in that is to be understood no Homage or fealty made to the Bishop, but only it is a Sacrament and a promise given to defend the faith. The which Oath or Sacrament so given, giveth no Majority to the Pope in any temporal Rule, but only bindeth the Emperor to be prest and ready to defend the Faith and Church of Christ, when need shall require obedience. Wherefore, whereas the Pope leaneth only to the Electors Authority to make the King of Romans, and taketh upon himself alone power to make the Emperor; that, as it is newly brought in and devised of late by Pope Clement the fifth, so is it contrary both to all Ancient Order, and also derogatory to the liberty and Majesty of the sacred Empire. Again, neither is that also less absurd and contrary to all right and reason, that the Pope in time of the Imperial Seat being vacant, taketh upon him to have the whole and full doings of the Empire, as lawful Emperor for the time. Which prerogative and function, by Ancient Orders of our fore-elders, should properly and only appertain to the Palatine of Rhene; the Constitution Clementine of the foresaid Pope Clement to the contrary notwithstanding. Then in the end, for his own excuse, he in the presence of them all receiveth the publick confession of his faith, to answer and purge himself of those objections laid to him by the Pope. This did the meek Emperor Ludovick in that Council. Yet all this notwithstanding, the said Emperor remained still excommunicate, till time that variance fell between this Pope Benedict and Philip the French King. Wherefore to make his party good, at least to have some friends to flee to, he began to pretend favour and absolution, rather for necessity, than for any good will to the Emperor. But not long after, this Pope died; of whom this Epitaph was made.

Ex Chron. de Gestis Pontifi. intitulatis Antonium Archiepis. Flor. Cle. mens the fifth. The trouble of Ludovick the Emperor.

After whom followed Pope Clement the sixth, a man most furious and cruel. Who renewing again the former Excommunications of his former Predecessors, caused his Letters to be set upon Church doors, wherein he threatned and denounced most terrible Thunderbolts against the said Lewis the Emperor, unless within three days he should satisfie to God and the Church, and renounce the Imperial possession of the Crown. The Emperor upon this cometh to Frankford, and there ready to stand in all things to the ordinance of the Pope, sendeth his Orators to the Court of Rome, to intreat the Pope of his favour and good will towards him. To the which Messengers the Pope answered again, that he would never pardon the Emperor, before he gave over and confessed his errors and Heresies, and resigning up his Empire to his hands, would submit himself, his children, and all his goods to the will and pleasure of the Bishop; promising that he should not receive again any part of the same, but upon his good grace, as his will should be to restore them.

Heresie of the Popes taking objected against the Emperor.

The Heresie here mentioned, which was to this Emperor objected by the Pope, was this; because (as is above touched) he used and executed the Imperial Dignity after his election, before he was of the Pope confirmed. Over and besides, the Pope sendeth to the Emperor by the said Orators a certain form of a bill contained in writing with certain conditions, which he commanded to be given to the hands of the Emperor. Here if the Emperor Lewis had as much mind to ope the Pope with dint of sword, as he lacked neither occasion nor power so to do; what blood might here have been spilt? But the good Emperor, sparing the effusion of blood, receiveth gently the bill: and not only with his Seal doth confirm it, but also sweareth to observe all the conditions thereof. Which the Pope hearing of, doth greatly marvel. But yet all this would nothing help to mollifie the modest heart of this Pharao.

The proud Heart of the Pope.

The Princes and Electors, seeing the Bill of the Articles and conditions, whereof some founded to the malicious defacing and destruction of the Empire, abhorring the wickedness thereof, defried the Emperor to stand to the defence of the Imperial Dominion, as he had begun, promising that their assistance and aid to the uttermost thereunto should not lack. Upon that other Orators were sent to Pope Clement from the Princes, desiring him to abstain from such manner of Articles conceived against the state and majesty of the Empire. The Pope surmising all this to spring from Lewis the Emperor, to the utter subversion of him, and all his posterity, on Maundy-Thursday blustreth out most black Curses against him, also reneweth all the former Processes of his Predecesse against him, as against both an Heretick and a schismatick: commanding moreover the Princes Electors to proceed in chusing a new Emperor. The Archbishop of Mentz, seeing the innocency of the Emperor, would not consent to the violating of his Majesty; wherefore he was deprived by the Pope of all his Dignities. The other Bishops Electors, as the Archbishop of Colen, which took eight thousand Marks, with the Duke of Saxony, which took two thousand Marks, being corrupted with money by John King of Boheme, elected Charls the Son of the said John; whom Pope Clement effloons in his consistory did approve. Who seeth not here what matter of war and bloodshed was ministred by the Pope between these two Emperors, if the patience of Ludovick had not been more prudent to quench the fire, than the Pope was to kindle it? Charles then the new Emperor elect, sped him to Aquisgrane, according to the custom, there to be Crowned. But by the Citizens there, and the Empress (Ludovicus Wife keeping thereabout) he was repelled. All this happened in the time and Reign of Edward the third, King of England; with whom the said Charles, with the French King, and King of Boheme, set on by the Pope, encountred in war; where the King of England had against them a noble Victory, and slew a great number of the French-men and Almains, and put Charles the new Emperor to flight. In the mean time, among the Princes and Citizens of Germany what sorrow and what complaints were against Pope Clement and those Electors, it cannot be expressed. For as they were all together at Spires Congregated in a general Assembly, so there was none among them all, that allowed the election of Charls, or that cared for the Popes process, promising all to adhere and continue faithful subjects to Ludovick, their lawful Emperor. But Ludovick remembring his Oath made before to the Popes bill, voluntarily and willingly gave over his Imperial Dignity, and went to Burgravia; where shortly after, through the procured practice of Pope Clement (as Hieronymus Marius doth write) poison was given him to drink. After the which being drunk, when he would have vomited out and could not, he took his Horse and went to hunt the Boar, thereby through the chasing and heat of his body to expel the venom. And there the good and gentle Emperor, wickedly persecuted and murdered of the Pope, fell down dead, whom I may well recount among the innocent and blessed Martyrs of Christ. For if the cause being righteous doth make a Martyr, what Papist can justly dispprove his cause or faith? If persecution joyned thereunto causeth Martyrdom, what Martyr could be more persecuted than he, who having three Popes like three Banddogs upon him, at length was devoured by the same? The Princes then hearing of his death, assembled themselves to a new Election, who refusing Charles aforesaid, elected another for Emperor, named Gunterus de Monte Nigro. Who, shortly after falling sick at Frankford, was likewise poisoned through his Physitians servant, whom the foresaid Charles had hired with money to work that feat. Gunterus tasting of the poison, although he did partly cast it up again, yet so much remained within him, as made him unable afterward to preserve that place. Wherefore for concord sake, being Counselled thereto by the Germani, he gave over his Empire to Charles. For else, great bloodshed was like to ensue. This Charles thus ambitiously aspiring to the Imperial Seat contrary to the minds of the States, and Peers of the Empire, as he did wickedly and unlawfully come by it, so was he by his ambitious guiding, the first and principal meam of the utter ruine of that Monarchy. For that he, to have his Son set up Emperor after him, convented and granted to the Princes Electors of Germany all the publick Taxes and Tributes of the Empire. Which covenant, being once made between the Emperor and them, they afterward held to fast, that they caused the Emperor to swear never to revoke or call back again the same. By reason whereof, the Tribute of the Countries of Germany, which then belonged {Anno 1325 Oriel-College and S. Mary-Hall in Oxford builded by King Ed. 2. & ſtory of the commotion between the Town and Abbey of Bury.

This foreſaid King Edward the Second in his time builded two Houſes in Oxford for good Letters, to wit, Oriel-College, and S. Mary-Hall.

Here I omit alſo by the way the furious Outrage and Conflict which happened in the time of this King, a little before his death, Anno 1236, between the Townſmen and the Abbey of Bury; wherein the Townſmen gathering themſelves together in a great multitude (for what cauſe or old grude between them, the Regiſter doth not declare) invaded and aſſact the Monaſtery. And after they had impriſoned the Monks, they rifled the goods and treaſure of the whole houſe, ſpoiling and carrying away their Plate, Money, Copes, Veſtiments, Cenſers, Croſſes, Chalices, Baſons, Jewels, Cups, Maſers, Books, with other Ornaments and Implements of the houſe, to the value uneſtimable. In the Ex Latino quodam Regiſtro. which Conflict, certain alſo on both ſides were ſlain. Such was the madneſs then of that people, that when they had gathered unto them a great concourſe of Servants and light perſons of that Country to the number of twenty thouſand, to whom they promiſed liberty and freedom; by vertue of ſuch writs which they had out of that houſe, firſt they got into their hands all their Evidences, Copies and Inſtruments, that they could find; then they took off the lead; that done, ſetting fire to the Abbey-Gates, they burnt up near the whole houſe. After that they proceeded further to the Farms and Granges belonging to the ſame Abbey, whereof they waſted, ſpoiled and burnt to the number of two and twenty Manor places in one week, tranſporting away the Corn, Horſes, Cattel, or other moveables belonging to the ſame, the price whereof is regiſtred to come to 922 l. 4 s. 11 d. beſides the valuation of other riches and treaſure within the Abbey, which cannot be eſteemed. {KING Edw. 3.}

The Abbot was all this ſpace at London in the Parliament, by whoſe procurement at length ſuch reſcue was ſent down, that 24 of the chief of the Town (ſubmitting themſelves) were committed to ward; Carts full of the Townſmen were carried to Norwich, of whom 19 were there hanged, divers convict were put to priſon. The whole Townſhip was condemned in ſeven ſcore thouſand pound to be paid for damages of the houſe. John Berton Alderman, W. Herling, with 32 Prieſts, 13 women, and 138 other of the ſaid Town were outlawed. Of whom divers, after grudging at the Abbot for breaking promiſe with them at London, did confederate themſelves together; and privily in the night coming to the Manor of Chenington, where the Abbot did lie, braſt open the Gates, who then entring in, firſt bound all his Family; and after they had robbed him of all his Plate, Jewels and Money, The Abbot robbed. they took the Abbot and ſhaved him, and ſecretly with them conveyed him away to London; where they removing him from ſtreet to ſtreet unknown, from thence had The Abbot ſtolen away to Brabant. him over Thames into Kent; at length over the Sea they ferried to Diſt in Brabant: where they a ſufficient time kept him in much penury, miſery and thraldom; till at length the matter being ſearched out, they were all Excommunicated, firſt by the Archbiſhop, then by the Pope. And at laſt it being known where he was, by his Friends The Abbot reſtored again. he was delivered and reſcued out of the Thieves hands, and finally brought home with proceſſion, and reſtored to his houſe again. And thus was that Abbey with the Abbot of the ſame (for what demerits I know not) thus vexed and afflicted about this time, as more lagely I have ſeen in their Latine Regiſter. But thus much briefly; the reſt I omit here (about the later end of this Edward the Second ceaſeth the Hiſtory of Nic. Trivet, and of Flor. Hiſt.) paſſing over to the Reign of the next King.

King Edward the Third.

{KING Edw. 3.} Concerning the Acts and ſtory of King Edward the Second, his depoſing, and cruel death, wrought by the falſe and counterfeit Letter of Sir Roger Mortimer, ſent in the Kings Name to the Keepers (for the which he was charged, drawn, and quartered,) I have written ſufficiently before, and more peradventure than the profeſſion of this Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory will well admit. Notwithſtanding, for certain reſpects and cauſes I thought ſomewhat to extend my limits herein the more; whereby both Kings, and ſuch as climb to be about them may take the better example by the ſame; the one to have the love of his Subjects, the other to learn to flee Ambition, and not bear themſelves too brag of their fortune and ſtate, how high ſoever it be: Conſidering with themſelves nothing to be in this world ſo firm and ſure, that may promiſe it ſelf any certain continuance, and is not in perpetual danger of mutation, unleſs it be faſtened by God his protection.

After the ſuppreſſion of this King, as is above expreſſed, King Edward the Third. Edward his Son was Crowned King of England, being about the years of fifteen, and reigned the ſpace of {Anno 1327. fifty years, who was a Prince of much and great Temperance; in feats of Arms very expert, and no leſs fortunate and lucky in all his Wars, than his Father was infortunate before him. For liberality alſo and clemency he was worthily commended; briefly, in all Princely vertues, famous and excellent. Concerning the memorable Acts of which Prince, done both in Wars and Peace, as how he ſubdued the Scots, had great Victories by the Sea, how he Conquered France, Anno 1332. won Calice, 1348. and tranſlated the ſtaple thither, took the French King Priſoner, and how the French Arms firſt by him were brought in, and conjoyned with the Engliſh Arms; alſo how the Order of the Garter firſt by the ſaid King was invented and How the King in his Parliament at Notingham decreed, That all ſuch in Flanders, or other where, that had ſkill in making Cloth, ſhould peaceably inhabit the Land, and be welcome. For three years before that, it was Enacted, That no Wool ſhould be tranſported over the Sea. Which was to bridle the pride of the Flemmings, who then loved better the Sacks of Wool, than the Nation of Engliſhmen. All theſe, with other noble Acts of this worthy Prince, although in other Chronicles they be fully intreated of: yet according to that order I have begun (ſaying ſomewhat of each Kings Reign, although not pertinent to our Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory) I have here inſerted the ſame, making haſte to other matters, ſhortly and compendiouſly abridging them out of divers and ſundry Authors together compacted, mentioned in this wiſe.

The Coronation and Solemnity of King Edward the Third, and all the Pomp thereof was no ſooner ended: but Robert of Bruce King of Scotland, underſtanding the State and Government of the Realm to be (as it was indeed) in the Queen, the young King, the Earl of Kent, and Sir Roger Mortimer: And that the Lords and Barons, as he was informed, did ſcarcely well agree amongſt themſelves (although he grew now in age, and was troubled with the falling diſeaſe) yet thought he this a meet time for his purpoſe, to make invaſion: hoping for as good ſucceſs and like Victory now, as but lately before he had at the Caſtle of Enfrwvelin. Whereupon, about the Feaſt of Eaſter The deſire of the King of Scots. he ſent his Embaſſadors with Heralds and Letters of Defiance to the young King Edward the Third, the Queen and the Council; declaring, that his purpoſe was with fire and ſword to enter and invade the Realm of England, &c. The King, Queen, and Council hearing this bold defiance, commanded in all ſpeedy preparation Muſters to be made throughout all the Realm: appointing to every Band Captains convenient, and at the City of York by a day aſſigned them, commanding every man to be with all their neceſſary furniture ready and throughly provided. They directed their Letters alſo with all ſpeed to Sir John of Heinault, requiring him with ſuch Souldiers and men at Arms as he might conveniently provide in Flanders, Heinault, and Brabant, to meet the King and Queen upon the Aſcenſion-day next enſuing at their City of York.

The King and Queen at York with an Army of 6000 men, ready to meet the King of Scots entring the Realm. The King and Queen made ſpeedy preparation for this Expedition: the Noblemen provided themſelves of all things neceſſary thereunto: the Engliſh Captains and Souldiers (their Bands throughly furniſhed) were ready at their appointed time and place: Sir John of Heinault, Lord Bedmount muſtering his men as fall, was ready to take ſhipping: where at Wyſant (in Engliſh Bottoms, there lying for him ready) he went aboard, and with a merry wind landed at Dover, travelling from thence by ſmall Journeys daily, till he came within three days after the Feaſt of Penteceſt to the City of York: where the King and Queen with a great Power of 60000 men (within and about the City of York) expected his coming: Before whom, in courteous wiſe he preſented himſelf, and muſtered his Troop, wherein he had to the number of 500 good men at Arms well appointed and mounted. His coming and furniture was well liked both of the King and Queen: and he was by the Harbinger appointed to be lodged, with his Houſhold retinue, in the Abbey of white Monks. To be briefe, ſuch grudge and variance fell between ſome of the Kings Souldiers and his, within the Suburbs of the Town being together lodged, that from the little to the more, whilſt the King and Queen with divers other of the Nobles, (ſtrangers and others) were at dinner, the ſaid Fray ſo greatly increaſed, that the whole Army, ſo many as were in the Town then lodged, ſtood to their defence; ſo that there were ſlain of the Engliſh Archers in ſhort ſpace by the The great fray in York. ſtrangers to the number of 300 men. Whereupon grew (after the Fray was with much difficulty both of the King and Queen ended) ſuch heart-burning between the parties; as that the number of 6000 conſpired together againſt them, thinking to have burnt them in their Lodgings; had they not been, by the great Grace of God and diſcreet handling, otherwiſe prevented and let. Whereupon the Heinaulders were fain to take and keep the field, uſing as diligent watch and ward, as though they had been among their Hoſtile Enemies. After this, the King ſet forward his Army towards Durham, and encamped himſelf near about the ſame; who alſo ſent the Lord Vifford and the Lord Mountbray to Carlile with a ſufficient Company to keep that Entrance; and alſo the Lord Marſhall of England to keep the Town of New-Caſtle with a ſufficient Company to defend the ſame, and the Country adjoyning. For well knew the King, that by one of theſe two Entries the Scots muſt paſs into England, ſtanding both of them upon the River of Tine, 24 mile diſtant. Carlile and New-Caſtle then the Keys of England. Northward Garriſons.

But the Scots privily with their Army paſſed the River betwixt the two Towns into England, few underſtanding thereof, till that the great fires which the Scots had kindled and made in England, bewrayed them: who came burning and deſtroying the Country all about as far as Stanop Park. This thing being declared to the King, he commandeth his Hoſt with all ſpeed to march towards them; which he ſo long travelled that they came in ſight each of other. The King alſo commanded the paſſages of the River to be ſo ſtraitly and narrowly guarded, that by no means the Scots could retire and have eſcaped back again into Scotland, without battel given them of the King. But the Scots, underſtanding the great Power the King was of, kept always the advantage of the Hills, retiring in the nights from one to another: that without great odds and advantage on the one ſide, and hazard to the other, the King could not ſet upon them. The Scots privily paſſe over the River of Tine, burning and ſpoiling the Country all about.

Thus in the day time the Scots keeping the advantage of the hills, and in the night time retiring to the advantage of ſuch other like, came near againſt that River where they firſt paſſed over, where they made a ſhew to offer battel to the King upon the morrow. Whereupon the King being bulled in putting his men and battels in a readineſs to fight the next morning, being almoſt forewearied in purſuing the Scots from place to place: the Scots in the mean ſeaſon gate over the River, and eſcaped the danger of the King. Which thing as it could not be done without great Treaſon of ſome near about the King; ſo Sir Roger Mortimer was grievouſly ſuſpected thereof, and after it was laid unto his Charge. But to be ſhort, by this The Scots eſcape through Treaſon means the Scots eſcaped the River; after whom it ſhould have availed the King very little to have made purſuit, as eſcape out of England, unfought withall. the wily Scots knew full well. For the joy whereof, the Lord William Douglas, one of the Scots Generals, with 200 horſes, gave alarum in the Kings Camp; and came ſo near, that he cut certain of the lines of the Kings Tent in ſunder with his Sword, and retired to his Company without great loſs of any of his men. Then on the morrow the King, perceiving the Scots to be gone, came to the place where over-night they lodged, where were found 500 great Oxen and fine ready killed; five hundred Cauldrons made of Beaſts skins full of fleſh, over the fire ſeething, a thouſand Spits full of fleſh ready to be roſted, and more than 10000 ſhoes of raw Leather (the hair ſtill upon the ſame) which the Scots had left behind them; and five poor Engliſh Priſoners tied to Trees, and their legs broken. All which the King ſeeing, returned with his Army, and left any further purſuing the Scots) to Durham: where he diſmiſſed his Army, and came again to London, ſending with Sir John of Heinault two hundred men at Arms for their better ſafeguard againſt the Engliſh Archers (with whom at York, as you have heard, they frayed) till they had taken ſhipping, and ſo returned home. The King ſendeth Heinaulters to London.

The King then being at London, confirmed the Liberties of the Citizens, and Ordained, That the Mayor ſhould ſit in all places as chief Juſtice within the Liberties of the ſame. And that what Alderman ſoever had been Mayor before, ſhould be a Juſtice of Peace within his own Ward.

Then the King, the Queen, and the Council ſent over to the Earl of Heinaul certain Embaſſadors, touching the Solemnization of the Marriage between the King and the Lady Philip his Daughter: who in ſuch ſort ſped their Meſſage, that ſhe was ſoon after conveyed over to England very honourably, and at Dover arrived. And from thence ſhe came to London (ſome Chronicles affirm to York) where upon the day of the Converſion of S. Paul, the year above ſpecified, the Marriage and Coronation of the Queen was with much Triumph during the ſpace of three weeks ſolemnized. The marriage of King Edward ſolemnized.

After which Coronation and Marriage, the King ſummoned his Parliament to be kept at Northampton: where- A Parliament at Northampton in at, by the means of Sir Roger Mortimer and the old

Queen,

Queen, a Peace was purchased for the Scots (who had for that purpose sent their Embassadors) for four years to endure. Also the King (then being within age) granted to release the Scots of all their Homage and Fealty unto the Realm of England, which by their Charter enfealed they were bound to; as also their Indenture, which was called the Ragman Role, wherein was specified the foresaid Homage and Fealty to the King and Crown of England, by the said King of Scots, Nobles, and Prelates to be made; having all their Seals annexed to the same. Also there was then delivered unto them the black Crosse of Scotland, which King Edward before for a rich Jewel and Relique had conquered and brought from Scone Abbey; with all such Rights and Tittles as any the Barons else had enjoyed in the said Realm of Scotland, with many other things more, to the great prejudice both of the Realm, and discontent of all the Nobles and Barons for the most part, more than the old Queen, Sir Roger Mortimer and the Bishop of Ely. Who in such sort ruled the Rost, that all the rest of the Nobles and Barons sat with themselves how best they might redress and remedy the great inconveniences, that grew to the Realm by means of them grew and happened. Whereupon the King and Queen, and Sir Roger Mortimer, caused another Parliament to be called at Salisbury; where the said Sir Roger Mortimer was made Earl of March, against all the Barons wills, to prevent and disappoint the foresaid purpose of them; but the Earl Henry of Lancaster, with others, would not be at the same: wherefore it was laid unto their Charges, that they went about to conspire the Kings death.

The Ragman Role delivered up to the Scots.

Earl Henry of Lancaster refuseth to come to the Parliament.

And further, for that the King was as well under the Government of the Earl of Kent his Uncle, as the Queen his Mother, and the Earl of March; and for that they could not do in all things as they listed for the said Earl the Kings Uncle, who loved the King and the Realm: envy began to rise between the Earl Mortimer and him; and, by Isabel the Queens practice, he found the means to perswade the King, that the Earl of Kent (to enjoy the Crown, as next Heir unto the King) went about to poison him. Whereunto the King giving light credit caused his said Uncle to be apprehended; and, without answer making to his Accusation and Accusers, to be beheaded at Winchester, the third of October, and third year of his Reign. But the just Judgment of God not permitting such odious Crimes in him to be unpunished nor undetected, so in fine it fell forth, that Isabel the old Queen, the Kings Mother, was found and understood to be with child by the said Mortimer. Complaint hereof was made to the King, as also of the killing of King Edward his Father, and of the Conspiracy of him against the Earl of Kent the Kings Uncle before put to death. Whereupon, divers other Articles laid against him, and manifestly read in the Court, he was arraigned and indited, and by Verdict found guilty; having his Judgment as in cases of High Treason, and suffered death accordingly at London: where, upon London Bridge, next unto Spenfers, his head obtained a place. The Queen his Mother also (by good advice of Council) was restrained of her liberty, and within a certain Castle not permitted once to come abroad: Unto whom the King her Son once or twice a year would resort, and visit her.

The Earl of Kent put to death guiltless.

The Queen with child by Sir Roger Mortimer.

Sir Roger Mortimer Earl of March arraigned, condemned, and put to execution.

The Queen put in prison, and so kept a long while.

The birth of Prince Edward.

This year Prince Edward was born at Woodstock; who in process of time and years grew to be a most valiant Prince, and was, before he died, accounted throughout the world the Follower of Chivalry.

The Expedition of King Edward into Scotland.

After this the King prepared another Army into Scotland in the year prefixed. But first he summoned King David of Scotland, who had (in the last truce, four years to continue as you heard, his Father then living) married the Lady Jane, Sister to the King; (termed Jane Makepeace) to do his Homage to the King; but that he refused. Whereupon, not forgetting therewithall the scoffing Rimes, which daily from that time of truce the Scots had in their mouths; he did so much, that with an Army well furnished he entred Scotland by the River Twede; for the Scots had then the possession of the Town of Barwick. The Scotish Giggs and Rimes were these, Long Beards heartlesse, Painted Hoods wittlesse, Gay Coats gracelesse, Makes England thriftlesse. To be short, the King wasted the Land, burnt, destroyed, and took Towns and Castles with small resistance or none: and the space of six months together did in that Land what him listed, without any battel offered to him. For the King of Scots was but a Child, and not above the age of 15 years, and wanted good Captains that should have defended the Realm: infomuch that they were all fain, saving those that kept in Holds for their defence, to take the Forest of Godworth, and there kept themselves so long as the King remained in Scotland. Who at length, when he had sufficiently wasted, and spoiled, and burnt the same, returned toward Barwick, about the which he bent his Siege, vowing not to remove the same, till he had gotten the Town.

The Scotish Rimes.

King Edward wasteth and destroyeth the Realm of Scotland.

{KING Edw. 3}

Barwick besieged and yielded up to the King.

The Scots that kept the same, after a certain time and many Assaults made, were contented upon certain conditions to have delivered up the Town. But that the King refused, unless that, all conditions set apart, they would with bag and baggage depart. Whereupon they condescended to the King, that if by a certain time they were not by the King of Scots rescued, they would render up the Town, and with bag and baggage depart: and so the time expired, fruitrate of all hope and rescue, at the day appointed they did. The King then entred the Town, and tarried there the space of twelve days; who after he had appointed Sir Edward Baillew Captain over the Town, and leaving also behind him other Knights, Squires, and Souldiers, as well to keep the same as other Holds the King had conquered in Scotland and Frontiers thereof; he returned with his people towards London, permitting every man to depart and go what way them liked.

The King entreth the Town of Barwick, and appointeth the Captain thereof.

Then Sir Robert de Artois, a Nobleman of France, and Sir Robert Artois a Nobleman of France by whom which descended of the blood Royal, being in England with the King, ceased not oftentimes to advertise the King, and put him in memory of his good and right Title to the Inheritance of the Crown of France. This Sir Robert for a certain displeasure that Philip the French King took against him for a certain Plea which by him was moved before the King; was fain for the safegard of his life to flee the Realm of France, and so come to the Kings Court. King Edward was not unwilling at all to hear thereof, but took delight oftentimes to reason and debate that matter with him concerning his Right, Title, and Inheritance to the Crown of France. But yet notwithstanding, he thought it not good to make any attempt thereunto without advised and circumspect counsel; for that it contained matter of no small, but most difficult importance: neither yet he took it to deserve the same either of wisdom or prowess to let so good a Title die, or so fit opportunity to pass. Wherefore he, calling together certain of his Council, used their deliberate advices touching the forenamed of this matter. In fine, it was by them thought good, that the King should send certain Embassadors over to the Earl of Heinault, whose Daughter he had married, as well to hear his advice and counsel therein; as also what Friends and Aid, by him and his means, in this so great an Expedition to be begun in the Empire, to him might be procured. The King hereunto condescended, and appointeth for this Embassage the Bishop of Lincoln with two other Baronets, and two Doctors: who in such speedy wise made their Voyage, that in short space they returned again to the King with this answer, That not only the Earl his councel and advise should be herein prest to the King of England their Master, but also the whole Country of Hemault. And further, for that to such an Expedition as appertained, he said, The Province of Heinault was but a small matter to make account of; he would procure for the King greater Aid and Friendship in the Empire, as the Duke of Brabant his Cosin-German, and a puissant Prince, the Duke of Guerlers, the Archbishop of Colayn, the Marquess of Juliers, &c. which are all good men of War, and able to make ten thousand fighting men, saith he. Which answer well liked the King, and made him joyous thereof. But this counsel of the King, as secret as it was, came to Philip the French Kings ears: whereupon he stayed the Voyage of the Cross which then he had in hand, sending forth Countermands to stay the same, till he knew further the purpose of the King of England.

Embassadors are sent to the Earl of Heinault concerning the Title.

The Embassadors return with answer from the Earl that pleaseth the King.

King Philip of France beareth of the Kings purpose, and forbeth his Voyage of the Cross.

The King hereupon himself taketh shipping accompanied as to a King appertained, and when he had consulted with all the foresaid Lords of the Empire in this matter, and understood their fidelity; he made his repair to the Emperor, at whose hands he was well entertained, and honourably received, whom the Emperor appointed {KING Edw. 3} pointed to be his Lieutenant-General, having thereby more Authority both to will and command such as for this his Expedition he sted unto, and had made convention with. Philip hearing this, prepared his Army, and rigged his Navy, that so soon as the King should enter into the Dominion of France, they also might enter into England, requiting like for like.

King Edward ordaineth Lieutenant-General of the Empire.

The first Voyage of King Edward into France.

The King of England, after the Feast of S. John Baptist, according to his purpose prepared all things ready to such an Expedition, conducting his Army, and gathering a greater strength in the Empire, as before to him was promised, using the Emperors Authority therein, as his Lieutenant-General, howbeit at the charge altogether of the King of England. The French King, as soon as King Edward had landed his Army at Macheline in Flanders, hearing of the defiance, which the King and other Noblemen of the Empire had sent unto him, sent certain Ships lying ready thereunto, and waiting for such opportunity upon the Coast of England; which upon a Sunday, whilst the Townsmen were at the Church little looking for any such matter, entred the Haven of Southampton, took the Town and spoiled the same, deflowred Maidens, enforced Wives, burnt, kill'd, took Captives, and carried away rich Spoils and great Booties to their Ships, and so again departed into France. Further as the King of England had allied himself with the Noblemen of the Empire, and had the friendly favour of the Emperor also thereunto: so the French King made the like League and Alliance with David the King of Scots, whom the King had so hardly dealt withall in Scotland (as partly before you heard) and kept the most part of Scotland under his Subjection: Binding the said David as well by writing as oath and pledge, that without his consent he should make no peace, nor conclude any truce with the King of England. Who again affiaed him of Aid, and Rescue, and Help, and to recover his Kingdom and Dominion to his use: and forthwith sent certain Garrisons and Bands into Scotland. to keep play with the Englishmen, and there to fortifie divers places till further opportunity served. He also fortified with men, money, victual, and munition, the Town of Cambrey: which he suspected would be besieged, lying so near upon the Empire, as indeed it came to pass. For King Edward, departing from Macheline, set forward his Host toward Hemault, and by the way assembled such Power as in the Empire he looked for, marching forward still till that they came to Cambrey, and besieged it with 40000 men, while that with another Company the Flemings, Brabanters, and Hollanders, went to S. Quintin. But in effect, neither there, nor at Cambrey, nor else-where, any thing notorious was atchieved. But the Summer being well spent, and little prevailing in the Siege of Cambrey, being of situation strong and well defenced therewithall with men and munition, he brake up the Siege, and marched further into the heart of France towards Mutterel. Which thing the French King having understanding of, prepared himself to give battel to the King of England, who with another great Army came to Viromfosse, where days were appointed to meet in battel: but in the end, nothing was done nor attempted between the Princes. And the King of England (without any battel either giving or taking) returned with his Army from thence to Gaunt. Concerning the cause of the sudden removing of the King out of France, it seemeth most specially to rise of the Pope: who at the same time sent down his Legates, for the Order of a peace to be taken between the Kings. At Gaunt were gathered by the Kings appointment all the Nobles as well of England, as of the Empire in Council together what was best to be done. What plain answer was made to the King of England, that unless he would take upon him the Claim and Title of France, as his lawful Inheritance, and as King thereof profecute his Wars; it might not be lawful for them any further to Aid the King of England, or to fight with him against the French King: for that the Pope had bound them in two Millions of Florens of Gold, and under pain of Excommunication, that they should not fight against the lawful King of France. Whereupon, the King thought good therefore presently to make open Challenge to the Realm and Crown of France: and further, to quarter and intermingle the Arms of France with the Arms of England in one Scutcheon. Whereupon eftsoons King Edward made answer unto the Pope again, directing unto him his Letters, wherein he declareth at large his Right and Title unto the Crown of France, purging thereby himself and his cause unto the Bishop. The Copy and tenour of which Letter, because it is too long to express, it is to be found in story of Tho. Walsingham, remaining in the Library of J. Stephenson Citizen of London, who so hath lift or leisure to perufe the same. Besides this Letter to the Pope, he directed another to the Peers and Prelates of France (he remaining yet at Gaunt) in tenour as followeth.

The King of England taketh the Title of France.

The Letter of King Edward to the Nobles and Commons of France.

King Edward unto the Nobles and Commons of France.

EDward by the Grace of God King of France and of England, Lord of Ireland. Unto all Prelates and Ecclesiastical Persons, to the Peers, Dukes, Earls, Barons, and to the Commons of France, greeting. The high Lord and King above, to whom although his Will be in his own Power, yet would that Power should be subject unto Law; commanding every thing to be given unto him which is his, declaring thereby that Justice and Judgment ought to be the preparation of the Kings Seat. Wherefore seeing the Kingdom of France, through the Providence of God, by the death of Charles last King of France of famous memory, Brother-German to our Lady Mother, is fallen unto us by plain and manifest Law; And forsomuch as Lord Philip de Valois, being the Son of the Uncle of the foresaid King, and so being far from the Crown by a further degree of Consanguinity, through force and usurpation hath intruded himself in the foresaid Kingdom (whilst we were yet in our Minority) and so contrary both to God and to Justice doth detain and occupy the same; And lest we should seem to neglect our own Right and the Gift given us of God, or not to submit our Will to Gods Ordinance: We have thought good to acknowledge the Title of France, and by supportation of the Almighty King have taken upon us the Defence and Regiment of the said Kingdom; Firmly purposing with our selves (as every good man ought to do) graciously to minister Justice to every one, according to the Rites and laudable Custom of the foresaid Kingdom. Also to renew the good Laws and Customs which have been in the time of Ludovike our Progenitor; adding moreover, that which shall seem expedient according to the condition and quality of the time. As any change of Coin, or any other inordinate Exactions, we intend not to seek our Profits by your Detriments: when as (the Almighty be praised therefore) we abound and have enough. And as concerning the Affairs of the Realm, our purpose is not to proceed rashly or by our own will, but by the discreet advice and counsel of the Peers, Prelates, Nobles, and other our faithful Subjects of the Kingdom, so far forth as shall make for the Honour of God, the Defence and Advancement of the Church (which in all fulnesse of devotion we do reverence) and to the profit both publick and private of all the Subjects thereof, with full execution of Justice by the Grace of God to be executed upon all and singular persons, being earnestly careful for the Honour, profit, and tranquility of you all. For, as the Lord knoweth, nothing shall be more grateful to us, than that by our careful solicitude, peace may be engendred, specially betwixt us, and universally among all Christian men: so that by our concord the force and strength of all Christian Princes may be joyned together for the recovery of the holy Land: which our Saviour and Redeemer hath dedicated with his own proper blood, wherefore if we will endeavour our selves through the Grace of the Holy Ghost. And forasmuch as we have offered to the foresaid Lord Philip divers friendly and reasonable conditions of Peace, whereunto he would neither condescend, nor neither agree to any Conformation; yea, rather moveth against us unjust War, so the utter subversion of our State: we are inforced of necessity to the uttermost of our Power (for the defence both of us, and recovery of our Right) to defend our selves by force of battel; not seeking any slaughter of good and humble Subjects, but desiring their safegard and profit.

Note the grossness of this time when the blood of Christ was thought but vainly dedicated to the holy Land.

The Title of France how it came to King Edward.

For the which cause, all and singular such Subjects of the Kingdom of France, which shall submit themselves to

to us at the true King of France, at or before the Feaſt of Eaſter next enſuing; profeſſing unto us their Fealty, and doing to us as to the King of France by duty appertaineth, ſo as our beloved Subjects of Flanders have done already, or be ready to offer themſelves ſo to do; all ſuch we willingly admit and receive to our Peace and Grace under our Protection to be defended, them to maintain as is convenient from all moleſtation and unquietneſs whatſoever, in perſon or goods hereafter to be inforced either by us or by our Officers, upon whatſoever occaſion of Rebellion afore paſſed. And foraſmuch as the premiſſes cannot eaſily be intimated to all and ſingular perſons; we have provided the ſame to be fixed upon Church doors, and other publick places, whereby the manifeſt notice thereof may come to all men, to the comfort of you that be to us devout, and to the true information of them, which through ſiniſter ſurmiſes of our Enemies are otherwiſe informed of us. Dated at Gaunt the 8th of February, the year of our Kingdom of France the firſt, of England the 14th.

Southampton burnt and ſpoiled by the French-men.

This done, for that the Winter then drew on, neither was there any hope as the time ſerved, of farther doing good; the King thought beſt for a ſeaſon to return again to England with his Company, giving over the Wars until the next Spring; and ſo did, taking ſhipping, and ſo arrived at Dover. When he came to London, it was declared unto him, of the great ſpoil the Frenchmen had made at Southampton: who anſwered again, That within one year he doubted not but the ſame ſhould be well paid for and recompenſed. And according to the ſame purpoſe of his he lingred no time, but calling a Parliament at Weſtminſter, with much grudge and evil will of his Subjects there was for the maintenance of his Wars granted to him a great Subſidy, which was the fifth of every mans goods, and alſo the Cuſtoms of his Wools two years before hand, and the ninth Sheaf of every mans Corn. At the Spring the King again prepared his Army, and rigged his Navy, purpoſing to land in Flanders. But the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, then Lord Chancellor, having underſtanding of the French Power upon the Sea, lying for the King, gave him advertiſement there, willing him to go more ſtrongly, or elſe not to venture. But the King not crediting the Archbiſhop, and being angry with him therefore, ſaid, That he would go forward: whereupon the Biſhop reſigned the Chancellorſhip, and removed himſelf from his Counciſthen the King conſulting hereupon further with the Lord Morley his Admiral, and others (hearing alſo the fame of them) furniſhed himſelf with ſtronger Power, and committed him to his Ship: and did ſo much, that a few days before Midſummer, he was upon the Sea with a great Fleet. Before the Town of Sluſe, the French King to ſtop his paſſage, had laid ready a great Navy, well near to the number of twenty ſcore Sail; and had made the Chriſtopher of England (which before the Frenchmen took at Southampton) their Admiral: betwixt which two Navies was a long and terrible fight. But in the end, the Victory by Gods Grace fell to the King of England, in which fight he himſelf was perſonally. So that of the numbers of thirty thouſand Frenchmen, few or none were left and eſcaped alive, and two hundred Sail of Ships taken: in one of the which were found 400 dead bodies.

Counſel of the Archbiſhop given to the King.

Battel upon the Sea between King Edward and the French-men.

The French-men beaten upon the Sea.

After this great ſlaughter of the Frenchmen (of whom many for fear of the Sword lept into the Sea) when no man durſt bring tydings thereof to the French King; they which were next about the King did ſuborn his Fool, to inſinuate the underſtanding thereof by ſubtilty of covert words; which was thus. As the forſaid Fool being in the Kings preſence, and was talking of many things; among other talk he ſuddenly braſt out (being prompt by others) into a vehement railing againſt the Engliſhmen, calling them Cowards and Daſtards, with many ſuch opprobrious words tending to that effect. The King not knowing wherunto the words of the Fool did appertain, asked the Fool, Why he called the Engliſhmen ſuch Weaklings and Cowards, &c. Why, ſaith the Fool? Becauſe the fearful and cowardly Engliſhmen had not the hearts to leap into the Sea ſo luſtily, as our Normans, and Gentlemen of France had. Whereby the French King began to underſtand the Victory of his part to be loſt, and the Engliſhmen to be Victorers.

The words of the Fool to the French King

This Victory atchieved, the ſame thereof ſpreading abroad in England, firſt was not believed, till Letters thereof came from the King to Prince Edward his Son being then at Waltham, directed to the Biſhops and Prelates of the Realm: the effect of which Letters here followeth under written.

[KING Edw. 3]

The Letters of King Edward to the Biſhops of England.

THe bountiful benignity of Gods great Clemency powred upon us of late, for your true certification and rejoycing, we thought good to intimate unto you. It is not unknown (we ſuppoſe) to you, and to other our faithful Subjects, which alſo have been partakers with us of the ſame, with what ſtorms of boiſterous Wars of late we have been toſſed and ſhaken, as in the great Ocean. But although the riſing ſurges of the Sea be marvelous, yet more marvelous is the Lord above: who turning the Tempeſt into a Calm, in ſo great dangers, ſo mercifully hath protected us. For wherein we of late did ordain our paſſage upon urgent cauſes into Flanders: the Lord Philip de Valois our bitter Enemy underſtanding thereof, laid againſt us a mighty Navy of Ships, intending thereby either to take us, or at leaſt to ſtop our Voyage. Which Voyage if it had been ſtaid, it had been the cutting off of all the great Enterprizes by us intended and taken in hand, and moreover we our ſelves had been brought to a great confuſion. But the God of Mercies, ſeeing us ſo diſtreſſed in ſuch perils and dangers, hath graciouſly and beyond mans expectation ſent to us great ſuccour and ſtrength of fighting Souldiers, and a proſperous Wind after our own deſires. By the means and help whereof, we ſet out of the Haven into the Sea, where we eſſoons perceived our Enemies well appointed and prepared with a main multitude to ſet upon us, upon Midſummer-day laſt paſt. Againſt whom notwithſtanding Chriſt our Lord and Saviour hath rendred to us the Victory, through a ſtrong and vehement Conflict. In the which Conflict, a mighty number of our Enemies were deſtroyed, and well near all their whole Navy was taken; with ſome loſs alſo of our part, but nothing like in compariſon to theirs. By reaſon whereof we doubt not but our paſſage by the Seas hereafter ſhall be more quiet and ſafe for our Subjects, and alſo many other Commodities ſhall enſue thereof, as we have good cauſe to hope well of the ſame. For which cauſe we, devoutly conſidering the heavenly Grace ſo mercifully wrought upon us, do render moſt humble Thanks and Praiſe to Chriſt our Lord and Saviour: Beſeeching him, that as he hath been and always is ready to prevent our neceſſities in time of opportunity, ſo he will continue his helping hand ever towards us, and ſo to direct us here temporally, that we may reign and joy with him in heaven eternally. And in like ſort we require your Charity, that you alſo with us riſing up to the praiſe of God alone, who hath begun ſo favourably to work with us to our goodneſs, in your Prayers and Divine Service do inſtantly recommend us unto the Lord, travelling here in theſe foreign Countries, and ſtudying to recover not only our Right here in France; but alſo to advance the whole Catholick Church of Chriſt, and to Rule our people in Juſtice. And that alſo ye call upon the Clergy and people, every one through his Dioceſs to do the ſame, invocating the Name of our Saviour, that of his mercy he will give to us his humble Servant a docible heart, ſo to Judge and Rule hereupon rightly, doing that which he hath commanded, that at length we may attain to that which he hath promiſed, &c. Which Letter was written to the Biſhops and Prelates, Anno 1340.

After this foreſaid Victory upon the Sea, and News thereof, with due Thanks to our Saviour, ſent into England: the King ſtriking into Flanders, came to Gaunt in Brabant, where he had left the Queen; who joyfully received him, being a little before purified or churched, as we term it, of her fourth Son, whoſe name was John, and commonly called John of Gaunt, and was Earl of Richmond, and Duke of Lancaſter. At Villenorth the King aſſembled his Council, whereat the Noblemen of Flanders, Brabant, and Hynalt conjoyning together in moſt firm League, the one to help and defend the other, with the King of England, againſt the French King, purpoſing and determining from thence to march toward Tourney, and it to beſiege. But the French King, underſtanding their counſel, fortified and victualled the ſame before their coming thither.

A Counſel at Villenorth.

Flanders, Brabant and Hynalt take part with King Edward.

Further-

[KING Edw. 3]

Furthermore the ſaid French King the ſame time, to ſtop the Siege of King Edward, ſent with King David of Scotland a great Power, to that intent to make invaſion in England, thereby the ſooner to cauſe the King to remove his Siege. In the mean time King Edward wrote his Letters to Philip de Valois, making unto him certain Requeſts, as in the ſame his Letters here following is to be ſeen: who, for that he wrote not unto him as King of France, but by the name of Philip de Valois, refuſed to anſwer him touching the ſame, as by their Letters here placed may be ſeen.

The Letter of the King of England, to Philip de Valois, the French King, going to the Siege of Tourney.

The Letter of King Edward to the French King.

PHilip de Valois, of long time we have gently requeſted you by our Embaſſadors (by all the reaſonable means we might) to that intent you ſhould have rendred unto us our lawful Right and Inheritance to the Crown of France, which from us a long time you have by great wrong and force detained. And for that we well perceive you mean to perſevere in the ſame your purpoſe and injuri- ous detinue, without making any reaſonable anſwer to our demand: We let you underſtand, that we are entred into the Country of Flanders, as the Sovereign Lord of the ſame, and ſo paſs through the Country. And further ſignifie unto you, how that by the help of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt and our righteous Cauſe therein, and with the Power of the ſaid Country, our People and Allies, we purpoſe to recover the Right which we have to that Inheritance you detain from us by your injurious force, and therefore approach we towards you to make a ſhort end of this our rightful Challenge, if you alſo will do like. And for that ſo great an Hoſt aſſembled as we bring with us on our part (ſuppoſing you alſo on the other part to do the like) cannot long remain together without great deſtruction both to our People and Country, which thing every good Chriſtian ought to eſchew; eſpecially Princes and others which have the Government of the ſame, avoiding, by as ſhort an end as may be, the mortality of Chriſtian men, according as the quarrel is apparent between you and me: For the which cauſes here touched, let the Challenge (if you think meet) between our own perſons and bodies be diſcuſſed, that the great Nobility and Proweſs of each other, may of every one be ſeen. And if you refuſe this way, then let there (to finiſh this Challenge) be an hundred of the beſt Souldiers you can chooſe out of your part matched with ſo many of our Liege-Subjects to try the ſame. And if of theſe two ways you refuſe both the one and the other, then that you will aſſign unto us a certain day before the Town of Tourney, to fight with us Power againſt Power, which may be within ten days next enſuing after the date of theſe our Letters: offering the ſaid conditions unto you above ſpecified (as we would all the world to know and underſtand) not upon any ergoil, preſumption or pride we take therein, but for the Cauſes before alledged, and to the end that (the will of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt betwixt us two herein declared and ſhewed) reſt and peace might grow amongſt Chriſtian men; the power and force of Gods Enemies may be abated: and in fine, the limits of Chriſtianity enlarged and enfranchiſed. And therefore hereupon conſider with your ſelf, what way you will take concerning our foreſaid Offers, and by the bearers of theſe our Letters ſend unto us herein quick and ſpeedy Anſwer. Given under our Great Seal at Chin in the plain of Leece the 27th day of this preſent month of July.

The Anſwer of the Lord Philip de Valois unto the Letter aforeſaid.

The anſwer of the French King to King Edward.

PHilip by the Grace of God, King of France, to Edward King of England. We have ſeen the Letters which you have ſent unto our Court to Philip de Valois, wherein are contained certain Requeſts which you make to the ſaid Philip de Valois. But for that the ſaid Letters come not as directed unto us, neither yet the ſaid Requeſts ſeem to be made unto us (which thing clearly by the tenour of the ſaid Letters appeareth) we therefore write unto you no Anſwer touching the ſame. Notwithſtanding this ſufficeth, that we underſtand by the ſaid Letters of your, as alſo other ways, that you are entred into our Realm of France, to the great damage both unto us, our Realm and People (more proceeding of will, than reaſon) and not regarding that which a Liege-man ought to do unto his Lord. For you are entred into our Homage by you liged unto us, acknowledging your ſelf as reaſon is, a Liege-man unto the King of France; and have promiſed unto us ſuch Obeiſance as men are wont to do unto their Liege-Lords (as more plainly by your Letters Patents appeareth, enſealed with your Great Seal, the which we have with us:) for the which thing we will you to underſtand, that our purpoſe is (when it ſhall ſeem good unto us) to drive you out of our Realm, to the honour both of us and our Kingdom, and to the profit and commodity of our people. And the thing to do we have firm and aſſured hope in Jeſus Chriſt, from whom we have all our power and ſtrength. For by your unreaſonable demand more willful than reaſonable, hath been hindred and ſtayed the holy Voyage to thoſe parts beyond the Seas, where a great number of Chriſtian-men have been ſlain; the Divine-Service diminiſhed, and the Service of the Church leſs reverenced. And as touching that where you ſay, Ye intend to have the Obeiſance of the Flemmings, we think and believe that the good people and Commons of that Country will behave themſelves in ſuch ſort toward our Coſin the Counteſs of Flanders their Lady, as it be not to their reproach; and to us their Sovereign Lord, they will reſpect their Honour and Loyalty. And that thing wherein they have done otherwiſe than well hitherto, hath been by the evil counſel of ſuch people, as neither regard the Weal-publick nor Honor of their Country, but their own only gain and commodity. Given in the field near adjoyning to the Priory of S. Andrew, under our Privy-Seal in abſence of our Great-Seal, the 30th day of July, Anno 1340.

Mention was made a little before of David King of Scots, whom the French King had ſupported and ſtirred up againſt the King and Realm of England: which David (with the Aid of the Scots and Frenchmen) did ſo much prevail, that they recovered again almoſt all Scotland, which before he had loſt, and was confrained to live in the Foreſt of Gedworth many years before. Then invaded they England, and came with their Army, waſting and burning the Country before them, till they came as far as Durham, and then returned again into Scotland, where they recovered all their Holds again ſaving the Town of Barwick. Edenborough they took by a ſtratagem or ſubtil device practiſed by Douglas, and certain other: who apparelling themſelves in poor mens habits, as Victuallers with Corn and Provender, and other things, demanded the Porter early in the morning what need they had thereof? Who nothing miſtruſting, opened the outward Gate, where they ſhould tarry till the Captain roſe: and perceiving the Porter to have the Keys of the inward Gate, they threw down their Sacks in the outward Gate, that it might not be ſhut again, and ſlew the Porter, taking from him the Keys of the Town. Then they blew their Horn as a warning to their Bands, which privily they had laid not far off: who in haſtiwiſe coming, and finding the Gates ready opened, entred upon the ſudden, and killed as many as reſiſted them, and ſo obtained again the City of Edenborough.

The Scots invade England.

Edenborough recovered from the Engliſhmen by the Scots.

The Scots being thus buſie in England, the French King in the mean ſeaſon gathered together a puiſſant Power, purpoſing to remove the Siege from Tourney: and among other, ſent for the King of Scots, who came to him with great force, beſides divers other Noblemen of France: inſomuch that the French King had a great Army, and thought himſelf able enough to raiſe the Siege, and theither bent his Hoſt. But the French King, for all this his foreſaid huge Power and Force, durſt not yet approach the King ſo near, as either to give him battel, or elſe remove his Siege, but kept himſelf with his Army aloof, in a fare place for his better defence. And notwithſtanding the King of England waſted, burnt, ſpoiled and deſtroyed the Country, twenty miles in manner compaſs about Tourney, and took divers and ſundry ſtrong Towns and Holds, as Ortois, Urſes, Greney, Archies, Odint, S. Amand, and the

Town

Town of Lisle, where he slew above three hundred men of Arms, and about S. Omers, he slew and kill'd of Noble men, the Lord of Duskune, of Mauresteon, of Rely, of Chastillion, of Melly, of Ferie, of Hamelor, Mountfaucon, and other Barons, to the number of fourteen; and also slew and killed above 130 Knights, being all men of great Possessions and Prowess, and took other small Cities and Towns to the number of three hundred: yet for all this Philip de Valois, the French King, durst neither rescue his Towns, nor relieve his own men: but of his great Army he lost (which is to be marveled at, being in the midst of his own Country) by Famine and other inconveniences, and for want of water, more than twenty thousand men without any battel by him given. Whereupon at the intreaty of the said Philip by his Embassadors to the King sent, and by the mediation of the Lady Jane, Sister to the said Philip, and Mother to the Earl of Henault, whose Daughter King Edward, as you heard, had married; a truce containing the number of fifteen Articles for one was concluded, the King of England being very unwilling and loth thereunto. Yet notwithstanding, partly by the instance of the foresaid Lady, but specially for that the King was greatly dissappointed, through the negligence of his Officers in England, which sent him not over such money as he needed for the continuance of his Wars, and payment of his Souldiers wages (the Articles being somewhat reasonable) he agreeth to the truce thereof: the conditions of which truce there concluded, here follow under written.

Articles of Truce.

1. First, that during the said truce no tales or mistruth of either part shall be a detriment or cause of breach of the same.

2. Item, that during the said respite or truce either of the Princes, their Helpers, Coadjutors and Allies whatsoever, shall remain and be in quiet possession of all such Possessions, Holds, Territories and Lands, as at this present day they keep and enjoy within the Realm and Dominion of France, in what manner soever they have atchieved the same, during the said truce.

3. Item, that the said Princes, their Aiders, Coadjutors, and Allies whatsoever, shall pass safely from one Country to another, and all Merchants with their Merchandise, as well by Sea as by Land, as accustomably they have been wont: except such banished men as have been banished out of the said Realms, or any of them for other causes, than the Wars, between the said Princes.

4. Item, that the said two Princes shall not procure, either by themselves or any other, any practice or other molestation to be made the one to the other, by the Bishop of Rome, or any other belonging to the holy Church whatsoever; either for the Wars begun, or any other cause, nor for the Service of any of their Allies, Coadjutors, and Aiders, or any of them. And that neither our holy Father the Pope, nor any other shall disturb or molest either of the said two Kings during the said time.

5. Item, that immediately after the truce be proclaimed in both the Holts, that may stand bound of either side, to keep and observe all and every such Article as shall be therein contained.

6. Item, that within 20 days next and immediately insuing, each of the Princes shall cause to be proclaimed in Gascoine and Guyen, and other their Lands these Articles of truce, to the intent they may be the better observed, kept and known.

7. Item, if by any the said Princes, their Allies, People or Coadjutors, any siege be laid in Gascoin, or the Dutchy of Guyen, or any other Isles of the Sea Giernsey or Gersey, or any other; that the same Sieges be raised so soon as they shall hear of this truce.

8. Item, that such as are Thieves and Fugitives out of the Country of Flanders shall not return during the truce: and if they do, that then such as apprehended them shall see justice done upon them, and they shall forfeit all the goods they have in Flanders.

9. Item, it is recorded, that the debts due to Arras, Trefbonoux, or other Titles of France, shall neither be demanded nor executed during the said truce.

10. Item, that all such Prisoners, as have been taken during these Wars, shall be released out of prison, and sent home upon their Faith and Oath to return, if they be not ransomed during the said truce. And if any shall refuse so to do, that then the Lord under whom he is, shall constrain him to return again to prison. {KING. 1 Edw. 3.}

11. Item, that all the Bands whatsoever they be, which he made before this said truce in the timeof War (whether they be of goods Spiritual or Temporal) be releafed without reftitution, during the faid truce.

12. Alſo, that theſe conditions of truce immediately may take effect between the Engliſh and Scots, their Lords, Aiders, and Allies; and the ſame to endure until the Nativity of Saint John Baptiſt. And that certain perſons be appointed by a certain day to be at the Marches of England and Scotland to confirm the ſaid truce, under ſuch conditions as have been acculſomed in thoſe parts. And if the ſaid Scots refuſe ſo to do, that then they have no Aid out of France during the ſaid truce.

13. Item, that this ſaid truce be proclaimed in England, and in Scotland, within 26 days after the date hereof.

14. Item, it is accorded that within this truce be contained Eſpanels, Chatellon, Genovois, the Biſhop and the Town of Cambrey and Caſtles of the ſame.

In witneſs whereof, we John by the Grace of God King of Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburge, Adulph Biſhop of Liege, Radulph Duke of Lorein, Ayemes Earl of Savoy, and John Earl of Darminack on the one party: and B. Duke of Brabant, C. Duke of Gelre, D. Marqueſs of Juliers, Sir John of Henault, and Sir Beaumont on the other party, betwixt the high and puiſſant Princes of France and England, have ſealed this inſtrument of truce and peace, and delivered the ſame accordingly in the Church of Eſpleteline on Monday the 25th day of September, the year of Grace, 1340.

This truce thus finiſhed, King Edward brake up his Camp, removing his Siege from Tourney, and came again to Gant. From whence (very early in the morning) he with a ſmall Company took ſhipping, and by long Seas came to the Tower of London, very few or none having underſtanding thereof. And being greatly diſpleaſed with divers of his Council and high Officers (for that through their default he was conſtrained againſt his will, not having money to maintain his wars, to condeſcend unto the foreſaid truce) he commanded to be apprehended and brought unto him to the Tower, the Lord John Stonehore Chief Juſtice of England, and Sir John Poulney, with divers others. And the next morning, he ſent for L. R. Biſhop of Chicheſter, and the Lord Wake, the Lord Treaſurer, and divers other ſuch that were in Authority and Office, and commanded them all to be kept as Priſoners in the ſaid Tower, only the ſaid Biſhop excepted: whom for fear of the Conſtitution of Pope Clement, which commanded that no Biſhop ſhould be by the King impriſoned, he ſet at liberty, and ſuffered him to go his way, and in his place ſubſtituted Sir Roger Boucher Knight, Lord Chancellor of England. King Ed. ward returneth from Tourney. The King diſpleaſed by his Council. No Biſhop muſt be impriſoned by the Popes Law.

The Hiſtory intreating of this matter reporteth thus, that the King had at this time under him evil Subſtitutes, and covetous Officers: who, attending more to their own gain than to the publick Honour and Commodity of the Realm, left the King deſtitute and naked of money. With which Crime alſo John Stratford then Archbiſhop of Canterbury was vehemently noted and ſuſpected; whether of his true deſerving, or by the ſetting on of other, hereafter ſhall more appear. Inſomuch that the King ardently incenſed againſt him, charged him with great fallhood uſed againſt his Perſon, as by theſe his Letters written and directed to the Dean and Chapter of Paul's againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop, manifeſtly appeareth; the tenor of which Letter here followeth under written. Covetous Officers. John Stratford Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Edward by the Grace of God King of England and France and Lord of Ireland, To his well-beloved in Chriſt the Dean and Chapter of the Church of S. Paul in London, greeting in the Lord.

IT is manifeſt by ancient Hiſtories, but more plainly it appeareth by thoſe things which daily are proved and ſeen amongſt us, that many men aſpiring (otherwiſe greedy) The King Letter to the Dean and Chapter of Paul. the favour of Princes, and honour beſtowed upon them, have maliciouſly gone about to deprave the laudable endeavour of Kings. And now that the words which we ſpeak may be more manifeſt unto our ſubjects; we ſuppoſe that neither you nor they have forgotten, that we being eſtabliſhed in our Kingly Throne in younger years, and coveting even then to guide this our Regal charge taken upon us with wholeſome counſels, have called upon us John the Biſhop of Wincheſter, now Archbiſhop of Canterbury, whom we ſuppoſed for his fidelity and diſcretion to exceed others; whoſe counſel in matters appertaining unto the health of our ſoul, as in matters alſo reſpecting the augmenting and conſervation of our Kingdom, both ſpiritually and temporally we uſed, and he was received of us into all familiarity. We found in him alſo ſuch humanity, that he was ſaluted by the name of Father, and of all next unto the King had in honour. Now afterwards when by right of Succeſſion the Kingdom of France ſhould have deſcended unto us, and was by violent injury by the Lord Philip of Valois holden from us; the ſaid Archbiſhop by his importune inſtancy perſwaded us to enter league of amity with the Princes of Almain againſt the ſaid Philip, and to commit our ſelf and ours unto the hazard of wars; promiſing and affirming that he would bring to paſs, that the revenues of our lands, and other helps by him deviſed, ſhould ſuffice abundantly for the maintenance of our ſaid wars; adding moreover that our only care ſhould be for the furniture of ſtrong and able Souldiers, ſuch as were fit for the purpoſe, and expert in warfare; for the reſt he him ſelf would effectually procure, for money convenient to ſuffice our neceſſity, and the charges thereof. Whereupon (intending great exploits) we convoyed our Army beyond the Seas, and with marvellous great charges (as beloved) we ſet forward; we became alſo bound in great ſums of money, making ſure account of the aid aforeſaid promiſed unto us. But alas, unhappy is that man that repoſeth confidence in mans deceitful ſtaff of brittle reed; whereunto (as ſaith the Prophet) if a man lean, it breaketh and pierceth the hand. Thus being defrauded of our long looked for Subſidy, for very neceſſity ſake we were conſtrained to take upon us importable charges of debts by grievous uſury. And ſo our expedition being ſtayed, we were compelled to retire into England, deſiſting from our enterprizes ſo ſuddenly begun. Now when we were returned into Englaitd, we laid before our Archbiſhop our manifold calamities and miſfortunes before rehearſed, and thereupon called a Parliament; wherein the Prelates, Noblemen, and other the faithful ſubjects of our Dominions, granted unto us a new ſubſidy of Corn, Lamb, Wool, &c. beſides the tenth granted by the Clergy; which Subſidy (if it had been faithfully collected and obtained in due time) had greatly availed for the expedition of our ſaid wars, the payment of our debts, and confuſion of our enemies. Our ſaid Archbiſhop promiſed diligently to do his endeavour, as well in collecting the ſame, as alſo in procuring other neceſſaries to ſerve to our purpoſe. Whereupon truſting unto theſe fair promiſes, having all things in a readineſs both men and furniſhed Ships, we made Sail toward Flanders, and by the way upon the dangerous Seas buckled with our enemies (ſworn to the deſtruction of our Engliſh Nation) of whom we triumphed and were Victors, not by our merits (their multitude far exceeding ours) but by the merciful clemency of him that ruleth both Wind and Sea. Which being done, we paſſed from thence with a mighty power for the recovery of our right, and pitched our Tents near unto the puiſſant City of Tourney; where being detained for a time in the ſiege thereof, and wearied with continual toil, our charges ſtill increaſing, awaiting with ſilence our promiſed aid; day by day we hoped from our Archbiſhop to receive ſuccour in theſe our ſo great neceſſities. At length being fruſtrate of all conceived hope, we ſignified unto our ſaid Archbiſhop, and other his adherents, by divers Meſſengers, and ſundry Letters, our great neceſſity and perils which we were in for lack of the ſaid Subſidy granted unto us. We added alſo the utility and honour, which we ſaw might be atchieved if we had received money in time. All this notwithſtanding we received from them no ſuccour at all; for that preferring their private buſineſs and proper commodities, they cloaked their ſloth, or rather (as I may call it) their fraud and malice with vain excuſes, and painted gloſing words, like unto the deceitful, which (as ſaith Elay) uſe to deride with theſe words, Manda remanda, &c.

{KING. 1 Ed. 3.}

By means whereof (alas for ſorrow) it came to paſs, that whiles good hope of ſubduing our enemies graciouſly ſmiled upon us, we were conſtrained (penury prevailing againſt us) to take truce to our ſhame, the hinderance of our expedition, and no ſmall rejoicing of our evil willers; and ſo we returned into Flanders all void of money, oppreſſed with infinite debts, neither had we in our Treaſuries wherewith to diſcharge our neceſſities, nor yet to pay our Souldiers wages: inſomuch that we were compelled to enter into the devouring gulf of uſury, and to ſuſtain on our ſhoulders great burthens of debts, heap upon heap. This being done, our faithful friends, companions in wars, and partakers of our tribulations came unto us, with whom we conſulted diligently by what means we might beſt deliver our ſelves from this dangerous ſtorm of evil fortune. They all agreed, affirming certainly, that the protracting of our wars, and cauſe of our manifold neceſſity happened unto us through the fault and negligence (or rather the malice) of the ſaid Archbiſhop (upon whoſe diſcretion the diſpoſition of the whole Kingdom ſeemed to depend) and other Officers whom we had adjoyned in counſel with him touching the affairs of our Kingdom; vehemently ſwearing and murmuring among ſt themſelves (for that we had left ſo long uncorrected the inſolency of the Biſhops and other Officers) that if remedy in theſe caſes were not had with ſpeed, they would withdraw themſelves from our Allegiance, and the Covenant which they had ſworn unto; to the utter ſubverſion of our Kingdom, and perpetual ignominy, and the everlaſting ſhame of our Engliſh Nation, which God our moſt merciful Father forbid ſhould come to paſs in our days, in whom is fixed immoveably the anchor of our hope. Whereupon intending the due correction of our Officers, we removed from Offices (as ſeemed good to our Wiſdom) divers perſons whom we ſuſpected in cauſes evident, of evil adminiſtration of juſtice, of ſubverſion, and oppreſſion of our ſubjects, of corruption, of bribes, and other heinous offences. Others alſo of inferior degree offending in the premiſſes, we cauſed to be detained in ſafe cuſtody; leſt by their liberty, juſtice might be troden under foot, and the inquiſition of the truth concerning the premiſes not to come to light. Foraſmuch therefore as the knowledg of the truth in theſe caſes might of none more certainly be known, than from the ſecret breſt of our foreſaid Archbiſhop, for that nothing pertaining to our information ought to be hid from him, unto whom of ſo long a time had been committed the adminiſtration of our whole Commonweal, and ſum of our buſineſs: We ſent unto him our faithful ſubject Nicolas de Cantilupe with ſpecial Commandments from us, that all delays ſet apart he ſhould forthwith make his perſonal appearance before us at our City of London. But he (as one always timorous as well in proſperity as in adverſity, and fearing where no fear was) unruly alledgeth that ſome of our aſſiſtants had threatned him, and laid wait for his life, if at any time he departed from the Church of Canterbury, which (God we take to witneſs, and a pure conſcience) we never meant nor any of our aſſiſtants.

Archbiſhop of Canterbury's falſe accuſation of the King.

Evil Officers diſplaced by the King.

We ſuppoſe be touched thereby our Couſin, although to all others, as well of the Clergy as Commonalty through his malicious miſdemeanors he were become odious. Archbiſhop of Canterbury's accuſation to all the Clergy.

Wherefore intending the ſafeguard of our ſubjects by Letters, or otherwiſe called before us, we appointed our truſty and welbeloved Ralfe Stafford our Harbinger, to offer unto him ſafe conduct, and moreover to preſent unto him our Letters Patents under our ſeal; willing and commanding him thereby again Perſonally to come before us, that we might be informed what of ſo long a time he had done touching the affairs of the Kingdom. Whereunto contemning our commandment and gentle requeſt, he anſwereth, that neither he would in perſon appear, neither yet in any matter confer with us, except it were in a full Parliament, which for divers reaſonable cauſes could not then be called. Thus may you ſee thus Archbiſhop, whom our Royal benignity had amplified with large honours, admitted into all familiarity, received into the bond of unanimity and friendſhip, upon whom as on a Father our whole hope did conſiſt (who ſo long as we accomplished his will in all things, pretended towards us a face of counterfeit love, cloaked with diſſembling benevolence, even as though he had been a loving Father) how cruelly againſt reaſon he The Archbiſhop of Cant. denieth to come to the King.

the Archbiſhop charged with diſſemblings, and ingratitude.

hath now forsaken us, requiting benefits with ingratitude, oppressing his benefactor with the arrogancy of fear; and finally (according to the vulgar Proverb) rewarded us as a Horse in a Satchell, a Snake in a mans bosom, and fire cherisheth next the skin, rewardeth their receivers. When we were first exalted unto the Throne of our Kingdom, descended unto us by right of inheritance (Gods Divine Providence so working) we thought, and always think it a detestable thing to abuse so high authority, but rather desire to govern with clemency, lenity, and moderation of justice, that peace, of all men desired, might firmly take place.

The Archb. deffender of the King.

Nevertheless, our said Archbishop hath gone about to defame our innocency, and the fidelity and diligence of our faithful Counsellors, prosecutors of true justice; openly declaring in his Letters Patents, and publishing abroad in divers places, that he was oppressed by the Kings power contrary to justice; the Clergy and Commonalty confounded, and the Church over-charged with divers grievous Taxes and Exactions. He subtilly usurped the name of a good Pastor, when indeed he was nothing less, but rather (as it should seem by his own confession, and the common opinion had of him) a very hireling. He cloaked his crafty subtilness with the zeal of defending the Church, although he himself in very deed was the only cause, by his evil counsel and crafty devices, of the tribulation of the same. He also fained that not long ago, certain writings were brought unto him to be sealed, containing in effect the defence and excusation of all such in general that were violaters of the Liberties of the Church: hoping thereby to defame the opinion had of us and our faithful Counsellors, to stir up sedition amongst the people, and finally to withdraw from us the hearts of our Nobility. He gave commandment by his Letters, that these things should be proclaimed in all places of great resort by divers special articles contrary to his former order in his Provincial Council. Wherefore resolving the integrity of our fame, intending to prevent the malice of the said Archbishop, and also to decline from us the snares prepared for us and ours; we have thought good at this present (over and besides those which before are rehearsed) amongst so many which we omit, to declare unto you some of his perverse and wicked acts. When in our minority we were constituted over our Dominions, he caused us through his unadvised counsel and rash perswasion (thereby to win excessive favour) to give away so many wastful gifts, and so many unlawful alienations, that now by means thereof our Treasury is clean consumed, the revenues of our Exchequer without all order diminished, and he corrupted with bribes innumerable. Oftentimes also without cause why, when neither necessity nor utility so required, only through his perswasion, we forgave divers men great sums of money due unto us, yea and the rents and revenues which ought to have been conserved for our necessity and profit, we applied to the use of his friends, largely bestowing upon such as evil deserved it. Moreover (accepting as well persons as money) contrary to our mind, and his Oath of fidelity made unto us; he admitted unto publick offices throughout our Dominions persons unworthily, neglecting those that had well deserved. Many other things he rashly took in hand, to the detriment of our state, the hurt of our dignity Royal, and no small damage of our subjects, by abusing his authority and office committed unto him. But if he persist in his proud obstinacy and stout rebellion, we shall hereafter in convenient time and place, cause it to be more openly known; willing and commanding you to publish and cause to be published, all and singular the premisses openly and distinctly in places where you shall think it expedient, and to set forth (as shall seem best to your godly wisdoms) our good intent for the suppressing of incommodities, and furthering of the commodities of our subjects, that we may worthily commend your circumspect care herein.

The Archb. abuseth his Office.

Teste me ipso apud Westm. 10, die Februar. Anno Regni nostri Angliæ 15, Regni vero Franciæ secundo.

By these foresaid objections and accusations of the King premised, and laid against the Archbishop of Canterbury; what is to be thought of the doings of the said Archbishop, I leave it to thy judgment, gentle Reader, (as I said before) to be conjectured: For so much as our Histories somewhat bearing with the said Archbishop, seem either to be uncertain of the truth of the matter, or else covertly to dissemble some part of that they knew. And especially of Polydore Virgil I marvel, who having so good occasion to touch the matter, doth so slightly pass it over without any word of mention. In which matter, if probable conjecture (besides History) might here be heard, it is not unlike but that some old practice of Prelates hath herein been put in ure, through some crafty conspiracy between the Pope and the Archbishop. And the rather it is to be gathered, for that as the Pope was enemy unto the King in this his challenge to the Crown of France; so the Archbishop against his Prince (as for the most part always they have been) was a friend, as no man need to doubt thereof, unto the Pope. Which thing also more probably may be supposed, because of the coming down of the two Cardinals the same time, from the Pope to the King of England, about the matter of further Truce; whereof (Christ willing) more hereafter shall follow. Albeit the Archbishop (this yet notwithstanding) subtilly and featly excuseth himself to the King of the foresaid objections, and cunningly handleth the matter in words by his Letter directed to the King as followeth.

The Letter of the Archbishop of Canterbury to the King.

The Letter of the Archbishop to the King.

REdoubted Sir, may it please your Majesty to understand, that the most chief and special thing that keeps Kings and Princes in the favour of God, and best preserveth them in their estate is sage, wise, and deliberate counsel. And therefore saith the wise man concerning counsel in this wise, Good men have thereby their safety. And it is written in the Book of Kings, how Solomon, which was the wisest Prince that ever was, took unto him the most ancient and sage men of his Realm to be his Counsellors; by whose advisement and discretion, he always kept the land of Israel in quiet, and in peace, and besides that, had all other Kings and Princes that bordered upon him at his will and commandment. After whose death raigned Rehoboam his Son, who neglecting the good counsel of his Father, and good advice of his sage and discreet Counsellors, hearkened to such counsel as lighter and younger men perswaded him unto, that fought rather how to please and flatter him, than the quiet state of his Realm; whereby he lost all the whole land of Israel, the twelfth part only excepted. In like manner have many Kings of Israel, and other Kingdoms beside, by rash and evil counsel come to great ruin and mischief. And Sir, (saving your Princely patience) you may call to remembrance your own time; for by the wicked and unlearned counsel to our late Soveraign Lord your Father given (whom God forgive) which he took and followed, both against the Law of his land, and grand Charter of the Peers, and other his people of the land; some he put to shameful death; from others some he took their goods; and such as fled he put unto their ransome; and what enemies he purchased thereby, your Grace well understandeth. And after this, Sir, you know, even in your own time, how by following and believing over-light counsel, you your self lost the hearts of many of your subjects, from the which God deliver you, if it be his will. And after that time again until now, by the good advisement of your Prelates, Peers, and sage Counsellors of your land, your Graces business and affairs have been so demeaned and ordered; that you have had the hearts again of all your subjects, as well Spiritual as Temporal; as much or rather more, than any of your Graces Predecessors, Kings of England have had. So that by means of the said good counsel, the good will and aid of your people, and special grace of God, you have had the victory of all your enemies, as well in Scotland as in France, and all other places besides; that unto this day (Gods name be blessed therefore) your Grace hath been esteemed as one of the most noble Princes in all Christendom. And now your Grace (by the evil and perverse counsel of some such within the Realm which are not so wise as they might be, and such also as confider and respect rather their own private commodity, than your Graces honour and safety of your Realm) begin neth to apprehend divers Clerks, Peers, and other people of the land, and to direct process against them, not beseeming, but contrary to the Law

KING 2 Edw. 3

Law of the land, which to keep and maintain you are bound by the Oath you took at your Coronation; and contrary to the Grand Charter, whereof all the Realm are witnesses, and all the Prelates of the same, and contrary to the sentence confirmed by the Bull of our holy Father the Pope, which we have to shew. All which things as they are to the great peril and danger of your soul; so are they also to the utter debasing of your Regal state and honour. And Sir, although such as be your Graces Governours and Counsellors (being a calling above their degree) do give your Grace to understand that their enterprises and yours do please and content your subjects and commons; yet your Grace shall know for certain, and prove it your own self to be far otherwise, than they bear you in hand. And that unless God do remedy the same, if you prosecute your purpose begun in this order, you will lose the hearts of all your subjects, as also your good and rightful enterprise; and shall see such discord about the same, that you shall not be able to perform that you have begun, but rather inforce your enemies to seek your destruction, to lose your noble and renowned fame, and in the end your Kingdom it self, which God forbid. Wherefore Soveraign Lord and King, I beseech you that for the safeguard of your Honour and Realm, and enterprise begun, you will take unto you the most discreet and wisest men within your Realm, and work by their advice and counsel, as before this time you have been accustomed; without the aid and counsel of whom you can neither maintain your enterprise, nor govern your Realm. And for that some such as are about your Grace falsely devise against us treason and such like troubles (and therefore are of us Excommunicate, and as persons Excommunicate we do esteem of them) as your Spiritual Pastor, we also desire you so to esteem and think of them: which also make like report of other that have been with your Grace beyond the Seas, that they have naughtily and falsly served you, whereby you have lost the Town of Tourney, and much honour else, which you might have won and gotten there. May it please your Grace to call before you the Prelates and Peers of your Realm in some convenient place, where we and other moe may safely come and resort, and there also to make search and inquiry, in whose hands, after the beginning of your wars, the money, and what things else soever, which was granted unto you in aid of the same your wars, until this present day, doth remain and is not laid out again, as also by whose default you were so inforced to leave the said siege of Tourney; and that those which shall be found in any point faulty and guilty therein against you, as a good justicer, your Grace will cause to be punished according to the Law; and insomuch as appertaineth unto us therein, we ask judgment of our Peers (the state always of holy Church, of us, and of our Order reserved inviolate) according as we have written unto you herein. And for Gods sake, Sir, believe not either of us, or any other your true subjects else, more than that you shall understand the verity of; for if men should be punished without making answer to that which is objected against them, there should be then no difference in judgment betwixt the good doer and the bad.

Excommunication in his own private case allowed.

And Sir, may it please you well to consider of the great enterprise you have in hand, the great good will which you have need of for this cause, and of our great enemies the Scots, and the great jeopardy of your Realm besides. For if your Prelates, your Nobles, and all the wise men of your Realm were of one mind and will (without any discord or division amongst them) to dispose and set in order those things which are needful in so great affairs and business; they should have all enough to beat their heads about, for the maintenance of your great enterprise begun, the honour of you, and safeguard of your Realm. And Sir, may it please your Grace, not to be displeased that so rudely and grossly we declare unto you the verity; for why, the great love and affection which we bear unto you, and always have done the same, the preservation of your Honour, and safeguard of your Realm, as also for that we are (although unworthy) the Primate of the whole Realm of England, which thing appertaining unto us by our office (and we being your Spiritual Father) doth incite us the rather both to say and command that which may turn to the benefit of your soul, and profit of your Realm and Kingly estate. Thus the Holy Spirit save you both body and soul, and give your Grace both to hear and believe good counsel, and further give you victory over all your enemies. Written at Cant. the first of Janu. By your Graces Chaplain the Archbishop of the same.

And thus stood the case between the King and the Archbishop of Canterbury, who coming thus (as is said) in secret wise into England from the Siege of Tourney, his Army in the mean while by Ships was conveyed to Little-Britain. Of whom a great number through unseasonable and inconvenient meats and drinks, was there consumed. To whom also no less danger happened by the Seas, coming out of Britain into England by Tempest, Thunder and Lightning stirred up as is thought, by the Necromances of the French King.

The return of the King's Army from Tourney.

About which season approaching to the year of our Lord 1341, were sent from the Pope two other Cardinals to Entreat with King Edward for three years Truce more to be concluded with the French King, besides the former Truce taken before for one year, and all by the Popes means. For here is to be understood, that as it was not for the Popes purpose to have the King of England to raign over so many Countries, so his privy supportation lacked not by all means possible, both by the Archbishops and Cardinals, and also by the Emperor, to maintain the state of the French King, and to stablish him in his possessions. Ex Thom. Walsing. Ex Chron. Albanens.

Truce taken for three years between King Edward and the French King.

In the said Histories where these things be mentioned, it is also noted, that the same year such plenty there was here in the Realm of victuals, that a Quarter of Wheat was sold for 2 s. a flat Ox for a Noble, and as some say, a Sheep for 4 d. And thus far endureth the History of Ramulphus Cestrensis, called Polychronicon.

The next year following, which was 1342, Ludovicus Bavarus the Emperor, who before had shewed great courtesie to King Edward, in his first Voyage over, insomuch that he made him his Vicar or Vicegerent General, and offered him also aid against the French King; now (either turned by inconstancy, or seduced by the Pope) writeth to him contrary Letters, wherein he revoketh again the Vicegerentship granted to him, and seeketh all means in the favour of the French King, against King Edward, as by his Letters here under-written may better appear.

The Letter of the Emperor unto the KING of ENGLAND.

LUdovicus by the Grace of God Emperor of the Romans always Augustus, &c. To Edward King of England, his beloved Brother, Greeting and unfained love. Although great and urgent business of our own do oppress us, and about the same our weighty affairs we are daily incumbred, yet with the discord and variance between your Kingly dignity and the renowned Philip the King of France our Cousin, for your sake, we are not a little troubled. And the rather, the great charges which may hereafter grow both to you and to your Kingdom thereby confidered, both of men and money, unless the same be taken up, doth more easily provoke us to give our self to the careful study of your affairs. Wherefore we give you to understand that the foresaid Philip (at our request) hath given unto us by his Letters authority and power to intreat and conclude a peace between you, touching the variance begun: which peace (all the state diligently confidered both of your self, your Kingdom and subjects) we take and believe to be right expedient for you; moving therewithal your charity, and earnestly desiring you, that to this also you will give your consent; whereby we may bring you both to concord and unity, and establish between you a firm peace to endure, where unto with willing mind we would apply our self, and bestow our painful labour in profecuting of the same. And herein if you will condescend and agree unto our counsel, as we trust you will; it may please you by your Letters to give unto us the like authority as is above said, to intreat peace or ordering of a Truce for one year or two at least to continue. Neither let it move you, that between us and the said Philip of France a Truce is taken. For seeing that you without our consent took Truce with him: we by the advise of our Princes which know the bonds, deeds, and Covenants betwixt us, who also though no 'less, but that saving your honour we might do the same;

'have also made a league with the said Philip King of 'France; and for certain causes do revoke and call back
'the Lieutenantship which we assigned unto you by our 'Letters. Nevertheless, giving you for a certain to under'stand that in our said Treaties and peace concluded, we 'have so brotherly considered you, that if you will agree
'and condescend unto our counsel; your cause (by our 'mean and help) shall be brought to good pass and effect.
'About which things further to confer with your Brother-
'hood herein, we have sent a devout and religious man,
'Elzearbordus, Reader and Brother of the Heremites of 'Saint Augustine, and Chaplain of our Court; whom 'about the premisses we desire with speedy expedition to 'be sent unto us again.

'Dated at Francford the 14*th* day of June, in the 24*th*
'year of our Raign, and 14*th* of our Empire.

The answer of the King of England, to the Emperor.

TO the High and Mighty Prince Lord Ludovick, by the Grace of God, Emperor of the Romans, always Augustus, Edward by the same Grace King of France, and England, and Lord of Ireland, Salutation and profperous success.

'We have reverently received your Highness Letters, a'mongst other things containing, that the Noble Philip de
'Valois (to the intent a peace and concord between us and 'him might be concluded) hath given unto you by his Let'ters full power and authority thereunto at your Highness
'request; and that if the same might content us to do in
'like sort, your Highness would travel to bring the con-
'cord to pass; and that it would not move us any whit
'at all, that your Highness and the said Philip are in League
'together: For insomuch as we without your assent and 'consent (you say) took Truce with the said Philip, you
'have also done the like with him: which thing you might 'well do saving your honour, by the counsel of all your
'Nobles and Princes; and for certain causes you revoke a'gain the Lieutenantship which you committed unto us.
'Doubtless the zeal and good will you have to make this 'concord and agreement, we much commend; letting
'you to understand that we always have been desirous, and
'still are, to have a reasonable peace with the said Philip;
'which peace as much as to us (our honour saved) apper-
'tained, we have in justice and by law prosecuted; and in 'very deed, it should be to us acceptable, and as we would
'with, if by such a Mediator as your celsitude is, it might 'be brought to pass. But forasmuch as we understand the 'same our right and title to the Kingdom of France to be 'manifest and clear enough; we purpose not to commit
'the same by any of our Letters to doubtful arbitrement.
'But while we well consider and revolve with our selves,
'how upon circumspect consideration (you manifestly be'holding our just and rightful doing, and the strait deal'ing and obstinate purpose and injury of the said Philip)
'your gracious Highness made a special League with us,
'and in our behalf against the said Philip, adopting us of 'your great and bountiful love towards our Person to be 'one of your Sons; wherefore you should thus again alter
'and break the same, we cannot sufficiently marvel: See'ing your invincible Highness being instituted of God to
'the laud and commendation of good men, and revenge
'of evil and wicked doers, hath made a League against 'us with the said Philip de Valois, our notorious and in'jurious enemy. And as touching that which you say, with'out your affignment and consent we took a Truce, or
'days of respite with the said Philip, which we ought not 'to have done; if your Grace well consider the circum-
'stance of the matter, we have done but as we might 'therein. For when we laid our siege to Tourney, it was
'requisite that we should follow their advice, whose aid
'and society therein we had. Besides the sudden and emi-
'nent necessity which we there stood in, and the distance
'of the place betwixt your Highness and us furthermore
'was such, as that by no means we might attain the same,
'nor use your assent therein. Yea and further, if your Grace
'well remember your self, your grant unto us was such,
'that whensoever opportunity thereunto should serve, we 'might intreat of any peace, and grant what time we 'thought meet thereunto, without your consent therein:
'So that to conclude any final peace with the said Philip
'de Valois, without either your consent, or otherwise ma-
'king your Highness privy thereunto, it might not be law-
'ful for us; which thing without your said counsel, consent
'and advice, we never minded or purposed to do, but have
'in all our doings done that which us beseemed, so far as
'by any means our power would stretch; hoping likewise
'that your brotherly benevolence for a time would have 'more lovingly supported us. It is thought also by some,
'that the revoking back again, or restraint of your foresaid
'Lieutenantship, was prematurate or done all out of time;
'when as according to your promise made to us herein by 'your Letters Imperial, you ought not so to have done be'fore the Realm and Kingdom of France (or at the least
'the greatest part thereof) were of us obtained and quietly
'in peaceable wise enjoyed. These things premised there'fore we desire you according to your Nobility, duly to 'consider, and hereafter to do that which shall be thought
'both meet and convenient, because that (God willing)
'we mean to recompence and gratifie both you and yours,
'according to the measure of your benevolence bestowed
'upon us. The Almighty grant unto your celsitude so 'much felicity as your heart desireth.

'Dated at London the 18*th* day of July, in the second 'year of the Raign of our Kingdom of France, and of 'England the 15*th*.

KING Edw. 3.

In this mean time died Pope Benedict the Twelfth, mentioned a little before; after whom succeeded in that room Pope Clement the Sixth. Of whom it is reported in Stories, that he was very liberal and bountiful to his Cardinals of Rome, enriching and heaping them with goods and possessions, not of his own, but with the Ecclesiastical Dignities and Preferments of the Churches of England. For so recordeth the Author, that he bestowed upon his Cardinals the Livings and Promotions, such as were or should be vacant in the Churches of England, and went about to set up new Titles for his Cardinals, here within this Realm.
But the King being offended therewith, made void and frustrate all those foresaid provisions of the Pope; charging moreover and commanding that no person whatsoever should bufie himself with any such provisions, under pain of imprisonment and losing his life. Which Law was made the next year following, which was Ann. 1344.

Pope Clement the 6.

Ex Chron. Alberici.

The King offendeth the Popes provisions.

It followeth then that the said Pope Clement again began to make new provisions for two of his Cardinals, of Benefices and Churches that should be next vacant, besides Bishopricks and Abbotships, to the extent of two thousand Marks. Whereupon the Procurators of the said Cardinals were sent down for the same. But the King and Nobility of the Realm not suffering that under pain of imprisonment caused the said Procurators forthwith to depart the Realm, whereupon the Nobles and Commons shortly after writ a fruitful Epistle to the Pope, for the liberties and maintenance of the English Church. Whereunto, as saith the Author, the Pope and the Cardinals were not able to answer. The argument and tenor of which Letter, out of French, we have caused to be translated into English, as ensueth.

The Pope frustrateth provisions driven out of England.

The Letter of the King of England, and Nobles of the same, to the Pope, against the reservations and provisions which he had in England.

TO the most Holy Father in God, Lord Clement, by the Grace of God, of the holy Church of Rome, and of the Universal Church, chief and high Bishop; his humble and devout Children, the Princes, Dukes, Earls, Barons, Knights, Citizens, Burgesses, and all the Commonalty of the Realm of England, assembled at the Parliament holden at Westminster the fifteenth day of May last past: Devout kissings of his holy feet, with all humble reverence and humility. Most holy Father, the holy discretion, government and equity which appeareth to be in you, and ought of duty so to be (being so high and holy a Prelate, and head of the holy Church) by whom the holy Universal Church and people of God ought to be as by the Sun-beams enlightened, giveth us good hope and likelihood, that the just petitions (to the honour of

A Letter of the Nobles and Commons of England to the Pope.

KING Edw. 3.

'Jesus Christ and holy Church, and your Holiness also) by 'us declared, shall be of you graciously heard and consider'ed; And that all errors and other iniquities should be quite 'taken away and removed; in stead whereof, fruitful ex-
'ploits and necessary remedies (by the grace of the holy Spi'rit which you in so high an estate have received) may be by
'you likewise graciously ordained and disposed. Wherefore
'most holy Father, all we (upon great deliberation and com'mon assent) come unto your Holiness, shewing and declaring 'that the noble Kings of England our Progenitors, and An'cestors, and we (according to the grace of the holy Spirit
'to them and us given, every one according to his devoti-
'on) have established, founded and endowed within the 'Realm of England, Churches, Cathedrals, Colledges, Ab-
'bies, Priories, and other divers houses of Religion in the 'same ordained; and to the Prelates and Governors of the 'same places, have given Lands, Possessions, Patrimonies,
'Franchises, Advowsons, and Patronages of Dignities, Re-
'venues, Offices, Churches, with many and divers other Be-
'nefices unto them given; whereby the service of God and
'faith of Christ might have been honoured and had in reve-
'rence, that the Hospitals and Almshouses that are made,
'with all the Churches and Edifices, might be honestly kept
'and maintained. and that devout prayers might in those 'places be made for the Founders, and the poor Parishio'ners aided and comforted. And such only ought to have 'the Cure thereof, as are able to hear Confessions; and in 'their own natural Tongue are otherwise meet to inform 'and teach their Parishioners. And forsomuch as (most 'holy Father) you cannot well come to the notice of di-
'vers such errors and defaults, neither yet understand the 'condition of the places, being so far off, unless your Holi-
'ness be informed and advertised; We having the perfect
'intelligence and understanding of the said errors and de-
'faults of the places aboveside, within the said Realm, have 'thought meet to signifie the same unto your Holiness:
'That divers reservations, provisions and collations by your 'Predecessors Apostolick of Rome, and by you, most holy 'Father, in your time have been granted (and that more 'largely than they have been accustomed to be) unto di-
'vers persons, as well strangers, and of sundry Nations, as 'unto some such as are our enemies having no understand'ing at all of the Tongue and conditions of them, of 'whom they have the government and cure. Whereby a 'great number of souls are in peril, a great many of their 'Parishioners in danger, the service of God destroyed, the 'Alms and devotion of all men diminished, the Hospitals
'perished, the Churches with their appurtenances decayed,
'Charity withdrawn, the good and honest persons of our
'Realm unadvanced, the charge and government of souls
'not regarded, the devotion of the people restrained, ma-
'ny poor Scholars unpreferred, and the treasure of the Realm
'carried out against the minds and intents of the Founders.
'All which errors, defaults and slanders, most holy Father,
'we neither can nor ought to suffer or endure. We there'fore most humbly require your Holiness, that the slan-
'ders, errors and defaults, which we have declared unto
'you, may be through your great discretion considered;
'and that it may please you that such reservations, provisi-
'ons and collations may be utterly repelled, that from hence-
'forth the same be no more amongst us used; and to take 'such order and remedy therein, that the said Benefices, E-
'difices, Rights, with their appurtenants, may be to the ho'nour of God by our own Countrymen cured, defended
'and governed. And that it may further please your Ho-
'liness by your Letters to signifie unto us, without delay
'and other protract of time, what your pleasure is touching
'this our lawful request and demand; that we may do our
'endeavour with diligence herein for the remedy, correcti-
'on and amendment of those enormities above specified. In 'witness whereof, unto these Letters Patents we have set
'our Seals. Given in the full Parliament at Westminster, the '18*th*. day of May, Anno 1343.

Decay of the Church of England by the Pope.

After these things thus passed over, the King shortly after sent over his Procurators, the Earl of Lancaster and Darby, Hugh Spenser, Lord Ralph Stafford, with the Bishop of Exeter, and divers other, to the Popes Court to difcuss and plead about the right of his Title before the Pope.
Unto whom the said Pope Clement the 6th. not long after sent down this Message; how that Ludovick Duke of Bavaria the Emperor, whom the Pope had before deposed, had submitted himself to him in all things; and therefore deserved at his hands the benefit of Absolution; and how the Pope therefore had conferred and restored unto him justly and graciously the Empire, which he before unjustly did hold, &c. Which Message when the King did hear, being therewith moved to anger, he answered again, saying, That if he also did agree and compound with the French King, he was ready to fight with them both, &c. ex
Chron. Albanen.

The Pope's Message to the King.

The Kings answer to the Popes message.

Within the time of this year, Pence, Half-pence and Farthings began to be coined in the Tower. And the next year following, which was An. 1344. the Castle of Windsor (where the King was born) began to be repaired; and in the same house called the Round-Table was situate, the diameter whereof, from the one side to the other, contained 200 feet; to the expences of which House Weekly was allowed an hundred Pound for the maintaining of the Kings Chivalry, till at length by the occasion of the French Wars, it came down to nine Pounds a Week. By the example whereof the French K. being provoked, he began also the like Round-Table in France, for the maintaining of the Knighthood. At which time the said French King moreover gave free liberty through his Realm to fell down Trees for making of Ships and maintaining of his Navy, whereby the Realm of England was not a little damnified.

Anno 1344.

The Castle of Windsor inlarged.

The round table builded in Windsor.

During the same year the Clergy of England granted to the King Tenths for three years; for the which the King in recompence again granted to them his Charter, containing these priviledges, That no Archbishop nor Bithop should be arraigned before his Justices sive ad sectam suam, sive patrie, if the said Clerk do submit and claim his Clergy, professing himself to be a Member of holy Church; whose doing, shall not be bound to come to his answer before the Justices. And if it shall be laid unto them to have married two Wives, or to have married a Widow, the Justices shall have no power to proceed against them, to enquire of the matter: So that the cause shall be referred to the Spiritual Court, &c.

Tenths granted to the King by the Clergy for three years.

Priviledges granted by the K. to the Clergy.

By this it is like that Priests had Wives.

About this present time at the setting up of the Round-Table, the King made Prince Edward, his eldest Son, the first Prince of Wales. All this while yet continued the Truce between the two Kings. Albeit it is likely to be thought that the French King gave many attempts to infringe the same. Whereupon Henry Earl of Lancaster, with 600 Men at Arms, and as many Archers, was sent over to Gascoine, the year after 1345, who there so valiantly is said to have behaved himself, that he subdued 55 Townships unto the King, 23 Noblemen he took Prisoners, encountring with the Frenchmen at Allebroke. So courteously and liberally he dealt with the Soldiers, that it was a joy to them, and a preferment to fight underneath him.
His manner was in winning any Town, to reserve little or nothing to himself, but to sparse the whole spoil to his Soldiers. One example in the Authour (whom I follow) is touched; how the foresaid Earl at the winning of the Town of Briers, where he had granted to every Soldier for his Booty, the House with all the implements therein, which he by Victory should obtain; among other his Soldiers, to one named Reb, fell a certain House with the implements thereof, wherein was contained the Mint and Mony coined for that Country, to the value of a great substance; which when the Soldier had found, in breaking up a House where first the gross Metal was not yet perfectly wrought, he came to the Earl declaring to him the Treasure, to know what was his pleasure therein. To whom the Earl answered, That the house was his, and whatsoever he found there- in. Afterward the Soldier, finding a whole Mint of pure Silver ready coined, signified the same to the Earl, forsomuch as he thought such Treasure to be too great for his portion; to whom the said Earl, again answering, Declared that he had once given him the whole House, and that he had once given, he would not call back again, as children use to play. And therefore had him enjoy that which was granted to him; and if the Mony were thrice as much, it should be his own, Ex Chron. Alban. Which Story whether it was true or otherwise in those days, I have not to affirm. But certes, if in these our covetous, wretched days now present, any Author should report the like act to be practised, I would hardly believe it to be true.

Anno 1345.

Henry Earl, after made Duke of Lancaster, sent over to Gascoine.

A rare example of a liberal Captain to his Soldiers.

The liberal heart and exultant voice of a worthy Captain.

The Scots partly a mean of breaking Truce.

As the Earl of Lancaster was thus occupied in Gascoin, the Scots were as busie here in England, wasting and spoiling without mercy; which were thought (and not unlike) to be set on by the French King. And therefore he was judged both by that, and by other divers ways to have broken the Covenants of Truce between him and the King of England.

{ Anno 1346. } The second voyage of K. Edward into France.

Wherefore the next year ensuing, *An.*1346. King Edward first sending his Letters to the Court of Rome, and therein complaining to the Pope of Philip de Valois, how he transgressed and broke the Truce between them made, which by evident probations he there made manifest; about the Month of July he made his Voyage into Normandy, in such secret wise, that no Man well knew whether he intended. Where first he entred the Town of Hogs, from thence proceeded unto Cardone. Where, about the 27*th.* of July, by the River of Cardone, he had a strong Battel with the Normans and other Frenchmen, which to stop his passage, defended the Bridge. At the which Battel were taken of the Lords of France, the Earl of Ewe, the Earl of Tankervile; and of Knights with other Men of Arms, to the number of one hundred; of footmen six hundred: and the Town and Suburbs beaten down to the hard Walls. And all that could be born away was tranforted to the Ships.

The Battel at Cardone.

A little before, mention was made how the French King began first to infringe the Truce taken, and how the Earl of Lancaster, upon the same, was sent unto Gascoine. Now for the more evidence of the matter concerning the falling of the French King from the League, and other his wrongs and untrue dealing, it shall better in the Kings Letter appear; who hearing word, that the Lord Philip de Valois (contrary to the form of Truce taken at Vanes) had apprehended certain of his Nobles of England, and had brought them to Paris to be imprisoned and put to death; besides other flaughters and spoilings made in Britain, Gascoin, and other places more: He therefore seeing the Truce to be broken of the French Kings part, and being thereto of necessity compelled, in the year above prefixed, the 14*th.* of the Month of June, did publish and send abroad his Letters of defiance, containing this effect.

The Kings Letters of defiance againſt the French King.

The Kings Letters of defiance againſt the French K.

TO all and singular, to whom these Presents shall come, publick greeting. We think it is not unknown unto you all, that after the decease of Charles late King of France of famous memory, Brother to our redoubted Lady Mother Queen Isabel Queen of England; the Crown of France, by just inheritance, hath fallen unto us, as to the next Heir Male now living after the said King. Now Philip de Valois, being Son but only to the Uncle of the foresaid King Charles, and therefore by degree of Consanguinity being further off removed from the same (we being in the time of our minority) hath violently by force and power contrary to God and Justice usurped, occupied, and yet doth occupy the same, invading further, and spoiling our Lands in the Dukedom of Aquitain, and joyning himself with our rebellious enemies the Scots, seeking our subversion both by Land and by Sea, to the utter mosh of his endeavour. And although we, to prevent the damages which might rise by War, have offered to the said Philip divers friendly ways of Peace; to the intent we might better intend our purposed Voyage against Christs enemies the Turks: yet could nothing prevail with him in obtaining any peaceable way of reformation, driving us off by crafty dissimulation, through false pretended words, but performing nothing with heart and deed. Whereupon, we not neglecting the grace and gift of God, to defend the right of our inheritance, and to repulse the injuries of our enemy, have not refused by force of Arms, coming down to Britany, to encounter with him in open field. And so we being occupied in our Wars, there repaired unto us the Reverend Father Bishop of Preveit, and of Tuſculane Cardinals, and Legates from Pope Clement the 6th. to entreat some reformation of peace between us. At whose request we consented, agreeing to such forms and conditions of peace as then were taken between us, sending moreover our Embassadors to the Court of Rome, specially to intreat of the same matter. And thus while some hope of Truce seemed between us to appear; News suddenly came unto us, which not a little astonished our mind, of the death of certain of our Nobles and Adherents, whom the said Philip unjustly and cruelly at Paris commanded to be executed. Beside the wasting and spoiling our Lands and Subjects in Britany, Gascony, and other places; with innumerable wrongs and injuries, deceitfully intended against us both by Sea and Land. By reason whereof, the Truce on his part being notoriously broken, it is most manifest that it had been lawful for us, forthwith to have set upon him with open War. Yet notwithstanding, to avoid those incommodities that come by War, we thought first to prove, if by any gentle means some reformation might be had touching the premisses. And therefore sundry times, we have sent Embassadors to the Popes presence for the Treaty of a Peace and Reformation to be had in those aforesaid excesses; requiring also, for the tractation thereof, certain terms of times to be appointed, always reserving to our selves notwithstanding, free liberty to resume War at our pleasure, according as the doings of the said Philip shall constrain us thereunto. And now forsomuch as the foresaid terms be clearly expired, and yet no reasonable offer of peace appeareth, neither will the said Philip come to any conformity, being required and monished notwithstanding by the Popes Letter thereunto (as the Pope by his Letter hath written unto us) but always hath multiplied his Conspiracy and Obligations, using extremities against us; and to omit here to speak of the excessive enormity of the Popes Legate, who being sent by the Bishop of Rome for the keeping of Truce, and whose part had been rather to have quenched and staid the discord, hath stirred up our enemies more eagerly against us. In the which doing, neither hath the Bishop of Rome (saving his reverence) as yet provided any remedy, albeit he hath been divers times requested of us so to do. Which thing being so, we ought to be excused both before God and Man, if for the defect of other remedy to be had, we shall be constrained our selves to find remedy against such wrongs and injuries; the case of justice and necessity constraining us to give out these our Letters of defiance against the violator of the Truce, and the unjust invader of our Kingdom. Protesting, that this we do, not upon any displeasure to the Bishop of Rome, or to the Apostolick See, but only for the moderation of equity, standing upon the defence of our own right and lawful inheritance, intending always rather to have peace, if by any reasonable way it might be had. And thus much, for this stopping of slanderous fame and the mouths of backbiters. We thought good to signifie, first to the high Bishop of Rome, and the foresaid Cardinals; that by them as persons indifferent, and Mediators, the same may be insinuated to the contrary part; and also unto your whole University in general; recommending unto you all the innocency of my cause, and the community of justice. Dated at Westminster the 14th.of June, the 19th. year of our Reign in England, and of France the sixth.

The Pope Legate like Pope. stirreth up War. Like Legate like Pope.

The K. complaineth to Pope.

And thus much for the Kings Letters. Now let us again return to his passage, from whence a little we have digressed. Concerning the which passage of the King, with the order of his acts atchieved in the same, from the winning of Codane or Cardoine, unto the Town of Poissake, it is sufficiently described by one of the Kings Chaplains and his Confessor; who being a Dominick Frier, and accompanying the King through all his journey, writeth thereof as followeth:

A Letter of the Kings Confeſſor touching his acts doing at Cardoine.

BEnedicere debemus Deum Cœli, &c. Great cause we have to praise and laud the God of Heaven, and most worthily to confess his holy name, who hath wrought so his mercy to us. For after the conflict had at Codane, in the which 20*s doing many were slain, and the City taken and sacke even to the bare Walls, the City of* Bais immediately yielded it self of his own accord, fearing lest their counsels had been bewrayed. After this the Lord our King directed his progress toward Roan: Who being at the Town of Lexon, there came certain Cardinals to him, greatly exhorting him to peace. Which Cardinals being courteously entertained of the King for the reverence of the Popes See, it was peace. thus answered to them again: That the King being much desirous desirous of peace, had assayed by all ways and means reasonable how to maintain the same; and therefore hath offered conditions, and manifold ways of peace to be had to the no small prejudice of his own cause. And yet is ready to admit any reasonable offer of peace, if by any means it my be sought, &c. With this answer the Cardinals going to the French King the Kings adversary, to perswade with him in like manner, returned to King Edward again, offering to him in the French Kings name, the Dukedom of Aquitania, in as full assurance as his father before him ever had it: besides further hope also of obtaining more, if intreaty of peace might be obtained. But forsomuch as that contented not enough the Kings mind, neither did the Cardinals find the French King so tractable and propense to the study of peace as they looked for, the Cardinals returned, leaving the matter as they found it. And so the King speeding forward, by the way as his journey did lie, he subdued the Country and the great Towns, without any resistance of the inhabitants, who did all flee and run away. Such fear God struck into them, that it seemed they had lost their hearts. In the same Voyage, as the King had gotten many Towns and Villages, so also he subdued Castles and Munitions, very strong, and that with little stress. His enemy being at the same time at Roan had reared a great Army, who notwithstanding being well manned, yet ever kept on the other side of the River Seane, breaking down all the Bridges that we should not come over to him. And although the Country round about continually was spoiled, sacke, and with fire consumed by the circuit of 20 miles round about; yet the French King, being distant scarce the space of one mile from us, either would not, or else durst not (when he might easily have passed over the River) make any resistance for defence of his Country and People. And so our King journeying forward, came to Puisake or Poisy, where the French King had likewise broken down the Bridge, and keeping on the other side of the River would rest in no place.

The French King sheweth no constancy, fickleness of peace.

After whole coming to Poisy, the forefaid Chaplain and Confessor to the King, named Michael Northburgh, describing the Kings Voyage, and the acts of the Englishmen from the Town of Poisie, to his coming to Calis, in his Letters writeth in this swife.

A Letter of William Northburgh the Kings Confessor, describing the Kings Voyage into France.

SAlutations premised, we give you to understand, that 'I our Soveraign Lord the King came to the Town of 'Poisie, the day before the Assumption of our Lady, where 'was a certain Bridge over the water of Seane, broken 'down of the enemy, but the King tarried there so long till 'that the Bridge was made again. And whiles the Bridge 'was in repairing, there came a great number of Men at 'Arms, and other Soldiers armed, to hinder the same. But 'the Earl of Northampton issued out against them and slew 'of them more than one thousand; the rest fled away, 'thanks be to God. And at another time our Men passed 'the Water, although with much travel, and slew a great 'number of the common Soldiers of France, about the 'City of Paris, and Country adjoyning, being part of the 'French Kings Army; and thoroughly well appointed; so 'that our people have now made other good Bridges upon 'our enemies, God be thanked, without any great loss 'and damage to us. And on the Morrow after the Assumption of our Lady, the King passed the water of Seane, and 'marched toward Poisie, which is a Town of great defence, 'and strongly immured, and a marvellous strong Castle 'within the same, which our enemies kept. And when our 'Vanguard was passed the Town, our Rereguard gave an 'assault thereunto, and took the same: where were slain 'more than three hundred Men at Arms of our enemies 'part. And the next day following, the Earl of Suffolk and 'Sir Hugh Spenser marched forth upon the Commons of 'the Country assembled and well armed, and in fine discomfited them, and slew of them more than 200, and 'took 600 Gentlemen Prisoners, beside others. And after 'that, the King marched toward Grand Villers, and while 'he was there encamped, the Kings Vanguard was descried 'by the Men of Arms by the King Benames whereupon our 'Men issued out in great haste, and joyned Battel with 'them, but were inforced to retire. Notwithstanding, 'thanks be unto God, the Earl of Northampton issued out, 'and refcued the Horsemen with other Soldiers; so that 'few or none of them were either taken or slain, saving only Thomas Talbot, but had again the enemy in chase with-'in two Leagues of Amiens, of whom we took 8, and 'slew twelve of their best Men at Arms; the rest being well 'horsed, took the Town of Amiens. After this, the King of 'England marched toward Pountife upon Bartholomew 'day, and came unto the water of Som, where the French 'King had laid 500 Men at Arms, and three thousand foot-'men, purposing to have kept and stopped our passage; 'but thanks be to God, the King of England and his Host 'entred the same water of Som, where never Man passed 'before, without the loss of any of our Men; and after 'that encountred with the enemy, and slew of them 'more than two thousand; the rest fled to Abeville, in 'which chase were taken many Knights, Squires, and Men 'at Arms. The same day Sir Hugh Spenser took the Town 'of Croylay, where he and his Soldiers flew 400 Men at 'Arms, and kept the Town, where they found great store 'of Victuals. The same night encamped the King of England in the Forest of Cressy upon the same water, for that 'the French Kings Host came on the other side of the Town 'near unto our passage; but he would not take the water 'of us, and so marched toward Abeville. And upon the Friday next following, the King being still encamped in the 'said Forest, our Scuriers descried the French King, which 'marched toward us in four great Battels. And having then 'understanding of our enemies (as Gods will was) a little 'before the evening tide we drew unto the plain field, and 'set our Battels in array; and immediately the fight began, 'which was sore and cruel, and indured long, for our enemies 'behaved themselves right nobly. But thanks be given to 'God, the Victory fell on our side, and the King our adverfary was discomfited with all his Host, and put to flight, 'where also was slain the King of Benarne, the Duke of Lorrain, the Earl of Dabesen, the Earl of Flanders, the Earl 'of Blois, the Earl of Arcot, with his two Sons, the Earl of 'Damerler, the Earl of Nevers, and his Brother, the Lord 'of Tronard, the Archbishop of Meymes, the Archbishop 'of Saundes, the high Prior of France, the Earl of Savoy, 'the Lord of Morles, the Lord de Guia, Seigniour de S. Novant, Seigniour de Rosnburgh, with six Earls of Almain, 'and divers other Earls, Barons, Knights and Squires, whose 'names are unknown. And Philip de Valois himself, with 'another Marquess, which was called Lord Elector among 'the Romans, escaped from the Battel. The number of the 'Men at Arms which were found dead in the field, besides 'the common Soldiers and footmen, were 1542. And all 'that night the King of England with his Host, abode armed in the field where the Battel was fought. On the next 'morrow before the Sun rose, there marched toward us 'another great Host, mighty and strong of the Frenchmen. 'But the Earl of Northampton, and the Earl of Norfolk issued out against them in three Battels; and after long and 'terrible fight, them in like wise they discomfited, by Gods 'great help and grace (for otherwise it could never have 'been) where they took of Knights and Squires a great 'number, and slew above 2000, pursuing the chase three 'Leagues from the place where the Battel was fought. The 'same night also the King encamped himself again in the 'Forest of Cressy, and on the morrow marched toward 'Boleine, and by the way he took the Town of Staples; and 'from thence he marched toward Calis, where he intendeth 'to plant his Siege, and lay his Battery to the same. And 'therefore our Soveraign Lord the King willeth and com-'mandeth you, in all that ever you may, to send to the 'said Siege Victuals convenient. For after the time of our 'departing from Cheam, we have travelled through the 'Country, with great peril and danger of our people, but 'yet always had of Victual plenty, thanks be to God therefore. But now as the cafe standeth, we partly need your 'help to be refreshed with Victuals. Thus fare you well. 'Written at the Siege before the Town of Calis the 14*th.* 'day of September.

David K. of Scots invadeth England

In the mean time, during the Siege of Calis, David the Scotiſh King, at the requeſt of the French King, with a great Army braſt into the North parts of England; and firſt beſieging the Town of Lidel, within ſix days obtained the greateſt part of the Town; and there taking all that he could find, with Sir Walter Salby a valiant Knight, which was the keeper of the Hold, he cauſed him uncourteouſly to be put to the Sword; and ſo from thence proceeded further into England; till at length being met withal by William Sureb Archbiſhop of York, and the Lord Percy, and the Lord Nevil, with other Nobles of thoſe parts (calling and gathering their men together) in the Plain near to Durham, the ſeventeenth day of October in the year above-ſaid, through the gracious hand of Chriſt, there they were ſubdued and conquered. In the which conflict, the Earls of Murrife and Stratheron, with the flower of all the Chivalry, and principal Warriors of Scotland were ſlain. Alſo the foreſaid King David, with the Earls of Mentiffe and Fiffes, and other Lords, and William Douglaſs Maſklime, Fleming, and William Douglaſs, and other many more Men of Arms were taken Priſoners; and ſo the miſchief which they intended to other, fell upon their own heads.

During moreover, the ſaid Siege of Calis, the foreſaid Pope Clement the 6th. writing to the King of England went about under the pretence of peace to ſtop his proceedings: whoſe Letters follow here under written.

The Letter of the Pope to the King of England, in the behalf of the Frenchmen.

'Clement the Biſhop, Servant of Gods Servants, To his well-beloved Son in Chriſt, Edward the puiſſant 'King of England, Salutation and Apoſtolical Bleſſing. If 'you diligently conſider, dear Son, (as ought a Catholick 'Prince to do) the ſlaughter of ſuch an innumerable ſort, 'bought with the precious bloud of Chriſt our Redeemer; 'the loſs of their ſubſtance and ſouls, and the lamentable 'perils which the diſſentions and Wars ſtirred up between 'you and our well-beloved Son Philip, the noble King of 'France, have brought upon us, and yet daily do without 'intermiſſion; and alſo the bewailing of ſo many poor peo-'ple, crying out of Orphans and Pupils, lamentation of Wi-'dows, and other miſerable People which be robbed and 'ſpoiled, and almoſt famiſhed; what exclamation they 'make with tears running down their Cheeks yelling and 'crying unto God for help; as alſo the deſtruction of 'Churches Monaſteries and holy places, holy Veſſels, and 'other ornaments unto Gods ſervice dedicated; the ſacrile-'legious Robberies, Sackings, and Impriſonings, the ſpoil-'ing of holy Churches, and religious perſons, with many 'other ſuch innumerable, deteſtable, execrable miſchiefs 'offending the eies of the Divine Majeſty; all which, it 'is your Princely intent would conſider and well remember; 'with this alſo, that Catholick Faith (eſpecially in the Eaſt 'parts) and the Chriſtians there abiding by means of the 'ſame diſſentions and Wars, deſtitute of the helps of ſuch 'Catholick Men as are in the Weſt parts, are ſo afflicted of 'the Infidels, ſeeing the other parts of Chriſtendom ſo trou-'bled with cruel Perſecutions, yea, and more cruel than 'ever it hath been (although in theſe times to amplifie this 'our Faith in the faid Eaſt parts is cruel Perſecution ſhew-'ed, more than hath been of many years paſt) doubtleſs we 'believe it would pity your heart. And to the end that ſuch 'and ſo great evils ſhould no further proceed; nor yet that 'ſo great good might be done by dilating of our foreſaid 'faith in theſe times ſhould be let and hindred, we deſire 'you that you would apply your mind to make ſome agree-'ment and peace with the foreſaid King. For if (my well-'beloved Son) God hath given unto you proſperous ſuc-'ceſs and fortune, ye ought rather to humble than to extol 'your ſelf; and be ſo much the more readier to incline to his 'peace, and to endeavour your ſelf to pleaſe God, which 'loveth peace, and delighteth in peaceable Men; and to eſ-'chew the foreſaid evils, which without doubt do grievously 'offend him. Furthermore, we marvel greatly, that unto our 'reverend Brother Ambaldus Biſhop of Tuſculane, and our 'beloved Son Stephen, of the Title of S. John and Paul, 'Prieſt and Cardinal of the Apoſtolical See, being ſent as 'Legates by us and the ſame See Apoſtolical, to intreat a 'Peace, who diligently and faithfully labouring for the ſame, 'as lovers of verity, juſtice and equity, and therewithal, re-'guarders of your honour, could not be ſuffered touching the 'intreaty of the ſame Peace, to come unto your Graces pre-'ſence.

{KING Ed. 3.}

'Wherefore we deſire your Kingly Highneſs more ear-'neſtly, and for the mercy of God, with more vehemency 'require the ſame; that you taking up the foreſaid horrible 'evils, and preventing the ſweetneſs of piety and compaſſi-'on; may eſcape the vengeance of Gods indignation, which 'were to be feared. if you ſhould perſevere in your forſaid 'evils, as God forbid. And as touching the intreaty for 'Peace, for which our foreſaid Cardinals were ſent unto 'you (howbeit ſecretly, leſt it ſhould be any derogation to 'your honour) we deſire you to condeſcend thereunto, and 'and that with all your affection you will incline your mind 'to the ſame, ſo pleaſant unto God, ſo deſired of the world, 'as alſo to you, the foreſaid King, and unto the Catholick 'faith profitable. And that the ſame peace by Gods help 'grace eſtabliſhed and made perfect, you might aſſay your 'puiſſant ſtrength about Gods buſineſs in the foreſaid Eaſt 'parts (ſo good occaſion ſerving, as before is ſaid, in theſe 'our times, being ſo apt advancements of your honour, and 'happy increaſing of your Princely Name; for we have 'heard it of you reported, that you behave your ſelf fer-'vently in all your attempts. Thus we doubt not but that 'you will write unto us again touching the premiſſes, and 'the purpoſe of your intention touching the ſame. Dated at 'Avinion the 18th. of February, and 5th. year of our Papacy.

The Anſwer of the King of England, to the foreſaid Letter of the Pope.

Moſt holy Father, we underſtand by the Letters of the reverend Fathers in God, the Biſhop of Tuſculane, and Stephen of the Title of S. John Prieſt, Cardinals and Legates of the Court of Rome, as alſo by the Letters of your Holineſs ſent unto us, that ye marvel greatly for that your ſaid Legates were of purpoſe ſent unto us, and commanded to intreat of a Peace between our adverſary of France and us, that we would not ſuffer them ſecretly to talk with us, for the ſafeguard of our honour; the intention of your heart being to make the foreſaid peace; complaining and bewailing therein the death of Chriſtian Men, the loſs of their goods, the peril of their ſoule, the lamentable wailings of the poor, of Orphans, of Widows, and deſtruction of other pitiful perſons, the pillage and robberies of Churches, and other miſchiefs innumerable, and namely, the diminiſhing of Chriſtian faith in the Eaſt parts, which by the War between our adverſary of France and us ſo ſore decayed, as the ſaid Letters plainly do import. And that foraſmuch as God hath given us triumphant fortune, therefore much the more we ought to abaſe and humble our heart, and to the reader to make and incline to a peace. As touching theſe things, holy Father, we give your holineſs to underſtand, that as well unto your foreſaid Legates, as other meſſengers ſent from you unto us, we have offered unto every of them reaſonable ways of peace, and every day declare the ſame, and that not ſecretly, but openly. For we doubt not to let our purpoſe be underſtood; for he that is the high Judge both of him and us, in whoſe diſpoſition all things lie, hath given unto us the Crown of France to our right and proper heritage. The which right our foreſaid adverſary hath by force of long time detained from us, we ſeeking to obtain the ſame in peaceable wiſe; and yet do, if we might obtain the ſame in any good manner, rather for the benefit of Chriſtian Men, and that the foreſaid evils might ceaſe, which by his wrongful means only have increaſed and grown. Yet notwithſtanding, as before time you know, we aſſented to a Truce, with certain Articles contained in the ſame writing; all this he hath infringed: Neither doth the wrong ſuffice him which he offereth us in our foreſaid Heritage, but he indeavoureth himſelf, during the ſaid Truce, to invade our Realm of England, and other our Lands; and furthermore, maintaineth the Scots, and aideth them to the utter utter deſtruction of us, our People and Lands aforeſaid; wherein we were inforced for the ſafeguard of our People and Lands, by ſuch lawful meant as we may, to defend our ſelves, and put him from his wicked purpoſe. And furthermore for the ſame, our quarrel being in the hands of God, have we come againſt him to conquer our Inheritance of France; over whom God hath given us divers Victories, as we have truſted he would by his right-wiſe judgment and power; which thing he hath ſhewed upon us, (all chance of fortune ſet apart) in reſpect of our rightful Title therein, and without our deſerts: wherefore with all humility of heart we give him thanks always therefore, moſt devoutly night and day praiſing his holy name; for we acknowledge the ſame cometh not by our ſtrength and force. Wherefore, moſt holy Father, we deſire your Holineſs, and, ſo much as in us lieth, require the ſame, that you that ſupply the place of the Son of God in earth, and have the government of the ſouls of all Chriſtian men, and ought to be upright and equal towards all men, without exception of perſons, that ye, I ſay, will receive good information and true, of the objections aboveſaid, and will put to your holy helping hand, as much as in you is, that our ſaid adverſary of France may acknowledge his wrong which he hath done to us herein, and may be by your aid redreſſed, and that he in this his wrong have no maintenance and aid at your hand. For if it be ſo, we then appeal unto the Judge of Judges, which ſuffereth for a time wrongs to be done for the ſinful default of Man, but in the end redreſſeth the ſame, leaving no good deed unrewarded, nor evil unpuniſhed; moſt humbly requiring him to be to us a true and upright Judge of all our controverſies for his mercies ſake, as in the mean time we repoſe our full truſt and confidence in him. The holy Spirit of God, &c.

Offers made to the ſons of Flanders to forſake K. Edward.

Moreover, during yet the Siege of Calis, the French King had ſent certain offers to the Men of Flanders, that if they would relinquiſh the King of England, and adhere to him:

Firſt, He would remit all their former tranſgreſſions.

Secondly, He would unburden them of their indict.

Thirdly, He would ſend unto them ſuch plenty of Corn, that what was ſold for 12 ſhillings with them, ſhould be ſold for 4 ſhillings, and that for ſix years.

Fourthly, He would ſtore them with plenty of French Wooll to make Cloth for a ſmall price; and that they might ſell the ſaid Cloths both in Flanders and in France, and that the Frenchmen ſhould uſe the ſame Cloth, forſomuch as all other manner of Cloth ſhould be forbidden in France, ſo long as any of that (made of French Wooll) might be found.

Fifthly, He would reſtore to them theſe three Cities, Inſulans, Rowocum and Betony.

Sixthly, He would defend them from all their adverſaries; and in pledge of the ſame would ſend them money beforehand.

Seventhly, Such as were able and forward men among them, he would retain and promote them, &c.

But theſe offers, ſeeming to proceed more of fair words to ſerve the preſent turn, than of any hearty truth, were not received. Then the Lord John, Prince and Heir to the French King, during the foreſaid Siege of Calis above mentioned, coming with a mighty Army of Frenchmen, ſet upon the Men of Flanders and Engliſhmen in the Town of Caſſels. In the which conflict, during from morning to noon, the Frenchmen were vanquiſhed, and the young Dolphin driven back from whence he came. Of whoſe number divers were ſlain and taken priſoners. Where on the other ſide (through the Lords defence) not one is reported to be grievously wounded.

The Diſcomfiture with the French diſcomfited at Caſſels.

As this paſſed on, not long after, about the ſeventh day of June, An. 1347. King Edward continuing ſtill his Siege againſt Calis, Philip the French King came down with a mighty Army, purpoſing to remove the Siege; where, not far off from the Engliſh Hoſt, he encamped himſelf. Which done, two Cardinals, Ambaldus and Stephanus (procured for the ſame purpoſe) going between the two Kings, gave to the King of England thus to underſtand; That if he would condeſcend to any reaſonable way of peace, the French King was ready to offer ſuch honeſt proffers unto him, as to reaſon and to his contentation ſhould ſeem agreeable. But in concluſion, when it came to talk, the Nobles could not agree upon the conditions. Wherefore the French King, ſeeing no other remedy, cauſed it to be ſignified to King Edward; that between that preſent Tueſday and the next Friday, if he would come forth into the field he ſhould have Battel given him. Thus the place being viewed of four Captains of either Hoſt for the Battel to be fought; it ſo fell, that the French King on Wedneſday at night, before the Battel ſhould joyn, ſecretly by night ſetting his pavilions on fire, returned back with his Army out of the ſight of the Engliſhmen.

The French K. flieth before the Battel.

Upon the Friday following, they which were beſieged in the Town of Calis, ſeeing the King to be retired (upon whoſe help they truſted, being alſo in great penury and famine for lack of victuals, and otherwiſe in much misery vehemently diſtreſſed) ſurrendered the Town to the Kings hands: who like a merciful Prince, only detaining certain of the chief, the reſt with the whole Commons he let go with Bag and Baggage, diminiſhing no part of their goods, ſhewing therein more Princely favour to them, than they did of late in Queen Marys days unto our Men, in recovering the ſaid Town of Calis again.

The town of Calis won.

After the winning thus of Calis, as hath been premiſed, King Edward, remaining in the ſaid Town a certain ſpace, was in conſultation concerning his Voyage and proceeding further into France. But by means of the foreſaid Cardinals, Truce for a certain time was taken, and inſtruments made (ſo provided) that certain Noblemen as well for the French King, as for the King of England, ſhould come to the Pope, there to debate upon the Articles. Unto the which King Edward, for peace ſake, was not greatly diſagreeing. Which was Anno 1347. Ex Tho. Walſing.

Truce concluded between England and France.

The next year following, which was An. 1348. fell a ſore Plague, which they call the firſt general Peſtilence in the Realm of England. This Plague (as they ſay) firſt ſpringing from the Eaſt, and ſo proceeding Weſtward, did ſo mightily prevail here in this Land, beginning firſt at Dorcaſter, and the Countrys thereabout, that every day lightly twenty, ſome days forty, ſome ſixty, and more dead Corpſes were brought and laid together in one pit. This beginning the firſt day of Auguſt, by the firſt of November it came to London. Where the vehemency rage thereof was ſo hot, and did increaſe ſo much, that from the firſt day of February, till about the beginning of May, in a Churchyard then newly made by Smithfield, about 200 dead Corpſes every day were buried, beſides them which in other Church-yards of the City were laid aſſo. At length by the grace of Chriſt, ceaſing there, it proceeded from thence to the North parts. Where alſo the next year after, An. 1349. it ſwaged.

After this, in the next year enſuing, An. 1350. the Town of Calis was, by Treaſon of the keeper of the Caſtle, almoſt betrayed and won from the Engliſhmen. Within the compaſs of which year died Philip the French King. After whom King John his Son ſucceeded in the Crown. Who the next year after, under falſe pretence of friendſhip, cauſed the Conſtable of France Earl of Ewe, to be beheaded; who being taken priſoner before in war by Engliſhmen, and long detained in priſon in England, was licenſed by K. Edward to viſit his Country of France. In the ſame year the Town of Gwines was taken by Engliſhmen, while the keepers of the hold were negligent and aſleep.

The next year following, the Marſhal of France with a great Army was put to flight by Sir Roger Bentele Knight, and Captain in Britain, having but only 600 Soldiers with him. In this Battel were taken 9 Knights, Eſquires and Gentlemen 140. The Frenchmen and Britains by this Victory were exceedingly diſcouraged, and their pride cut down.

In the year after, was Henry firſt made Duke of Lancaſter, which before was Earl of Derby and Lancaſter. Alſo divers good Ordinances were appointed in the Parliament at Weſtminſter. Which after, by avarice and partial favour of the head men, were again undone.

Concord and agreement about the year 1354. began to come well forward, and Inſtruments were drawn upon the ſame betweene the two Kings. But that the matter being brought up to Pope Innocent the ſixth, partly by the quarrelling of the Frenchmen, partly by the winking of the Pope, which ever held with the French ſide, the conditions were repealed, which were theſe: That to the King

King of England all the Dukedom of Aquitain, with other Lands there, should be restored without Homage to the French King. And that King Edward again should surrender to him all his right and title, which he had in France; whereupon rose the occasion of great War and Tumult which followed after between the two Realms.

Chron. Admiranei Meriscoucb. comunici D. Francie gestis Edw. 3.

It followed after this, the year of our Lord 1355. that King Edward hearing, of the death of Philip the French King, and that K. John his Son had granted the Dukedom of Aquitain to Charles his eldest Son and Dauphin of Vienne, sent over Prince Edward with the Earls of Warwick, of Salisbury, of Oxford, and with them a sufficient number of able Soldiers into Aquitania. Where he being willingly received of divers, the rest partly by force of sword he subdued, partly received, submitting themselves to his protection.

The third Voyage of K. Edward into France.

Not long after this, in the same year, word being brought to King Edward, that John the French King was ready to meet him at S. Omers, there to give him Battel, he gathered his power, and set over to Calis with his two Sons, Leonel Earl of Wilton, and John of Gaunt Earl of Richmond, and with Henry Duke of Lancaster, &c. Who being come to Saint Omers, the French King with a mighty Army of his Francklings, hearing of his coming, the nearer he approached to them, the further they retired back; waiting and destroying behind them, to the intent that the English Army in pursuing them, should find no Victuals. By reason whereof, King Edward following him by the space of nine or ten days unto Hadem (when neither he could find his enemy to fight, nor Victuals for forrage for his Army) he returned unto Calis; where war again being offered in the name of the King, upon unreasonable conditions, and yet the same not performed, King Edward seeing the shrinking of his enemy, from Calis crossed the Seas into England, where he recovered again the Town of Barwick, which the Scots before by subtil train had gotten. At which time was granted unto the King in Parliament, 50 s. for every Sack or Pack of Woll that should be carried over, for the space of six years together. By the which grant, the King might dispend every day by estimation above 100 Marks sterling. And forasmuch as every year 100000 Sacks of Woll were thought to be transported out of the Realm, the summ thereof for six years space was esteemed to mount to 1500000 pound sterling.

The French K. refuseth to join in Fartel with K. Edward.

Fifty shillings for every Sack of Woll carried out of England.

The custom of Woll for six years 3500000 l. sterling to K. Edward.

The same year, when King Edward had recovered Barwick, and subdued Scotland, Prince Edward being in Gascoine, made toward the French King. Who, notwithstanding by the way all Bridges were cast down, and great resistance made; yet the victorious Prince made way with his Sword, after much slaughter of the Frenchmen, and many Prisoners taken, at length joyning with the French King at Poytiers, scarce with 2000, gave the overthrow to the French King with 7000 Men of Arms and more. In which conflict, the French King himself, and Philip his Son, with Lord James of Bourbon, the Archbishop of Senon, 11 Earls, 22 Lords were taken. Of other Warriers and Men of Arms 2000. Some affirm, in this conflict were slain 2 Dukes, of Lords and Noblemen 24. of men of Arms 2002; of other Soldiers about 8000. The common report is, that more Frenchmen were there taken Prisoners, than were the number of them which took them. This noble Victory gotten by the grace of God, brought no little admiration to all Men.

Concerning the which Man and his Doctrine, I thought good thus much to commit to History, to the intent Men may see that they which charge this Doctrine now taught in the Church with the note of novelty or newness, how ignorant and unskilful they be in the Histories and order of times forepast.

Johannes Gundamesis condemned by the Pope.

In the same part of condemnation at the same time also was Johannes de Gunduno, Anno 1330. and contained also in the foresaid Extravagant with Marsilius Patavinus. Which Johannes wrote much upon Aristotle and Averroes. and his Books are yet remaining. And no doubt but he wrote also of Divinity, but it is not unlike that these works have been abolished.

Guillelmus Ockam wrote against the Pope.

In the same number and catalogue cometh also Guillelmus Ockam, who was in the year of our Lord 1326. as is afore mentioned, pag. 424. and wrote likewise in defence of Ludovicus the Emperor against the Pope; and also in defence of Michael, General of Grayfriers, whom the Pope had excommunicated and curfed for an Heretick. Divers Treatises were by the said Ockam set forth, whereof some are extant and in Print, as his Questions and Distinctions; some are extinct and suppressed (as Ascentius reporteth) quod essent aliquando asperiora. Some again be published under no name of the Author, being of his doing; as the Dialogue between the Soldier and the Clerk; wherein it is to be conjectured, what Books and Works this Ockam had collected against the Pope. Of this Ockam, John Sleidane in his History inferreth mention, to his great commendation, whose words be these: William Ockam in time of Ludovicus the fourth, Emperor, did flourish about the year of our Lord 1326. who among other things wrote of the authority of the Bishop of Rome.

Michael general of the Grayfriers, excommunicated for an Heretick Ascentius so professione erat austerè. The Dialogue between the Soldier and the Clerk of Ockam's making.

Eight questions discussed by Ockam.

In the which Book he handleth these eight Questions very copiously; Whether both the administrations of the Bishops office, and of the Emperors, may be in one Man? Secondly, Whether the Emperor taketh his power and authority only of God, or else of the Pope? Thirdly, Whether the Pope and Church of Rome have power by Christ to set and place Kings and Emperors, and to commit to them their Jurisdiction to be exercised? Fourthly, Whether the Emperor being elected, hath full authority upon the said his Election, to administer his Empire? Fifthly, Whether other Kings besides the Emperor and King of Romans, in that they are consecrated of Priests, receive of them any part of their power? Sixthly, Whether the said Kings in any case be subject to their Consecrators? Seventhly, Whether if the said Kings should admit any new Sacrifice, or should take to themselves the Diadem without any further Confecration, they should thereby lose their Kingly right, and title? Eighthly, Whether the seven Princes Electors give as much to the Election of the Emperor, as succession rightfully giveth to other Kings? Upon these Questions he disputeth and argueth with sundry Arguments and sundry reasons on both sides, at length he decideth the matter on the part of the Civil Magistrate; and by occation thereof entreth into the mention of the Popes Decrees extravagant: declaring how little force or regard is to be given thereunto.

Trithemius maketh mention of one Gregorius Ariminensis, a learned and a famous and right godly Man; who not much differing from the age of this Ockam, about the year of our Lord 1350. disputed in the same Doctrine of Grace and Free-will as we do now, and dissented therein from the Papists and Sophisters, counting them worse than Pelagians.

Andreas de Castro and Burdianus, both Gospellers 200 years agoe.

Of the like judgment and in the same time was also Andreas de Castro, as appeareth super lit. 1. Sent. dist. 45. and Burdianus upon the Ethicks of Aristotle; which both maintained the grace of the Gospel, as is now in the Church received above 200 years since.

Eudo Duke of Burgundy against the Popes Decrees about 200 years since. Ex Carolo Molinæo.

And what should I speak of the Duke of Burgundy, named Eudo, who at the same time An. 1350. perswaded the French King not to receive in his Land the new found Constitutions, Decretal and Extravagant, nor to suffer them within his Realm: whose sage counsel then given, yet remaineth among the French Kings records, as witnesseth Carol. Molinæus.

Dantes an Italian Writer against the Pope.

Dantes an Italian Writer, a Florentine, lived in the time of Ludovicus the Emperor, about the year of our Lord 1300. and took part with Marsilius Patavinus against three sorts of Men, which he said were enemies to the truth: that is, the Pope; secondly, the order of religious Men, which count themselves the children of the Church, when they are the children of the Devil their Father: thirdly, the Doctors of Decrees and Decretals. Certain of his Writings be extant abroad, wherein he proveth the Pope not to be above the Emperor, nor to have any right or Jurisdiction in the Empire. He proveth the donation of Constantine to be a forged and a fained thing, as which neither did stand with any law or right; for the which he was taken of many for an Heretick. He complaineth moreover very much, the preaching of Gods Word to be omitted and inflead thereof, the vain fables of Monks and Friers to be preached and believed of the people, and so the flock of Christ to be fed not with the food of the Gospel, but with wind. The Pope, saith he, of a Pastor is made a Wolf, to waste the Church of Christ, and to procure with his Clergy, not the Word of God to be preached, but his own Decrees. In his Cantcle of Purgatory, he declareth the Pope to be the Whore of Babylon. And to her Ministers, to some he applieth two Horns, to some four. As to the Patriarchs, whom he noteth to be the Tower of the said Whore Babylonical. Ex libris Dantis Italice.

Donation of Constantine, a thing forged.

The Pope the Whore of Babylon.

Hereunto may be added the saying out of the Book of Jornandus, imprinted with the foresaid Dantes; that forasmuch as Antichrist cometh not before the destruction of the Empire, therefore such as go about to have the Empire extinct, are in fo doing fore-runners and messengers of Antichrist. Therefore let the Romans (saith he) and their Bishops beware, lest their sins and wickedness so deserving, by the just judgment of God, the Priesthood be taken from them. Furthermore, let all the Prelates and Princes of Germany take heed, &c.

Jornandes, de rebus Geticis. Pope Antichrist.

Antimination to the Romans.

And because our adversaries which object unto us the newness of our Doctrine shall see and perceive the course and form of this Religion now received, not to have been either such a new thing now, or a thing so strange in times past: I will add to these above recited, Master Taulerus a Preacher of Argentine in Germany, Anno 1350. Who, contrary to the Popes proceedings, taught openly against all mens merits, and against Invocations of Saints, and preached sincerely of our free Justification by Grace; referring all Mans truth only to the mercy of God, and was an enemy to all superstition.

Taulerus of Germany, a Preacher in Basile. Popes proceedings.

With whom also may be adjoyned Franciscus Petrarcha, a Writer of the same Age, who in his Works and his Italian Meeter, speaking of Rome, calleth it the Whore of Babylon, the School and Mother of Error, the Temple of Herefie, the Nest of Treachery, growing and increasing by the oppreffing of others: and faith further, that flie (meaning the Popes Court) extolleth her self against her Founders; that is, the Emperors who first set her up, and did so inrich her; and seemeth plainly to affirm, that the Pope was Antichrist, declaring that no greater evil could happen to any Man, than to be made Pope. This Franciscus was about the year of our Lord 1350.

Johannes de rupe scissa condemned to Prison.

And if time would serve us to seek out old Histories, we should find plenty of faithful witnesses, of old and ancient time, to give witness with us against the Pope, beside the other above rehearsed: as Johannes de rupe scissa, An. 1340. Who for rebuking the Spiritualty for their great enormities and neglecting their office and duty, was cast into Prison.

The Church of Rome the Whore of Babylon.

Illyricus a Writer in our days, testifieth that he found and read in an old Pamphlet, that the said Johannes should call the Church of Rome the Whore of Babylon; and the Pope to be the Minister of Antichrist; and the Cardinals to be the false Prophets. Being in Prison, he wrote a Book of Prophesies, bearing the Title; Vade mecum in tribulationem: in which Book (which also I have seen) he prophecied and admonished, affliction and tribulation to hang over the Spiritualty. And he pronounceth plainly, that God will purge his Clergy, and will have Priests that shall be poor, godly and that shall faithfully feed the Lords Flock: Moreover, that the goods of the Church shall return again to the Laymen. He prophefied also the same time, that the French King and his Army should have an overthrow; which came likewise to pass during the time of his Imprisonment. Of this Johannes de rupe, writeth Froyfard in his time, and also Wicklif, of whose Prophesies much more may be said at more leisure (Christ willing) hereafter.

The destruction of the Church before prophecied.

About

{KING 7. Edw. 3. Conradus Hager.

About the same year of our Lord 1340. in the City of Herbipoli, was one named Master Conradus Hager. Who (as appeareth by the old Bulls and Registers of Otho Bishop of the said City) is there recorded to have maintained and taught the space of twenty four years together, the Mass to be no manner of Sacrifice: neither that it profiteth any Man either quick or dead, and that the money given of the dead for Masses, be very Robberies and Sacrildeges of Priests, which they wickedly do intercept and take away from the poor. And he said moreover, that if he had a Stove full of gold and silver, he would not give one farthing for any Mass. For the same his Doctrine, this good Preacher was Condemned and inclosed in prison: what afterward became of him, we do not find.

The Mass to be no Sacrifice.

Conradus cast into prison. Ex bullis quibusdam Othonis Episc. Herbipol.

There is, among other old and ancient Records of antiquity belonging to this present time, a certain Monument in Verses Poetically compiled, but not without a certain Moral, Intituled, Penitentiarius Asini. The Asses Confessor; bearing the date and year of our Lord in this number, Completus, Anno. 1343. In this Treatise are brought forth the Wolf, the Fox, and the Ass, coming to shrift and doing penance. First, The Wolf confesseth him to the Fox, who easily doth absolve him from all his faults, and also excuseth him in the same. In like manner the Wolf, hearing the Foxes shrift, shewed to him the like favour again. After this cometh the Ass to Confession, whose fault was this; That he being hungry took a straw out from the sheaf of one that went in peregrination unto Rome. The Ass both repenting of this fact, and because he thought it not so heinous as the faults of the other, he hoped the more for his absolution. But what followed? After the silly Ass had uttered his crime in Auricular Confession, immediately the discipline of the Law was executed upon him with severity: neither was he judged worthy of any Absolution, but was apprehended upon the same, slain, and devoured. Whosoever was the Author of this fabulous tale, he had a mystical understanding of the same; for by the Wolf no doubt was meant the Pope: But the Fox was resembled to the Prelates, Curtesans, Priests, and the rest of the Spiritualty. Of the Spiritualty the Lord Pope is soon absolved, as contrarily, the Pope doth soon Absolve them in like manner. By the Ass is meant the poor Laity, upon whose back the strait censure of the Law is sharply executed; especially when the German Emperors come under the Popes Inquisition, to be examined by his discipline, there is no Absolution nor Pardon to be found, but in all haste he must be depoofed, as in these stories may partly appear before. And though the matter be not the weight of a straw, yet what faith the Holy Father the Wolf, if it please him to make any matter of it?

Pantientiarius Asini.

The Pope maketh the Emperor and Laymen Asses.

And thus they, aggregating and exaggerating the fault to the uttermost, slie upon the poor Ass and devour him. By the which apology, the tyrannical and fraudulent practises of these Spiritual Romanists are lively described.

Not long after these above reherfed, about the year of our Lord 1350. Gerhardus Ridder wrote also against the Monks and Friers a Book, Intituled, Lacryma Ecclesiæ: wherein he disputeth against the foresaid Religious Orders, namely against the begging Friers; proving that kind of life to be far from Christian Perfection, for that it is against Charity to live upon others, when a Man may live by his own labors: And affirmeth them to be Hypocrites, filthy livers, and such as for mans favor, and for lucre fake, do mix with true Divinity, Fables, Apocryphaes, and Dreams of Vanity. Also that they, under pretence of long prayer, devour Widows Houses, and with their Confessions, Sermons and Burials, do trouble the Church of Christ manifold ways. And therefore perswaded the Prelates to bridle and keep short the inordinate licence and abuses of these monastical persons, &c.

Yet I have made no mention of Michael Sefenus, Provincial of the Gray Friers, nor Petrus de Corbaria, of whom writeth Antoninus, in quarta parte summæ, and faith they were condemned in the extravagant of Pope John, with one Johannes de Poliaco. Their Opinions, faith Antoninus, were these, That Peter the Apostle was no more the head of the Church, than the other Apotles: And that Christ left no Vicar behind him or head in his Church: And that the Pope hath no such authority to correct and punish, to institute or depose the Emperor: Item, That all Priests, of what degree soever, are of equal authority, power and jurisdiction by the institution of Christ: but by the institution of the Emperor, the Pope to be superior, which by the same Emperor also may be revoked again. Item, That neither the Pope nor yet the Church may punish any Man, punitione coactiva: That is, by extern coaction; unless they receive licence of the Emperor. This foresaid Michael, general of the Gray Fryers, wrote against the Tyranny, Pride, and Pimacy of the Pope, accusing him to be Antichrist, and the Church of Rome to be the Whore of Babylon, drunk with the blood of Saints. He faid there were two Churches, one of the wicked flourishing, wherein reigned the Pope; the other of the godly afflicted. Item, That the verity was almoft utterly extinct; And for this cause he was deptived of his dignity, and condemned of the Pope. Notwithstanding, he stood constant in his affertions. This Michael was about the year of our Lord 1322. And he left behind him many tutors and followers of his Doctrine, of whom a great part were slain by the Pope: some were condemned, as William Ockam; some were burned, as Johannes de Castilione, and Franciscus de Arcatara. In extravag. Joan. 23.

Martyrs. Johannes de Castilione, Franciscus de Arcatara burned.

With him also was condemned, in the said extravagant, Johannes de Poliaco above touched, whose affertions were these: That the Pope could not give licence to hear Confessions to whom he would, but that every Pastor in his own Church ought to suffice. Item, That Pastors and Bishops had their authority immediately from Christ and his Apostles, and not from the Pope. Item, That the conftitution of Pope Benedict the 11th. wherein he granteth larger privileges to the Friers above other Pastors, was no declaration of the Law, but a subverfion. And for this he was by the said Friers oppressed, about the year of our Lord, 1322.

After Simon Mepham Archbishop of Canterbury before mentioned, who lived not long, succeeded John Stratford. After whom came John Offord, who lived but ten months. In whose room succeeded Thoresse, and remained but one year, Anno. 1350. And after him Simon Isip was made Archbishop of Canterbury, by Pope Clement the 6th. who fate 17 years, and builded Canterbury College in Oxford. Which Simon Isip succeeded the Bishop of Ely, named Simon Langham, who within two years was made Cardinal. In whose stead Pope Urban the 5th. ordained William Wittlesey Bishop of Worcester to be Archbishop of Canterbury, *An.*1366. In which year, William Bishop of Wincheiter elected and founded the new College in Oxford.

Archbishops of Canterbury the one succeeding the other.

New College in Oxford founded, Anno, 1366.

Again, in the order of the Popes, next unto Pope Clement the 6th. before mentioned, about the same time, An. 1353. succeeded Pope Innocent the 6th. In the first year of which Pope, two Friers Minors or Francifcans were burned at Avinion, Pro opinionibus (as mine Author faith) erroneis, prout D. Papæ & ejus Cardinalibus videbatur. 1. For certain Opinions, as seemed to the Pope and his Cardinals, Erronious. Ex Chron. Walf. Of the which two Friers I find, in the Chronicles De actis Rom. pontificum, and in the Hiftory of Premonstratenses, that the one was Johannes Rochtaylada; or rather, as I find in Catal. testium, sited out of the Chronicle of Henricus de Herfordia, his name to be Hayabalus. Who being (as he recordeth) a Frier Minorite, began first in the time of Pope Clement the 6th. An. 1345. to preach and affirm openly, that he was by Gods revelation charged and commanded to preach; that the Church of Rome was the Whore of Babylon, and the Pope with his Cardinals to be very Antichrists. And that Pope Benedict, and the other before him his predeceſſors were damned; with other ſuch like words tending much againſt the Popes tyrannical majeſty. And that the foreſaid Hayabalus being brought before the Popes face, conſtantly did ſtand in the ſame, ſaying, That he was commanded by Gods revelation ſo to ſay, and alſo that he would preach the ſame if he might. To whom it was then objected, That he had ſome Heretical Books, and ſo was committed to priſon in Avinion. In the time of his accuſation it happned that a certain Prieſt, coming before the Pope, caſt the Popes Bull down before his feet, ſaying; Lo here, take your Bull unto you, for it doth me no good at all. I have labored now theſe three years withal, and yet notwithſtanding, for all this your Bull, I cannot be reſtored to my right. The Pope hearing this, commanded the poor Prieſt to be ſcourged, and after to be laid in priſon with the foreſaid Frier. What became of them afterward, the foreſaid Writer Henricus de Herfordia maketh no mention. But I may probably conjecture this Prieſt and this Frier, Rochtayladus, or rather Hayabalus, were the two, whom mine Author Thom. Walſ. writeth to be burned at this time in Avinion, about the firſt beginning of this Pope Innocentius the ſixth. Of this Rochtaylada I thought good here to infer the teſtimony and mention of John Froyſard, written of him in his firſt Volume, Chapter 211. in theſe words:

The Church of Rome declared to be the Whore of Babylon by Gods revelation. Rochtayladus with another Frier blaſtemyes.

A Prieſt for caſting the Popes Bull before the Popes feet, ſcourged, caſt in priſon, and after burned at Avinion.

Anno 1354.

There were (ſaith Froyſard) a Frier Minor, full of great Clergy in the City of Avinion, called Frier John of Rochtayladas, the which Frier Pope Innocent the ſixth held in priſon in the Caſtle of Baignour, for ſhewing of many marvails after to come; principally he ſhewed many things to fall unto the Prelates of the Church for the great ſuperfluity and pride, that was then uſed among them. And alſo he ſpake many things to fall of the Realm of France, and of the great Lords of Chriſtendom, for the oppreſſions that they did to the poor common people. This Frier, ſaid he, would prove all his ſaying by the authority of the Apocalypſe, and by other Books of Holy Saints and Prophets, the which were opened to him by the grace of the Holy Ghoſt: he ſhewed many things hard to believe, and many things fell after as he ſaid. He ſaid then not as a Prophet, but he ſhewed them by authority of antient Scriptures, and by the grace of the Holy Ghoſt, who gave him underſtanding to declare the antient Prophets, and to ſhew to all Chriſtian people the years and times when ſuch things ſhould fall. He made divers Books founded on great Sciences and Clergy, whereof one was made the year of our Lord 1346. wherein were written ſuch marvels, that it were hard to believe them; howbeit many things according thereto fell out after. And when he was demanded of the wars of France, he ſaid that all that had been ſeen was not like that ſhould be ſeen after. For he ſaid that the wars in France ſhould not be ended, till the Realm were utterly waſted and ſpoiled in every part. The which ſaying was well ſeen after, for the noble Realm of France was ſore waſted and ſpoiled, and ſpecially in the term that the ſaid Frier had ſet. The which was in the years of our Lord 1356, 57, 58, and 59. He ſaid in thoſe years, the Princes and Gentlemen of the Realm ſhould not for fear ſhew themſelves againſt the people of low eſtate, aſſembled of all Countries without head or captain; and they ſhould do as they liſt in the Realm of France; the which fell after, as ye have heard, how the companions aſſembled them together, and by reaſon of their robbery and pillage waxed rich, and became great Captains.

Ex Joanne Froyſardo vol. 1. cap. 211.

About the ſame time happned in France a certain contention between the French Prelates, and the Friers of Paris, teſtified and recorded by Godfridus de Fontanis; the brief effect of which ſtory is this: The Prelates of France Conventing and Aſſembling together in the City of Paris, after a long deliberation among themſelves, cauſed by the Beadles to be called together all the Students, Maſters, and Batchelors of every faculty, with the chief heads alſo of all the Religious Houſes and Friers in the Univerſity of Paris. Who being all there Congregated together in the Biſhop of Paris his Houſe, where there were preſent four Archbiſhops, and twenty Biſhops: firſt ſtood up the Biſhop of Bituricenſe, who, there making his Sermon, took for his Theam the place of Saint Paul to the Epheſians; Fratres, ut ſciatis quæ ſit longitudo, latitudo, altitudo & profunditas charitatis, &c. and concluded thereupon, firſt, that true charity would compel them to fee and provide for their flocks. Secondly, That the vigor of Charity would arm them to withſtand errors. Thirdly, he concluded, That by duty of Charity they were bound to give their lives for the ſouls of their flock committed to their charge. Fourthly, That by the ſame Charity every Man ought to hold himſelf content with that which was his own, and not to intermeddle or buſie himſelf further than to him appertained or belonged to his Office. For there (ſaith he) all Order Eccleſiaſtical is diſſolved, whereas Men, not containing themſelves in their own Precincts, preſume in other Mens Charges where they have nothing to do. But this Charity (ſaith he) now adays waxeth cold, and all Eccleſiaſtical Order is confounded and utterly out of order. For many there be, which now adays preſume to thruſt in themſelves where they have nothing to do; ſo that now the Church may ſeem a monſter. For as in a natural body appeareth a monſter, where one member doth the office of another; ſo in the ſpiritual body which is the Church, it may be thought likewiſe. As when our learned and prudent brethren, to wit, the Friers majors and minors, do take upon them to uſurp and occupy the office to us eſpecially appertaining; namely, whereas the Scripture warneth us all, none to take upon him any office, except he be called thereunto of the Lord, as Aaron was. Wherefore we have heretofore oftentimes cauſed the ſaid Friers both by the King himſelf in his own perſon, and alſo by other Nobles to be ſpoken to and deſired to furceaſe from doing and intermedling in our Office, and yet they would not, but have preached againſt our wills through all our Dioceſs, and have heard Confeſſions, ſaying, That they have the Popes privilege to bear them out therein. For the which cauſe we come to you, and not we here preſent only, but alſo we have the hand-writing, and the full conſent of all other our fellow Biſhops throughout the Kingdom of France, to complain to you of this ſo great inſolence and preſumption of the Friers. For that as we are, you ſhall be. Neither do I think that there be any of us Prelates here now, which have not ſometime been taken our of this Univerſity of yours. We have deſired moreover, and cauſed to be deſired of the foreſaid Friers, that they would ſend their privileges to the See Apoſtolical, to be interpreted and expounded more plainly by the Lord Pope: which they refuſed alſo to do. Wherefore to the intent you may the better underſtand and ſee what their privileges be, and how far they do extend, we have appointed the ſaid privileges here openly to be read unto you.

The Biſhop Ambianenſis a great Lawyer.

Then ſtood up another in the publick place, and there read the privileges of both the Orders: and afterward read alſo the conſtitution of Pope Innocent the third, written in the fifth of the Decretals, and beginneth, Omnis utriuſque ſexus, &c. Which conſtitution was repugnant and contrary to the foreſaid privileges, as he there manifeſtly proved, declaring how both the privileges were derogatory to that conſtitution.

The conſtitution of Pope Innocent 3. Omnis utriuſque ſexus.

This done, then roſe up the Biſhop Ambianenſis, a great Lawyer, who, diſcourſing from Article to Article, there proved by good Law, that the ſaid conſtitution ſtood in his full force and vigor, and ought not to be infringed by the Friers privileges in any part. And therefore by the vertue of that conſtitution, that the Friers ought not ſo miſorderly to intrude themſelves in hearing Confeſſions, in injoyning of penance, and preaching in Churches and Dioceſſes, without ſpecial licence of the Biſhop of the Dioceſs, and curate of the Pariſh: unto whoſe words never a Frier at that time replyed again. And ſo the Biſhop proceeding to his concluſion, deſired the Univerſity to aſſiſt them in that caſe, wherein they were all determined (ſaith he) to ſtand firmly to the ſhedding of their blood, in reſiſting that miſorder and injuries of the Friers. This happned the ſixth day of December which they dedicated to Saint Nicolas.

KING Edw. 3.

The next day being Sunday, one of the Order of the Minorites or Franciſcans, went to the Church of the Minorites or preaching Friers: where he made a Sermon (which was never ſeen before, the one Order to come and reſort to the other) beginning in the foreſaid matter to reply, and to expound in order through every Article as well as he could; adding moreover and ſaying, That they went not ſo far in their privildges, as they lawfully might. And he ſaid moreover, That what time the ſaid privildges were in obtaining in Rome, the Biſhop Ambianenſis was there preſent himſelf, reſiſting the ſame with all his power; yea all the Prelates alſo of France ſent and wrote up to the Court againſt the ſame, and yet did not prevail. For when the Friers there preſently declared and opened to the Pope in what manner and how far they had uſed their privildeges; the Pope the ſame time ſaid, Placet, that is, agreed unto the ſame. And now (ſaith he) the Prelates require and demand of us to ſend up our privileges to the Court; which were great folly in us. For in ſo doing, what ſhould we elſe but give place and occaſion, to revoke again the authority which is given into our hands already? Furthermore, our Warden and Maſter is now lately dead, and the Maſter here of the Dominick Friers, is not now preſent. Wherefore we dare not determine in ſuch a weighty cauſe (touching the privildeges of our Order) without the preſence of them. And therefore we deſire you of the Univerſity to hold us therein excuſed, and not to be ſo lightly ſtirred againſt us, for we are not the worſt and vileſt part of the Univerſity, &c.

The Friers reply to gain the Prelates.

A Sermon of the Biſhop of Bayonne to the Students of Paris againſt the Friers.

The next day, being the 8th. day of the ſame month, is alſo dedicate to the Conception of our Lady: upon which day it was determined likewiſe, that one of the Dominick Friers ſhould Preach in the Church of the Franciſcan or Gray Friers, and ſo he did: tending to the ſame end, as the other Frier in the other Church had done before. Whereto it may ſeem the Proverb well anſwered, wherof we read in the Goſpel: Facti ſunt amici Herodes & Pilatus in ipſa die.

That is, the Dominick Friers, and the Franciſcan Friers.

Herod and Pilate were made friends in enadvising of Chriſt.

It was not long after, that the Feaſt of S. Thomas the Apoſtle followed, in whoſe Vigil all the heads of the Univerſity again were warned the third day after to congregate together in the Church of Saint Bernard at the Sermon time. Which being done, and the Aſſembly meeting together, another Sermon was made by a Divine of the Univerſity, whoſe Theam was, Prope eſt Dominus omnibus invocantibus eum in veritate, &c. Wherein he with many words and great authorities argued againſt them that would not be obedient unto their Prelates, &c. The Sermon being ended, then roſe again the Biſhop Ambianenſis, who proſecuted the reſt of the Theam, and coming to the word in veritate divided it into three parts, according to the common Gloſs of the Decretals:

Another Sermon againſt the Friers.

Biſhop Ambianenſis in veritate, &c.

Eſt verum vitæ, dictæ, doctrinæ, juſtitiaque,
Primum ſemper habe; duo propter ſcandala linque.

Shewing and declaring by many authorities both of Canonical Scriptures and out of the Law, and by evident demonſtration of experience; that the Friers firſt had no verity of life, becauſe they were full of Hypocriſie; neither had they verity of Doctrine, becauſe in their hears they bare gall, and in their tongue honey: neither verity of Juſtice, becauſe they uſurped other Mens Offices. And thus concluding with the ſame, he cauſed again to be read the ſaid privildeges, with the Conſtitution above ſpecified. And ſo expounding place by place, he did argue and prove that the ſaid conſtitution in no part was evacuate or infringed by the privildeges aforeſaid. Which thing being declared, he added moreover, That whereas the Friers ſay (ſaith he) that I ſhould be preſent in the obtaining of the privildeges, I grant it to be true; and when word came to me thrice thereof, I went to the Pope reclaiming and requiring the ſaid privildeges to be revoked: but the next day after, it ſo pleaſed the Pope to ſend me out abroad upon weighty affairs, ſo that then the matter had no end. After that, we ſent alſo other Meſſengers with our Letters, for the ſame cauſe unto the Court of Rome, whom the Friers ſay not to have prevailed, but they lie therein. For the ſaid Meſſengers again brought us Letters, from the chief of the Court of Rome, ſealed with their Seals: which Letters we have divers times preſented to our King, and will ſhortly ſhew them unto you all. In the which the Lord Pope hath promiſed the ſaid privileges either to be utterly abrogate, or elſe to be mitigated with ſome more plain interpretation; of the which we truſt ſhortly to have the publick Bull or Writ from the Pope.

Verity in three parts conſiſteth.

The Friers privileges proved contrary to the Pope conſtitution.

The Biſhop Ambianenſis. Friers caught not to preach in Churches without ſpecial licence of them to whom the Church belonged.

The Friers preſent with a lie.

At laſt, the ſaid Biſhop required and deſired of all there, of what Dioceſs or Country ſoever they were, that they would Copy out the foreſaid privildeges, and ſend them abroad into their Countries, that all Men might ſee what they were, and how far they did extend. In fine the matter coming into open diſputation, it was concluded by Maſter Giles one of the Auſtine Friers (who was thought to be moſt reaſonable of all the other Friers) in this wiſe: that after his Sentence the Prelates were in the truer part, &c. Hæc ex Godfrido de Fontanis.

The Friers privileges confuted in diſputation at Paris.

Concerning this wrangling contention between the Univerſity and Friers of France here before mentioned, whereof partly the original cauſe may be underſtood, by that which hath been ſaid, to riſe upon certain privileges granted by Popes to the Friers, to intermeddle in matters of Pariſh Churches; As to hear Confeſſions, to Preach and Teach, with power thereunto annexed to gather for their labour, to Bury within their Houſes, and to receive Impropriations, &c. becauſe it were too long here to deſcribe the full circumſtances thereof, alſo becauſe the ſaid contention did indure a long time, not only in France, but alſo came over into England: the whole diſcourſe thereof more amply (Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared in the beginning of the next Book following, when we come to the ſtory of Armachanus.

A ſeditious commotion between the Townſmen and the Scholars in the Univerſity of Oxford.

About what time and year this brawl was in the Univerſity of Paris between the Friers and Prelates there, as hath been declared; the like contention happned alſo in the Univerſity of Oxford in the year above preſixed, 1354. ſave only that the ſtrife among the Maſters of Paris, as it roſe upon Friarly Ceremonies, ſo it went no further than brawling words and matter of Excommunication: but this tumult, riſing of a drunken cauſe, proceeded further unto bloody ſtripes. The firſt original whereof began in a Tavern, between a Scholar and the good Man of the Houſe; Who falling together in altercation, grew to ſuch height of words, that the ſtudent (contra jus hoſpitii) poured the wine upon the head of the Hoſt, and brake his head with the quart pot. Upon this occaſion given, eſſoons parts began to be taken between the Townſmen and the Scholars. Inſomuch that a grievous ſedition and conflict followed upon the ſame; wherein many of the Townſmen were wounded, and to the number of twenty ſlain. Divers alſo of the Scholars were grievouſly hurt. The ſpace of two days this hurly-burly continued. Upon the ſecond day certain Religious and devout perſons ordained a ſolemn Proceſſion General, to pray for peace. Yet notwithſtanding all that Proceſſion, as holy as it was, it would not bring peace. In the which proceſſion (the skirmiſh ſtill waxing hot) one of the ſtudents, being hardly purſued by the Townſmen, for ſuccour in his flight came running to the Prieſt or Frier, which carried about (as the manner was) the Pixe; thinking to find refuge at the preſence of the Tranſubſtantiated God of the Altar there carried inbraced. Notwithſtanding, the God being not there preſent, or elſe not ſeeing him, or elſe peradventure being aſleep, the Scholar found there ſmall help. For the Townſmen in the heat of the chaſe, forgetting belike the vertue of the Popes Tranſubſtantiation, followed him ſo hard, that in the preſence of the Pixe they brake his head, and wounded him grievouſly. This done, at length ſome peace or truce for that day was taken. The next morrow following, other Townſmen in the Villages about, joyning with the Townſmen of Oxford, confederated together in great force and power to ſet upon the ſtudents there, and ſo did, having a black flag born before them, and ſo invaded the Univerſity Men. Whereupon the Scholars being overmatched, and compelled to flee into their Halls and Hoſtles, were ſo purſued by their enemies, that twenty of the doors of their Halls and Chambers were broke open, and many of them wounded (and as it is ſaid) ſlain and thrown into Privies; their Books with Knives and Bills cut all in pieces, and much of their goods carried away. And thus the ſtudents of that Univerſity being conquered by the Townſmen of Oxford, and of the Country about, departed and left the Univerſity. So that for a time the Schools there, and all School acts, did utterly ceaſe from all exerciſe of ſtudy, except only Merton College-Hall, with a few other remaining behind.

The Univerſity of Oxford diſſolved for a time.

This being done the 12*th.* day of February, the Queen at the ſame time being at Woodſtock was brought to bed, and purified on the firſt Sunday in Lent with great ſolemnity of Juſting. About which time the Biſhop of Lincoln their Dioceſan, hearing of this exceſſive outrage, ſendeth his inhibition to all Parſons and Prieſts, forbidding them throughout all Oxford, to celebrate Maſs or any Divine Service in the preſence of any Lay perſon within the ſaid Town of Oxford, interdicting withal the whole Town. Which Interdiction indured the ſpace of a whole year and more.

The Town of Oxford interdicted.

The King alſo ſent thither his Juſtices to examine and inquire of the matter. Before whom divers Lay-men and of the Clergy were indicted, and four of the chief Burgeſſes of the ſaid Town were indicted, and by the Kings commandment ſent to the Tower of London, and were there impriſoned. At length through much labor of the Nobles, the King ſo took by the matter, that ſending his writings unto all Sheriffs in England he offered pardon to all and ſingular Sudents of that Univerſity, (whereſoever diſperſe) for that tranſgreſſion: Whereby the Univerſity in ſhort time was replenished again as before. Moreover it was granted to the Vice-Chancellor or Commiſſary (as they term him) of the Town and Univerſity of Oxford, to have the Aſſize of Bread, Ale, Wine, and all other Victual, the Major of the ſaid Town being excluded. Alſo it was granted and decreed, that the Commons of Oxford ſhould give to the Univerſity of Oxford, 200. pound ſterling, in part of ſatisfaction for their exceſſes: reſerved notwithſtanding to every one of the Students his ſeveral action againſt any ſeveral perſon of the Townſmen, &c.

Granted to the Commiſſary of Oxford to have the aſſize of bread and Ale and other priviledges about the Major of the Town.

About the year of our Lord 1354. the King, with the conſent of his Council, revoked home again out of Flanders the Staple of Wool, with all things thereunto appertaining, and ſtabliſhed the ſame in ſundry places within the Realm, namely in Weſtminſter, Canterbury, Chichiſter, Briſtow, Lincoln, and in Hull. Which Staple after An. 1362. was tranſlated over into Calis.

Of Simon Iſlip Archbiſhop of Canterbury mentioned a little before, pag. 445. I read in the ſaid Author above ſpecified, That he by his Letters Patent directed to all Parſons and Vicars within his Province; ſtraightly charged them and their Pariſhioners, under pain of Excommunication, not to abſtain from bodily labor, upon certain Saints days, which before were wont to be Hallowed and Conſecrated to unthrifty idleneſs. Item, That to Prieſts ſhould be given no more for their yearly ſtipend, but three pound ſix ſhillings and eight pence, which made divers of them to rob and ſteal, &c. Anno. 1362. The next year following, which was 1363. the foreſaid King Edward kept his Parliament at London in the month of October: wherein was prohibited, that gold nor ſilver ſhould be worn in Knives, Girdles, Brooches, Rings, or in any other ornament belonging to the body, except the wearer might diſpend 10 pound by year. Item, That none ſhould wear either Silks or coſtly Furrs, except ſuch as might diſpend 100 pounds by year. Alſo that Merchant Venturers ſhould not export over any Merchandiſe out of the Realm, or ſeek for Wines in other Countries; whereby other Nations ſhould be conſtrained rather to ſeek to us, &c. But none of this did take any great effect.

A wholeſome decree of a good Archbiſhop not to abſtain from bodily labor upon certain Holy days.

A Parliament.

After this Simon Iſlip, as is above recorded, followed Simon Langham, then William Wittleſey, after whom next in the place ſucceeded Simon Sudbury.

Simon Iſlip Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Much about the ſame time the Nuns of Saint Bridget in Order began firſt. About which time alſo was builded the Queens College in Oxford, by Queen Philippa of England, Wife to King Edward the third; Circa annum Domini 1360.

The Nuns of S. Bridgets Order.

Moreover in the time of this Pope Innocent, Frier John Lyle Biſhop of Ely, moved with certain injuries (as he thought) done to him by the Lady Blanch, made his complaint to the Pope. Who ſending down his Curſe to the Biſhop of Lincoln, and other Prelates to be executed upon the adverſaries of the Biſhop of Ely, commanded them, That if they did know any of the ſaid adverſaries dead and buried (that notwithſtanding,) they ſhould cauſe the ſame to be taken up: which alſo they performed accordingly, of whom ſome had been of the Kings Council. Wherefore the King being diſpleaſed, and not unworthily, did trouble and moleſt again the ſaid Prelates. This coming to the Popes hearing, certain were directed down from the Court of Rome, in the behalf of the foreſaid Biſhop of Ely: who meeting with the Biſhop of Rochester the Kings Treaſurer, delivered unto him, being armed, Letters from the Biſhop of Rome, the tenor whereof was not known. Which done, they incontinently avoided away. But certain of the Kings Servants purſuing, did overtake them: of whom ſome they impriſoned, ſome they brought to the Juſtices, and ſo they were condemned to be hanged. Wherein may appear what reverence the Popes Letters, in this Kings days, had in this Realm of England. Ex Chro. Walſing. This Pope Innocent ordained the Feaſt of the Holy Spear, and of the Holy Nails.

This Lady Blanch was Dutcheſs of Lancaſter.

Dead men Excommunicated by the Pope.

The Popes Meſſengers hanged. The Feaſt of the Spear and of the Holy Nails.

And here to make an end of this Fourth Book, now remaineth after our order and cuſtom before begun, to proſecute the race of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury, in this foreſaid Fourth Book contained, beginning, where before we left, pag. 193. at Lanfrancus.

A Table

{KING Edw.3}

A Table of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury in the Fourth Book contained.

Polydor. Virg. lib. 1numbereth this Lanfrancus to be the thirty third Archbiſhop. But by the count of other Authors (namely by the Chroniele of the Monk of Dover) he ſeemeth to be deceived, as he was in the 28. years of Dunſtan, which indeed did ſit but nineteen or twenty at the moſt. This error of Polydore ſeemeth to come by leaving out either Elfius, which was the 23*th.* or by leaving out Elfricus, which was the 26*th.* as in ſome Authors I find.

34. Lanfrancus. 19.

Moreover, here is to be noted, that although the ſaid Elfricus were left out, yet Lanfrancus cannot be 33.

Note alſo, That in the Table of the third Book before, after Siricius, you muſt put in Sanctus Alnredus. Which in order of Archbiſhops I left out in the end of the third Book, page 191.

This Lanfrancus was an Italian, and a ſtout Champion of the Pope. After his ſtubborn diſſention with Thomas Archbiſhop of York he wrote againſt Berengarius, Intituling his Book, Opus Scintillarum, page 196.

Alſo the ſame Lanfrank builded the new Church at Canterbury, and pluckt down the old. By him was builded the Church of S. Gregory. At length he was expulſed by King William Rufus.

35. Anſelmus. 20.

Of this Anſelmus, and the ſtrife between him and the King, look in the page 209.

36. Radulphus. 8.

Under Rad the Order of Ciſtercians began.

37. Guliel. Curboil. 13.

By this William the new work of the Church of Saint Martins at Dover was builded.

38. Theobaldus. 24.

By This Theobald, Monks were firſt brought into the Church of Dover. He was expulſed by King Stephen. In his time the Church of Saint Gregory was burned at Canterbury.

39. Thomas Becket. 9.

Of the life and death of this Becket, ſee the page 232.

Ex Hiſtor. Coniſtadenſi.

Ex Crickeladenſi: Magnates in Anglia interdixerunt, ne quis Martyrem Thomam nominaret, ne quis ejus miracula prædicaret, interminantes minas mortis ſeu maximarum penarum omnibus confitentibus eum fuiſſe Martyrem, & miracula ejus prædicantibus, &c.

40. Richardus. 10.

This Richard was a Monk: in his time Chriſts Church in Canterbury was burned.

41. Baldwinus. 7.

Between this Baldwin and the Monks was great diſcord. He ſuſpended the Prior from his Prioriſhip, and two and twenty Monks from all Service. He cauſed the Sub-Prior with all his adherents to be Excommunicated through all Kent.

42. Hubertus. 14.

In the time of this Hubert the Chapel of Lambeth was pluckt down. Alſo the Church of Dover was burned.

This Stephen, with the Monks of Canterbury, were expulſed by King John.

This Stephen, intending to give Orders in the Chappel of Lambeth, was ſtopped by the Monks of Canterbury, through their appeal and prohibition. Wherefore he required Euſtace Biſhop of London to Miniſter the ſame Orders in the Church of S. Paul.

43. Stephanus Langton. 22.

In his time fell great variance between the Monks of Rocheſter and the Monks of Canterbury, for the Election of their Biſhop, which Election the Monks of Canterbury would not admit before the Rocheſter Monks had preſented the Biſhops ſtaff in the Church of Canterbury; ſo that both the Churches ſent their Meſſengers to the Court of Rome.

44. Richardus Magnus. 4.

At the Confecration of this Richard, contention roſe between the Biſhop of Rocheſter and the Biſhop of Bath, who ſhould Conſecrate him.

Item, Between the ſaid Richard and the Monks of Canterbury fell a grievous diſcord, about certain Liberties belonging to the Archbiſhop.

The ſaid Archbiſhop, for certain quarels againſt the King, went up to Rome, who died in Tuſcia.

45. Edmund of Abendon. 7.

After this Richard the Election of three Archbiſhops was diſannulled at Rome, of Radulphus de Nova Villa, of John Prior of Canterbury, of John Blund.

This Edmund was called Saint Edmund, at whoſe Election the Prior of Dover thinking to be preſent, as at the marriage of his Mother, was not permitted by the Monks of Canterbury. For the which injury he appealed and went to Rome to complain, not againſt the Elect, but againſt the Election: where he obtained of the Pope, for all the Priors and Succeſſors of Dover to have full intereſt in the Election of the Archbiſhops, beſides other priviledges which he obtained, percaſe not without ſome good ſtore of money. Afterward the Monks of Canterbury accuſed him to the Archbiſhop, as though he ſtood againſt the perſon of the Elect, and ſo obtained of the Archbiſhop being angry with him, to have brought him under the Chapter of Canterbury, there to be puniſhed. Whereupon the Prior, ſeeing himſelf ſo deſtitute of all help of Lawyers, was conſtrained in the foreſaid Chapter to cry peccavi. Then being ſuſpended from his Prioriſhip, he was at length ſent home from Dover, being compelled firſt to ſet his hand to a certain compoſition between him and the foreſaid Monks.

The ſaid Edmund Archbiſhop, having alſo ſome quarrel againſt the King, went up to Rome, and died before his coming home.

In the time of this Boniface, Pope Gregory wickedly granted to King Henry the Third (for the getting of the Kingdom of Sicily, which belonged not to him to give, nor to the other to take) tenths of goods temporal and ſpiritual, for five years. Item, All the firſt years fruits of Churches that ſhould be vacant for five years. Item, Half of all the goods of Beneficed Men, not reſident at their Benefices. Item, All Legacies not diſtinctly given. And yet the Kingdom of Sicily never came to his hands, which belonged to Manfredus, Son of Frederick the Emperor. Striſe there was between this Boniface and the Prior of Canterbury. Item, Item, Between him and the Biſhop of Roff. Item, Between him and the Chapter of Lincoln: all which was after agreed; Chro. Dovorenſ. fol. 20. pag. 2.

Striſe alſo in Wincheſter, about chuſing the Biſhop after the death of Ayomarus the Kings Brother.

46. Boniface. 25. Striſe alſo in the Convocation which Boniface did hold at Lambeth. In the which Council were recited the Statutes of Octobonus, and other new Statutes made; againſt which John Hemelingford the Kings Chaplain with other more, and Prince Edward on the kings behalf, did appeal. Chron. Dover. fol. 21.

Under this Boniface Archbiſhop, Tunbridge and Hadlo firſt came under the cuſtody of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Maſter John of Exeter bought the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter for 6000. Marks; which being known, he was fain to pay the ſame ſumm again to the Pope, and ſo was ſent home.

Boniface the Archbiſhop being in the parts of Subaudia, An. 1262. there fell another altercation between the Prior and Chapter of Canterbury on the one part, and the Prior and Chapter of Dover on the other part. Which two Houſes almoſt were never in quiet, and all about certain liberties and privildeges; as for making the Sub-Prior, for receiving in of Monks, and for Viſitations of the Church of Dover.

An. 1268. Boniface Archbiſhop Interdicted the City of London, becauſe in the ſame City the Archbiſhop of York did hold up his Croſs, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury being there preſent, the King holding then his Parliament at Weſtminſter.

This Archbiſhop died in the parts of Subaudia.

John Prior of Canterbury was Elected by the Monks againſt the Kings mind, but by the Pope refuſed.

Adam Chilinden was Elect, but he reſigned his Election to the Pope.

In the time of this Robert Kilwarby, appeal was taken againſt the Chapter of Canterbury by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, of Worceſter, and Exeter, for the which cauſe the ſaid Biſhops went up to Rome to proſecute the Appeal. The matter was, becauſe they did not their obedience to the Monks of Canterbury, the See being empty.

Walter Giffard Archbiſhop of York, going toward the General Council, bare up his Croſs through the middle of Kent, in the time of this Robert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Anno. 1272.

47. Robert Kilwarby. Fricr. 6. By Pope Gregoty the 10*th.* in the General Council at Lions, all the Orders of Friers were put down, Four Orders only excepted, that is, Dominicks, Franciſcans, Carmalites, and Auguſtines.

This Robert Kilwarby by the commandment of Pope Nicholas was made Cardinal of Rome, Biſhop of Porvenſis.

An untruth in Polydore Virgil. Where is to be noted an untruth in Polydore Virgil, which ſaith, That he was made Cardinal by Pope Gregory, which could not be.

Robert Burnel Biſhop of Bath was Elected, but by the Pope refuſed; For whom John Peckham a Grey-Frier, was placed by Pope Nicholas.

In the firſt year of this Frier Peckham, W. Wikewane Archbiſhop of York coming from his Conſecration at Rome to Dover, bare up his Croſs through the midſt of Kent, whereat was no little ado.

Robert Gernemine Archdeacon of Canterbury went to Law at Rome for the liberties and poſſeſſions of his Archdeaconſhip two years, and there died.

In this time alſo another wrangling fell between the Monks of Canterbury and the Monks of Dover, in the time of this John Peckham, for admitting certain Novices of Dover into Orders. Ex chr. Monach. Dover. fol. 42.

This Peckham, holding a Council at Lambeth, Ordained divers Statutes, and cauſed the Ordinances of the Council of Lions, and of Boniface Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and his predeceſſor to be obſerved.

Great grief and hatred was between this Peckham and Thomas Biſhop of Hereford: who being Excommunicated by Peckham, appealed to Rome, and went to the Pope.

48. John Peckham. 13. The Prior and Covent of Canterbury made their appeal againſt this Archbiſhop Peckham, that he ſhould not conſecrate Walter le Schamel new Elect Biſhop of Saliſbury, in any other place, except only in the Church of Canterbury, but by their leave and licence firſt obtained. Notwithſtanding the Archbiſhop, nothing regarding their appeal, proceeded in the Conſecration of the ſaid Biſhop near to the Town of Reding, whereupon the Prior and Covent ceaſed not to proſecute their appeal againſt the Archbiſhop.

Between Richard Ferring Archdeacon of Canterbury of the one party, and the Barons of Dover of the other party, the ſame year fell out another like wrangling, for that the Archdeacon claimed to viſit the Church of Dover: contrarily the Barons affirmed, That none had nor ſhould have to do there to or diſpoſe in Spiritual matters, but only the Archbiſhop, and the Prior and Convent of Saint Martin. Ex eod. Chron. fol. 46.

After the death of William Whicwane Archbiſhop of York, John de Roma ſucceeded after him; and coming from his Conſecration at Rome to Dover, bare his Croſs through the middle of Kent, contrary to the inhibition of John Peckham.

49. Robert Winchelſey. 19. This Robert, which was Archbiſhop in the later time of King Edward the Firſt, for certain diſpleaſure of the King conceived againſt him, departed the Realm, and in his baniſhment remained two or three years. And about the beginning of the Reign of King Edward the Second was reſtored again: Anno. 1309. Ex Chron. Rich. 2. Thus few Archbiſhops of Canterbury we find, with whom Kings have not had ſome quarrel or other. The cauſe between the King and him (ſaith mine Author) was this: That the King accuſed him to Pope Clement to diſturb his Realm, and to take part with Rebels, &c. Ex Chron. S. Albani.

This Robert alſo Excommunicated Walter, Biſhop of Coventry, for holding with the King and Peter Gaweſton againſt the Ordinances of the Barons; wherefore the ſaid Biſhop appealed to the Pope, againſt whom the Archbiſhop ſent Adam Merimouth.

This Adam Merimouth was compiler of the Hiſtory of K. Edward.

In the time of this Robert Archbiſhop, the Order of Templars were aboliſhed by Pope Clement the 5*th.* in the Council of Vienna with this Sentence definitive:

Quam-

{KING Edw.3}

Quantum de jure non poſſumus, tamen ad plenitudinem poteſtatis dictum ordinem reprobamus.

After the deceaſe of Robert Winchelſey, who departed Anno 1312, Thomas Cobham a learned man was Elected by full conſent of the Monks: who came to Avinion to have his Election Confirmed. But the Pope reſerving the vacant Seat in his own hands, put in Walter Reynald Biſhop of Worceſter, Chancellor of England, who Governed the Seat 15 years.

50. Gualter Reynald. 15 The Chronicler of St. Albans, Recordeth alſo, how in the days of this Archbiſhop, Anno 1319, certain Lepers conſpiring with the Turks and Jews went about to impotionate, and infect all Chriſtendom, by invenoming their Fountains, Lakes, Pits, Barrels, and ſuch other places. Of the which crime divers of them being Convict were worthily burned in France. About the which year, the ſaid Author maketh alſo Relation, how in the Realm of England much murrain fell among the Beaſts: inſomuch, that the Dogs eating upon their fleſh (infected belike by the Waters and Fountains) fell down dead incontinently. Neither durſt men for that cauſe almoſt taſte of any Beef: An. 1318, 1319. Ex Ch. Alban.

This Walter Archbiſhop taking part with the Queen Iſabel againſt King Edward her Husband, died the ſame year in which he was depoſed: An. 1237. Ex Chro. Sanct. Albani.

After Walter the Archbiſhop, as affirmeth the Chronicle of St. Alban, ſucceded Simon Mepham. Of whom I marvel that Polydore maketh no word nor mention: belike he fate not long: after followed John Stratford.

In the Story of Adam Merimouth, it is Recorded that this John Stratford, intending to viſit the Dioceſs of Norfolk, was not received by the Biſhop, the Chapter and Clergy there alledging that he obſerved not the ordinary Canon therein. To whom the Archbiſhop ſaid again, He had the Popes Letters, and ſhewed the ſame. But the other anſwered, That thoſe Letters were falſly obtained and tended to the ſuppreſſion of the Clergy; and therefore they would not obey: wherefore the Archbiſhop Excommunicated the Biſhop, and Suſpended the Prior, and Interdicted the Covent: An. 1347.

51. John Stratford. 29.

Maſter John Offord, Chancellor of England, was Elected and Confirmed Archbiſhop of Canterbury, but not Conſecrated, and ſate but ten months, about the year of our Lord, 1350, Peſtilentia in Anglia.

52. John Offord 10 Months.

This Thomas Braidwarden following after John Stratford, ſate not long, but died within 10 months of the Plague, as they ſay. Which was called then the firſt great Plague in England, raging ſo ſore in all quarters, that it was thought ſcarce the tenth part of men to be left alive.

The firſt great Plague in England.

53. Thomas Braidwarden. 1.

In the time of Simon Iſlyppe, which followed after Braidwarden, King Edward, Anno 1362, is reported, after the blind Superſtition of thoſe days, to offer in the Church of Weſtminſter the Veſtments wherein St. Peter did Celebrate Maſs. Which belike were well kept from Moths, to laſt ſo long. Ex Ch. Alban.

The Veſtments wherein St. Peter ſaid Maſs, or elſe the Papiſts do lye.

54. Simon Iſlyppe. 17. The ſame Simon Iſlyppe among other Conſtitutions, Ordained through all Churches and Chappels under pain of Excommunication; that no man ſhould abſtain from Bodily labours upon certain Saints days, as is before touched: which Fact of his is not a little noted in our Monkiſh Hiſtories.

This Simon builded Canterbury College in Oxford.

The concluſion of this Fourth Book.

The concluſion of this Book. Antichriſt in his pride.

FOraſmuch as Satan being Chained up all this while for the ſpace of a Thouſand Years, beginneth about this time to be looſed and to come abroad, according to the fore-warning of St. John's Revelation: Therefore to conclude the Fourth Book, wherein ſufficiently hath been deſcribed the exceſſive pride and pomp of Antichriſt, flouriſhing in his ruff and ſecurity, from the time of William Conqueror hitherto: Now (Chriſt aſſiſting and aſſiſting us thereunto) we mind in theſe later Books hereafter following, in order of Hiſtory to expreſs the later Perſecutions and horrible Troubles of the Church, raiſed up by Satanas in his miniſter Antichriſt; with the reſiſtance againſt Chriſt's Church againſt him. And ſo to proſecute (by the merciful Grace of Chriſt) the proceeding and courſe of times, till we come at length to the fall and ruin of the ſaid Antichriſt. To the intent that if any be in ſuch error to think that Antichriſt is yet to come, he may conſider and ponder well the Tragical Rages, the miſerable and moſt ſorrowful Perſecutions, Murthers, and Vexations of theſe later Three Hundred Years now following, and then I doubt not but he will be put out of all doubt, and know that not only Antichriſt is already come, but alſo will know where he ſitteth, and how he is now falling apace (the Lord Chriſt be thanked for ever) to his decay and confuſion.

The looſing out of Satan.

THE

{KING Edw.3}

THE FIFTH BOOK,

CONTAINING

The last Three Hundred Years from the loosing out of Satan.

The fifth Book.

THUS having discourſed in theſe former Books the order and courſe of Years, from the firſt tying up of Satan unto the Year of our Lord 1360. I have a little overpaſſed the ſtint of time in the Scripture, appointed for the loosing out of him again. For ſo it is written by St. John, Apoc. 20. that after a thouſand years, Satan the old Dragon ſhall be let looſe again for a ſeaſon, &c.

The years and time of loosing out Satan examined.

For the better explanation of the which Myſtery, let us firſt conſider the context of the Scripture: afterward let us examine, by Hiſtory and courſe of Times, the meaning of the ſame: And firſt, to recite the words of the Apocalypſe, the Text of the Propheſie is this, Chap. 20.

And I ſaw an Angel deſcending from heaven, having a key of the bottomleſs pit, and a great chain in his hand. And he took the Dragon the old Serpent, which is the Divel and Satanas, and bound him for a thouſand years, and put him in the bottomleſs dungeon and ſhut him up, and ſigned him with his ſeal, that he ſhould not more ſeduce the Gentiles, till a thouſand years were expired. And after that he muſt be looſed again for a little ſpace of time. And I ſaw ſeats, and they ſate upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and the ſouls I ſaw of them which were beheaded for the teſtimony of Jeſus, &c.

By theſe words of the Revelation, here recited, three ſpecial times are to be noted.

Firſt, The being abroad of Satan to deceive the World.

Secondly, The binding up of him.

Thirdly, The looſing out of him again, after a thouſand years conſummate, for a time.

The place of the Apoc. 20. expounded, for the loosing out of Satan.

Concerning the intepretation of which times, I ſee the common opinion of many to be deceived by ignorance of Hiſtories, and ſtate of things done in the Church; they ſuppoſing, that the chaining up of Satan for a thouſand years, ſpoken of in the Revelation, was meant from the Birth of Chriſt our Lord. Wherein I grant that Spiritiually the ſtrength and dominion of Satan, in accuſing and condemning us for ſin, was caſt down at the Paſſion and by the Paſſion of Chriſt our Saviour, and locked up not only for a thouſand years, but for ever. Albeit, as touching the malicious hatred and fury of that Serpent, againſt the outward bodies of Chriſts poor Saints (which is the heel of Chriſt) to afflict and torment the Church outwardly; That I Judge to be meant in the Revelation of St. John, not to be reſtrained till the ceaſing of thoſe terrible Perſecutions of the Primitive Church. At what time it pleaſed God to pity the ſorrowful affliction of his poor flock, being ſo long under Perſecution, the ſpace of three hundred years, and to aſſwage their griefs and torments. Which is meant by binding up of Satan, worker of all thoſe miſchiefs: underſtanding thereby, that for ſo much as the Divel, the Prince of this World, had now by the Death of Chriſt the Son of God loſt all his power and intereſt againſt the Soul of man, he ſhould turn his furious rage and malice, which he had to Chriſt, againſt the People of Chriſt (which is meant by the heel of the ſeed, Gen. 3.) in tormenting their outward bodies. Which yet ſhould not be for ever, but for a determinate time, when as it ſhould pleaſe the Lord to bridle the malice, and ſnaffle the power of the old Serpent, and give reſt unto his Church for the term of a thouſand years. Which time being expired, the ſaid Serpent ſhould be ſuffered looſe again for a certain or a ſmall time, Apoc. 20.

What the looſing of Satan doth mean in Scripture.

And thus to Expound this Prophetical place of Scripture I am led by three reaſons:

Three reaſons.

The firſt is, For that the binding up of Satan, and cloſing him in the bottomleſs pit by the Angel, importeth as much that he was at liberty, raging and doing miſchief before. And certes thoſe ſo terrible and ſo horrible Perſecutions of the Primitive Time univerſally through the whole World, during the ſpace of three hundred years of the Church, do declare no leſs. Wherein it is to be thought and ſuppoſed, that Satan all that time, was not faſtened and cloſed up.

The firſt reaſon.

The ſecond reaſon, moving me to think that the cloſing up of Satan was after the ten Perſecutions of the Primitive Church, is taken out of the twelfth Chapter of the Apocalypſe: Where we read, That after the Woman (meaning the Church) had travelled forth her man-child; the old Dragon the Divel, the ſame time being caſt down from Heaven, drawing the third part of the Stars with him, ſtood before the Woman with great anger, and perſecuted her (that is, the Church of God) with a whole flood of water, (that is, with abundance of all kinds of torments) and from thence went moreover to fight againſt the reſidue of her ſeed, and ſtood upon the Sands of the Sea; whereby it appeareth that he was not as yet locked up.

The ſecond reaſon.

The third reaſon I Collect out of the Apocalypſe thirteenth Chapter; where it is written of the Beaſt, ſignifying the Emperial Monarchy of Rome, that he had power to make War forty and two months. By the which months is meant, no doubt, the time that the Dragon, and the perſecuting Emperors ſhould have in afflicting the Saints of the Primitive Church. The computation of which forty two months (counting every month for a Sabbath of years; that is, for ſeven years, after the order of Scripture) riſeth to the ſum (counting from the Paſſion of the Lord Chriſt) of three hundred years, lacking ſix; at what time Maximius the laſt Perſecutor in Rome, fighting againſt Conſtantinus, was drowned with his Soldiers, like as Pharaoh perſecuting the Children of Iſrael was drowned in the red Sea. Unto the which xlii months, or Sabbaths of years, if ye add the other ſix years wherein Licinius perſecuted in the Eaſt; ye ſhall find juſt three hundred years, as is ſpecified before in the firſt Book of this Volume, pag. 96.

The third reaſon. Apoc. cap. 13.

xlii months in the Apoc. cap. 13. examined.

What time Satan was tied up.

After the which forty and two months, being expired, manifeſt it is that the fury of Satan; that is, his violent malice and power over the Saints of Chriſt, was diminiſhed and reſtrained univerſally through the whole World.

Thus then the matter ſtanding evident, that Satan after 300 years, counting from the Paſſion of Chriſt, began to be chained up, at what time the perſecution of the Primitive Church began to ceaſe: now let us ſee how long this binding up of Satan ſhould continue, which was promiſed in the Book of the Revelation to be a thouſand years. Which thouſand years, if ye add to the xlii months of years, that is, to 294 years; they make 1294 years after the Paſſion of the Lord. To theſe moreover add the 30 years of the age of Chriſt, and it cometh to the year of our Lord 1324, which was the year of the letting out of Satan, according to the Propheſie of the Apocalypſe.

About what time and year Satan was let out by the count of the Apocalypſe.

The time of Antichriſt, examined. Unto the which count of years doth not much diſagree that which I found in a certain old Chronicle propheſied and written in the later end of a Book; which Book was written, as it ſeemeth, by a Monk of Dover, and remaineth yet in the cuſtody of William Carrie, a Citizen of London; alledging the Propheſie of one Haymcardus a Gray Frier, grounded upon the Authority of Joachim the Abbot, Propheſying that Antichriſt ſhould be born the year from the Nativity of Chriſt 1260. Which is, counting after the Lords Paſſion, the very ſame year and time when the orders of Friers both Dominicks and Franciſcans began firſt to be ſet up by Pope Honorius the third, and by Pope Gregorius the ninth, which was the year of our Lord, counting after his Paſſion.		1226

Whereof theſe Verſes in the Author were written:

Verſes Propheſying of the coming of Antichriſt.

And theſe Verſes were written, as appeareth by the ſaid Author, An. 1285.

Theſe things thus premiſed for the looſing out of Satan, according to the Propheſie of the Apocalypſe, now let us enter (Chriſt willing) to the declaration of theſe later times which followed after the leting out of Satan into the World. Deſcribing the wondrous pertubations and cruel tyranny ſtirred up by him againſt Chriſts Church; alſo the valiant reſiſtance of the Church of Chriſt againſt him and Antichriſt, as in theſe our Books here under-following may appear.

The Argument of the Books after following.

The argument of which Books conſiſteth in two parts; Firſt, To entreat of the raging fury of Satan now looſed, and of Antichriſt; againſt the Saints of Chriſts fighting and travelling for the maintainance of Truth, and Reformation of the Church. Secondly, To declare the decay and ruin of the ſaid Antichriſt, through the Power of the Word of God, being at length, either in a great part of the World overthrown: or at leaſt univerſally in the whole World detected.

{Anno 1360}

Thus then to begin with the year of our Lord 1360, wherein I have a little, as is aforeſaid, tranſpreſſed the ſtint of the firſt looſing out of Satan: we are come now to the time wherein the Lord, after long darkneſs, beginneth ſome Reformation of his Church, by the diligent induſtry of ſundry his faithful and learned ſervants: of whom divers already we have fore-touched in the former Book before; as namely, Guliel. de Sancto Amore, Marſilius Patavinus, Ockham, Robertus Gallus, Robertus Groſthead, Petrus de Cugneriis, Johannes Rupeciſſanus, Conradus Hager, Johannes de Poliaco, Ceſenas, with other more; which withſtood the corrupt errors, and intolerable enormities of the Biſhop of Rome, beſide them which about theſe times were put to death by the paid Biſhop of Rome, as Chaſtilio and Franciſcus de Arcatara in the Book before Recorded; alſo the two Franciſcans, Martyrs, which were burned at Avinion, mentioned pag. 357.

A brief rehearſal of faithful learned men, which withſtood the proceedings of the Pope.

Now to theſe (the Lord willing) we will add ſuch other Holy Martyrs and Confeſſors, who following after in the courſe of years with like zeal and ſtrength of Gods Word; and alſo with like danger of their lives, gave the like reſiſtance againſt the enemy of Chriſts Religion, and ſuffered at his hands the like perſecutions. Firſt, beginning with that godly man, whoſoever he was, the Author of the Book (his name I have not) Intituled, The Prayer and Complaint of the Ploughman; written as it appeareth, about this preſent time.

The Author of the Ploughmans Prayer not known.

Which Book as it was faithfully ſet forth by William Tindal, ſo I have as truly diſtributed the ſame abroad to the Readers hands: neither changing any thing of the matter, neither altering many words of the Phraſe thereof. Although the oldneſs and age of his ſpeech and tearms be almoſt grown now out of uſe; yet I thought it ſo beſt, both for the utility of the Book to reſerve it from oblivion, as alſo in his own Language to let it go abroad, for the more credit and teſtimony of the true antiquity of the ſame. Adding withal in the Margent for the better underſtanding of the Reader, ſome interpretation of certain difficult tearms and ſpeeches, which otherwiſe might perhaps hinder or ſtay the Reader. The matter of this complaining Prayer of the Ploughman thus proceedeth:

An old ancient writing, Intituled, The Prayer and Complaint of the Ploughman.

An old Book, Intituled, The Ploughmans Prayer, written as it ſeemeth about Wickliffes time.

Jeſus Chriſt that was vbore of the maid Mary, have on thy poor ſervants mercy and pity, and help them in their great need to fight againſt ſin, and againſt the Divel that is Author of ſin; and more needneſs there never was to cry to Chriſt for help, than it is right now. For it is fulfilled that God ſaid by Iſaiah the Prophet, Ye riſeth up earlich to follow drunkennes, and to drink till it be even, the harp and other minſtrelſies beeth in your feaſts and wine. But the work of God ye ne beholdeth not, ne taketh no keep to the works of his hands: And therefore my people is take priſoner, for they ne had no cunning. And the noble men of my people deyeden for hunger, and the multitude of my people weren dry for thirſt, and therefore hell hath drawn abroad their ſoul, and harh yopened his mouth without any end. And eftſoons ſaith Iſaiah the Prophet, The word is ſloten away, and the highneſs of the people is ymade ſick, and the earth is infect of his wonnyers, for they have broken my laws, and ychanged my right, and han deſtroyed mine everlaſting bond and † forward between them and me. And therefore curſing ſhall devour the earth, and they that wonneth on the earthly ſhallen dons fin. And therefore the earth tilyars ſhallen waxe wood, and few men ſhullen ben yleft upon the earth. And yet ſaith Iſaiah the Prophet, This ſaith God, Foraſmuch as this people nigheth me with their mouth, and glorifieth me with their lips, and their heart is far from me; And they han ydrad more mines commandment, than mine, and more draw to their doctrines, than mine; Therefore will I make a great wondring unto this people, wiſdome ſhall periſh away from wiſe men, and underſtanding of ready men ſhall be yhid. And ſo it ſeemeth that another ſaying of Iſaiah is fulfilled here, as God bad him go teach the people, and ſaid, Go forth and ſay to this people: Ears have ye, and underſtand ye not; and eyes ye have, and ſight ne know ye not. Make blind the heart of this people, and make their ears heavy, and cloſe their eyen, leſt he ſee with his eyne, and yheare with his ears, and underſtand with his heart, and be ytumed, and ych heal him of his ſickneſs. And Iſaiah ſaid to God, How long Lord ſhall this be? And God ſaid, For to that the Cities ben desolate withouten a wonnier, and an house without a man.

Here is mychel nede for to make sorwow, and to cry to our Lord Jesu Christ heartilech for help and succour, that he wole forgive us our sins, and give us grace and conning to serven him better hereafter. And God of his endeles mercy give us grace and conning trulich to tellen which is Christs Law in helping of mens soules for we beth lewd men and sinful men, and uncunning, and if he woll be our help and our succour, we shullen well perform our purpose. And blessed be our Lord God that hideth his wisdom from wise men, and fro ready men, and teacheth it to small Children, as Christ teacheth in the Gospel.

The Law of Christ standeth on two parts.

Christen men have a Law to keep, the which Law hath two parties. Believe in Christ that is God, and is the foundement of their Law, and upon this foundament, as he said to Peter, and the Gospel heareth witnesse, he woll bylden his Church, and this is the first party of Christs Law. The second party of this Law beth Christs Commandments that beth written in the Gospel, and more verilich in Christen mens hearts.

*And as touching the Beleve, we beleven that Christ is God, and that there ne is no God but he. We beleven nevertheles that in the Godhead there bene Three Persons, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and all these Three Persons ben one God, and not many gods, and all they beth ylich Mighty, ylich Good, and ylich Wise, and ever have ben, and ever shullen ben. We beleven this God made the World of nought, and man he made after his own likeness in Paradise, that was a Land of bliss, and gave him that Land for his Heritage, and bad him that he should not eat of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, that was * amid Paradise. Then the Divel, that was fallen out of Heaven for his pride, had envy to Man, and by a false suggestion he made Man eat of this Tree, and breake the Commandment of God, and tho was Man overcome of the Divel, and so he lost his Heritage, and was put out thereof into the World that was a Land of travel, and of sorrow under the fiends thraldome, to be punished for his trespass. There Man followed wickednes and sin, and God for the sin of Man sent a flood into this World, and drownd all mankind save eight souls. And after this flood he let men multiply in the World, and so he assayed whether man dread him or loved him, and among other he found a man, that highte* Abraham: this man he greved whether he loved him and dread him, and bad him that he should offeren Isaac his Son upon an Hill: and Abraham as a true servant fulfilled the Lords Commandment: and for his buxumnes and truth, God sware unto Abraham that he would multiply his seed as the gravel in the Sea, and as the Stars of Heaven, and he behight to him and to his Heirs the Land of beheft for Heritage for ever, gif they wolden ben his true servants and keep his hefts. And God † held him forward, for Isaac, Abraham's Son, begat Jacob and Esau: and of Jacob, that is yclped Israel, comen Gods People that he chose to be his servants, and to whom he behight the Land of beheft. This people was in great thraldome in Egypt under Pharaoh that was King of Egypt: and they crieden to God that he should deliveren them out of that thraldome, and so he did: for he sent to Pharaoh, Moses and his Brother Aaron, and bad him deliver his People to done him Sacrifice: and tofore Pharaoh he made Moses done many wonders, or that Pharaoh would deliver his People, and at the last day by night he delivered his People out of thraldome, and led them through a desert toward the Land of beheft, and there he gave them a Law, that they shoulden liven after, when they comen into their Country, and in their way thitherward, the Ten Commandments God wrote himself in two Tables of Stone: the remnant of the Law he taught them by Moses his servant, how they should do everichone to other, and gif they trespassed against the Law, he ordained how they shoulden be punished. Also he taught them what manner Sacrifices they should do to him, and he chose him a People to ben his Priests, that was Aaron and his Children, to done Sacrifice in the Tabernacle, and afterward in the Temple also. He chose him the remnant of the Children of Levi to ben servants in the Tabernacle to the Priests, and he said: When ye come into the Land of beheft, the Children of Levi they shullen have none Heritage amongst their Brethren, for I would be their part, and their heritage, and they shullen serve me in the Tabernacles by days and by nights, and be ordained that Priests should have a part of the Sacrifices that were offered in the Tabernacle, and the first begotten Beasts, both of Men and Beasts, and other things, as the Law telleth. And the other Children of Levi, that served in the Tabernacle, should have Tithings of the people in their livelode, of the which Tithings they should given the Priests the tenth party in form of offering. The Children of Levi, both Priests and other, should have Houses and Crofts, and Lesswes for their Beasts in the Land of beheft, and none other Heritage: and so God gave them their Land of beheft, and bad them that they ne should worship no other than him: so he bad them that they should keep his Commandments: and gif they did so, all their Enemies about them should dread them, and be their servants. And gif they worshipped false gods, and so forsaken his Laws, he behight them that he would bring them out of that Land, and make them serve their Enemies: but yet he said he would not benemen his mercy away from them, if they would cry mercy and amend their defaults: and all this was done on Gods side.

{KING} {Edw.3}

And here is much love showed of God to man. And who so looketh the Bible, *he shall find that man showed him little love againward: for when they were come into their Heritage, they forgatten their God, and worshipped false gods. And God sent to them the Prophets and his Servants * fele times to bid them withdrawen them from their sins, and other they have slowen them, or they beaten them, or they led them in Prison: and oft-times God took upon them great vengeance for their sins: and when they cried after helpen to God, he sent them help and succour. This is the general process of the* Old Testament, that God gave to his People by Moses his servant. And all this Testament and this doing ne was but a shadow and figure of a New Testament that was given by Christ. And it was bybeten by Jeremiah the Prophet, as St. Paul beareth witnesse in the Epistle that he writeth to the Jews. And Jeremiah saith in this wise: Lo days shall come, God saith, and I will make a new band to the house of Israel, and to the house of Judah, not like the forward that I made with their fathers, in that day that I took their hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt, the which forward they maden veine, and I had Lordship over them. But this shall be the forward that I wold make with them after those days: I will give my laws with them in their inwardnes, and I will written them in their hearts, and I will be their God, and they should be my people: and after that a man shall not teach his neighbour, ne his brother. For all (God saith) from the least to the most, should know me, for I will forgiven them their fins, and will no more think on their fins.

God's love to man.

* Fele time, that is, often times.

This is the New Testament, that Christ both God and Man, born of the Maid Mary, he taught here in the World to bring man out of sin, and out of the Divels thraldome and service to Heaven, that is a Land of Bliss and Heritage, to all tho that beleeven on him, and keepen his Commandments, and for his teaching he was done to the death. But the Third Day he arose again from death to life, and set Adam and Eve, and many other folk out of Hell, and afterward he came to his Disciples, and comforted them. After, he fried up to Heaven to his Father, and tho he sent the Holy Ghost amongst his Disciples: and in time coming, he will come and demen all mankind after their works, and after the words he spake upon earth: some to bliss, within body and in soul ever withouten end: and some to pain withouten end, both in body and in soul.

This is our beleeve and all Christen mens, and this beleeve is the first point of the New Testament, that ych Christen man is hold stedfastly to believe, and rather to suffer the death, than forsaken this beleeve: and so this beleeve is the Bread of Spiritual life, in forsaking sin, that Christ brought us to life.

But forasmuch as mans living ne stondeth not all only by Bread, he hath yeiven us a draught of Water of Life to drink. And who that drinketh of that Water he ne shall never afterward ben athurst. For this Water is the clear teaching of the Gospel, that enclofeth seven Commandments.

The first es this: Thou shalt love thy God over all other things, and thy Brother as thy self, both enemy and friend.

Special Precepts or Lessons of the Gospel.

The

{KING} {Edw.3}

The second Commandment is of meeknes, in the which Christ chargeth us, to forsake lordship upon our Brethren, and other worldly worships: and so he did himself.

The Third Commandment is, In standing stedfastlich in truth, and forsaking all falsenes.

The fourth Commandment is, To suffer in this World diseases and wrongs, withouten againstondings.

The fifth Commandment is, Mercy to forgiven our Brethren their trespas, as often time as they gilteth, without asking of vengeance.

The sixth Commandment is, pooresse in spirit, but not to ben a begger.

The seventh Commandment, is chastity: that is, a forsaking of flesthlich likings displeasing to God. These Commandments enclosen the Ten Commandments of the old, and somewhat more.

Christs Law kept from clean vertue, and corrupted in Schisme, Pride.

This Water is a blessed drink for Christen mens Souls. But more harm is, much folk would drink of this Water, but they mowe not come thereto: for God saith by Ezekiel the Prophet: When ich geve to you the moft clean water to drink, ye troubled that water with your feet, and that water is so defouled, ye geve my sheep to drink. But the clean water is yhid fro the sheep, and but gif God clear this, it is dread left the sheep dyen for thurst. *And Christ that is the Wisdome of the Father of Heaven, and Well of this Wisdome, that come from Heaven to Earth to teach man this Wisdome, through the which man should overcome the sleights of the Divel, that is the principal enemy of mankind: have mercy and pity of his people, and shew, if it be his will, how this water is troubled, and by whom: and * sith clear this water that his sheep mowne drinken hereof, and kele the thirst of their Souls. Blessed mote our Lord ben, for he hath taught us in the Gospel, that ere then he would come to the universal dome, then should come many in his Name, and sayen, that they weren Christ: and they shoulden done many wonders, and begilen many men: and many false Prophets shoulden arisen and begulen much folk.*

* Sith, that is, afterward.

† Severeth, that is, nie every.

A Lord, yblessed mote thou ben of everich Creature: which ben they that have yfaid that they weren in Christ, and have thus begiled thy people? Trulich Lord I trow, thilke that sayen that they ben in thy stead, and † bimemen thy worship, and maken the people worshippen them as God, and have hid thy Laws from thy people: Lord, who durft sit in thy seed, and benemen thee thy Worship and thy Sacrifice, and durst maken the people worshippen them as Gods? The Sauter tells, That God ne wole not in the day of dome demen men for bodilich Sacrifices and Holocaustes: but God saith: Yeld to me Sacrifice of hery-ing, and yeld to God thine avowes, and clepe me in the day of tribulation, and ich will defend thee, and thou shalt worship me.

* Herying, that is, prai-sing.

*The * herying of God standeth in three things. In loving God over all other things: in dreading God over all other things: in trusting God over all other things.*

These three points Christ teacheth in the Gospel. But I trow men loven him but a little. For who so loveth Christ, he wole kepen his words. But men holden his words for Heresie and Folly, and keepeth mens words. Also men dreden more men and mens Laws and their cursings, than Christ and his Laws and his Cursings. Also men hopen more in men and mens helps, than they do in Christ and in his help. And thus hath he, that setteth in Gods stede, bynomen God these three heryinges, and makes men loven him and his Laws more than Christ and Christs Law, and dreaden him also. And there as the people shullen yeeld to God their avowes, he saith, he hath power to assoylen them of their avowes, and so this Sacrifice he † nemeth away from God. And there as the people should cry to God in the day of tribulation, he letteth them of their crying to God, and bynemeth God that Worship. This day of tribulation is when man is fallen through sin into the Divels service, and then we shullen cry to God after help, and axen forgivenes of our sin, and make great sorrow for our sin, and ben in full will to do so no more, ne none other sin, and that our Lord God wole forgiven us our sin, and maken our soul clean. For his mercy is endles.

The losse-ing of God standeth in three things.

† Nemeth, that is, taketh.

Asplah ac-tuelle confession.

But Lord, here men have benomen thee much worship: for men seyn that thou ne might not clean assoylen us of our sin: But if we knowledgen our sins to Priests, and taken of them a Penance for our sin, gif we mowen speak with them.

A Lord, thou forgavest sometime Petex his sins, and also Mary Magdalen, and many other sinful men without shriving to Priests, and taking Penance of Priests for their sins. And Lord thou art as mighty now as thou were that time, but gif any man have bynomen thee thy might. And we lewd men beleven, that there is no man of so great power, and gif any man maketh himself of so great power, he heighteth himself above God. And St. Paul speaketh of one that sitteth in the Temple of God, and heighten him above Gods, and gif any such be, he is a false Christ.

* Heighteth, that is, exalteth.

But hereto seyn Priests, that when Christ made clean Leprous men, he bade them go and shew them to Priests. And therefore they seyn that it is a Commandment of Christ, that a man should shewen his sin to Priests. For as they seyn, lepre in the old Law betokenneth sin in this new Law. A Lord God, whether thine Apostles knew not thy meaning as well as men done now? And gif they hadden yknow that thou haddest commanded men to shriven them to Priests, and they ne taught not that Commandment to the People, me thinketh they hadden ben to blame. But I trow they knewen well that it was none of thy Commandments, ne needful to heal of mans Soul. And as me thinketh, the Law of Lepre is nothing to the purpose of shriving: for Priests in the old Law hadden certain points and tokens to know whether a man were Leprous or not: and gif they were Leprous, they hadden power to putten them away from other clean men, for to that they weren clean: and then they hadden power to receiven him among his Brethren, and offeren for him a Sacrifice to God.

Objection of the Priests to maintain thisse. Answer to the Objection.

This is nothing to the purpose of shriving. For there is but one Priest, that is Christ, that may know in certain the Lepre of the Soul. Ne no Priest may make the Soul clean of her sin, but Christ that is Priest after Melchisedec's order: ne no Priest here beneath may yeven for certain whether a man be clean of his sin, or clean assoiled, but gif God tell it him by Revelation. Ne God ordained not that his Priests should set men a Penance for their sin, after the quantity of the sin, but this is mans ordinance, and it may well be that there commeth good thereof. But I wot well that God is much unworshipped thereby. For men trust more in his absolutions, and in his years of grace, than in Christs absolutions and thereby is the people much apaired. For now the sorrow a man should make for his sin, is put away by this shrift: and a man is more bold to do sin for trust of this shrift, and of this bodilich Penance.

Penance for sin, is mans Ordinance, and not Gods.

Another mischief is, That the people is shrought into this belief, that one Priest hath a great power to assoylen a man of his sin and clennere, than another Priest hath.

Mischiefs that come by unlerdat confession.

Another mischief is this, That fome Priest may assoylen them both of sin and pain: and in this they taken them a power that Christ granted no man in Earth, ne he ne used it doughe on Earth himself.

Popish Priests charged with Simony.

*Another mischief is, that these Priests sellen forgivenes of many sins and absolutions for money: and this is an Heresie accursed that is ycleped Simony: and all thilk Priests that axeth price for granting of Spiritual Grace, * beth by holy Laws deprived of their Priesthood, and thilke that assenteth to this Heresie. And be they ware, for Helyse the Prophet took no mony of* Naaman, when he was made clean of his Lepre: but Gieli his servant: and therefore the Lepre of Naaman abode with him and with his Heirs evermore after.

* Beth, that is be.

Here is much matter of sorrow, to see the people thus far yladd away from God and worshippen a false God in Earth, that by might and by strength hath yblome away the great Sacrifice of God out of his Temple: of which mischief and discomfort, Daniel maketh mention, and Christ beareth thereof witnes in the Gospel. Who that readeth it, understand it. Thus we have ytold apertly, how he that saith he sitteth in Christs stede † bynemeth Christ his Worship, and his Sacrifice of his people, and maketh the people worshipen him as a God on Earth.

† Bynemeth, that is taketh away.

"Cry we to God, and knowledge we our sins everich
"one to other, as St. James teacheth, and pray we heartich to God everichone one for other, and then we shu-
"len hopen forgivenes of our sins. For God that is
"endles in mercy faith, That he ne will not a sinful
"mans death, but that he be turned from his sin and li-
"ven. And therefore, when he came down to save man-
"kind, he gave us a Law of love and of mercy; and "bade

" bade, gif a man do a treſpaſs, amend him privilich, and
" gif he leve not his ſin, amend him before witneſs, and
" gif he amendeth not, men ſhould tell to the Church:
" and gif he ne amendeth not then, men ſhould ſhone his " company as a Publican, or a man that is misbeleved:
" and this Law was yſigured in the Law of Lepre; who
" that reads it, he may ſee the ſooth.

" But Lord God, he that ſitteth in thy ſtede hath undo
" thy Law of mercy and love; Lord, thou biddeſt loven
" Enemies as our ſelf; and theweſt in the Goſpel there as " the Samaritan had mercy on the Jew. And thou
" biddeſt us alſo prayen for them that curſen us, and that " deſamen us, and purſuen us to death. And ſo Lord thou
" diddeſt, and thine Apoſtles alſo. But he that clepeth
" himſelf thy Vicar on Earth, and head of thy Church, he
" he hath undone thy Law of love and mercy. For gif we
" ſpeaken of loving our Enemies, he teacheth us to fight
" with our Enemies, that Chriſt hath forboden. He curſeth
" and deſireth vengeance to them that ſo doth to him. Gif
" any man purſueth him, he curſeth him, that it is a ſorrow
" a Chriſten man to hearen the curſings that they maken,
" and Blaſphemies in ſuch curſing. Of what thing that " I know, I may bear true witneſs.

" But gif we ſpeak of loving of our Brethren, this is " undone by him that ſaith he is Gods Vicar in Earth.
" For Chriſt in the Goſpel biddeth us, that we ſhoulder
" clepen us no Father upon Earth: but clepen God our " Father, to maken us love perfitlich together. And he
" clepeth himſelf Father of fathers, and maketh many Re" ligions, and to everich a Father. But whether is Love
" and Charity encreaſed by theſe Fathers and by their Re" ligions, or elſe ymade leſs? For a Frier ne loveth not a " Monk, ne a Secular man neither, nor yet one Frier
" another that is not of the Order, and it is againward,

" A Lord, me thinketh that there is little perfection in
" theſe Religions: For Lord, what Charity haven ſuch
" men of Religion, that known how they mown again-
" ſtand ſin, and fleen away from their Brethren that ben
" more uncunning than they ben, and ſufferen them to tra-
" vellen in the World withouten their counſel as Beaſts?
" Trulich Lord, me thinketh that there is but but little " Charity, and then is there little Perfection. Lord God,
" when thou were on Earth, thou were among ſinful men to
" drawen them from ſin, and thy Diſciples alſo. And Lord,
" I trow thou ne grantedſt not one man more cunning than " another all for himſelf: and I wote well that lewd men
" that ben labourers, ne travel not alonich for himſelf.
" Lord our belief is, that thou ne were not of the World,
" ne thy teaching, neither thy ſervants that liveden after thy " teaching. But all they forſaken the World, and ſo every " Chriſten man muſt. But Lord, whether thou taughteſt
" men to forſake their Brethrens company and travel of the " World, to liven in eaſe and in reſt, and out of trouble
" and anger of the World, by their Brethrens travel, and
" ſo forſaken the World?

" A Lord, thou ne taughteſt not a man to forſaken a " poor eſtate and travel, to ben afterward a Lord of his " Brethren, or been a Lords fellow, and dwelling with " Lords, as doth men of theſe new Religions. Lord thou
" ne taughteſt not men of thy Religion thus to forſake the " World, to liven in perfection by themſelf in eaſe, and
" by other mens travel. But Lord they ſayen they ben
" ybound to thy ſervice, and ſerven thee both night and " day in ſinging their Prayers, both for themſelf and for " the other men, that done them good both quick and
" dead, and ſome of them gone about to teach thy peo" ple when they haven leiſure.

" A Lord, gif they be thy ſervants; whoſe ſervants ben
" we that cannot preien as they done? And when thou
" were here on Earth for our nede, thou taughteſt thy ſer-
" vants to preien thy Father privilich and ſhortlich: and gif
" there had been a better manner of preying, I trow thou
" wouldeſt have taught it in help of thy people. And Lord
" thou reproveſt Hypocrites that preyen in long prayer, and
" in open places, to ben yholden holy men. And thou
" ſeyſt in the Goſpel; Wo to you Phariſes hypocrites. And
" Lord thou ne chargedſt not thy ſervants with ſuch man" ner ſervice: but thou ſeyſt in the Goſpel, that the Pha-
" riſies worſhopen thee with their lips, and their heart is " far from thee. For they * chargen more mens traditions
" than thy Commandment.

" And Lord, we lewd men han a belief, that thy good-
" neſs is endleſs: and gif we keepen thine heſtes, then ben
" we thy true ſervants: and though we preyen thee but a " little and ſhortlich, thou wilt thinken on us, and graunten
" us that us nedeth, for ſo thou † behited us ſometime.
" And Lord I trow, that pray a man never ſo many quaint " prayers, gif he ne keep not thine heſts, he is not thy " good ſervant. But gif he keep thine heſts, then he is " thy good ſervant. And ſo me thinketh, Lord, that " praying of long prayers ne is not the ſervice that thou
" deſireſt, but keeping of thine heſts: and then a lewd
" man may ſerve God as well as a man of Religion;
" though that the Ploughman ne may not have ſo much
" Silver for his prayer as men of Religion. For they " * lumnen not ſo well preſten their praiers as theſe other
" chapmen: but Lord, our hope is, that our prayers be " never the worſe, though it be not ſo well ſold as other
" mens prayers.

" Lord, Ezekiel the Prophet ſaith, That when he ſpake
" to the people thy words, they turned thy words into ſongs
" and into tales. And ſo Lord men done now: they ling
" in merikich thy words, and that ſinging they clepen thy
" ſervice. But Lord I trow that the beſt ſingers he heri-
" eth thee not moſt: but he that fulfilleth thy words, he
" † herieth thee full well, though he weep more than " ſing: and I trow that weeping for breaking of thy " Commandments be more pleaſing ſervice to thee than " the ſinging of thy words. And would God that men " would ſerve him in ſorrow for their ſins, and that they
" ſhoulden afterward ſerven thee in mirth. For Chriſt
" ſaith; ybleſſed ben they that maken ſorrow, for they " ſhoulden ben ycomforted. And wo to them that ben
" merry, and have their comfort in this world. And
" Chriſt ſaid, that the world ſhould joyen, and his ſer-
" vants ſhoulden be ſorry, but their ſorrow ſhould be turn" ed into joy.

" A Lord, he that clepeth himſelf thy Vicar upon Earth
" hath yordained an order of Prieſts to do thy ſervice in " Church to force thy lewd people in ſinging Mattens,
" Evenſong, and Maſs. And therefore he chargeth lewd
" men in pain of curſing, to bring to his Prieſts Tithings
" and Offerings to ſniden his Prieſts, and he clepeth
" that Gods part, and due to Prieſts that ſerven him in " Church.

" But Lord, in the old Law the Tithings of the lewd
" people ne were not due to Prieſts, but to that other Chirlder
" of Levi that ſerveden thee in the Temple, and the Prieſt
" hadden their part of Sacrifices, and the firſt bygeten Beaſts
" and other things as the Law telleth. And Lord ſeyſt Paul
" thy ſervant ſaith, That the order of the Prieſthood of " Aaron ceaſed in Chriſts coming and the Law of that " prieſthood. For Chriſt was end of Sacrifices yoffered
" upon the Croſs to the Father of Heaven, to bring man
" out of ſin, and become himſelf a Prieſt of Melchiſedeks
" order. For he was both King and Prieſt, without be" ginning and end; and both the Prieſthood of Aaron, and
" alſo the Law of that Prieſthood ben ychanged in the " coming of Chriſt. And S. Paul ſaith it is reproved, for
" it brought no man to perfection. For blood of Goats,
" ne of other Beaſts ne might done away ſin, for to that
" Chriſt thad his blood.

" A Lord Jeſus; whether thou ordeneſt an order of Prieſts
" to offren in the auter thy fleſh and thy blood to bringen of " men out of ſin, and alſo out of pein? And whether thou
" geve them alonelich a power to eat thy fleſh and thy " blood, and whether none other man may eat thy fleſh
" and thy blood withouten leve of Prieſts? Lord, we be" leven, that thy fleſh is very meat, and thy blood very
" drink; and who eateth thy fleſh, and drinketh thy blood,
" dwelleth in thee, and thou in him, and who that eateth
" this Bread ſhall live without end. But Lord thine Di-

" rather, the Spirit is that maketh you live, the words that
" ych have ſpoken to you ben ſpirit and life. Lord, ybleſ-
" ſed mote thou be, for in this word thou teacheſt us that
" he that keepeth thy words, and doth after them, eateth
" thy fleſh, and drinketh thy blood, and hath an ever" laſting life in thee. And for we ſhoulden have mind of " this living, thou gaveſt us the Sacrament of thy fleſh and " blood, in form of Bread and Wine at thy Supper, before that

{KING Edw.3} " that thou ſhouldeſt ſuffer thy death, and took Bread in " thine hand, and ſaideſt; Take ye this, and eat it, for " it is my body: and thou tookeſt Wine, and bleſſedſt it,
" and ſaid; This is the blood of a new and an everlaſting
" Teſtament, that ſhall be ſhed for many men in forgive-

" of me.

" A Lord, thou ne bede not thine Diſciples maken this
" a ſacrifice, to bring men out of peines, gif a Prieſt offred
" thy body in the Altar; but thou bed them go and *
" Fullen all the folk in the name of the Father, and the " Son and the Holy Ghoſt, in forgiveneſs of their ſins; and " Teach ye them to keep thoſe things that ych have com" manded you. And Lord, thine Diſciples ne ordained
" not Prieſts principallich to make thy body in Sacrament,
" but for to teach the people, and good Husbandmen that
" well govern their Houſholds, both Wives and Children,
" and their meiny, they ordeined to be Prieſts to teachen
" other Men the Law of Chriſt, both in word, in dede,
" and they lived ein as true Chriſtian men, every day they
" eaten Chriſts body, and drinken his blood, to the ſuſte-
" nance of living of their Souls, and other whiles they " token of the Sacrament of his body in form of Bread and " Wine, in mind of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

" But all this is turned upſidown: for now whoſo will
" liven as them taughteſt, he ſhall ben holden a fool. And
" gif he ſpeak thy teachings, he ſhall ben holden an Here-
" tick, and accuſed. Lord, have no longer wonder " hereof, for ſo they ſeiden to thee when thou were here
" ſometime. And therefore we moten take in patience
" their words of Blaſphemy as thou diddeſt thy ſelf, or " elſe we were to blame. And trulich Lord I trow, that if " thou were now in the World, and taughteſt as thou did-
" deſt ſometime, thou ſhouldeſt ben done to death. For thy
" teaching is damned for Hereſie of wife Men of the World,
" and then moten thy needs ben Hereticks that teachen thy
" lore, and all they alſo that travalen to live thereafter.

" And therefore Lord, gif it be thy will, help thine un-
" kunning and lewd ſervants, that wolen by their power
" and their kunning help to deſtroy ſin. Leve Lord, ſith
" thou madeſt Woman in help of Man, and in a more
" frail degree than Man is, to be governed by Mans reaſon:
" What perfection of charity is in theſe Prieſts and in Men
" of Religion, that have forſaken ſpouhod that thou or-" deineddſt in Paradiſe betwixt man and woman, for per" fection to forſaken travail, and liven in eaſe by other
" Mens travail? For they mow not do bodilich works for " defouling of their hands, with whom they touchen thy " precious body in the Altar.

" Leve Lord, gif good men forſaken the company of " woman, and needs they moten have the governail of " man, then moten they ben ycoupled with threws, and
" therefore thy ſpouſehood that thou madeſt in cleanneſs
" from ſin, it is now ychanged into liking of the fleſh.
" And Lord, this is a great miſchief unto thy people. And " young Prieſts and men of Religion, for default of Wives,
" maken many women horen, and drawn through their
" enſample many other men to ſin, and the eaſe that they
" liven in, and their welfare, is a great cauſe of this miſ-
" chief. And Lord me thinketh, that theſe ben quaint
" Orders of Religion, and none of thy Sect that wolen
" taken horen, whilke God forſendeth, and forſaken Wives
" that God ne forſendeth not; and forſaken travail that " God commands, and geven their ſelf to idlenes, that is " the Mother of all naughtineſs.

" And Lord, Mary thy Bleſſed Mother and Joſeph tou" ched ofentimes thy body, and wroughten with their hands,
" and liveden in as much cleanneſs of Soul, as our Prieſts
" done now, and touched thy Body, and thou touchedeſt
" them in their Souls. And Lord our hope is, that thou
" goen not out of a poor Mans ſoul that travaileth for his " livelode with his hands. For Lord, our belief is, that
" thine Houſe is Mans ſoul, that thou madeſt after thine

" O Lord, why clepeth any Man him Peters ſucceſſor, Faith cometh not by outward force. " A Lord, whether thou ordeineſt an order of fighters

" A Lord, whether bed thou, that gif any Man turn to " Churchmen that were converted threwen adown their " goods afore the Apoſtles feete. For all they weren in " charity, and none of them ſaid this is mine, ne Peter

" made himſelf no Lord of theſe goods.

Pope breaketh the rule of charity of mercy, and of patience. " But Lord, now he that clepeth himſelf thy Vicar
" upon Earth, and ſucceſſor to Peter, hath ybroke thy " commandment of Charity, for he is become a Lord.
" And he hath alſo broken thy commandment of mercy,
" and alſo of patience. Thus Lord we be fallen into miſ-
" chief and thraldom, for our Chiefetaine hath forſaken
" War and Arms, and hath treated to have peace with our " Enemies.

Or than, before ther. " A Lord, gif it be thy will, draw thy ſwerd out of his

" For gif we ben accorded with our Enemies till that time
" come, it is dread leſt thou take vengeance both of them

The Pope breaketh the Law of ſwearing. " Lord, thou geveſt us a commandment of truth, in " bidding us ſay yea, yea, nay, nay, and ſwear for no" thing. Thou geve us alſo a maundment of meekneſs,
" and another of pooreneſs: but Lord, he that clepeth
" himſelf thy Vicar on Earth, hath both ybroken theſe
" commandments; for he maketh a Law to compel men
" to ſwear, and by his Laws he teacheth that a man, to " ſave his life, may forſwear and lie. And ſo Lord,
" through comfort of him and his laws, the people ne
" dreadeth not to ſwear and to lie, ne oft times to for" ſwearen them. Lord here is little truth.

" O Lord, thou haſt ybrought us to a living of Souls
" that ſtands in beleeving in thee, and keeping thy
" Heſts, and when we breaken thy Heſts; then we flen

Note, that is would not. " Lord, King Saul brake thine Heſts, and thou tookſt
" his Kingdom from his Heires evermore after him, and " give it to David thy Servant, that kept thine Heſts.
" And thou ſaidſt by Samuel thy Prophet to Saul the King,
" that it is a manner of worthipping of falſe Gods to break
" thy Heſts. For who that loveth thee over all things,
" and dreadeth thee alſo, he nole for nothing breake thine
" Heſts.

" O Lord, gif breaking of thine Heſts be herrying of
" falſe Gods, I trow that he that maketh the people break
" thine Heſts, and commandeth that his Heſts ben kept
" of the people, maketh himſelf a falſe God on Earth;

" ing. What ever they seggen, such be their works,
" and here is little love. And whosoever looketh well
" about, all the world fareth as we seggen: and all
" men studieth on every side, how they may wex rich
" men: and everich man almost is ashamed to ben holden
" a poor man.
" And Lord, I trow for thou were a poor man, men
" token little regard to thee, and to thy teaching. But Lord
" thou came to give us a New Testament of love; and " therefore it was semelich that thou came in poornes, to " prove who would love thee, and kepen thy hests. For | " gif thou haddest ycome in forme of a rich man and of a
| " Lord, men wold rather for thy dread than for thy love,
| " have yclept thine hests. And so Lord, now thou might The poverty of Christ rightly considered.
| " well ysee which loven thee as they should in keeping
| " thine hests. For who that loveth thee in thy poornes
| " and in thy lowness, needs he mote love thee in thy Lord-
| " ship and Highness.
| " But Lord, the World is turned upse downe, and
| " men love poor men but a little, ne poornes neither.
| " But men be ashamed of poornes; and therefore Lord,
| " I trow that thou art a poor King. And therefore I
| " trow that he that clepeth himself thy Vicar on Earth,
| " hath forsaken poornes, as he hath do the remnant of
| " thy Law, and is become a rich man and a Lord, and
| " maketh his Treasure upon the Earth, that thou for- A poor King and a proud Vicar, how joyn these two togeth-ther?
| " biddest in the Gospel; and for his Right and Riches,
| " he will plete, and right and curse. And yet Lord he will | " segge, that he forsaketh all things that he oweth, as | " thy true Disciple mete done after thy Teaching in the | " Gospel.
| " But Lord, thou ne taughtest not a man to forsaken
| " his Goods, and plete for them, and fight, and curse.
| " And Lord, he taketh on him power to assoile a man
| " of all manner of things, but if it be of debt. Truly
| " Lord, me thinketh he knoweth little of Charity. For Christ a servant upon Earth, the Pope a Lord.
| " who that beth in Charity, possesseth thy Goods in com-
| " mon, and not in proper at his Neighbours need. And
| " then shall there none of them segge this is mine, but it
| " is Gods that God granteth to us to spenden it to his | " Worship. And so if any of them borroweth a portion The Pope for his right and riches will plead, fight and curse.
| " of those Goods, and dispendeth them to Gods Worship,
| " God is apayed of this spending, and alloweth him
| " this true doing. And if God is payed of that dif-
| " pending, this is the principal Lord of those Goods, how | " dare any of his Servants axen thereof accounts, other
| " challenge it for it? Serten, of one thing I am incer-
| " teine, that these that charge so much det of worldly cat-
| " tel, they know little of Christs Law of Charity: for if
| " Ich am a Baily of Gods Goods in the World; If I see
| " my Brother in need, I am hold by Charity to part
| " with him of these Goods to his nede: and if he spend-
| " eth them well to the Worship of God. I more be well
| " apaid, as though I my self had had spended them to the | " Worship of God. And if the principal Lord is well
| " payed of my Brothers doing, and the dispending of his | " Goods, how may I segge for shame that my Brother is | " detour to me of the Goods that I took him to spend
| " in Gods Worship at his nede? And if my Brother spend-
| " eth amiss the Goods that I take him, I am disclaunged of
| " my deliverance of the Goods, if I take him in Charity
| " thilke Goods at his nede. And I am hold to be fory of
| " his evil dispending, ne I may not axen the Goods, that
| " I took him at his nede in forme of det, for at his | " need they were his as well as mine. And thus is my Propriety of goods here, is not taken away but charity is required to help the need of our neighbor.
| " Brother yhold to done to me gif he fee me in nede,
| " and gif we bed in Charity, little thould we chargen of
| " det. And ne we should not axen so dets, as men that | " know not God: and then we be poor in forsaking all
| " things that we own. For gif we ben in Charity, we
| " wollen nother fight nor curse, ne plete for our goods
| " with our Brethren.
| " O Lord, thou thou taughtest thy Servants to liven
| " and so they liveden while they hadden good Shepherds,
| " that fedden thy Sheep, and robbed them not of their
| " lifelod, as Peter thy good Shepherd and thy other
| " Apostles. But Lord, he that clepeth himself thy Vicar
| " upon Earth, and Successor to Peter, he robbeth thy
| " Puple of their bodilich lifelode, for he ordeineth
| " proud Shepherds to liven in ease by the tenth party of | " poor mens travel: and he giveth them leave to liven
| " where them liketh. And gif men no wolen wil-
| " fullich given them the Tythings, they wolen had them
| " against their will by mastery and by curling, to maken
| " them rich.
| " Lord, how may any man segge that such Shep- The Pope maintainer of thieves and robbers.
| " herds that loven more the wolle than the Sheep, and | " feeden not thy Sheep in body, ne in soul, ne ben such | " ravenors and Thieves? And who may segge, that the | " Maintenor of such Shepherds ne is not a Maintenor
| " of Thieves and Robbers? How wole he affoile
| " Shepherds of their robbing, without restitution of " their goods, that they robben thy sheep of against their " will? Lord of all shepheards, blessed mote thou be.

" For thou lovedst more the sheep then their wolle. For " thou feedest thy sheep both in body and soul. And for " love of thy sheep, thou took thy death to bring thy sheep
" out of Wolves mouths. And the moste charge that thou
" gove to Peter was to feed thy sheep. And so he did
" truelich, and took the death for thee and for thy sheep.
" For he came into the fold of sheep by thee that were " the door. And so I trow a few other did as he did,
" though they clepen themself succesfors to Peter; for " their works showen what they ben. For they rob-
" ben and sleen and destroyen; they robben thy sheep
" of the tenth part of their travel, and feeden them-
" selfs in ease. They steen thy sheep, for they pyenen
" them for hunger of their soul to the death. They
" destroyen the sheep, for with might and with fierm-
" ship they rulen thy sheep; that for dred they ben
" dispersed abroad in Mountains, and there the wild
" beasts of the field destroyeth them for default of a good
" shepheard.

" ℂ O Lord, sif it be thy will deliver thy sheep out of " such shepheards ward that retcheth not of thy sheep, so
" they han their wolle to make themself rich. For thy " sheep ben in great mischief, and soule accombred with " their shepherds.

" ℂ * But for thy shepheards wolden be excused they " have ygetten them hired men to feed thy people, and " these comen in sheepes clothing. But dredfels their " works shewen that † within forth they ben but Wolves.
" For han they their hire, they ne retcheth but a little
" how sorrilich thy sheep ben kept. For as they feggen
" themself, they ben but hired men that han no charge
" of thy sheep. And when they shulden feden thy sheep
" in the pleuteous * lesew of thy teaching, they feeden
" between them and their lesew, so that the sheep ne han
" but a tight of thy lesew, but eaten they shall not there-
" of. But they feden them in a sorry sowre lesew of lesings
" and of tales. And so thy sheep fallen into grievous
" sickneſs through this evil lesew. And sif any sheep
" break over into thy lesew to tasten the sweetneſs thereof,
" anone these hired men drive him out with hounds.
" And thus thy sheep by these hired men ben ykept out
" of their kindlich lesew, and ben yfed with sowre grass
" and sorry barren lesew. And yet they feden but seldom,
" and when they han sorrilich fed them, they taken great
" hire, and gone away from thy sheep and letten them a
" worth.

" And for dread lest thy sheep wolden in their ab" sence go to thy sweet lesew, they han enclosed it all
" about so strongliche and so high, that there may no
" sheep comen there within, but sif it be a * walisch
" leper of the Mountains, that may with his long Legs
" lepen over the vallys. For the hired men ben full cer" tain, that sif thy sheep had once ystatted the sweetneſs
" of thy lesew: They ne would no more bene yfed of " these hired men in their sowre lesewes, and therefore " these hired men kepen them out of that lesew. For
" haden the sheep once ystatten well of that lesew, they
" wolden without a leader go thider to their mete, and
" then mote these hired men fechen them another labor to " live by than keeping of sheep. And they ben fell and " ware ynow thereof, and therefore they feeden thy sheep
" with sowre meat that naught is, and hiden from thy " sheep the sweetneſs of thy lesew. And so though these " hired men gon in sheepes clothing, in their works they
" ben Wolves, that much harm done to thy sheep as we " have ytold.

" ℂ O Lord, they comen as sheep, for they seggen
" that they ben poor and have forsaken the world to li-
" ven perfitlich as thou taughtest in the Gospel. Lord
" this is sheepes clothing. But Lord thou ne taughtest
" not a man to forsaken the travellous living in poor-
" neſs in the world, to liven in ease with riches by " other mens travel, and have Lordship on their brethren.
" For Lord, this is more to forsaken thee and go to the " world.

" ℂ O Lord, thou ne taughtest not a man to forsake
" the world to liven in poorneſs of begging by other mens
" travel that ben as feeble as they ben. Ne Lord thou ne
" taughtest not a man to live in poorneſs of begging, that " were strong enough to travel for his livelode. Ne
" Lord, thou ne taughtest not a man to ben a beg-
" ger to begge of men more than him needeth, to " build great Castles and make great Feasts to thilke that " han no need.

" ℂ O Lord, thou ne taughtest not men this poorneſs,
" for it is out of Charity. But thy poorneſs, that thou
" taughtest, nourisheth Charity. Lord, sith Paul saith,
" That he that forsaketh the charge of thilke that bene
" * homelich with him, hath forsaken his Faith, and is " worse than a misbeliéven man: How then now these " men seggen that they believen in Christ, that han for" saken their poor feeble friends, and let them live in travel
" and in disease, that travelled full sore for them, when " they weren young, and unmighty to help an themself?
" And they wolen live in ease by other mens travel, ever" more begging withouten shame.

" ℂ Lord thou ne taughtest not this manner poorneſs,
" for it is out of Charity. And all thy Law is Charity
" and thing that nourisheth Charity, and these Shepherds
" send about to keep thy Sheep, and to feden them other
" whiles in bareine lesewes. Lord thou ne madest none
" such Shepherds, ne Keepers of the Sheep that feed for" rilich thy Sheep, and for so little travel taken a great
" hire, and sithen all the year afterward, do what them
" liketh, and let thy Sheep perish for default of keeping.

" But thy Shepherds abiden still with their Sheep, and " feeden them in thy pleuteous lesew of thy teaching, and " gone before thy Sheep, and teachen them the way into
" pleuteous and sweet lesew, and keepen thy Flock from
" ravening of the wild Beasts of the field.

" O Lord deliver the Sheep out of the ward of these " Shepherds, and these hired men, that stonden more to " keep their riches that they robben of thy Sheep, than " they stonden in keeping of thy Sheep.

" O Lord when thou come to Jerusalem, sometime
" thou drove out of the Temple Sellers of Beasts and of " other Chaffare, and saidst, Mine House should ben
" cleped an House of Prayers, but they maden a Den of " Thieves of it. O Lord thou art the Temple in whom " we should praien thy Father of Heaven. And Salo- mons Temple, that was ybelded at Jerusalem, was
" Figure of this Temple. But Lord, he that clepeth
" himself thy Vicar upon Earth, and saith that he occupi-
" eth thy place here on Earth, is become a Chapman in " thy Temple, and hath his Chapmen walking in divers
" Countries to sellen his Chaffare, and to makes him rich.
" And he saith, Thou gave him so great a Power aboven
" all other men, That whatever he bindeth other un-
" bindeth in Earth, thou bindeth other unbindeth the " same in Heaven. And so of great Power he selleth
" other men forgiveneſs of their sin. And for much " money he will assoilen a man so clean of his sin, that " he * behoveth men of the bliss of Heaven withouten
" any pain after that they be dead, that given him much " money.

Bishopricks and Chirches, and such other Chaffares he " selleth also for money, and maketh himself rich. And
" thus he beguiled the people.

O Lord Jesus here is much untruth, and mischief, and " matter of sorrow. Lord thou saidest sometime, that " thou wouldest be with thy Servants unto the end of the " world. And thou saidest also, there as tweine or three " ben ygraded togedder in thy name, that thou art in the " middle of them. A Lord, then it was no need to thee
" to maken Lieferenant, sith thou wolte be evermore
" amongst thy Servants.

" Lord, thou saydst of thy Disciples, who they trow-
" ed that thou were. And Peter answered and said,
" That thou art Christ Gods Son. And thou saidst to " Peter, Thou art yblessed Simon Barjona, for flesh and " blood ne showed not this to thee, but my Father
" that is in Heaven. And I say to thee, That thou art
" Peter, and upon this Stone ych would bilde my " Church, and the Gates of Hell he shullen not availen
" agens it.

" And to thee ych wole geve the Keys of Heaven, and
" what ever thou bindest upon Earth shall be bound in " Heaven, and what ever thou unbindest on Earth, shall " be unbounden in Heaven. This Power also was granten
" unto the other Disciples, as well as to Peter, as the

" Gospel

" Gospel openlich telleth. In this place men seggen that " thou granted to Peters Succesſors the selve Power that " thou gave to Peter. And therefore the Bishop of Rome,
" that saith he is Peters Succesſors, taketh this Power to " him to binden and unbinden in Earth what him
" liketh. But Lord, ych have much wonder how he " may for shame clepen himself Peters Succesſor: for Peter
" knowledged that thou were Christ and God, and kept
" the Hests of thy Law: but these han forsaken the Hests
" of thy Law, and hath ymaken a Law contrary to thine
" Hests of thy Law. And so he maketh himself a false
" Christ, and a false god in Earth. And I trow thou gave " him no Power to undo thy Law. And so in taking " this Power upon him, maketh him a false Christ and " Antichrist.

" For who may be more agens Christ, than he that " in his words maketh himself Christs Vicar in Earth;
" and in his werkes undoth the Ordinance of Christ, and
" maketh men believen that it is needful to the heal of " mens Souls, to believen that he is Christs Vicar in Earth?
" And what ever he bindeth in Earth, is ybounden
" in Heaven, and under this colour he undoth Christs
" Law, and maketh men always to keepen his Law and " Hests.

" And thus man may yseen that he is against Christ,
" and therefore he is Antichrist that maketh men wor-
" shippen him as a god on Earth, as the proud King
" Nabugodonosor did sometime, that was King of Ba- bylon. And therefore we lewde men that knowen
" not God but thee Jesus Christ, believen in thee that " art our God, and our King, and our Christ, and thy " Laws: and forsaken Antichrist, and Nabugodonosor that " is a false god, and a false Christ, and his Laws ben con" trary to thy preaching.

" And Lord strength thou us against our enemies. For " they ben about to maken us forsaken thee and thy Law,
" other else to putten us to death.

" O Lord, onlich in thee is our trust to help us in this " mischief, for thy great goodneſs that is withouten
" end.

" Lord thou ne taughtest not thy Disciples to assoilen
" men of their sin, and setten them a Penance for their " sin, in Fasting, ne in Praying, ne other Almous Deed;
" ne thy self, ne thy Disciples, yeeden no such Power
" here on Earth. For Lord, thou forgive men her sins,
" and bede him sin no more. And thy Disciples * fil-
" leden men in thy Name, in forgiveneſs of her " sins. Nor they took no such Power upon them as " our Priests dare now. And Lord, thou ne assoilest no " man both of his sin and of his pain, that was due for " his sin, ne thou grantedst no man such power here on " Earth.

" And Lord, me thinketh that sif there were a Purga-
" tory, and any Earthlich man had power to deliver sin-
" ful men from the peines of Purgatory, he should,
" and he were in Charity, saven everich man that " were in way of Salvation from thilke peines, sith they " make them greater than any bodilich peines of this " World. Also sif the Bishop of Rome had such a " Power, he himself should never comen in Purgatory,
" ne in Hell. And sith we see well that he ne hath no " Power to keepen himself, ne other men nother out of " these bodilich peines of the World, and he may go to " Hell for his sin as another man may: I ne believe not,
" that he hath so great Power to assoylen men of " their sin as he taketh upon him aboven all other
" men. And I trow that in this he higheth himself above
" God.

" As touching the selling of Bishopricks, and Parso-
" nages, I trow it be a point of Falsehed. For agenst
" Gods Ordinance he robbeth poor men of a portion " of their sustenance, and selleth it, other giveth it, to find
" proud men in idleneſs that don the lewd puple little " profit, but much harme, as we told before. Thus ben
" thy commandments of truth, of meekneſs, and of poor" neſs undone by him, that clepeth himself thy Vicar here
" upon Earth.

" A Lord, thou gave us a Commandment of chastice,
" that is, a forsaking of fleshlich lust. For thou broughtest
" us to a living of Soul, that is, ygoverned by the word.
" For Lord, thou ordeinedist women more frele than " man to ben ygoverned by mans rule, and his help, to " please thee and keep thine Hests. Ne thou ne ordeinedist
" that a man should desire the company of a woman, and " maileen her his wife, to liven with her in his lustis, as " a Swine doth or a Horse. And his wife ne like him " not to his lustes, Lord ne gave not a man leave to
" departen him from his wife, and taken him ano" ther.

" But Lord, thy Marriage is a common accord be" tween man and woman, to liven together to their " lives end, and in thy Service either the better for others
" help, and thilke that thus ben ycome together, ben
" joyned by thee, and thilke that God joyneth, may
" no man depart. But Lord, thou seiest, That sif a " man fee a woman to coveten her, then he doth with " the woman lechery in his heart. And so Lord, sif a " man desire his wife in covetise of such lustis, and not to " fly from Whoredome, his Weddins is lechery, ne thou
" ne joynest them not together. Thus was Raguels
" Daughter ywedded to seven Husbands that the Devil
" instrangled. But Toby took her to live with her in " cleanneſs, and bringing up of her Children in thy " Worship, and on him the Devil ne had no power. For " the wedding was I maked in God, for God, and through
" God.

" A Lord, the people is far ygo from this manner
" of Wedding. For now men wedden their wives for " Fairneſs, other for Riches, or some such other flesh-
" lich lusts. And Lord, so it preveth by them for the " most part. For a man shall not find two wedded in " a Land, where the Husband loves the Wife, and the " Wife is buxum to the man, as they shoulden after the " law of Marriage. But other the man loves not his " wife, or the wife if not buxum to her man. And thus
" Lord is the rule of prefe, that never faileth no preve
" whether it be done by thee or no. And Lord, all this " mischief is common among thy people, for that they " know not thy Word, but their Shepherds and hired
" men fedden them with their * swevens and leasings.
" And Lord, where they shoulden gon before us in " the field, they seggen their Order is too holy for thy " Marriage. And Lord, he that calleth himself thy Vi-
" car upon Earth will not sustren Priests to taken them
" wives, for that is against his Law: But Lord, he will
" dispensen with them to kepen horen for a certain sum " of money. And Lord, all Whoredom is sforbended in " thy Law. And Lord, thou never forbendedst Priests
" their wives, ner thy Apostles neither. And well I
" wote in our Land, Priests hadden wives until An- selmus days in the year of our Lord God, 1129. as " Huntingdone writes. And Lord, this makes people for " the most part believen, that Lechery is no sin. There" fore we lewd men prayen thee that thou wolt send " us Shepherds of thine own, that wolen feeden thy " Flock in thy lesew, and gon before themself, and so
" written thy Law in our hearts, that from the least to " the most all they mayen knowen thee. And Lord,
" geve our King and his Lords heart to defenden thy
" true Shepherds and thy Sheep from out of the Wolves
" mouths, and Grace to know thee that art the true
" Christ, the Son of thy heavenly Father, from the " Antichrist; that is, the Son of Pride. And Lord,
" geve us thy poor Sheep patience and strength to " suffer for thy Law, the cruelneſs of the mischievous
" Wolves. And Lord, as thou hast promised, shorten these " days. Lord we axen this now, for more need was there " never.

I doubt not, gentle Reader, but in reading this godly Treatise above prehixed, the matter is manifest and plain of it self without any further Explication, what is to be thought and judged of this Vicar of Christ, and Succesſor of Peter, whom we call the Bishop of Rome: whose life here thou seest not only to be disordered in all Points, swarving from the steps and example of Christ the Prince and Bishop of our Souls, but also whose Laws and Doctrines are so repugnant and contrary to the Precepts and Rule of the Gospel, that almost there is no convenience between them: as in the perusing of this complaining Prayer, thou maist notoriously understand. Wherefore having no need to stand in any further expressing

expreſſing of this matter, but leaving it to thine own conſideration and diſcretion, I will ſpeed my ſelf (Chriſt willing) to proceed toward the time of John Wickliffe and his Fellows, taking by order of years as I go, ſuch things by the way, as both happened before the ſaid time of Wickliffe, and alſo may the better prepare the mind of the Reader, to the entring of that ſtory. Where firſt I think it not inconvenient to infer a Prophetical Parable, written about this time, or not much before, which the Author morally applieth unto the Biſhop of Rome. To what Author this Prophecy or Moral is to be aſcribed, I have not certainly to affirm. Some ſay, that Rupeſciſſamus (of whom mention is made before) was the Author thereof, and alledge it out of Froyſard: but in Froyſard as yet I have not found it. In the mean ſeaſon, as I have found it in Latin expreſſed, becauſe it painteth out the Pope ſo rightly in his feathers and colours; as I thought the thing was not to be omitted, ſo I took this preſent place, as moſt fit (although peradventure miſſing the order of years a little) to inſert the ſame. The effect of which Parable followeth here underwritten.

In the time of Pope Innocent the Sixth above ſpecified, this Joannes de Rupeſciſſa, a Fryer, among other his Propheſies marvelouſly foreſpake (as alledgeth Froyſard, who both heard and ſaw him) of the taking of John the French King Priſoner, and brought forth many other notable Collections concerning the perils, mutations and changings in the Church to come. And at what time the Pope kept him at Avinion in priſon (where Froyſard is ſaid to ſee him, and to ſpeak with him) the ſaid Froyſard heard in the Popes Court this example and parable recited by the foreſaid Fryer Rupeſciſſamus, to the two Cardinals, to wit, Cardinal Hoſtienſis, and Cardinal Auxerenſis, which followeth theſe words:

A parable propheſying the deſtruction of the Pope.

When on a certain time a Bird was brought into the world all bare and without feathers, the other Birds hearing thereof, came to viſit her: and for that they ſaw her to be a marvelous fair and beauiful Bird, they counſelled together how they might beſt do her good, ſith by no means without feathers ſhe might either fly, or live commodiouſly. They all wiſhed her to live for her excellent form and beauties ſake, inſomuch that among them all there was not one, that would not grant ſome part of her own feathers to deck this Bird withall: yea, and the more trim they ſaw her to be, the more feathers ſtill they gave unto her, ſo that by this means ſhe was paſſing well penned and feathered, and began to fly. The other Birds that thus had adorned her with goodly feathers, beholding her to fly abroad, were marvelouſly delighted therewith. In the end this Bird ſeeing her ſelf ſo gorgeouſly feathered, and of all the reſt to be had in honour, began to wax proud and haughty. Inſomuch that ſhe had no regard at all unto them, by whom ſhe was advanced: yea, ſhe punged them with her beak, plucked them by the ſkin and feathers, and in all places hurted them. Whereupon the Birds aſſiſting in Council again, called the matter in queſtion, demanding one of another what was beſt to be done touching this unkind Bird, whom they lovingly with their own feathers had decked and adorned: affirming that they gave not their feathers, to the intend that ſhe, thereby puft up with pride, ſhould contemptuouſly deſpiſe them all. The Peacock therefore anſwereth firſt, Truly, ſaith he, for that ſhe is bravely fet forth with my painted feathers, I will again take them from her. Then ſaith the Faulcon, And I alſo will have mine again. This ſentence at length took place among them all, ſo that every one plucked from her thoſe feathers which before they had given, challenging to them their own again. Now this proud Bird, ſeeing her ſelf thus to be dealt withall, began forthwith to abate her haughty ſtomach, and humbly to ſubmit her ſelf openly, confeſſing and acknowledging that of her ſelf ſhe had nothing; but that her feathers, her honour and other Ornaments was their gift: ſhe came into the world all naked and bare, they clad her with comely feathers, and therefore of right may they receive them again. Wherefore in moſt humble wiſe ſhe deſireth pardon, promiſing to amend all that is paſt, neither would ſhe at any time hereafter commit, whereby through pride ſhe might leeſe her feathers again. The gentle Birds, that before had given their feathers, ſeeing her ſo humble and lowly, being moved with pity, reſtored again the feathers which lately they had taken away, adding withall this admonition, We will gladly, ſay they, behold thy flying among us, ſo long as thou wilt uſe thine Office with humbleneſs of mind, which is the chiefeſt comelineſs of all the reſt: But this have thou for certainty, that if at any time hereafter thou extol thy ſelf in pride, we will ſtraight-ways deprive thee of thy feathers, and reduce thee into thy former ſtate wherein we found thee. Even ſo, Oh you Cardinals (ſaith Joannes Rupiſciſſanus) ſhall it happen unto you: for the Emperors of the Romans and Almains, and other Chriſtian Kings, Potentates, and Princes of the Earth, have beſtowed upon you Goods, Lands and Riches, that ſhould ſerve God, but you have powred it out, and conſumed it upon Pride, all kind of Wickedneſs, Riot and Wantonneſs.

Armachanus.

IN the Catalogue of theſe learned and zealous Defenders of Chriſt againſt Antichriſt above rehearſed, whom the Lord about this time began to raiſe up for the Reamination of his Church, being then far out of frame; I cannot forget nor omit ſomething to write of the reverend Prelate, and famous Clerk, Richard Armachanus, Primate and Archbiſhop of Ireland: a man for his Life and Learning ſo memorable, as the condition of thoſe days then ſerved; that the ſame days then as they had but few good, ſo had they none almoſt his better. His name was Richard Fixraf, made Primate and Archbiſhop, as is ſaid of Ireland. Firſt brought up in the Univerſity of Oxford in the ſtudy of all liberal Knowledge, wherein he did exceedingly profit under John Bakenthorpe his Tutor and Inſtructor. In this time the begging-Fryers began greatly to multiply and ſpread, unto whom this Bakenthorpe was ever a great enemy: whoſe ſteps the Scholars alſo following, began to do the like. Such was the capacity and dexterity of this Fixraf, that he, being commended to King Edward the Third, was promoted by him, firſt, to be Archdeacon of Lichfield, then to be the Commiſſary of the Univerſity of Oxford; at length to be Archbiſhop of Armach in Ireland. He being Archbiſhop, upon a time had a Cauſe to come up to London: at what time here in the ſaid City of London was contention between the Fryers and the Clergy about preaching and hearing Confeſſions, &c. Whereupon, this Armachanus, being requeſted to preach, made ſeven or eight Sermons; Wherein he propounded nine Concluſions againſt the Fryers, for the which he was cited up by the Fryers before this Pope Innocent the Sixth then to appear; and ſo he did: who before the face of the Pope valiantly defended, both in preaching and in writing, the ſame Concluſions, and therein ſtood conſtantly unto the death, as the words of John Wickliffe in this Trialogo do well teſtifie in this wiſe, Ab Anglorum Epiſcopis conductus Armachanus novem in Avione Concluſiones coram Innocentio 6. & ſuorum Cardinalium cœtu, contra fratrum mendicitatem, audenter publicavit, verboque as ſcriptis ad morem uſque defendit. The like alſo teſtifieth of him Waldenus in faſciculo zizaniorum. Alſo Volaterranus reporteth the ſame. Guilielmus Botonerus teſtifying of him in like manner, ſaith, That Armachanus firſt reproved begging-Fryers for hearing the confeſſions of profeſſed Nuns, without licence of their Superiors, and alſo of married women without knowledge of their Husbands. What dangers and troubles he ſuſtained by his Perſecutors, and how miraculouſly the Lord delivered him from their hands; inſomuch, that they meeting him in the open ſtreets, and in clear day-light, yet had no power to ſee him, nor to apprehend him. In what peril of Thieves and Searchers he was, and yet the Lord delivered him; yea, and cauſed his money, being taken from him, to be reſtored again to him by portions in time of his neceſſity and famine: And in what dangers he was of the Kings Officers, which coming with the Kings Letters, laid all the Havens for him; and how the Lord Jeſus delivered him, ſhewing him by what ways, and how to eſcape them, to the number of ſixteen, and yet how the Lord gave him to triumph over all his enemies: how the Lord alſo taught him, and brought him out of the profound vanities of Ariſtotles ſubtilty, to the ſtudy of the Scriptures of God. All this, with much more, he himſelf expreſſeth in a certain prayer or confeſſion made to Chriſt

The troubles and perſecutions of Armachanus.

Armachanus perſecuted manifold ways by the Lord.

{KING Edw. 3} Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, in which he deſcribeth almoſt the whole hiſtory of his own life, Which prayer I have to ſhew in old written-hand, and hereafter (Chriſt willing) intend, as time ſerveth, to publiſh the ſame. The beginning of the prayer in Latin is this:

The prayer of Armachanus.

Tibi laus, tibi gloria, tibi gratiarum actio, Jeſu piiſſime, Jeſu pietiſſime, Jeſu dulciſſime; qui dixiſti, Ego ſum via, veritas & vita. Via ſine devio; veritas ſine nubilo; & vita ſine termino. Quod tute viam mihi oſtendiſti; Tute veritatem me docuiſti; Et tute vitam mihi promiſiſti. Via eras mihi in exilio; Veritas eras in confliio; Et vita eras mihi in præmio. With the reſt that followeth in the foreſaid prayer.

Thus what were the troubles of this good man, and how he was cited up by the Fryers to the Pope, you have partly heard. Now what were his Reaſons and Arguments wherewith he defended his Cauſe in the Popes preſence, followeth to be declared. For the tractation whereof, firſt, I muſt put the Reader in remembrance of the Controverſie mentioned before in the ſtory of Gulielmus de ſancto Amore, pag. 357. Alſo in the ſtory of the Univerſity of Paris contending againſt the Fryers, pag. 446. For ſo long did this Controverſie continue in the Church, from the year, 1240. when the Oxford-men began firſt to ſtand againſt the Fryers, to the time of this Armachanus; that is, to the year, 1360. and after this time yet more increaſed. So it pleaſed the ſecret Providence of God (for what cauſe he beſt knoweth) to ſuffer his Church to be entangled and exerciſed ſometimes with matters and controverſies of no great importance; either to keep the vanity of mens wits thus occupied from idleneſs; or elſe to prepare their minds, by theſe ſmaller matters, to the conſideration and ſearching out of other things more grave and weighty. Like as now in theſe our Queens days we ſee what Tragedies be raiſed up in England about forms and faſhions of Miniſters wearings, what troubles grow, what placing and diſplacing there is about the ſame. Even ſo at this time happened the like ſtir about the Liberties and Priviledges of the Fryers, which not a little troubled and occupied all the Churches and Divines almoſt thorow Chriſtendom. The which controverſie, to the intent it may better be underſtood (all the circumſtances thereof being explained) we will firſt begin from the original and foundation of the matter, to declare by order and courſe of years, upon what occaſion this variance firſt riſing, in continuance of time increaſed and multiplied in gathering more matter, and braſt out at length to this tumultuous contention among learned men.

Concerning therefore this preſent matter; firſt, it is to be underſtood, that in the year of our Lord, 1215. under Pope Innocent the Third, was called a General-Council at Laterane, mentioned before, pag. 288. in the days of King John. In the which Council among many other things, was conſtituted a certain Law or Canon, beginning Omnis utriuſque ſexus, &c. the tenor of which Canon in Engliſh is thus:

Be it decreed, That every faithful Chriſtian, both man and woman coming to the years of diſcretion, ſhall confeſs himſelf alone of all his ſins to the Prieſt of his own proper Pariſh, once in the year at leaſt: and that he ſhall endeavour by his own ſelf to fulfil the penance, whenſoever he receiveth the Sacrament of Euchariſt, at leaſt at the time of Eaſter. Unleſs by the aſſent of his Miniſter, upon ſome reaſonable cauſe, he abſtain for the time. Otherwiſe doing, let him both lack the communion of the Church being alive, and Chriſtian-burial when he is dead. Wherefore be it decreed, That this wholſome Conſtitution ſhall be publiſhed acculſtomably in Churches, to the end that no man of ignorance or blindneſs make to himſelf a Cloke of Exceſe. And if any ſhall confeſs himſelf to any other Prieſt than of his own Pariſh upon any juſt cauſe, let him ask and obtain firſt licence of his own Prieſt: otherwiſe, the Prieſt ſhall have no power to bind him or to looſe him, &c.

In the time of this Innocentius, and of this Lateran Council, was Dominick, the firſt Author and Founder of the preaching-Fryers; who laboured to the ſaid Pope Innocent for the confirmation of his Order, but did not obtain in his life time.

The next year after this Lateran Council died Pope Innocent. An. 1216. after whom came Honorius the Third. Who in the firſt year of his Popedom confirmed the Order of the Fryer Dominick, and gave to him and his Fryers Authority to preach, and to hear confeſſions, with divers other priviledges more. And under this Pope, which governed ten years, lived Dominick five years after the confirmation of his Order, and died, Anno 1221. About which year the Order of the Franciſcan-Fryers began alſo to breed, and to ſpread in the world, through preaching and hearing confeſſions.

Fryer-Dominick in the time of Pope Honorius the Third. The Order of Franciſcans confirmed ſhortly after the Dominicks.

After this Honorius, next followed Pope Gregory the Ninth, about the year of our Lord, 1228. who for the promoting of the foreſaid Order of Dominicks, gave out this Bull, in tenour as followeth:

The Bull of Pope Gregory the 9. in behalf of the Dominick-Fryers.

Gregorius Biſhop, Servant of Gods Servants, to his reverend Brethren, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and to his welbeloved Children, Abbots Priors, and to all Prelates of Churches, to whomſoever theſe Preſents ſhall come, greeting, and Apoſtolical bleſſing. Becauſe † Iniquity hath abounded, and the Charity of many hath waxt cold; Behold, the Lord hath raiſed up the Order of our welbeloved Children the preaching-Fryers, who not ſeeing things of their own, but pertaining to Jeſus Chriſt, to the eſtirping aſwell of Hereſies, as to the rooting out alſo of other pernicious peſtilences, have dedicated themſelves to the preaching of the ‡ Word of God. We therefore minding to advance their ſacred purpoſe, &c. And followeth, commanding you to ſee the ſaid perſons gently to be received among you; and that your Flocks committed to your Charge do receive devoutly the feed of Gods Word out of their mouth, and do confeſs their ſins unto them, all ſuch as liſt, whom we have authoriſed to the ſame, to hear Confeſſions, and to enjoyn Penance, &c. Dat. Peruſii. An. Pont. noſtri 8.

† Iniquity hath abounded at Rome.

‡ Nay,to the preaching rather of mens traditions againſt the Word of God. The Fryers authoriſed to hear confeſſions, and to enjoyn penance.

This Pope Gregory died about the year of our Lord, 1241. after whom came Celeſtinus the Fourth, and ſate but 18 days: then came Innocentius the Fourth, and ſate 11 years and ſix months. Who, although he began firſt to favour the Fryers; yet afterward being altered by certain Divines of Univerſities, Prelates of Churches, and Curates, he debarred them of their Liberties and Priviledges, and gave out againſt Precepts and Excommunications, as well againſt Fryers, as all other religious perſons. And not long after the ſame he was diſpatched and made away.

Pope Innocent the Fourth ſtill the ſame enemy to the ſect of Pope Innocent his Predeceſſor.

Innocentius being thus removed out of the way, about the year of our Lord, 1353. then ſucceeded Pope Alexander the Fourth, a great Maintainer of the Fryers, and late ſeven years. He revoked and repealed the Acts and Writings of Pope Innocent his Predeceſſor, given forth againſt the Fryers; wherewith the Divines and Students of Paris being not well contented, ſtirred up four principal Doctors: The firſt and chief Captain was Galiel.de Sancto Amore, mentioned before, pag. 357. againſt whom wrote Albertus Magnus, and Thom. Aquine. And at laſt he was condemned by this foreſaid Pope Alexander the Fourth, in the Extrav. Non ſine multa: The ſecond was Simon Tornacenſis: The third Godfridus de fontibus: The fourth Henricus de Gandavo. Theſe four with their other Complices, compiled a certain Book againſt the begging Order of Fryers, both Dominicans and Franciſcans, intituled, De periculis Eccleſiæ, containing fourteen Chapters, whereof the fourteenth, which is the laſt, with thirty nine Articles againſt the Fryers, we have already tranſlated and expreſſed, pag. 362. Beſides theſe thirty nine Articles, be other ſeven Articles moreover to the ſaid Book annexed, under the name of the Students of Paris againſt the Fryers, proving why the ſaid Fryers ought not to be admitted into their Society. Which ſeven Articles, becauſe they are but ſhort, I thought here before to place, than to omit them.

Pope Alexander the Fourth ſtandeth in the acts of Pope Innocent his Predeceſſor, given forth againſt the Fryers.

Certain Articles given out by the Students of Paris, againſt the Fryers, why they ſhould not be admitted to their Society.

Articles of the Students of Paris againſt the Fryers.

FIrſt we ſay, they are not to be admitted to the Society of our School, but upon will and licence. For our Company or Fellowſhip ought not to be coactive, but voluntary, and free.

Secondly,

Secondly, We ſay they are not be admitted, forſomuch as we oft proved their Community manifold ways to be hurtful and incommodious.

Thirdly, Seeing they be of a diverſe Profeſſion from us (for they are called Regular, and not Scholaſtical) we therefore ought not to be joyned and aſſociate together in one Scholaſtical Office; foraſmuch as the Council of Spain doth ſay, Thou ſhalt not plough with an Ox, and with an Aſs together. Which is to ſay, Men of divers profeſſions ought not together to be matched in one kind of calling, or ſtanding, for their ſtudies and conditions be diſagreeing and diſſevered from ours, and cannot frame or couple together in one Communion.

Concilium Hiſpan.

Fourthly, We affirm by the Apoſtle that they are not to be admitted, becauſe they work diſſentions and offences; for ſo ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. ult. We deſire you Brethren, that ye obſerve and take heed of ſuch as make diſſentions and offendicles about the Doctrine which you have learned by the Apoſtles, and avoid them: for ſuch ſerve not the Lord, but their own belly, Gloſſ. Some they flatter, ſome they backbite, whereby they might feed their bellies. That through their ſweet and pleaſant words, and by their Benedictions, they may deceive the hearts of the ſimple, Gloſſ. That is, with their fine ſugered and trim couched words they ſet forth their own Traditions, wherewith they beguile the hearts of the ſimple Innocents.

The Fryers make diſſentions.

Fryers devour mens houſes Fryers. ſtrainers diſtrict.

Fifthly, We ſay they are not to be admitted, for that we fear left they be in the number of them, which go about and devour mens houſes: for they thruſt in themſelves into every mans houſe, ſearching and ſacking the conſcience and ſtates of all perſons: and whom they find eaſie to be ſeduced, and women, ſuch they do circumvent, and lead them away from the counſels of their Prelates, binding them either in act or oath: from ſuch we are warned by the Apoſtle to avoid.

Sixthly, We ſay they are to be avoided, becauſe we fear they are falſe Prophets. Which being neither Biſhops, nor Pariſh-Prieſts, nor yet their Vicars, nor ſent by them, yet they preach (not ſent) againſt the mind of the Apoſtle, Rom. 10. ſaying, How ſhall they preach except they be ſent? for elſe there appeareth in them no ſuch great vertue, for the which they ought to be admitted to preach uncalled. Seeing therefore that ſuch are ſo dangerous to the Church, they ought to be avoided.

Fryers preach uncalled.

Seventhly, We ſay they are not to be admitted, becauſe they be a people ſo curious in ſearching and inquiring of other mens doings and ſpiritual demenor. And they yet be neither Apoſtles, nor yet Succeſſors of the Apoſtles, as Biſhops, nor of the number of the ſeventy two Diſciples of the Lord; nor their Succeſſors, that is, Pariſh-Prieſts, nor their Helpers, nor yet Vicars. Wherefore, ſeeing they live ſo in no Order, by the Sentence of the Apoſtle we are commanded to avoid them, 2 Theſſ. ult. where he ſaith, We admoniſh and denounce unto you (O Brethren) in the Name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; that is, as the Gloſs ſaith, (We Command you by the Authority of Chriſt) that you withdraw your ſelves from every Brother that walketh inordinately, and not after the tradition which you have received of us, &c. Look upon the common gloſs of this place, and you ſhall find, that ſuch are to be avoided till time they amend from ſo doing, &c.

Fryers have no order of any calling in the Church.

Beſides theſe Articles above rehearſed, certain Propoſitions or Concluſions were alſo propounded in the Schools of Paris the ſame time, ſolemnly to be diſputed and defended againſt the Fryers: which, in a brief ſum of words to collect them, were theſe:

Certain concluſions in the Univerſity of Paris to be diſputed of againſt the Fryers.

Firſt, That the begging-Fryers were not in the ſtate of Salvation.

Secondly, That they were bound to labour with their hands that could, and not to beg.

Thirdly, That they ought not to exerciſe the Office of Preaching, or to hear the Confeſſions of them that will come unto them, although being licenſed thereunto by the Biſhop of Rome, or by the Diocеſan: forſomuch as the ſame is prejudicial to the Miniſters and Prieſts of the Pariſhes.

All theſe aforeſaid Articles and Concluſions, with the Book ſet forth by theſe Pariſ-men, this Pope Alexander the Fourth condemned to be aboliſhed and burned, writing his Precepts to the French King, and alſo the Univerſity of Paris, in the favour of the Fryers; willing and commanding the ſaid Fryers to be reſtored to all their Privileges and Liberties in as ample manner, as in Pope Gregories time before.

Pope Alexander the Fourth a great favourer of the Fryers.

Another Privilege given to the Fryers by Pope Clement the fourth. Ex Clement. Religioſam vitam.

Not long after Pope Alexander the Fourth, followed Clement the Fourth, Anno 1265. and ſate three years: who alſo gave the priviledge to the Fryers, beginning, Quidam temere, &c. In which priviledge he condemneth them that ſay, that no man without licence of his Curate or Miniſter, ought to confeſs him to the Fryers, or that a Subject ought to aſk licence of their Miniſters ſo to do, which was againſt the Canon Omnis utriuſque ſexus, &c. made by Pope Innocent the Third, before recited.

Pope Martin the fourth holdeth with Curates againſt the Fryers.

After this Clement again came Pope Martin the Fourth, Anno 1281. who renewed again the Canon, Omnis utriuſque ſexus, in the behalf of the Curates againſt the Fryers.

Pope Boniface the Eighth holdeth with the Fryers againſt the Curates. Ex Clement. Conſtitu. Super Cathedram.

This Pope Boniface the Eighth began to ſit, Anno 1294. and ſate eight years and nine months. Who taking ſide with the Fryers gave to them another Priviledge, beginning, Supra Cathedram, &c. In the which priviledge he licenſed the Fryers, that without licence of Vicars of Churches they ſhall firſt preſent themſelves to the Prelates to be admitted; by whom if they be refuſed the ſecond time, then they, upon ſpecial authority of this Pope, ſhall be priviledged, without either Biſhop or Curate, to preach, to bury, and to hear confeſſions, whoſoever will come to them revoking all that was decreed by his Predeceſſors before to the contrary.

Vide ult. Tom. de Concil. Conſtitu. Bonifac. octav. Sacro. Sanct. Concil. Lateran. ſub Leone 10. Sacro. Concil. Trident. ſeſſ. ſupra Calabrum.

By this Pope Boniface, a certain Dominick-Fryer was made Cardinal, named Nicolaus de Tervoiſe, and after the death of Boniface he was alſo made Pope, Anno 1303. ſurnamed Pope Benedictus 11. who, ſeeing the conſtitution of Boniface his Predeceſſor to gender diſſention between the Prieſts and Fryers, made another conſtitution, beginning, Inter cunctas, &c. revoking the conſtitution of Boniface his Predeceſſor. Upon which conſtitution of Pope Benedict, Joannes Monachus making a gloſs, revoked alſo his other made upon the conſtitution of Pope Boniface before.

The three Aſſertions of Joan. de Poliaco ſummed by the Fryers.

His three Aſſertions.

Ex Clement. Super cauſis. Ne pannus vnder nul autore allegid ſeu Interpretandis ſubi penæ mention.

Again, after this Benedictus the Eleventh, followed Pope Clement the Fifth, Anno 1305. and ſate nine years. Who, in his General-Council holden at Vienna, revoked the conſtitution of Benedictus his Predeceſſor, and renewed again the former Decree of Boniface by a new conſtitution of his, beginning Dudum a Bonifacio 8. &c. Which conſtitution moreover was confirmed afterward by Pope John the 22th. Anno 1316. Which Pope alſo cauſed Joannes de Poliaco to recant.

Pope Clement the Fifth holdeth with the Fryers, and repealeth the Conſtitution of Bonifacius. Ex Clement. cap. Dudum.

Upon this variable diverſity of the Popes (one diſſenting and repugning from another) roſe among the Divines and School-men in Univerſities great matter of contention, as well in the Univerſity of Paris, as the Univerſity of Oxford about the begging-Fryers, ſome holding one way, ſome another way. But eſpecially five principal Opinions be noted of learned men, who, then diſputing againſt the Fryers, were condemned for Hereticks, and their Aſſertions reproved.

The firſt was the Opinion of them which defended, that the Fryers might not by the Licence of the Biſhop of Rome and of the Prelates preach in Pariſhes, and hear confeſſions. And of this opinion was Guliel. de ſancto Amore, with his Fellows, who, as it is ſaid, were condemned.

Five diverſe opinions of learned men in this age holding againſt the Fryers.

The firſt Opinion.

The ſecond Opinion was this, that Fryers, although not by their own authority, yet by the priviledge of the Pope, and of the Biſhop, might preach and hear confeſſions in Pariſhes, but yet not without licence of the Pariſh-Prieſts. Of this opinion was Bernardus, gloſſing upon the Canon, Omnis utriuſque ſexus, afore mentioned.

The ſecond Opinion.

Bernardus ſuper cap. Omnis utriuſque.

The third Opinion was, that Fryers might preach and hear confeſſions without licence of the Pariſh-Prieſts; but yet the ſaid Pariſhioners notwithſtanding were bound, by the Canon Omnis utriuſque ſexus to repeat the ſame ſins again, if they had no other, to their own proper Curate: and of this opinion were many, as Gloſſ. de

The third Opinion.

[1 KING] [Edw. 3]

Gloſſ. de ſolitus, Henr. de Gandavo, Joannes Monachus cardi; Joannes de Poliaco, which Joannes de Poliaco Pope John the 22th cauſed openly in Paris to recant and retract.

Ex libro fratris Eglidii.

This Joannes de Poliaco Doctor of Divinity in Paris, being complained of by the Fryers for certain Articles or Aſſertions, was ſent for to the Pope: where time and place being to him aſſigned, he, in the audience of the Pope and of frierly Cardinals and other Doctors, was ſtraitly examined of his Articles. To make the ſtory ſhort, he, at length ſubmitting himſelf to the authority of the terrible See of Rome, was cauſed to recant his Aſſertions openly at Paris: his Aſſertions which he did hold were theſe.

The three Aſſertions of Joannes de Poliaco, which he was cauſed by the Pope to recant at Paris.

Vide de Proceſſu cauſed to recant by Pope John 22.

Whereof the firſt was, they which were confeſſed to Fryers, although having a general Licence to hear Confeſſions, were bound to confeſs again their ſins to their own Pariſh-Prieſt, by the Conſtitution Omnis utriuſque ſexus, &c.

The ſecond was, that the ſaid Conſtitution Omnis utriuſque ſexus ſtanding in his force, the Pope could not make, but Paſtiſhioners were bound once a year to confeſs their ſins to their Prieſt. For the doing otherwiſe importeth a contradiction in it ſelf.

The third was, that the Pope could not give general Licence to hear Confeſſions ſo, but that the Pariſhioner ſo confeſſed was bound to reiterate the ſame confeſſion made, unto his own Curate. Which he proved by theſe places of the Canon Law, 25. queſt. 1. Quæ ad perpetuam. Thoſe things which be generally ordained for publick utility, ought not to be altered by any change, &c. Item, the Decrees of the ſacred Canons, none ought to keep more than the Biſhop Apoſtolical, &c. Ibidem. Item, to alter or to ordain any thing againſt the Decrees of the Fathers, is not in the authority or power, no not of the Apoſtolical See, Ibidem.

The fourth Opinion.

The fourth Opinion was, that the Fryers by the Licence of the Pope and of the Biſhops might lawfully hear Confeſſions, and the people might be of them confeſſed and abſolved. But yet notwithſtanding, it was reaſon, convenient, honeſt, and profitable, that once in the year they ſhould be confeſſed to their Curates (although being confeſſed before to the Fryers) becauſe of the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments, eſpecially at Eaſter. Of which opinion was Guliemus de monte Landuno. Henricus de Gaudano alſo held it not only to be convenient, but alſo that they were bound ſo to do.

Guliel. de monte Landuno, Henricus de Gandavo.

The fifth Opinion.

The fifth Opinion was, that albeit the Fryers might at all times, and at Eaſter alſo, hear Confeſſions as the Curates did; yet it was better and more ſafe, at the time of Eaſter, to confeſs to the Curates, than to the Fryers. And of this opinion was this our Armachanus, of whom we preſently now intreat.

And thus have ye, as in a brief ſum, opened unto you, what was the matter of contention between the Fryers and the Church-men. What Popes made with the Fryers, and what Popes made againſt them. Moreover, what learned men diſputed againſt them in Paris, and other places, and what were their Opinions.

The matter of contention about the Fryers ſtood in four Points: Firſt, preaching without Licence of Curates. Secondly, in hearing Confeſſion. Thirdly, in burying. Fourthly, in begging and taking of the people.

Ex libris ejus dem, Declaratione cauſarum.

These conſiderations and circumſtances hitherto premiſed, for the more opening of this preſent cauſe of Armachanus ſuſtained againſt the idle beggerly Sects of Fryers, in whom the Reader may well perceive Antichriſt plainly reigning and fighting againſt the Church: it now remaineth, that as I have before declared the travels and troubles of divers godly learned men in the Church ſtriving againſt the ſaid Fryers, continually from the time of Gulielmus de Amore, hitherto; ſo now foraſmuch as this our Armachanus laboured, and in the ſame Cauſe ſuſtained the like Conflict with the ſame Antichriſt, we likewiſe collect and open his Reaſons and Arguments uttered in the Conſiſtory, and in the Audience of the Pope himſelf, wherewith he maintaineth the true Doctrine and Cauſe of the Church againſt the peſtiferous canker creeping in by theſe Fryers after ſubtil ways of hypocriſie, to corrupt the ſincere ſimplicity of Chriſts holy Faith and perfect Teſtament. The which Reaſons and Arguments of his, with the whole proceſs of his doings, I thought good and expedient for the utility of the Church more amply and largely to diſcourſe and profecute, for that I note in the Sects, Inſtitutions, and Doctrine of theſe Fryers, ſubtil poyſon to lurk, more pernicious and hurtful to the Religion of Chriſt and Souls of Chriſtians, than all men peradventure do conſider.

Thus Armachanus, joyning with the Clergy of England, diſputed and contended with the Fryers here of England, Anno 1358. about a double matter. Whereof the one was concerning confeſſion and other excheats which the Fryers incroached in Pariſh-Churches againſt the Curates, and publick Paſtors of Churches. The other was concerning wilful beggery and poverty, which the Fryers then took upon them, not upon any neceſſity, being otherwiſe ſtrong enough to work for their living, but only upon a wilful and affected profeſſion. For the which cauſe the Fryers appealed him up to the Court of Rome. The occaſion whereof thus did riſe.

It befel that Armachanus, upon certain buſineſs coming up to London, found there certain Doctors diſputing and contending about the begging of Chriſt our Saviour. Whereupon he, being greatly urged and requeſted oft times thereunto, at requeſt made ſeven or eight Sermons unto the people at London, wherein he uttered nine concluſions: whereof the firſt and principal concluſion was, touching the matter of the Fryers Privileges in hearing confeſſions. His concluſion was this:

Firſt, That if a doubt or queſtion be moved for hearing confeſſions, which of two places is rather to be choſen; The Pariſh-Church is to be preferred before the Church of the Fryers.

Secondly, being demanded, Whether is to be taken (to hear the confeſſion of the Pariſhioners, the Parſon or Curate, or the Fryer) it is to be ſaid, rather the Parſon or the Curate.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, That our Lord Jesus Christ in his humane conversation was always poor, but that he loved not poverty, or did covet to be poor.

Fourthly, That our Lord Jesus Christ did never beg, wilfully professing to be poor.

Fifthly, That our Lord Jesus Christ did never teach wilfully to beg, or to profess wilful beggery.

The sixth conclusion was, That Christ our Lord held the contrary, that men ought not wilfully or purposely, without meer necessity, to beg.

Seventhly, That it is neither wisdom nor holiness, for any man to take upon him wilful beggery perpetually to be observed.

The eighth, That it is not agreeing to the rule of the Observants, or Fryers minorites, to observe wilful poverty.

The last conclusion was, touching the Bull of Pope Alexander the Fourth, which condemned the Libel of the Masters of Paris: that the same Bull touched none of these seven last Conclusions.

Armachanus cited up to the Pope by the Fryers.

Upon these nine Conclusions premised, Armachanus being appealed, cited, and brought up to the presence of the Pope, began to prove the same his foresaid conclusions or assertions under protestation made, that his intention was not to affirm any thing contrary to the Christian Faith, or to the Catholick Doctrine, or that should be prejudicial or destructive to the Orders of the begging-Fryers, such as were approved by holy Church, or confirmed by the high Bishops; but only his intention was, to have the said Orders reduced to the purity of their first Institution. Concerning which matter, he desired his Reasons to be heard; which if they should be found weaker than the Reasons of the Fryers, the punishment should be his. If otherwise, that then the Fryers might justly be rewarded for their flatulentous Obtractations and publick Contumelies, and injurious dealings both privately and publickly wrought and fought against him: and so taking for his theme, Nolite judicare secundum faciem, sed justum judicium judicate, &c. That is, Judge not after the outward face, but judge true Judgment, &c. John the seventh; he entreth to the probation of his conclusion; first, beginning with the former conclusion; that the Parish-Church was a place more fit and convenient for the confessions or burials of the Parishioners to be used, than any other exempt Church or place of the Fryers. Which he proved by three Causes; First, for the more fureness or certainty to the conficence of the Parishioners confessed. Secondly, for the more utility and profit of him. Thirdly, for the less incommodity insuing by confessions taken in Parish-Churches, than in Fryers Churches.

The protestation of Armachanus.

His Theme.

John 7.

The first conclusion proponed.

Probation.

Certainty. Utility. Commodity

The first part of the first conclusion confirmed.

Deut. 12.

As touching the first, for the more assuredness and certainty, thus he argued upon the place of Deut. 12. Unto that place which the Lord your God shall assign of all your Tribes, to place his Name and dwell therein; thither shall you resort, to offer up your Oblations, Tythes, &c. And in the same place God saith, See thou offer not thy Sacrifice in every place that liketh thee, but in that place alone which the Lord hath elect in one of the Tribes; and thou shalt do in all things as I command thee. Also upon the words of Levit. 4. & 5. which be these, Whosoever sinneth of ignorance shall offer to the Priest, and he shall pray for him, and he shall be forgiven, &c. Upon these places thus he argued; that forasmuch as the Sacraments of the Church are to be frequented and used in no other place, but only in that, which by God himself peculiarly is assigned and commanded for the same; and seeing that elect place in the Law representeth the Parish-Churches; neither can it be proved that the Fryers Church is the place prescribed of God, but only permitted by Bishops of Rome; he concluded therefore, that Parish-Churches for confessions and burials were more fure and certain to the conficence of Parishioners, than the exempt places of the Fryers.

Levit. 4. 5.

The first part of the first conclusion confirmed by another reason.

By another reason also he confirmed the same, for that the Parish-Church standeth free from the Popes Interdict; so do not the Churches of the Fryers as which stand not so clear, but that they are under suspition and doubt of the Popes Interdict; by the Decretal, De sepulturis in sexto cap. Animarum periculis. In which Decretal, all such conventual Churches and Church-yards of Fryers be interdicted, which do induce any person or persons, either by Oath or Promise made, to choose their burying places in their Churches, as commonly the Fryers are reported to do: for else what Parishioner would forsake his own Church and Parish where his Ancestors do lie, to be buried among the Fryers, if the Fryers did not induce them so to do?

KING's Edw. 3.

Moreover, for the second part, concerning the utility of the place, that he confirmed doublewise; first, for that confessiõn, made within the Parish-Church, hath a double merit of Obedience, both for obeying the Commandment of God in opening his confessiõn (thus he speaketh according to the blindness of that time, for that auricular confession hath any Commandment of God cannot be proved) and also in obeying the Commandment of God in observing the place by him appointed, the which second merit of Obedience lacketh in the Fryers part. Secondly, he proved it to be greater utility for a Parishioner to confess him in his Parish-Church, than with the Fryers: because commonly the number of Christian-people praying is ten times more in Parish-Churches. Whereby it is to be thought, that each singular person may better be helped through more prayers, than in the Oratories of Fryers, &c.

The second part of the first conclusion confirmed.

Another confirmation of the second part of the first Article.

Further, as touching the third part of the first conclusion or Article he proved, that it had fewer incommodities every man to resort to his Parish-Church than to the Fryers; for that both great utility, and more certainty (as hath been proved) did insue thereof: which two being taken away, (as must needs, in resorting to the Fryers Church) then two special commodities should be hindred, and so great incommodities thereof should follow. And thus much for the place of the Fryers.

The third part of the first conclusion proved.

Now to the second conclusion or Article, touching the person of the Fryer, and of the ordinary Curate. If the question be, which of these two is to be preferred in the Office of Ecclesiastical Administration; the opinion of Armachanus was, that the ordinary Curate was better than the extraordinary Fryer, and that for the three foresaid respects, to wit, for certainty or assurance, for utility, and for incommodity to be avoided.

The second Conclusion or Article.

Three respects or causes to be proved.

First, that it is more safe and sure for the Parishioners, to resort to their Ordinary or Parish-Priest: he argued by three Reasons, First, because the person of the lawful Ordinary or Priest, is expressly of God commanded, where the person of the Fryer is not, and therefore is forbid. Secondly, because the Parishioner may more trust to his ordinary Curate; as who is more bound and obliged to provide, and to be careful for him, than any other extraordinary person. Thirdly, because in the person of the ordinary Curate, commonly there is no doubt of any Interdict to bind him; whereas contrary in the Fryers behalf there is good matter to doubt, whether he stand bound under the Popes Censure of Excommunication or not, and that for divers Causes, as by the cap. Religiosi, in Clementinis de decimis. Where it is decreed, That all such religious men which having no Benefices or Cure of Souls, presume to impropriate unto them Glebe-land, or other Tythes due unto Churches, and not appertaining to them (by any manner of colour or fraudulent circumvention) do incur the Sentence of Excommunication, ipso facto. Also by another Cap. Religiosi, De privilegiis, in Clement. Where it is said, That all such religious men are excommunicated De facto, whosoever do absolve any, against whom the Sentence of Excommunication hath been denounced by the Statute Provincial, or Synodal; as it is commonly said, that the Fryers hearing mens confessions are accustomed to do, in loosing them whom the Censure of Prelates or their Officials have bound. Whereof the said Armachanus bringeth forth example of his own Diocese: For I (said he) in mine own Diocese of Armach have as good as two thousand under me, who by the Censure of Excommunication every year denounced against wilful Murtherers, common Thieves, burners of mens Houses, and such like Malefactors, stand accursed; of all which number notwithstanding, scarcely fourteen there be which come to me, or to any about me for their Absolution. And yet all they receive the Sacraments as others do, and all because they be absolved, or because they fain themselves to be absolved by none other than by Fryers; who in so doing are proved to be under the danger of Excommunication both the Fryer, and also the Parishioners, if they knowing thereof do consent to their error.

Ca. Religiosi de privilegiis. Clement. in decimis.

In Clementinis de privilegiis. Religiosi.

The Fryers proved to be excommunicated by the Popes Law.

Also

KING's Edw. 3.

Also out of the said Clementines by three other places in one Chapter, he proved the Friers to be Excommunicate, to wit, in the Chapter Cupientes, De panis in Clement. In the which Chapter, First, all such Religious men are Excommunicate, which in their Sermons presume to withdraw their hearers from their Tythes-paying, due unto Churches. Secondly, In the said Chapter all such Friers are suspended from Preaching, and so are Excommunicate, which within a certain time did not make a Concion to such as come to their Confessions, they paying their Tythes truly and duly to the Church. Thirdly, In the foresaid Chapter also, all such Religious persons be bound in Excommunication, which induce men by any manner of means, either by vow, oath, or promise, to chuse their burials within their Churches, or not to change the same, if they have made any such promise before. In all which three points he proved the Friers to be culpable and Excommunicate.

Ca. Cupientes in Clement. The Friers proved to be excommunicated by the Popes Law.

The third part of the second conclusion argued.

Another proof that the Parish-Church is more safe than the Fryers Church, and that in confessions.

Moreover, that it is the more sure way for the Parishioners to resort to their appointed Curates, than to the Friers, he argueth thus: For that the Parish-Priest or Curate, being better acquainted with his own Parishioner than is a stranger, can better judg of the nature and disposition of his disease, and minister to him due Physick of penance for the same, and also will be more careful in curing him.

The second part of the second conclusion proved.

Thus the first part of the second conclusion or article being proved and argued, Armachanus proceedeth further to prove the second part; that it is better for the Parishioners to leave the Friers, and to resort to their own Pastors. Which he proved by eight or nine Reasons.

First, For that the ordinary Pastor is properly appointed of God unto that Ministry; whereas the Frier is but only permitted of man thereunto.

Secondly, For that in resorting to the Ordinary of the Parish is a double reward of merit, whereas in coming to the Friers there is but one.

Thirdly, Because the Ordinary is more bound to his own flock, and is to be thought to be more tender and careful over them than a stranger.

Fourthly, Because in resorting to the person of his own Ordinary there is more affurance and certainty (as is above declared) than to another.

Example of the Friers theefs in Oxford.

Innocentius. Si animarum.

Fifthly, Because (as Innocentius, Cap. Si Animarum, saith) the coming to the Curate or Pastor Ordinary is more easie and light, both in the night, and in necessity.

Sixthly, Forsomuch as the Parishioner must needs come to his Curate at some time, and especially being in necessity, it is expedient and profitable that his former life before were known to him, rather than to the other.

Seventhly, For that (as the said Innocentius affirmeth) it striketh more shame of his sin to the Parishioner to be confessed to his Curate whom he seeth every day, than to a Frier unknown.

Eighthly, Because it is more profitable, especially for them that live in Matrimony, that he which heareth the confession of the one, should hear also the confession of the other. So that hearing the confession of them both, as a spiritual Physician taking two Cures in one body, may better know what spiritual counsel is to be ministred to the one after he hath cured the other, &c.

These things thus proved before, then Armachanus consequently proceedeth to the third part; arguing how that greater detriments and inconveniences do ensue by Confessions, Burials, and other Ecclesiastical functions executed by the Friers, than by Pastors and Secular Curates, serving in Parishes. About the which matter the said Armachanus learnedly and worthily inferreth a long discourse, proving and inferring how pernicious these Orders of Friers are to the whole state of the Church, and what mischief cometh by the priviledges of certain Popes, which have priviledged them to intermeddle in the office and function of Ecclesiastical Ministers, to preach and to take alms and tythes of the people, and Impropriations from the Church. All which his reasons and arguments to prosecute in order as he hath left them in writing, would make a matter of a large Book. Notwithstanding because it shall not be unfruitful both for the time present, and the posterity, to know the manifold detriments and discommodities received by these Friers, and to know what great benefit God hath done for us in unburdening the Church of this monstrous generation; and especially because the Book of Armachanus is rare otherwise to be found, intituled, Defensorium Curatorum; I have briefly therefore contracted out of the same certain of his reasons, such as seemed most appertaining and most worthy of noting.

Defensorium Curatorum. Armachanus.

The Friers a great cause of decay of learning.

And first, alledging the authority of Innocent the 4th; he imporreth four inconveniences rising by the Friers, which be these; Contempt of the people against their Ordinaries; decreasing of Devotion; taking away of shame from the people by confessing to the Friers; detaining of Oblations, such as the people are wont to give at their Confessions and Burials, and which by right belong to the Parish Churches.

Cap. Dudum

Item, By the said priviledges of the Popes, granted to the Friers, many other great enormities do rise. As first, because thereby the true shepherds do not know the faces of their flock.

The harms that come to the world by the Friers, declar'd.

Item, By the occasion of these priviledges given to the Friers, great contention, and sometimes blows rise between the Friers and secular Curates, about Titles, Impropriations, and other avails.

Item, By the occasion of the foresaid priviledges, divers young men as well in Universities as in their Fathers houses, are allured craftily by the Friers their Confessors to enter their Orders; from whence afterward they cannot get out though they would, to the great grief of their Parents, and no less repentance to the young men themselves. The example whereof Armachanus in the said his Treatise inferreth of a certain substantial Englishman being with him at his Inn in Rome; who having a Son at the University of Oxford, which was enticed by the Friers to enter into their Order, could by no means after release him out. But when his Father and his Mother would come unto him, they could not be suffered to speak with him, but under the Friers cuttody. Whereas the Scripture commandeth plainly, that whoso stealeth any man and selleth him (being thereof convicted) shall be put to death, Exod. 21. And for the same cause the Father was compelled to come up to Rome to seek remedy for his Son. And thus, saith Armachanus, it may appear what damage and detriments come by these Friers unto the common people.

Friers who degree of Universities

And no less inconvenience and danger also by the said Friers riseth to the Clergy; forsomuch as Lay-men, seeing their Children thus to be stollen from them in the Universities by the Friers, do refuse therefore to send them to their studies; rather willing to keep them at home to their occupation, or to follow the Plow, than so to be circumvented and defeated of their Sons at the Universities, as by daily experience (saith he) doth manifestly appeare. For whereas in my time (saith Armachanus) there were in the Universitie of Oxford thirty thousand Students; now are there not to be found six thousand. The occasion of which so great decay is to be ascribed to no other cause but to this circumvention only of the Friers above mentioned.

30000 Students in the time of Oxford, In Armachanus.

Over and besides this, another inconvenience as great or greater the said Armachanus inferred to proceed by the Friers through the decay of Doctrine, and knowledg in all manner of Faculties, and Liberal Sciences, which thus he declared: For that these begging Friers through their priviledges obtained of the Popes to preach, to hear Confessions, and to Bury; and through their Charters of Impropriations, did grow thereby to such great riches and possessions by their begging, craving, catching, and intermedling with Church-matters, that no Book could stir of any Science, either of Divinity, Law, or Physick, but they were both able and ready to buy it up. So that every Covent having a great Library full stuffed and furnished with Sorts of Books, and being so many Covents within the Realm, and in every Covent so many Friers increasing daily more and more; by reason thereof it came to pass that very few Books or none at all remain for other Students. Which by his own experience he thus testifieth, saying, That he himself sent forth to the Universitie four of his own Priests or Chaplains, who sending him word again, that they could neither find the Bible, nor any other good profitable Book of Divinity meet for their study, therefore were minded to return home to their Country; and one of them, he was sure, was returned by this time again.

Books not to be gotten for the Friers.

Example what lack of Books cometh by the Friers.

R r Further-

The Friers guilty in three ſeaſons: 1. Diſobedience. 2. Avarice. 3. Pride. Armachanus chargeth the Friers with diſobedience.

Furthermore, as he hath proved hitherto the Friers be hurtful both to the Laity, and to the Clergy; ſo proceeding farther, he proveth them to be hurtful alſo to themſelves: And that in three points, as incurring the vice of diſobedience againſt God, and againſt their own rule; the vice of avarice, and the vice of pride. The probation of all which points he proſecuted in a long diſcourſe.

Firſt (ſaith he) they are diſobedient to the Law of God, Thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbours houſe, ox, nor aſs, nor any thing that is his. In that they procure the Popes Letters to preach in Churches, and to take Burials from Churches, with licence annexed withal to receive the avails which riſe of the ſame, which properly belongeth to the right of Pariſh-Priеſts.

Friers diſobedient to the rule of Scripture.

Item, They are diſobedient to this rule of the Goſpel: So do to other, as thou wouldeſt have done to thee.

Item, They be diſobedient againſt their own rule, which being founded upon ſtrait poverty and beggery, this licenſe obtained for them to require neceſſaries of the people for their labours, is repugning againſt the ſame foundation.

Item, They be diſobedient to the rule of the Scripture, which ſaith, Let no man take honour unto him, except he be called, as Aaron. Alſo St. Paul ſaith, How ſhall they preach, unleſs they be ſent? And how obſerve they this rule of obedience, who profeſſing to keep the perfection of the Goſpel, yet contrary to the Goſpel procure to themſelves priviledges to run before they be ſent?

Item, To their own rule they are diſobedient; for where their Chapter ſaith, that if any will take upon them this Order, and will come to our Brethren; let our Brethren firſt ſend them to the Provincials to be examined of the Catholick Faith and Sacraments of the Church, &c. Contrary whereunto the Friers have procured a priviledg, that not only the Provincials, but other inferiors alſo may take unto them indifferently, whom they can catch; ſo far without all examination, that almoſt at this day there is no notable houſe of Friers, wherein is not either a whole, or half a Covent of Lads and Boys under ten years old, being circumvented, which neither can skill of the Creed nor Sacraments.

Friers diſobedient to their own profeſſion.

Again, the rule of Francis ſaith, that his Brethren Obſervants muſt obſerve not to preach in the Dioceſs of any Biſhop, without the conſent of the Biſhop. And moreover, the ſaid Francis in his Teſtament ſaith, That if he had as much wiſdom as Solomon, and found poor Secular Prieſts in the Pariſhes where they dwell, yet he would not preſume to preach without their will, and alſo would fear, love and honour them, and all other as his Maſters, and ſo they be. Hæc ille. Againſt which rule how the Friers do diſobey, how little they reverence Biſhops or Secular Prieſts, what priviledges, exemptions, and immunities they procure againſt them, the world may ſee and judg.

Item, When none may be admitted to preach, or to hear Confeſſions, unleſs they be entred into Orders; and ſeeing by the common Law of the Church, none muſt be admitted into holy Orders, except he have ſufficient title of living and clothing: the Friers therefore having no ſuch title (being wilful beggers) do diſobey in both reſpects, that is, both in entring into ſuch Orders without convenient title, and in exerciling the office of Preaching without ſuch lawful Orders.

Moreover, the foreſaid Francis to his Teſtament commandeth thus: I command (ſaith he) firmly by vertue of obedience, to all and ſingular my Brethren whereſoever they be, that none of them preſume to obtain in the Court of Rome any Letter or writing, either by himſelf, or by any other means, neither for the Church, nor for any other place, nor under any colour of preaching, nor yet for the perſecuting of their own bodies, &c. Againſt which Teſtament of Francis, the Franciſcans, in procuring their priviledges from the Biſhop of Rome, have incurred manifeſt diſobedience as all the world may ſee. Neither will this objection ſerve them, becauſe the Pope hath diſpenſed with Francis rule. For if the Teſtament of Francis, as he ſaith, came from God (and ſo ſhould God have three Teſtaments) how then can the Pope repeal his precept, or diſpenſe with his rule, when by the rule of the Law, Par in parem non habet imperium?

Secondly, Concerning the vice of avarice, manifeſtly it may be proved upon them (ſaith Armachanus) for elſe ſeeing ſo many charges belong to the office of a Pariſh Prieſt, as to miniſter the Sacrament at Eaſter, to viſit the ſick with extream unction, to baptize Children, to wed, with ſuch other, wherein ſtandeth as great devotion; how then happeneth it that theſe Friers, making no labour for theſe, only procure to themſelves priviledges to preach in Churches, to hear Confeſſions, and to receive licenſe to bury from Pariſh-Churches, but becauſe there is lucre and gain in theſe to be looked for, in the other is none?

{KING} {Luk. 9.} Armachanus chargeth the Friers with avarice.

Another proof.

Which alſo may appear by this, for otherwiſe if it were for meer devotion only, that they procure licenſe to bury from Pariſh-Churches, and to preach; why then have they procured with all licenſe to take offerings, oblations and legacies for their Funerals? And for their preaching, why have they annexed alſo licenſe to require and take of the people neceſſaries for their labour, but only avarice is the cauſe thereof?

Another proof.

Likewiſe for hearing of Confeſſions, when all good men have enough to know their own faults, and nothing left to hear the faults of other; it is probably to be ſuppoſed by this their priviledg of hearing all mens confeſſions, that they would never have been ſo deſirous of procuring that priviledg, were it not that theſe Friers did feel ſome ſweetneſs and gain to hang upon the ſame.

Another proof.

Item, where the rule of Frier Francis forbiddeth them to company with any woman, to enter into Monaſteries, to be God-fathers and Goſſips to men and women; how cometh it that they contrary to their rule enter into the ſecret Chambers of Queens, and other women, and are made to know the moſt ſecret counſels of their doings, but that avarice and commodity have ſo blinded their eyes, and lured their hearts.

Another proof. Armachanus chargeth the Friers with pride.

Thirdly, That the Friers fall into the vice of pride and ambition, the ſaid Armachanus proved thus:

To ſeek or to procure any high place in the Church, is a point of pride and ambition. Chryſoſt. in opere perfecto: Nunquam ſine ambitione deſideratur primatus in Eccleſia.

The Friers ſeek and procure a high place in the Church.

Ergo, The Friers are proud and ambitious.

The Minor he proveth, To have the ſtate of preaching and hearing confeſſions is in the Church a ſtate of honour.

The Friers ſeek and have procured the ſtate of preaching and hearing Confeſſions.

Ergo, The Friers ſeek and procure an high place in the Church, &c.

The third Concluſion of Article.

His third Concluſion was, that the Lord Chriſt in his humane converſation was always poor, not for that he loved or deſired poverty for it ſelf, &c. Wherein this is to be noted, that Armachanus differed not from the Friers in this, that Chriſt was poor, and that he loved poverty; but herein ſtood the difference, in manner of loving, that is, whether he loved poverty for it ſelf, or not. Wherein the foreſaid Armachanus uſed four probations.

Ex vita B. Clementis.

Firſt, forſomuch as to be poor is nothing elſe but to be miſerable, and ſeeing no man coveteth to be in miſery for it ſelf; therefore he concluded that Chriſt deſired not poverty for it ſelf.

Aeſt. Eccle. Lib. 1.

His ſecond reaſon was derived out of Ariſtotle: Nothing (ſaith he) is to be loved for it ſelf, but that which (all commodities being ſecluded which follow thereupon) is voluntarily fought and deſired. But take from poverty all reſpect of commodities following the ſame, it would be fought neither of God nor man. Ergo, he concluded, Chriſt loved no poverty for it ſelf.

Clements Example contrary to the Friers.

Thirdly again, No effect of ſin, ſaid he, is to be loved for it ſelf. But poverty is the effect of ſin. Ergo, poverty was not loved of Chriſt for it ſelf.

12 Goſſ. Cap. 1.

Fourthly, No privation of the thing that is good, is to be loved for it ſelf. Poverty is the privation of the thing that is good, that is, of riches (for God himſelf is principally rich): Ergo, Poverty for it ſelf was not loved of Chriſt.

The fourth Concluſion of Armachanus againſt the Friers.

The fourth Concluſion was, that Chriſt our Lord and Saviour did never beg wilfully. Which he proveth by ſundry reaſons.

Firſt, For that Chriſt in ſo doing ſhould break the Law, which ſaith, Thou ſhalt not covet thy Neighbours houſe, his wife, his ſervant, his maid, his ox, his aſs, or any {KING} {Luk. 9.} any thing that is his, Exod. 20. Into the danger of which Commandment he that beggeth voluntarily muſt needs incur.

2. Item, If Chriſt had begged voluntarily, he ſhould have committed ſin againſt another Commandment, which ſaith, There ſhall be no beggar, nor needy perſon among you, &c. Deut. 6.

3. Item, Chriſt in ſo doing ſhould have tranſgreſſed the Emperors Law, under which he would himſelf be ſubject (as appeareth by giving, and bidding tribute to be given to Ceſar) foraſmuch as the ſame Emperors Law ſaith, There ſhall no valiant beggar be ſuffered in the City.

4. Item, If Chriſt had been a wilful beggar, he had broke the Law of loving his neighbour; whom he had vexed, having no need. For whoſo without need aſketh or craveth of his neighbour, doth but vex him, in ſuch ſort as he would not be vexed himſelf. Which Chriſt would never do.

5. Item, If Chriſt had begged wilfully, he had moved ſlander thereby to his own Goſpel, which he with Miracles did confirm; for then they that ſaw his Miracle in feeding 5000 in the wilderneſs, would have thought much with themſelves how that miracle had been wrought, if he which fed other, either could not, or would not feed himſelf.

6. Item, If Chriſt had begged wilfully, then he had done that which himſelf condemneth by Paul, for ſo we read, 1 Tim. 6. that Paul condemneth them, which eſteem piety to be gain and lucre. Which all they do, that under the colour of piety, hunt or ſeek for gain, when otherwiſe they need not.

7. Item, If Chriſt had begged wilfully, he had offended in declaring an untruth in ſo doing; for he that knoweth in his mind that he needeth not indeed that thing which in word he aſketh of other, declareth in himſelf an untruth, as who in word pretendeth to be otherwiſe than he is in very deed; which Chriſt without doubt never did, nor would ever do.

8. Item, If Chriſt had begged wilfully, that is, having no true need thereunto, than had he appeared either to be an hypocrite, ſeeming to be that he was not, and to lack when he did not; or elſe to be a true beggar in very deed, not able to ſuffice his neceſſity. For he is a true beggar indeed, which being conſtrained by meer neceſſity is forced to aſk of other, that which he is not able to give to himſelf. But neither of theſe two agreeth to Chriſt.

Ex vita B. Clementis.

9. Item, If Chriſt had begged wilfully, then why did Peter rebuke the Mother of St. Clement his Diſciple, finding her to ſtand among the beggers, whom he thought to be ſtrong enough to labour with her hands for her living, if the in ſo doing had followed the example of Chriſt?

Clements Example contrary to the Friers.

10. Item, If Chriſt had begged wilfully: And if the Friers do rightly define perfection of the Goſpel by wilful poverty, then was Clement St. Peters Succeſſor to blame, which laboured ſo much to remove away beggery and poverty from among all them that were converted to the faith of Chriſt, and is ſpecially for the ſame commended of the Church.

12 Goſſ. Cap. 1.

11. Again, why did the ſaid Clement, writing to James Biſhop of Jeruſalem, command ſo much to obey the Doctrine and Examples of the Apoſtles; who as he ſheweth in that Epiſtle, had no begger nor needy perſon amongſt them, if Chriſtian perfection (by the Friers Philoſophy) ſtandeth in wilful beggery?

12. Item, If Chriſt the High Prieſt had begged wilfully, then did the holy Church err wittingly, which ordained that none without ſufficient title of living and clothing, ſhould be admitted to holy Orders. And moreover, when it is ſaid in the Canonical Decrees, that the Biſhop or Clerk that beggeth bringeth ſhame upon the whole Order of the Clergy.

13. Item, If Chriſt had wilfully begged, then the examples of wilful poverty had pertained to the perfection of Chriſtian life, which is contrary to the old Law, which commandeth the Prieſts (which lived then after the perfection of the Law) to have poſſeſſions and tythes to keep them from beggery.

14. Item, If Chriſt did wilfully beg, then beggery were a point of Chriſtian perfection. And ſo the Church of God ſhould err, in admitting ſuch Patrimonies and Donations given to the Church, and ſo in taking from the Prelates their perfection.

15. Again, what will theſe Friers which put their perfection in begging, ſay to Melchiſedech, who without begging or wilful poverty, was the High Prieſt of God, and King of Salem, and prefigured the Order and Prieſthood of Chriſt?

16. And if beggery be ſuch a perfection of the Goſpel (as the Friers ſay) how cometh it, that the Holy Ghoſt given to the Apoſtles, which ſhould lead them into all truth, told them no word of this beggarly perfection, neither is there any word mentioned thereof throughout the whole Teſtament of God?

17. Moreover, where the Prophet ſaith, I never did ſee the juſt man forſaken, nor his ſeed go begging their bread: how ſtandeth this with the juſtice of Chriſt, which was moſt perfectly juſt, if he ſhould be forſaken, or his ſeed go beg their bread? And then how agreeth this with the abominable Doctrines of Friers Franciſcan, which put their perfection in wilful begging?

18. Finally, do we not read that Chriſt ſent his Diſciples to preach without ſcrip or wallet, and bid them ſalute no man by the way? Meaning that they ſhould beg nothing of any man: Did not the ſame Chriſt alſo labour with his hands under Joſeph? St. Paul likewiſe did he not labour with his hands, rather than he would burden the Church of the Corinthians? And where now is the Doctrine of the Friers, which putteth the ſtate of perfection in wilful begging?

The fifth Concluſion of Armachanus againſt the Friers.

The fifth Concluſion of Armachanus againſt the Friers, was this, That Chriſt never taught any man wilfully to beg, which he proved thus: It is written, Act. 1. Chriſt began to do and to teach. If Chriſt therefore, which did never wilfully beg himſelf, as hath been proved, had taught men otherwiſe to do; then his doing and teaching had not agreed together.

Item, If Chriſt which never begged himſelf wilfully, had taught men this Doctrine of wilful begging contrary to his own doing; he had given ſuſpition of his Doctrine, and miniſtred ſlander of the ſame, as hath been proved in the fourth Concluſion before.

Moreover, in ſo teaching, he had taught contrary to the Emperors juſt Law, which expreſly forbiddeth the ſame.

The ſixth Concluſion of Armachanus againſt the Friers.

The ſixth Concluſion of Armachanus againſt the Friers was, that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt teacheth us, that we ſhould not beg wilfully, which he proveth by ſeven or eight Reaſons.

Firſt, Where it is written, Luk. 14. When thou makeſt a Feaſt call the poor, weak, lame, and blind; and thou ſhalt be bleſſed: for they have not wherewith to reward thee again.

To this alſo pertaineth the Decree of the Apoſtle, 2 Theſſ. 3. He that will not work, let him not eat. Furthermore, the ſame Apoſtle addeth in the ſame place: For you have no for example, how we were burdenous to no man, neither did we eat our bread freely, but with labour and wearineſs, toiling both day and night, and all becauſe we would not burthen you, &c.

4. Item, where we read in the Scripture the ſlothful man reprehended, Prov. 6. Why ſleepeſt thou? O ſluggard! thy poverty and beggery is coming upon thee like an armed man, &c. And again in the ſame Book of Proverbs, The ſlothful man (ſaith the Scripture) for cold would not go to the Plow, therefore he ſhall beg in ſummer, and no man ſhall give him, &c. Alſo in the ſaid Book of Proverbs, the laſt Chapter, The diligent labouring woman is commended, whoſe fingers are exerciſed about the rock and ſpindle. And all theſe places make againſt the wilful begging of ſturdy Friers.

The Wiſdom of Frier Francis.

5. Item, Frier Francis their own founder in his own Teſtament ſaith, And I have laboured with mine own hands, and will labour, and will that all my Frierlings ſhall labour and live of their labour, whereby they may ſupport themſelves in an honeſt mean. And they that cannot work, let them learn to work, not for any covetouſneſs to receive for their labour, but for example of good works, and to avoid idleneſs. And when the price of their labour is not given them, let them reſort to the Lords Table, and aſk their alms from door to door, &c. Thus much in his Testament. And in his rule he saith, Such brethren to whom the Lord hath given the gift to labour, let them labour faithfully and devoutly, &c. Wherefore it is to be marvelled how those Friers with their wilful begging, dare transgress the rule and obedience of Frier Francis their great Grandfathers Testament.

6. Item, If Christ at any time did beg, or did lack, it was more because he would use a miracle in his own person, than because he would beg wilfully; as when he sent Peter to the Sea to find a Groat in the fishes mouth. Which thing yet he thought rather to do, than to beg the Groat of the people, which he might soon have obtained.

7. Item, By divers other his examples he seemeth to teach the same, as where he saith, The workman is worthy of his hire. Also, The workman is worthy of his meat, Matt. 10. Luk. 10. And when he spake to Zache, that he would turn into his house. And so likewise in Bethany and all other places he ever used rather to burden his friends than to beg of other unacquainted.

8. Item, With plain precept thus he sendeth forth his Disciples, willing them not to go from house to house, Luk. 10. so as Friers use now to go. Many other Scriptures there be which reprove begging, as where it is said, The foot of a fool is swift to the house of his neighbour, Eccles. 29. And in another place, My child (saith he) see thou want not in the time of thy life, for better it is to die than to lack. Eccles. 21.

9. Item, Where Christ counselling the young man, bad him go and sell that he had, and give to the poor, and follow him if he would be perfect; he doth not there call him to wilful begging, but calleth him to follow him, which did not beg wilfully.

The seventh Conclusion of Armachanus against the Friers.

The seventh Conclusion of Armachanus is, That no wife nor true holy man can take upon him wilful poverty to be observed always, which he proveth by four reasons.

First, That wilful beggery was reproved both by the Doctrine of Christ and of the Apostles, as in the Conclusion before hath been declared.

2. Item, A man in taking upon him wilful beggery, in so doing should lead himself into temptation, which were against the Lords-prayer. For as much as Solomon, Prov. 30. saith, O Lord, beggery and great riches give me not, but only sufficiency to live upon, lest if I have too much, I be driven to deny thee, and say, Who is the Lord? Again, if I have too little, I be forced thereby to steal, and perjure the name of my God. Wherefore saith Eccles. 27. For need many have offended. And therefore they that chuse wilful poverty, take to them great occasion of temptation.

Wilful beggery not to be permitted.

3. Item, They that take wilful poverty upon them, when they need not, induce themselves voluntarily to break the Commandment of God, Thou shalt not covet thy neighbours house, &c. Again, where it is commanded, There shall be no beggar among you, &c.

4. Item, He that taketh upon him needlessly and wilfully to beg, maketh himself unapt to receive holy Orders, having (as is said) no sufficient title thereunto, according to the Laws of the Church.

The eighth Conclusion of Armachanus against the Friers.

The eighth Conclusion of this matter, That it is not agreeing to the rule of the Friers observant, to observe wilful beggery. Which (saith he) may be proved, for that Frier Francis, both in his Rule and in his Testament being left to his Franciscans, doth plainly prefer labour before begging.

The ninth Conclusion of Armachanus. Touching this Book of the Masters of Paris condemned, took A. 1305. Ex Clement. Extra quæ Nicholaus the third revoketh the Bull of Pope Alexander the fourth.

The ninth and last Conclusion of this matter is, That the Bull of Pope Alexander the Fourth, which condemneth the Book of the Masters of Paris, impugneth none of these Conclusions premised. For the proof thereof he thus inferred.

1. First, That Pope John the 24*th*, in his Constitution, beginning thus, Quia quorundam, affirmeth expreſly, how Pope Nicholas the Third revoked and called back the said Bull of Pope Alexander the Fourth, and all other writings of his, touching all such Articles, which in the same foresaid Constitution of this Pope John be contained and declared. Wherein also is declared how strait the poverty of the Friers ought to be, which they call wilful poverty.

2. Item, It is manifest and notorious to all men, how the said Pope Nicholas the Third, in his Declaration sheweth how the Friers both ought to labour with their hands, and how moreover the said Friers ought not to preach within the Dioceſs of any Bishop, wherefoever they be resisted. Which being so, the conclusion appeareth that the Bull of Pope Alexander the Fourth, as touching these Articles, is void and of none effect. Besides the which Articles, there is nothing else in the said Bull of Alexander (that I remember) which impugneth any of these Conclusions premised.

{KING'S Book.}

Many things mo (said he) I had besides these, both to object and to answer again to the same, and to confirm more surely and firmly these my reasons and assertions premised. But I have already too much wearied your Holiness, and your reverend Lordships here present. Wherefore I conclude and humbly and devoutly beseech you according to my former petition premised in the beginning of this matter, that you judge not after the outward face, but judge ye true judgment, Joh. 7. Ex libro Armachani, cui titulus, Defensorium Curatorum.

The ended conclusion of this Oration of Armachanus before the Pope. Ex Defensorio Curatorum.

Notes to be observed in this former Oration of Armachanus.

Notes to be observed.

BY this Oration of Armachanus the Learned Prelate, thus made before Pope Innocent and his Cardinals, divers and sundry things there be for the utility of the Church worthy to be observed. First, what troubles and vexations came to the Church of Christ by these Friers. Also what persecution followeth after by the means of them against so many Learned men and true servants of Christ. Furthermore, what repugnance and contrariete was among the Popes, and how they could not agree among themselves about the Friers. Fourthly, what pestiferous Doctrine subverting well near the Testament of Jesus Christ. Fifthly, what decay of Ministers in Christs Church, as appeareth, pag. 469. Sixthly, what robbing and circumventing of mens children, as appeareth, pag. 469. Seventhly, what decay of Universities, as appeareth by Oxford, pag. 469. Eightly, that damage to Learning and lack of Books to Students came by these Friers, as appeareth, p. 469. Ninthly, to what pride, under colour of fained humility, to what riches, under dissimuled poverty they grew, here is to be seen. Insomuch that at length through their subtil and most dangerous hypocrisie they crept up to be Lords, Archbishops, Cardinals, and at last also Chancellors of Realms, yea and of most secret Counsel with Kings and Queens, as appeareth, pag. 470.

Contrariety among the Popes.

All these things well considered, now remaineth in the Church to be marked, that forsomuch as these Friers (with their new found Testament of Frier Francis) not being contented with the Testament of God in his Son Christ, began to spring the same time when as Satan was prophesied to be let loose by order of the Scripture, whether therefore it is to be doubted that these Friers make up the body of Antichrist, which is prophesied to come in the Church or not; which is much lesse to be doubted, because whoso list to try shall find, that of all other enemies of Christ, of whom some be manifest, some be privy, all be together cruel, yet is there no such sort of enemies which more sleightly deceiveth the simple Christian, or more deeply drowneth him in damnation, than doth this Doctrine of the Friers.

Whether the Friers make up the body of Antichrist or no.

But of this Oration of Armachanus enough. Which Oration what succes it had with the Pope, by Story it is not certain. By his own life declared it appeareth that the Lord so wrought that his enemies did not triumph over him. Nor withstanding, this by Story appeareth, that he was seven or eight years in banishment for the same matter, and there died and in the same at Avinion, of whom a certain Cardinal hearing of his death, openly protested that the same day a mighty pillar of Christs Church was fallen.

The death of godly Armachanus.

The testimony of a Cardinal upon Armachanus.

After the death of Armachanus, the Friers had contentions likewise with the Monks of Benedicts Order about the same year 1360. and so removed their cause, both against the Monks, and against the Univerſity of Oxford, unto the Court of Rome; wherein, saith the Author, they lacked another Richard. Ex Botonero. By this that appeareth to be true, which is reſerred in the first Tome of Wald. that long debate continued between the Friers and the Univerſity of Oxford: Against whom first stood Robert Grosted Bishop of Lincoln, above mentioned, then Sevallus of York, *Johan. fently we intreat. And after him again John Wickliffe, of whom (Christ willing) we will speak hereafter. Ex Waldenso. Against this foresaid Armachanus wrote divers Friers, Roger Conaway a Franciscan, John Heydelshame a Carmelite, Galfridus Harby a Frier Augustine. Also Frier Engelbert a Dominican, in a Book intituled, Defensorium Privilegiorum, and divers others. I credibly hear of certain old Irish Bibles translated long since into the Irish Tongue; which if it be true, it is not other like but to be the doing of this Armachanus. And thus much of this Learned Prelate and Archbishop of Ireland, a man worthy for his Christian zeal of immortal commendation.

After the death of this Innocent, next was Poped in the See of Rome Pope Urban the fifth, who by the Fathers side was an Englishman. This Urban had been a long waiter in the Court of Rome; and when he saw no promotion would light upon him, complaining to a certain friend of his, he made to him his mone, saying, That he thought verily, if all the Churches of the world should fall, yet none would fall in his mouth. The which friend after seeing him to be Pope, and Inthronized in his threefold Crown, cometh to him, and putting him in remembrance of his words to him before, saith, That where his Holiness had moned his fortune to him, That if all the Churches in the world would fall, none would fall upon his head: Now (saith he) God hath otherwise so disposed that all the Churches in the world are fallen upon your head, &c.

This Pope maintained and kindled great wars in Italy, sending Egidius his Cardinal and Legate, and after him Arduinus a Burgundian his Legate and Abbot with great puiſſance and much money against sundry Cities in Italy: By whose means the Towns and Cities which before had broken from the Bishop of Rome were oppreſſed; also Barnabes and Galeaceus Princes of Millain vanquished. By whose example other being sore feared, submitted themselves to the Church of Rome. And thus came up that wicked Church to her great Poſſeſſions, which her Patrons would needs father upon Conſtantine the godly Emperour.

Ex Iohn. Aland 3. tit. 8. How the Church of Rome came by their Royal poſſeſſion.

In the time of this Pope Urban the Fifth, and in the second year of his raign, about the beginning of the year of our Lord 1364, I find a certain Sermon of one Nicholas Orem, made before the Pope and his Cardinals on Chriſtmas-Even. In the which Sermon the learned man doth worthily rebuke the Prelates and Priests of his time, declaring their destruction not to be far off, by certain signs taken of their wicked and corrupt life. All the sayings of the Prophets, spoken against the wicked Priests of the Jews, he doth aptly apply against the Clergy of his time, comparing the Church then present to the Spiritual strumpet spoken of in the sixteenth Chapter of the Prophet Ezechiel. And proveth in conclusion the Clergy of the Church then to be so much worse than the old Synagogue of the Jews, by how much it is worse to sell the Church and Sacraments, than to suffer Doves to be sold in the Church. With no less judgment also and learning he answereth to the old and false objections of the Papists, who albeit they be never so wicked, yet think themselves to be the Church which the Lord cannot forsake. All which things to the intent they may the better appear in his own words, I have thought good here to translate and exhibit the Sermon as it was spoken before the Pope.

Nicolaus Orem.

A Copy of a Sermon made before Pope Urban the Fifth, the fourth Sunday in Advent 1364, by Nicholas Orem.

A Sermon made before the Pope, Isa. 56. The words divided into two sorts of men before the Incarnation of Christ.

'IUsta est salus mea, ut veniat, & justitia, &c. That is, My saving health is near at hand to come, and my righteousnes to be revealed, &c. Isa. 56. After the sentence of St. Paul, Rom. 2. and in divers other places 'before the Nativity of Christ, the whole world was divided into two sorts of men, the Jews and Gentiles. 'The Jews who waited for the opening of the door of 'Paradise by the blood of the Saviour to come. The 'Gentiles, who yet sitting in darknes were to be call'ed to light, and to be justified by faith, as it is written, 'Rom. 5.

'This Salvation pertaining both to the Jew and Gen'tile, God promised before time to the Fathers by the Pro'phets, to stir up the desire thereof in their hearts the 'more, and to increase their firm hope and faith in the 'same. As first in Mich. 6. the voice of the Lord crieth, 'Health and salvation shall be to all men which fear my 'name. And Isa. 46. I will give in Sion salvation, and 'in Jerusalem my glory, &c. with divers such other pla'ces like. And forsomuch as hope which is deferred many 'times, doth afflict the soul, and conceiveth weariness of 'long deferring; he therefore prophesying of the nearness 'of the coming thereof, saith moreover, Isa. 14. His 'time is near at hand to come. Also Abacuc. 2. He will 'come and will not tarry. With many such other places 'more. So then the holy Fathers being in Limbo, look'ed and hoped that he should bring out them that sat 'bound, and which in the house of prison sat in darkness, 'as is read, Isa. 41. Then the time drew on in which 'came the fulness of the Gentiles, and in which the Lord 'would declare the riches of this mystery being hidden 'from the world, and from generations, Col. 1. Where'fore the Lord in this Text doth both certifie our Fathers 'of the coming of our Saviour, and doth comfort them 'touching the nearness thereof, and also teacheth the justi'fication of the Gentiles by faith approaching now near 'at hand, according to the words of my Text, Juxta est 'salus mea, &c. Which words were fulfilled then, what 'time the Lord did manifest his salvation, and did reveal 'his righteousness in the sight of all the Gentiles. And it is 'divided into three parts: Of which the first speaketh of 'the nearness of his coming, where it is said, Juxta est 'salus, &c. The second concerneth the mystery of the 'Advent of Christ and his Incarnation, where he saith, Ut veniat, &c. Thirdly, is confidered the severity of 'God, his terrible revenging judgment to be revealed, 'where he saith, Ut reveletur, &c. which is to be ex'pounded of his primitive justice, whereof speaketh Amos 'the fifth Chapter, saying, And judgment shall be revealed like a flood, and righteousness like a strong stream. 'Wherefore for our contemplation let us receive with joy 'the solemnity of his holy Vigil, the Word I say of God 'the Father, that is, Christ. To whom it is said, Isa. 49. 'I have given thee to be a light to the Gentiles, and to be 'my salvation through the ends of the world. Again, Isa. '46. My salvation shall not slack, &c.

Division, 1. Juxta est. 2. Ut veniat. 3. Ut reveletur.

Amos 5.

'As touching the nearness thereof, it is in these days opened to us by the Gospel, where we read in St. Mat'thew, When the Virgin Mary was espoused unto Joseph, 'before they did come together, she was found with child 'by the Holy Ghost. By this it was evident to understand, that our Saviour ought shortly to proceed out of the chaft 'womb of the Virgin, according as the Prophet did fore'tell, saying, Behold a Virgin shall conceive and bring 'forth a Son, &c. For like as the Grape when it waxeth 'great and full, is near to the making of Wine; and the 'flower when it shooteth abroad, it hasteth to the fruit; 'so the salvation of the world, in the swelling and grow'ing of the Virgins womb, began to draw nigh to man'kind. For then appeared the grace and benignity of our 'Saviour, when his Mother was found to have in her 'womb by the Holy Ghost, as is declared, in that which 'followeth by the Angel, saying, For that which is born of 'her is of the Holy Ghost.

The second part of his Theme. Aggeus 2.

'Touching the second part of that which is said, Ut 'veniat: this may be applied to the contemplation of the 'mystery of Christ coming in the flesh. Whereof speaketh 'Aggeus the Prophet, Chap. 2. He shall come who is de'sired and looked for of all Nations, &c. Albeit the same 'also may be applied to the second Advent, spoken of the 'third of Esay, The Lord shall come to judgment, &c. In 'memorial whereof the fourth Sunday was dedicate in the 'old time of the Fathers. And of this day of judgment it 'is written in the Prophet Sophon. Cap. 2. The day of the 'Lord is near, great and mighty, it is approaching at hand, 'and wondrous short, &c. And albeit not in it self, 'yet it may be expounded in tribulations that go before, as preambles unto the same; as Gregory saith, 'The last tribulation is prevented with many and sun'dry tribulations going before, although the end of all be 'not yet.

The third part of his Sermon.

'Wherefore now coming to the third part of my Sermon or Theme, let us see of those tribulations that go before the last coming of Christ, if there be any such tribulation approaching nigh at hand, whereof this last part of my Theme may be verified, where is said, Ut reveletur, that my righteousnesse shall be revealed, to wit, the righteousnesse primitive, that righteousnesse may be brought, and the Prophecy of Daniel fulfilled, Dan. 9. Concerning which matter four things here come in order to be declared.

1. Ut reveletur.

'First, Concerning the revealing of tribulation, according to that part of my Theme, Ut reveletur, &c.

2. Ut juxta est.

'Secondly, Concerning the nearnesse of the tribulation coming, according to that part of my Theme, Quia juxta est, &c.

3. Ut veniat.

'Thirdly, Of the false opinions of some upon this part of my Theme, Ut veniat, &c.

4. Salus.

Fourthly, What means and consultation we ought to take, Ut juxta est salus.

The first part of the subdivision.

'As for the first, it is of notorious and so common in the Scriptures that the Church should suffer and abide tribulation, that I need not here to stand in alledging any thing touching either the causes to be weighed, or the term to be conjectured thereof. In concerning the which causes I will give two rules to be noted before, for the better opening of that which is to follow: The first rule is, that by the two Kingdoms of the Nation of the Hebrews, which were in the old time, to wit, by the Kingdom of Israel, whose head was Samaria, is signified in the Prophets the erroneous Synagogue: And by the Kingdom of Juda, of whose stock came Christ, whose head metropolitan was Jerusalem, is signified the true Church. And this rule is not mine, but is an authentick gloss of St. Jerome, and also is the rule of Origen in the last Homily upon the Old Testament, and is approved by the Church.

Two rules to be noted.

The Kingdom of Israel signifieth the false Church.

The Kingdom of Juda signifieth the right Church.

The second rule.

'The second rule is, that by the Brodel-house and fornication mentioned in the Prophets, is signified Simony, and abuted Dispensations, and Promotions of persons unworthy, for lucres sake, or else for any other partial favour, which be unlawful ways, by all laws of the world, to come to office and honour. Merx dicitur namque a merendo; that is, for gain or price is derived of gaining; for the which gain or price that is sold, which by nature ought not to be sold. Therefore to give any thing for respect of gain or hire, which ought to be given freely for vertues sake, is a kind of spiritual corruption, and as a man would say, an whorish thing; whereof the Prophet Esay complaineth, speaking of Jerusalem, and saying, The city which once was faithful and full of judgment, how is it now become an whorish city? And in like manner Osee also the Prophet, Cap. 9. Jerusalem thou hast fornicated and gone an whoring from thy God. Thou hast loved like an harlot to get gain in every barn of corn. And in many other places of Scripture, where fornication cannot be otherwise expounded.

Esay 1.

Osee 9.

'These two rules thus premised, now let us mark the Scriptures, and according to the same judg of the whole state of the Church, both that is past, and that is to come: First, intreating of the causes of tribulation to come: Secondly, of the vicinity of time of the said tribulation to come.

Five flates of the Church &c. described.

'And first, concerning the state of the Church, and of causes of tribulation, thus saith the Lord in the Prophet, Ezek. 16. speaks to the Church under the name of Jerusalem, In the day of thy birth I came by thee, and saw thee trodden down in thine own blood, &c. Here he speaketh of the time of the Martydom of the Church. Then it followeth, After this thou wast cleansed from thy blood, thou wast grown up, and waxen great; then washed I thee with water, I purged thy blood from thee (speaking of ceasing of persecution) I anointed thee with oyl, I gave thee change of raiments, I girded thee with white silk, I decked thee with coftly apparel, I put rings upon thy fingers, a chain about thy neck, spangles upon thy forehead, and ear-rings upon thine ears. Thus wast thou decke with silver and gold and a beautiful crown set upon thine head. Marvellous goodly wast thou and beautiful, even a very Queen wast thou: For thou wast excellent in my beauty, which I put upon thee, saith the Lord God, &c. This Prophecy, or rather History speaketh of and declareth the prosperity of the Church.

1. The Martyrdom of the Church. 2. The prosperity of the Church.

'And now hear the corruption and transgression of the Church, for so it followeth, But thou hast put confidence in thine own beauty, and played the harlot, when thou hadst gotten thee a name. Thou hast committed whoredom with all that went by thee, and hast fulfilled their desires; yea, thou hast taken thy garments of divers colours and decked the thine altars therewith, whereupon thou mightest fulfil thy whoredom of such a fashion as never was done, nor shall be. Which whoredom can in no wise be expounded for carnal, but spiritual whoredom. And therefore, see how lively he hath painted out the corruption and falling of the Church.

KING 2 Rode 3

2. The corruption of the Church.

'And therefore followeth now the correction and punishment of the Church. It followeth, Behold I stretch one my hand over thee, and will diminish thy store of food, and deliver thee over into the wills of the Philistines, and of such as hate thee: And they shall break down thy stues, and destroy thy Brodel-houses, (that is, the place wherein thou didst exercise this wickednesse) they shall strip thee out of thy clothes: All thy fair beautiful jewels shall they take from thee, and so let thee sit naked and bare, &c.

4. The correction of the Church.

'Here is plainly to beseen what shall happen to the Church, and more followeth in the said Chapter: Thine elder sister is Samaria, she and her daughters upon thy left hand: But the youngest sister that dwelleth on thy right hand is Sodom with her daughters, whose sins were these, Pride, fulness of meat, abundance and idleness, neither reached they their hand to the poor. And yet another Sodom thy sister, with her daughters, hath done so evil as thou and thy daughters: Neither hath Samaria (that is, the Synagogue) done half of thy sins; yea thou hast exceeded them in wickednesse. Take therefore and bear thine own confusion, &c. Again in Ezek. 23. after the Prophet had described at large the wickednesse, corruption, and punishment of the Synagogue, turning to the Church, he saith, And when her sister saw this, she raged and was mad with lust-love of riches, and following voluptuousness. Her fornication and whoredom she committed with Princes and great Lords, clothed with all manner of gorgeous apparel; so that her paps were bruised, and her brests were marred. And then speaking of her punishment, he saith, Then my heart forsook her, like as my heart was gone from her sister also. And moreover, repeating again the cause thereof, he addeth, Thy wickednesse and thy fornication hath wrought thee all this, &c.

Ezek. 16.

Ezek. 23.

'The like we find also in Esay, Jeremy, Ezekiel, and in all the other Prophets, who prophesying all together in one meaning, and almost in one manner of words; do conclude with a full agreement and prophesie to come, that the Church shall fall, and then be punished for her great excesses, and be utterly spoiled, except the repent of all her abominations. Whereof speaketh Osee, Ch. 2. Let her put away her whoredom out of her sight, and her adultery from her brests, lest I strip her naked, and set her even as she came naked into the world, (that is, in her primitive poverty.) So if she do it not, it shall follow of her as in the Prophet Nahum, Ch. 3. For the multitude of the fornication of the fair and beautiful harlot, which is a mistris of witchcrafts, yea and selleth the people through her whoredom, and the Nations through her witchcrafts. And it followeth upon the same, Behold I come upon thee, saith the Lord of Hosts, and will pull thy clothes over thy head, that thy nakednesse shall appear among the heathen, and thy shame amongst the Kingdoms, &c.

Osee 2.

Nahum 3.

'Wherefore by these it is to be understood that upon this Church the primitive justice of God is to be revealed here after. And thus much of the first of the four members above touched.

The reformation of the Church.

'Now to the second member of my Theme, Juxta est, concerning the nearnesse of time. Although it is not for us to know the moments and articles of time; yet by certain notes and signs peradventure it may be collected and gathered, that which I have here to say. For the tractation whereof, first I ground my self upon the saying of the Apostle Paul, 2 Thes. 2. where he writeth, That unless there come a defection first, &c. By the which defection, Jerome ultima quæst. ad inquisitiones Januarii, gathereth and expoundeth allegorically, the desolation of the Monarchy of Rome: Between the which desolation, and the perfection of the Church by Antichrist, he putteth no mean space. And now what is the state of that Commonwealth, if it be 'compared to the majesty of that it hath been, judge your selves. Another gloss there is that faith, how by that defection is meant; that from the Church of Rome shall come a departing of some other Churches.

2d Note or token.

'The second note and mark is this, when the Church shall be worse in manners than was the Synagogue; as appeareth by the ordinary gloss upon the third of Jeremy, where it is written, The backslider Israel may seem just and righteous in comparison of sinful Judah. That is, the Synagogue in comparison of the Church of God. Where fore writeth Origen saying, Think that to be spoken of us what the Lord saith in Ezek. 16. Thou hast exceeded thy sister in thine iniquities. Wherefore now (to compare the one with the other) First, ye know how Christ rebuked the Pharises, who as Jerome witnesseth, were then the Clergy of the Jews, of covetousnesse, for that they suffered Doves to be sold in the Temple of God. Secondly, for that they did honour God with their lips, and not with their heart, and because they said, but did not. Thirdly, he rebuked them, for that they were hypocrites. To the first then, let us see whether it be worse to sell both Church and Sacraments than to suffer Doves to be sold in the Temple or not. The 2d. whereas the Pharises were rebuked for honouring God with their lips, and not with their heart; there be some which neither honour God with heart, nor yet with lips; and which neither do well, nor yet say well, neither do they preach any word at all, but be dumb dogs, not able to bark, impudent and shameless dogs, that neither have enough, such Pastors as have no understanding, declining and straying all in their own way, every one given to covetousnesse from the highest to the lowest. And 3dly, As for hypocrisie there be also some, whose intolerable pride and malice is so manifest and notorious, kindled up like a fire, that no cloak or shadow of hypocrisie can cover it, but are so past all shame, that it may be well verified of them, which the Prophet speaks, Thou hast gotten thee the face of an Harlot, thou would'st not blush, &c.

3d. Note or token.

'The third sign and token of tribulation approaching near to the Church, may well be taken of the too much unequal proportion seen this day in the Church. Where one is hungry and starveth, another is drunk. By reason of which so great inequality, it cannot be that the state of the Church, as it is now, can long indure. For like as in good harmony, to make the Musick perfect, is required a moderate and proportionate equality of voices, which if it do much exceed, it taketh away all the sweet melody: so according to the sentence of the Philosopher, by too much immoderate inequality or disparity of Citizens, the Commonwealth falleth to ruine. Contrary, where mediocrity, that is, where a mean inequality with some proportion is kept, that policy standeth firm and more sure to continue. Now, among all the politick regiments of the Gentiles, I think none is to be found in Histories, wherein is to be seen so great and exceeding odds, as in the policy of Priests; of whom some be so high, that they exceed all Princes of the earth; some again be so base, that they are under all Rascals, so that such a Policy or Commonwealth may well be called Oligarchia.

Oligarchia, is where a few bear all the sway and all the rest be nothing worth.

'This may we plainly see and learn in the body of Man, to the which Plutarchus (writing to Thracinius) doth semblably compare the Commonwealth. In the which body, if the sustenance received should all run to one member, so that that member should be too much exceedingly pampered, and all the other parts too much pined, that body could not long continue; so in the body of the wealth Ecclesiastical, if some who be the heads be so enormly overgrown in riches and dignity, that the weaker members of the body be scant able to bear them up, there is a great token of dissolution and ruine shortly. Whereupon cometh well in place the saying of the Prophet Esay; Every head is sick, every heart is full of sorrow; of the which head it is also spoken in the Prophet Amos, Chap. 6. Woe be to the secure, proud and wealthy in Sion, and to such as think themselves so secure upon the Mount of Samaria, taking themselves as heads and rulers over other, &c. And moreover in the said Prophet Esay it followeth, From the top of the head to the sole of the foot there is no whole part in all the body, to wit, in the inferiours, because they are not able to live for poverty; in the superior, because for their excessive riches, they are left from doing good. And it followeth in the same place, but all are wounds, and botches,

Esay 1.

Amos 6.

'and stripes. Behold here the danger coming, the wounds of discord and division, the botch or sore of rancour and envy, the swelling stripe of rebellion and mischief.

'The fourth sign is the pride of Prelates. Some there have been which fondly have disputed of the poverty of Christ, and have inveighed against the Prelates, because they live not in poverty of the Saints. But this fancy cometh of the ignorance of moral Philosophy and Divinity, and of the defect of natural prudence; for that in all Nations, and by common Laws, Priests have had, and ought to have wherewith to sustain themselves more honestly than the vulgar sort, and Prelates more honestly than the Subjects. But yet hereby is not permitted to them their great Horses, their Troops of Horsemen, their superfluous pomp of their waiting-men and great Families, which scarcely can be maintained without pride, neither can be sustained with safe justice, and many not without fighting and injuries inconvenient; not much unlike to that as Justine the Historian writeth of the Carthaginenses, The family (saith he) of so great Emperors, was intolerable to such a free City. In ferildable wise, this great pride in the Church of God (especially in these days) doth move not so few to due reverence, as many to indignation; and yet more to those things aforesaid, which think not less but to do Sacrifice to God, if they may rob and spoil certain fat Prebends, which as it is a violent thing, so it cannot be long lasting. For as Solomon saith, Cap. 16. For it was requisite that (without any excuse) destruction should come upon those which exercised tyranny. The property of a Tyrant is not to seek the commodity of his Subjects, but only his will and profit. Such were the Pastors that fed not the Lords flock, but fed themselves, of whom and to whom speaketh the Prophet Ezek. 34. Wo be unto those pastors, of Israel that feed themselves. Should not the shepherds feed the flocks? With many other threatnings against them in the said Chapter. Wo be unto them which rejoice at the transgressions of such whom it lieth in their power to condemn, neither do they seek what he is able to pay, to whom crieth Micheas the Prophet, Cap. 3. To hate the good and love the evil, ye pluck off mens skins, and the flesh from the bones, ye eat the flesh of my people, and flay off their skin, ye break their bones, ye chop them in pieces as it were into a caldron, and as flesh into the pot, &c. And therefore the foresaid Ezekiel pronounceth, Behold, I will my self come upon the Shepherds and require my Sheep from their hands, and make them cease from feeding my Sheep, yea the Shepherds shall feed themselves no more, for I will deliver my Sheep out of their mouths, so that they shall not devour them any more.

'The 6th. sign is in promoting of the unworthy, and of neglecting them that be worthy. This, as Aristotle saith, is a great cause many times of the dissolution of commonweals. And oftentimes it so happeneth in the Wars of Princes, that the contempt and small regarding of the valiant, and the exalting of others that be less worthy, engendreth divers kinds and kindlings of sedition. For by the reason partly of the same, partly of the other cause above recited, we have read not only in Books, but have seen with our eies, divers flourishing Cities well nee subverted; whereas good men be not marked, but are vexed with sorrow and grief by the evil; the contention at length bresteth out upon the Prince, as Haymo reciteth out of Origen. This always hath been the perverse incredulity of mans hard heart, and that not only in hearing, but also in seeing; yet will they not believe that other have perished, unless they also perish themselves.

6th. Sign. Promoting of unworthy Ministers.

Haymo.

'The seventh sign is, the tribulation of outward policy and commotions of the people, which in a great part is now happened already. And therefore foratmuch as Seneca saith, Men do complain commonly that evils only come so fast; It is to be feared left also the Ecclesiastical policy be afflicted not only outwardly, but also in it self; and so that be fulfilled in us, that in Jeremy is prophetied, Chap. 4. Murther is cried upon of murther, and the whole

Ezek.7. 'land shall perish, and suddenly my tabernacles were destroyed, and my tents very quickly. And Ezek.7. Wherefore I will bring cruel tyrants from among the Heathen, to take their Houses in possession; I will make the pomp of the proud to cease, and their Sanctuaries shall be taken. One mischief and sorrow shall follow another, and one rumour shall come after another; then shall they seek Visions in vain at their Prophets, the Law shall be gone from their Priests, and wisdom from their Elders, &c.

2. Sign. 'The eighth sign is, the refusing of correction, neither will they hear their faults told them, so that it happened to the Princes and Rulers of the Church, as it is written

Zech.7. in the Prophet Zech. ca.7. They stopped their ears that they would not hear, yea they made their hearts as an Adamant stone, lest they should hear the law and words which the Lord of Hosts sent in his holy Spirit by the Prophets aforetime. Also Esay witnessing after the same effect, chap.

Esa. 30. 30. saith, For it is an obstinate people, lying children, and unfaithful children that will not hear the law of the Lord, which say to the Prophets, meddle with nothing, and tell us nothing, that is true and right, but speak friendly words to us, &c. All this shall be verified when the Prelates begin to hate them that tell them truth, and have knowledge; like unto such of whom Amos speaketh, Chap.5.

Truth hated. Amos 5. They bear him evil will that reproveth them openly, and who so telleth them the plain truth, they abhor him. And therefore saith the Lord to the Church of Jerusalem,

Ose 4. Ose 4. Seeing thou hast refused understanding, I have refused thee also, that thou shalt no more be my Priest. And forsomuch as thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children, and change their honour into shame. And so shall it be like Priest, like people, &c. And many other sayings there be in the Prophets, speaking of the dejecting and casting down of the Priestly honour.

Lack of learned Priests. Besides these foresaid signs and tokens hitherto recited, there be also divers others; as the backsliding from righteousness, the lack of discreet and learned Priests, promoting of children into the Church, with such other like. But these being already well noted and marked, you may easily judge and understand, whether these times now present of ours be safe and clear from tribulation to be looked for, and whether the Word of the Lord be true according to my Theme, Juxta est justitia mea ut reveletur, My righteousness is near at hand to be revealed, &c. And thus much of the second part.

The third part or member of the diuision. Now to the third part or member of my subdivision, which is concerning the false and perilous opinions of some, upon this word of my Theme, ut veniat, &c. Which opinions principally be four, repugning all against the truth of the Canonical Scripture.

The first opinion. The first opinion is of such men, who having too much confidence in themselves, do think and persuade with themselves, that the Prelates be the Church which the Lord will always keep and never forsake, as he hath promised in the persons of the Apostles, *Matth.*28. saying, And I will be with you to the end of the World, &c. But

The Church where it is, and in whom it consisteth. this is to be understood of faith, whereof Christ speaketh, Luke 21. I have prayed for thee, that thy faith shall not fail. Whereof we read Eccles.40. Faith shall stand for ever, &c. And albeit charity wax never so cold, yet faith

Eccl. 40. notwithstanding, shall remain in few, and in all afflictes of the world; of the which difficulties, our Saviour doth prophesie in many places to come. And left peradventure some should think themselves to be safe from tribulation, because they be of the Church; this opinion the Lord himself doth contrary in *Jerem.*7. Trust not (saith he) in

Jerem.7. false lying words, saying, the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord. And a little after, but you trust in words and lying counsels which deceive you, and do you no good.

The second opinion. The second opinion is of them, which defer time; for this they will grant, that the Church shall abide trouble, but not so shortly; thinking thus with themselves, that these causes and tokens afore recited, have been before at other times as well in the Church. For both by Gregory and Bernard, holy Doctors, in time past, the Prelates have been in like fort reprehended, both for their bribings, for their pomp and pride, for the promoting of persons and children unfit unto Ecclesiastical functions, and other vices more, which have reigned before this in the Church of God more than now, and yet by God his grace the Church hath prospered and stood. Do ye not see, that if an house have flood and continued ruinous a long season, it is never the more near the fall thereby, but rather to be trusted the better? Moreover, many times it cometh so to pass, in Realms and Kingdoms, that the posterity is punished for the sins of the predecessors. Whereof speaketh the book of *Lamentations, Chap.*5. Our Fathers have sinned, and are now gone, and we must bear their wickedness, &c. Against this cogitation or opinion, well doth the Lord answer by the Prophet *Ezekiel, Chap.*12. saying, Behold thou son of Man, the house of Israel saith in this manner, This is for the Vision that he hath seen, it will be many a day ere it come to pass; it is far off yet, the thing that he prophesieth. Therefore say unto them, thus saith the Lord God, The words that I have spoken shall be deferred no longer, look what I have said shall come to pass, saith the Lord, &c. We have seen in our days things to happen, which seemed before incredible. And the like hath been seen in other times also, as we read written in the book of Lament. ch.4. The Kings of the earth, nor all the inhabitants of the world would not have believed, that the enemy and adversary should have come in at the gates of the City, for the sins of her Priests, and for the wickedness of her elders, that have shed innocents blood within her, &c. By Jerusalem, as is said is meant the Church.

'The third opinion or error is very perilous and perverse, The third opinion or error. of all such as fay veniat, let come that will come; let us conform our selves to this world, and take our time with those temporizers which say in the Book of *Wisdom, Sap.*2. Come Sap. 2. let us enjoy our goods and pleasures that be present, and let us use the creature as in youth quickly, &c. Such as these be are in dangerous case, and be greatly prejudicial to good men in the Church. And if the Heads and Rulers of the Church were so vile to have any such detestable cogitation in them, there were no place in Hell too deep for them. This Church founded by the Apostles in Christ, consecrated with the blood of so many Martyrs, inlarged and increased with the vertues and merits of so many Saints, and indued so richly with the devotion of so many secular Princes, and so long prospered hitherto; if it now should come into the hands of such persons, it should fall in great danger of ruine, and they for their negligence and wickedness well deserved of God to be curfed; you here also in this present world to incur temporal tribulation and destruction, which they fear more; by the sentence of the Lord, saying to them in the Book of the *Proverbs, Chap.*1. All my counsels ye have Prov.1. despised, and set my correction at nought; therefore shall I also laugh in your destruction, when tribulation and anguish shall fall upon you.

The fourth opinion or error. 'Fourthly, another opinion or error is of such as being unfaithful believe not that any such thing will come. And since this error seemeth to have no warrody, but that as other things and other Kingdoms have their ends and limits set unto them, which they cannot overpass; so it muit needs be, that such a domination and government of the Church have an end, by reason of the demerits and obstinacies of the Governours provoking and requiring the same; like as we read in the Prophet *Jeremy, Chap.*8. There is no Jerem.8. man that taketh repentance for his sin, that will so much as say, wherefore have I done this? But every man runneth forth still like a wild horse in battel. And the Prophet Jeremy in the 13.ch. Chap. of his Prophesie, Like as the man of Inde may change his skin, and the Cat of mountain Jer. 13. her spots, so may ye, that be exercised in evil, do good. Whereunto also accordeth that which is written of the Jer. 17. same Prophet, *Chap.*17. speaking of Juda, signifying the Church, The sin of Judah (saith he) is written in the table of your hearts, and graven so upon the edges of your altars with a pen of iron, and with an adamant claw; which is as much to say, as indeleble, or which cannot be rased out; as also Ezekiel speaking of the punishment, *chap.*21. saith, Ezek.21. I the Lord have drawn my sword out of the sheath, and it cannot be revoked. Notwithstanding, all these signifie no impossibility, but difficulty, because that wicked men are hardly converted; for otherwise the Scripture imporreth no such inflexibility with God, but if conversion come, he will forgive. So we read in the Prophet *Jonae, Chap.*3. Who can tell? God may turn and repent, Jonas 3. and cease from his fierce wrath that we perish not. And to the like effect saith the same Lord in *Jeremy, Chap.*26. Jer. 26. Look thou keep not one word back, if peradventure they will hearken and turn every man from his wicked way, {KING} {Edw.3} that I also may repent of the plague which I have determined to bring upon them, because of their wicked inventions, &c. For the further proof whereof, Ninive we see converted, and remained undestroyed, &c. Likewise the Lord also had revealed destruction unto Constantinople by sundry signs and tokens, as Augustine in a certain Sermon doth declare. And thus for the third part or member of my division.

The fourth part or member of the diuision. 'Fourthly and lastly, It remaineth that I declare some wholesome concluding now upon the causes preceeding; That is, if by these causes and signs (heretofore declared) tribulation be prepared to fall upon the Church, then let us humble our minds mildly and wisely. And if we so return with heart and in deed unto God, verily he shall rescue and help after an inestimable wise, and will surcease from scourging us, as he promiseth by his Prophet *Jer.*18.

Jer.18. If that people against whom I have thus devised, convert from their wickedness, immediately I will repent of the plague that I devised to bring upon them, speakings here after the manner of Men, &c. Now therefore, forsomuch as tribulation and affliction is so near coming toward us, yea lieth already upon us, let us be the more diligent to call upon God for mercy. For I think verily these many years, there have not been so many and so deSpiteful hearts and evil willers, stout, and of such a rebellious heart against the Church of God, as be now adays: neither be they lacking that would work all that they can against it, and lovers of new-fangleness; whose hearts the Esay 5. Lord happily will turn, that they shall not hate his people, and work deceit against his servants, I mean against Priests, whom they have now in little or no reputation at all, albeit many yet there be, through Gods grace, good and godly; But yet the fury of the Lord is not turned away, but still his hand is stretched out. And unless ye be converted, he thaketh his Sword, he hath bent his Bow, and Esay 30. prepared it ready. Yet the Lord standeth waiting, that he may have mercy upon you, Esay 30. And therefore, as the greatness of fear ought to incite us, so hope of salvation may allure us to pray and call upon the Lord, especially now toward this holy and sacred time and solemnity of Christs Nativity: For that holy and continual prayer without intermission is profitable, and the instant devotion and vigilant deprecation of the just man is of great force. And if terrene Kings, in the day of celebration of their Nativity, be wont to shew themselves more liberal and bountiful, how much more ought we to hope well, that the heavenly King, of nature moSt benign, now at his Natal and Birth-day, will not deny pardon and remission to such as rightly call unto him.

John 7. 'And now therefore, as it is written in *Josua, Chap.*7. Be ye sanctified against to morrow, &c. And fay unto

1 Kin.25. him as it is written in the first Book of *Kings, Chap.*25. Now let thy servants I pray thee find favour in thy sight, for we come to thee in a good season. Moreover, ye may find that ye ask, if that ye ask that which he brought in the day of his Nativity; that is, the peace of the Church, not spiritual only, but also temporal; which the Angelical noise did sound, and experience the same did prove, testified by T. Livius, Plinius, and other Heathen Story-writers, which all marvelled thereat, saying, that such an universal peace as that could not come on earth, but by the gift of God. For so God did forepromise in the Prophet

Esay 66. *Esay, Chap.*66. Behold, I will let peace into Jerusalem like Psal. 71. a water flood, &c. And in the *Psal.*71. In his time righteousness shall flourish, ye and abundance of peace, &c.

'Therefore now (O reverend fathers in the Lord) and you here in this present Assembly, behold, I say, the day of life and salvation; now is the opportune time to pray unto God, that the same thing, which he brought into the world at his birth, he will grant in these days to his Church, that is, his peace. And like as Nineveh was subverted, and over-turned, not in members but in manners, so the same words of my Theam, Juxta est justitia mea ut reveletur, may be verified in us, not of the primitive justice, but of our sanctification by grace; so that, as to morrow is celebrated the Nativity of our Saviour, our righteousness may rise together with him, and his blessing may be upon us, which God hath promised saying, My

Esay 51. saving health is near at hand to come, &c. Whereof speaketh Esay the Prophet, *Chap.*51. My saving health shall endure for ever, &c. This health grant unto us, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, Amen.

This Sermon was made by Master Nicholas Orem before Pope Urban and his Cardinals, upon the Even of the Nativity of the Lord, being the fourth Sunday of Advent, in the year of our Lord 1364. and the second of his Popedom.

The Order of Iesuites. In the 5th. year of this forenamed Pope Urban, began first the Order of the Jesuites. And unto this time, which was about the year of our Lord 1367. the Offices here in {Anno} {1367} England, as the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, and of the Privy Seal, were wont to be in the hands of the Clergy. But about this year, through the motion of the Lords in the Parliament, and partly (as witnesseth mine Author) for hatred of the Clergy, all the said Offices were removed from the Clergy to the Lords Temporal. offices of the Realm translated from the Clergy to the Lords Temporal.

Pope Gregory the 11th. After the death of Pope Urban, next succeeded Pope Gregory the 11th. who, among his other acts, first reduced again the Papacy out of France unto Rome, which had from thence been absent the space now of 70 years, being there- {Anno} {1370.} tain Bishop, whom as the Pope saw standing by him, he asked, why he was so long from his charge and Church at home, saying that, it was not the part of a good Pastor, to keep him from his flock so long. Whereunto the Bishop answering again, said, And you your self, being the chief Bishop, who may and ought to be a spectacle to us all, why are you from the place so long where your Church doth ly? By the occasion whereof the Pope sought all means after that to remove and to rid his Court out of France again to Rome, and so he did. The Papacy reduced again from France to Rome.

This Gregory 11th. in a certain Bull of his sent to the Archbishop of Prague, maketh mention of one named Militzius a Bohemian, and saith in the same Bull, that this Militzius should hold opinion and teach Anno 1366. the Antichrist was already come. Also that the said Militzius had certain Congregations following him; and that in the same Congregations were certain Harlots, who being converted from their wickedness, were brought to a godly life. Which Harlots being so converted, he used to say, were to be preferred before all the holy religious Virgins. And therefore he commanded the Archbishop to excommunicate and persecute the said Militzius, which in foretime had bin a religious Man of Prague, and after forlook his Order, and gave himself to preaching, and at length was by the foresaid Archbishop imprisoned. Militzius a Bohemian, for the which was persecuted by the Pope. Ex Bulla Gregorii 11.

Jacobus Misnensis, a learned Man and a Writer in the time of John Hus, maketh mention of this Militzius, and calleth him a worthy and a famous Preacher. Also he citeth many things out of his Writings, in the which Writings this good Militzius thus declareth of himself, how he was moved and urged by the Holy Ghost to search out by the sacred Scriptures, concerning the coming of Antichrist. And that he was compelled by the same holy Spirit publickly to preach at Rome, and also before the Inquisitor there, to proteSt plainly, that the same great Antichrist, which is prophesied of in the holy Scriptures, was already come. Moreover his saying was, That the Church through negligence of the Pastors was desolate, did abound in temporal riches, but in spiritual riches was empty. Also, That in the Church of Christ were certain Idols which destroyed Jerusalem, and defaced the Temple, but hypocrisie caused that those Idols could not be seen. Also, That many there were which denied Christ, because that knowing the truth, yet for fear of men they durst not confeSt their conscience, &c. And thus much of good Militzius, living in the time of Gregory 11. and King Edward the third, *An.*1370. The coming of Antichrist prophesied.

The which King of England, holding a Parliament in the third year of this Pope, sent his Embassadors to him, desiring him, that he from henceforth would abstain from his Reservations of Benefices used in the Court of England's and that spiritual Men, within this Realm promoted unto Bishoprics, might freely enjoy their Elections within the Realm, and be confirmed by their Metropolitans, according to the ancient custom of the Realm. Wherefore upon these, and such other like, wherein the King and the Realm thought themselves much grieved, he desired of the Pope some remedy to be provided, &c. Whereunto the Pope returned a certain answer again unto the King, requiring by his messengers to be certified again of the Kings mind concerning the same. But what answer it was, it is not in the story expreSsed, save that the year following, which was 1374; there was a tractation at Burges upon certain of the K. Edward complaineth of the Popes reservation of Benefices said Articles between the King and the Pope, which did hang two years in suspence; and so at length it was thus agreed between them, that the Pope should no more use his reservations of Benefices in England, and likewise the King should no more confer and give Benefices upon the Writ, Quare impedit, &c. But as touching the freedom of Elections to be confirmed by the Metropolitan, mentioned in the year before, thereof was nothing touched.

The Pope put from his referring of Benefices in England. Quare impedit.

As touching these Reservations, Provisions and Collations, with the Elections of the Archbishops, Bishops, Beneficed Men, and other, wherewith the Pope vexed this Realm of England, as before you have heard; the King by the consent of the Lords and Commons, in the 25th. year of his Reign enacted; that according to a Statute made in the 30th. year of his Grandfather Edward the first, wherein was made an Act against the ravenous pillage of the Pope, through the same Provisions, Reservations and Collations, &c. but not put in execution: By the which Provisions, the state of the Realm decreased more and more, the Kings Royalty and Prerogative was greatly obscured and diminished, innumerable treasure of the Realm transported, aliens and strangers placed in the best and fattest Bishopricks, Abbeys and Benefices within the Realm; and such, as either for their Offices in Rome, as Cardinalships, and such like, could not be here resident, or if resident, yet better away for causes infinite, as partly have been touched before; he not only revived the said Statute made by Edward the first his Grandfather, but also inlarged the same. Adding thereunto very strait and sharp penalties against the offendors, therein. or in any part thereof, as exemption out of the Kings protection, loss of all their Lands, Goods and other possessions, and their bodies to be imprisoned at the Kings pleasure; and further, whosoever was lawfully convict, or otherwise, for want of appearance by Process directed forth, were within the lapse of this Statute or Præmunire (for so bare the name thereof) should suffer all and every such molestations and injuries, as men exempted from the protection of the King. Insomuch, that whosoever had killed such Men, had been in no more danger of law therefore, than for the killing of any Outlaw, or one not worthy to live in a Commonweal. Like unprofitable members were they then, yea, in that time of ignorance, ethened in this Commonweal of England which would offer themselves to the wilful slavery and servile obedience of the Pope; which thing in these days, yea and that amongst no small fools, is counted more than Evangelical holiness. He that list to perufe the Statute, and would see every branch and Article thereof at large discussed and handled, with the Penalties therefore due; let him read the Statute of Provision and Præmunire made in the 25th. year of this Kings days. And let him read in the Statutes made in the Parliaments holden the 27th. year, and 38th. year of his Reign: And under the same Title of Provision and Præmunire he shall find the Popes Primacy and Jurisdiction within this Realm more nearly touched, and much of his Papal power restrained: Insomuch that, whosoever for any cause or controversie in law, either spiritual or temporal, the same being determinable in any of the Kings Courts (as all matters were) whether they were personal or real citations, or other, should either appeal or consent to any appellation to be made out of the Realm to the Pope or See of Rome; should incur the said penalty and danger of Præmunire. Divers other matters wherein the Pope is restrained of his usurped power, authority and jurisdiction within this realm of England, are in the said Titles and Statutes expressed, and at large set forth, who ever list to perufe the same, which for brevities sake I omit, hasting to other matters.

The Popes Primacy here in England bridled

About this time, being the year of our Lord 1370. lived holy Bridget, whom the Church of Rome hath canonized not only for a Saint, but also for a Prophetess; who notwithstanding, in her Book of Revelations, which hath been oftentimes imprinted, was a great rebuker of the Pope, and of the filth of his Clergy, calling him a murtherer of souls, a spiller and a piller of the flock of Christ: more abominable than the Jews, more cruel than Judas, more unjust than Pilate, worse than Lucifer himself. The See of the Pope the prophetess shall be thrown down into the deep like a Millstone; and that his adherents shall burn with brimstone; Affirming, that the Prelates, Bishops and Priests are the cause why the Doctrine of Christ is neglected, and almost extinguished. And that the Clergy have turned the Ten Commandments of God into two words, to wit, Da pecuniam, that is Give money. It were long and tedious to declare all that she against them writeth. Among the rest which I omit, let this suffice for all, whereas the said Bridget affirmeth in her Revelations, that when the holy Virgin should say to her Son, how Rome was a fruitful and fertil field; yea, said he, but of Weeds only and Cockle, &c.

Rome a fertil ground till grown of Weeds and Cockle.

To this Bridget I will joyn also Catharina Senensis, also a holy Virgin, which lived much about the same time, *An.*1379. Of whom writeth Antonimus part. historiæ 3. This Katharine, having the spirit of Prophecy, was wont much to complain of the corrupt state of the Church, namely of the Prelates of the Court of Rome, and of the Pope; prophecying before of the great Schism, which then followed in the Church of Rome, and dured to the Council of Constance, the space of thirty nine years; also of the great Wars and Tribulation, which insued upon the same. And moreover, declared before, and foretold of this so excellent Reformation of Religion in the Church now present. The words of Antonimus be these: After that Virgin in her going to Rome had told her Brother of the Wars and Tumults that should rise in the Countries about Rome, after the schism of the two Popes: I then curious to know of things to come, and knowing that she understood by Revelation what should happen, demanded of her I pray you (good Mother) said I, and what shall befal after these troubles in the Church of God? And she said:

Catharina Senensis. lic. Anno. part. 3. fol. 370.

The refor. mation of Religion prognosticated of before.

By these Tribulations and Afflictions, after a secret manner unknown unto Man, God shall purge his holy Church, and stir up the spirit of his elect. And after these things, shall follow such a reformation of the holy Church of God, and such a renovation of holy Pastors, that the only cogitation and remembrance thereof, maketh my Spirit to rejoyce in the Lord. And as I have oftentimes told you heretofore, the Spouse, which now is all deformed and ragged, shall be adorned and decks with most rich and precious ouches and brouches. And all the faithful shall be glad and rejoyce to see themselves so beautified with so holy Shepherds. Yea, and also the Infidels them, allured by the sweet savour of Christ shall return to the Catholick field, and be converted to the true Bishop and Shepherd of their Souls. Give thanks therefore to God; for after this storm he will give to us a great calm. And after she had thus spoken, she said, and said no more.

The Prophecy of Katherine.

Note.

Besides these aforenamed, the Lord, which never ceaseth to work in his Church, stirred up against the malignant Church of Rome, the spirits of divers good and godly Teachers, as Matthias Parisiensis, a Bohemian born, who about the year of our Lord 1370. wrote a large Book of Antichrist, and proveth him to be already come, and noteth the Pope to be the same. Which Book one Illiricus a Writer in these our days hath, and promiseth to put it in Print. In this Book he doth greatly inveigh against the wickednesse and filthinesse of the Clergy, and against the neglecting of their duty in governing the Church. The Locust mentioned in the Apocalyps he faith, be the hypocrites reigning in the Church. The works of Antichrist, he saith, be these, the fables and inventions of Men reigning in the Church, the Images and feigned Reliques that are worshipped every where. Item, That men do worship every one his proper Saint and Saviour beside Christ, so that every Man and City almost hath his divers and peculiar Christ. He taught and affirmed moreover, that godlinesse and true worship of God are not bound to place, persons or times, to be heard more in this place than in another, at this time more than at another, &c. He argueth also against the Cloisterers, which leaving the only and true Saviour, set up to themselves their Franciscans, their Dominicks, and such other, and have them for their Saviours, glorying and triumphing in them, and feigning many forged lies upon them. He was greatly and much offended with Monks and Friers, for neglecting or rather burying the Word of Christ, and instead of him, for celebrating and setting up their own rules and Canons; affirming it to be much hurtful to true godlinesse, for that Priests, Monks and Nuns do account themselves only spiritual, and all other to be Lay and Secular, attributing only to themselves the opinion of holinesse, and and contemning other Men, with all their politick administration, and the office as prophane in comparison of their own. He further writeth that Antichrist hath seduced all Universities and Colledges of Learned Men, so that they teach no sincere Doctrine, neither give any light to the Christians with their teaching. Finally, he forewarneth that it will come to pass, that God yet once again will raise up godly teachers, who being fervent in the Spirit and zeal of Helias, shall disclose and refute the errors of Antichrist, and Antichrist himself, openly to the whole World. This Matthias in the said Book of Antichrist, alledgeth the Sayings and Writings of the University of Paris, also the Writings of Gulielmus de sancto Amore, and of Milizius afore noted.

Joannes Aventinger Protestant against the Pope. Anno 1380.

About the same time, or shortly after, *An.*1384. we read also of Joannes of Mountziger, Rector of the University of Ulme, who openly in the Schools in his Oration propounded that the body of Christ was not God, and therefore not to be worshipped as God with that kind of worship called Latreia, as the Sophister termeth it, meaning thereby the Sacrament not to be adored, which afterward he also defended by writing; affirming also, that Christ in his Resurrection took to him again all his blood which in his Passion he had shed. Meaning thereby to infer, that the blood of Christ, which in many places is worshipped, neither can be called the blood of Christ, neither ought to be worshipped. But by and by he was refuted and withstood by the Monks and Friers; who by this kind of idolatry were greatly inriched, till at length the Senate and Council of the City was feign to take up the matter between them.

Nilus the Archbishop of Thessalonica.

Nilus was Archbishop of Thessalonica, and lived much about this time. He wrote a long work against the Latines, that is, against such as took part and held with the Church of Rome. His first Book being written in Greek was afterward translated into Latine, and lately now into English, in this our time. In the first Chapter of this Book, he layeth all the blame and fault of the dissention and schism between the East and the West Church, upon the Pope. He affirmed that the Pope only would command what him listed, were it never so contrary to all the old and ancient Canons; that he would hear and follow no mans advice; that he would not permit any free Councils to be assembled, &c. And that therefore it was not possible, that the controversies between the Greek Church and Latine Church should be decided and determined.

In the second Chapter of his Book, he purposely maketh a very learned disputation. For first, he declareth that he, no whit at all by Gods Commandment, but only by humane law, hath any dignity, more than hath other Bishops; which dignity, the Councils, the Fathers, the Emperors have granted unto him. Neither did they grant the same for any other consideration more, or greater ordinance, than for that the same City then had the Empire of all the whole world, and not at all for that Peter ever was there, or not there.

Secondarily he declareth, That the same primacy or prerogative is not such and so great, as he and his Sycophants do usurp unto themselves. Also he refuteth the chiefest propositions of the Papists one after another. He declareth, That the Pope hath no dominion more than other Patriarchs have, and that he himself may err as well as other mortal Men; and that he is subject both to Laws and Councils as well as other Bishops. That it belonged not to him, but to the Emperor, to call general Councils; and that in Ecclesiastical causes he could establish and ordain no more than all other Bishops might. And lastly, that he getteth no more by Peter's succession, than that he is a Bishop, as all other Bishops after the Apostles be, &c.

Joachim Mi. Sacrificulus and Militarius.

I cannot among other, following here the occasion of this matter offered, leave out the memory of Jacobus Misenensis, who also wrote of the coming of Antichrist. In the same he maketh mention of a certain learned Man, whose name was Militzius, which Militzius (saith he) was a famous and worthy Preacher in Praga. He lived about the year 1366. long before Hus, and before Wickliff also. In the same his writings he declareth, how the same good Man Militzius was by the holy Spirit of God incited, and vehemently moved to search out of the holy Scriptures the manner and coming of Antichrist; and found that now in his time he was already come. And the same Jacobus saith, That the said Militzius was constrained by the Spirit of God to go up to Rome, and there publickly to preach. And that afterward before the Inquisitor he affirmed the same. That the same mighty and great Antichrist, the which the Scriptures made mention of, was already come.

He affirmed also, that the Church, by the negligence of the Pastors should become desolate; and that iniquity should abound, that is, by reason of Mammon, master of iniquity. Also, he said that there were in the Church of Christ Idols, which should destroy Jerusalem, and make the Temple desolate, but were cloked by hypocrisie. Further, that there be many which deny Christ, for that they keep silence; neither do they hear Christ, whom all the world should know, and confess his verity before Men, which also wittingly do detain the verity and justice of God.

Militzius persecuted by the Pope.

There is also a certain Bull of Pope Gregory the 11th. to the Archbishop of Praga; wherein he is commanded to excommunicate and persecute Militzius and his auditors. The same Bull declareth, that he was once a Canon of Praga, but afterward he renounced his Canonship, and began to preach; who also, for that he so manifestly preached of Antichrist to be already come, was of John Archbishop of Pragca put in Prison, declaring what his error was: To wit, how he had his company or congregation to whom he preached, and that amongst the same were certain converted Harlots, who had forsaken their evil life, and did live godly and well, which Harlots he accustomed in his Sermons to prefer before all the blessed Virgins that never offended. He taught also openly, that in the Pope, Cardinals, Bishops, Prelates, Priests, and other religious Men was no truth, neither that they taught the way of truth, but that only he, and such as held with him, taught the true way of Salvation. His Postil in some places is yet to be seen. They alledge unto him certain other inconvenient Articles, which notwithstanding, I think the adversaries, to deprave him withal, have slanderously invented against him. He had, as appeared by the foretald Bull, very many of every state and condition, as well rich as poor, that cleaved unto him.

Henricus de Hassia.

About the year of our Lord 1371. lived Henricus de Jota, whom Gerson doth much commend, and also his companion Henricus de Hassia, an excellent learned and famous Man. An Epistle of this Henricus de Hassia, which he wrote to the Bishop of Normacia, Jacobus Carrsiensis inserted in his Book De erroribus Christianorum. In the same Epistle the Author doth greatly accuse the spiritual Men of every Order, yea and the most holy of all other, the Pope himself, of many and great vices. He said, that the Ecclesiastical Governours in the Primitive Church were compared to the Sun shining in the day time; and the Politick Governours, to the Moon shining in the night. But the spiritual Men, he said that now are, do neither shine in the day time, nor yet in the night time, but rather with their darkness do obscure both the day and the night, that is, with their filthy living, ignorance and impiety. He citeth also out of the Prophecy of Hildegardis these words: Therefore doth the Devil in himself speak of you Priests; Dainty Banquets and Feasts, wherein is all voluptuousness, do I find amongst these men; Insomuch that mine eies, mine ears, my belly, and my veins be even filled with the froth of them, and my breasts stand afraid with the riches of them, &c. Lastly, saith he, they every day more and more, as Lucifer did, seek to climb higher and higher; till that every day with him more and more, they fall deeper and deeper.

Henricus de Hassia.

The Citizens of Mogantina and Bringa.

About the year of our Lord 1390. there were burned at Bringa 36 Citizens of Mogauntina, for the Doctrine of Waldensis, as Brullius affirmeth; which opinion was nothing contrary to that they held before, wherein they affirmed the Pope to be that great Antichrist, which should come; Unless peradventure the Pope feemed then to be more evidently convicted of Antichristianity, than at any other time before he was revealed to be.

A brief rehearsal of such as were put to death for holding against the Bishop of Rome, before the time of Wickliffe.

For the like cause, many other beside these are to be found in stories, which sustained the like persecutions by the Pope, if leisure would serve to perufe all that might be searched. As where Mussens recordeth of divers to the number of an hundred and forty; which in the Province of Narbone chose rather to suffer whatsoever grievous punishment by fire, than to receive the Decretals of the Romish Church, contrary to the upright truth of the Scripture.

What

What ſhould I here ſpeak of the 24 which ſuffered at Paris An. 1210? Alſo in the ſame Author is teſtified that *An.*1211. there were 400 under the name of Hereticks burned. So beheaded, Prince Americus hanged, and the Lady of the Caſtle ſtoned to death.

Moreover, in the Chronicles of Hoveden, and of other Writers, be recited a marvellous number, which in the Countries of France were burned for Hereticks. Of whom, ſome were called Publicans, ſome Catharites, ſome Paterines, and other by other names. What their aſſertions were, I find no certain report worthy of credit.

E. Aberdur a Scot burned. In Trithemius it is ſignified of one Eckhardus a Dominican Frier, who, not long before Wickliff's time, was condemned and ſuffered for Hereſie at Heidelburgh, *An.*1330. who as he differeth not much in name, ſo may he be ſuppoſed to be the ſame, whom other do name Beghardus, and is ſaid to be burned at Erphord.

Of Albingenſes becauſe ſufficient mention is made before, of whom great number were burned about the time of King John, I paſs them over.

An Hermit diſcarding ſolemn Maſs and Sacraments. Ranulphus. Likewiſe, I let paſs the Hermite, of whom John Bacon maketh relation, in his 2 Diſt. Quæſt. 1. Who, diſputing in Paul's Church, affirmed That thoſe Sacraments which were then uſed in the Church, were not inſtituted by Chriſt, An. 1306. Peradventure it was the ſame Ranulphus, mentioned in the Flower of Hiſtories, and is ſaid to die in Priſon; for the time of them doth not much differ.

In Boetius, why the Pope ſhould ſo much commend a certain King, becauſe for one man he had ſlain 400, cutting away the Generals from the reſt, I cannot judge, except the cauſe were that, which the Pope calleth Hereſie.

But to let theſe things overpaſs that be uncertain, becauſe neither is it poſſible to comprehend all them which have withſtood the corruption of the Popes See, neither have we any ſuch firm teſtimony left of their doings, credibly to ſtay upon: We will now (Chriſt willing) convert our ſtory to things more certain and undoubted; grounding upon no light reports of feeble credit, nor upon any fabulous Legends without authority; but upon the true and ſubſtantial Copies of the publick Records of the Realm, remaining yet to be ſeen under the Kings moſt ſure and faithful cuſtody. Out of the which Records ſuch matter ap-
Ke Archiepiſ. Regiæ Majeſtatis. peareth againſt the Popiſh Church of Rome, and againſt his uſurped authority, ſuch open ſtanding and crying againſt the ſaid See, and that not privily, but alſo in open Parliament, in the days of this King Edward the third; that neither will the Romiſh people of this our age eaſily think it to be true when they ſee it, neither yet ſhall they be able to deny the ſame, ſo near ſtandeth the force of thoſe Records.

Partial diſſimulation in our Hiſtories of the Church of England. Ye heard a little before, p. 433. how John Stratford Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being ſent for, and required by the King to come unto him, refuſed to do. What the cauſe was why he denied to come at the Kings ſending, is neither touched of Polydore Virgil, nor of any other Monkiſh Chronicler, writing of thoſe acts and times. Whoſe part had bin, faithfully to have diſpenced the ſimple truth of things done to their poſterity. But that which they diſſemblingly and colourably have concealed, contrary to the true law of ſtory, the true cauſe thereof we have found out by the true Parliament Rolls, declaring the ſtory thus.

Ex anno 6. Reg. Ed. 3. tit. 1. King Edward the 3*d.* in the 6th year of his Reign, hearing that Edward Baſtol had proclaimed himſelf King of Scotland, required counſel of the whole ſtate, to wit, whether it were better for him to aſſail Scotland, and to claim the demeſne or demains of the ſame; or elſe by making him party to take his advantage, and thereby to enjoy the ſervice, as other his anceſtors before him had done. For this cauſe he ſummoned a Parliament of all eſtates to meet at York, about the beginning of December. Where the King was already come, waiting for the coming of ſuch as were warned thereunto. For the want of whoſe coming the Parliament was rejourned till Monday, and from thence to Tueſday next enſuing. But forſomuch as moſt of the States were abſent, the Aſſembly required the continuance of the Parliament, until the Uraſ of Saint Hilary then enſuing at York, which was granted. And ſo a new Summons was eſpecially awarded to every perſon with ſpecial charge to attend, ſo that the affairs of the King and the Realm might not be hindred, becauſe of the debate between the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and Archbiſhop of York, for the ſuperior bearing of their croſs.

In concluſion, for all the Kings ſummoning, none other of all the Clergy came, but only the Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhop of Lincoln, and of Carliſle, and Abbots of York and Selby. So that hereunto came not the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, nor any other of his Province, and all for bearing the Croſs. Whereby the ſame was not only a loſs to the opportunity to Scotland; but alſo an importable charge to the whole eſtate by a new reaſſembly. And thus much out of the Records, whereby thou mayſt eaſily judge (prudent Reader) what is to be thought of theſe Pope-holy Catholick Church-men, being of the Popes brood and ſetting up; whom ſuch frivolous cauſes of contention ſtir up both to ſuch diſquietneſs among themſelves, and alſo to ſuch diſobedience againſt their Prince; excuſe them who can. Ex An. 6. Regis Edwardi 3.

It followeth moreover, in the ſame Records, concerning the abandoning of the Popes proviſions; how that the Commons find great default at Proviſions coming from Rome, whereby ſtrangers were enabled within this Realm to enjoy Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, and ſhew divers inconveniences inſuing thereby, namely, the decay of daily Alms, the tranſporting of the Treaſure to nouriſh the Kings enemies, the diſcovering of the ſecrets of the Realm, and the diſabling and impoveriſhing of the Clerks within this Realm.

They alſo ſhew how the Pope had in moſt covertwiſe granted to two new Cardinals within this Realm (and namely to Cardinal Peregoxs) above ten thouſand Marks of yearly Taxes. They therefore required the King and Nobles to find ſome remedy, for that they never could ne would any longer bear thoſe ſtrange oppreſſions, or elſe to help them to expel out of this Realm the Popes power by force.

Hereupon the King, Lords and Commons, ſent for the Act made at Carliſle, in the 35*th.* year of King Edward the firſt, upon the like complaint; thereby forbidding that any thing ſhould be attempted or brought into the Realm, which ſhould tend to the blemiſhing of the Kings prerogative, or to the prejudice of his Lords or Commons. And ſo at this time the Statute called the Act of Proviſion, was made by common conſent, which generally forbiddeth the bringing in of any Bulls, or ſuch Trinkets from the Court of Rome, or the uſing, enjoying, or allowing of any ſuch Bill, Proceſs, Inſtruments, or ſuch Ware, as thereby at large doth appear. Whereof ſufficiently is touched before Pag. 400.

The penalty of which Statute afterward followed in the next Parliament, *An. Reg. Ed.*1 8*tit.*32. the which penalty was this: the tranſgreſſors thereof were to lie in perpetual priſon, or to be forejured the Land; And that all Juſtices of Aſſiſe, Goal-delivery, and Oyer and Determiner may determine the ſame. Required withal, that the ſame Act of proviſion ſhould continue for ever.

Item, In the ſaid 18*th.* year of the Reign of King Edward. *tit.*34. it was moreover propounded; that if any Archbiſhop, or any perſon religious, or other, do not preſent within 4 Months ſome able Clerk to any Dignity, where any perſon hath obtained from Rome, any Proviſion, Bull, &c. but forceaſe the ſame; that then the King may preſent ſome able Clerk.

Item, It was propounded in the ſaid Parliament, *An.*18. *Reg. Ed.*3. That if any Biſhop elect ſhall refuſe to take any ſuch Biſhopricks, otherwiſe than by ſuch Bull; that then ſuch elect ſhall not enter ne enjoy his Temporalties without his ſpecial licence.

Alſo that the King ſhall diſpoſe all ſuch Benefices and Dignities of ſuch aliens his enemies, as remain in the Country of his enemies, and imploy the profits thereof to the defence of the Realm.

Moreover, it was propounded, that Commiſſioners be ſent to all the Kings Ports, to apprehend all ſuch perſons as ſhall bring in any ſuch inſtrument from Rome, and to bring them forthwith before the Council to anſwer thereto.

Propounded furthermore, that the Deanry of York, which is to be recovered by judgment in the Kings Court, may be beſtowed upon ſome able Man within the Realm, who will maintain the ſame againſt him (meaning the Cardinal, who holdeth the ſame by proviſion from Rome, being the enemy to the King, and to the Realm) and that the profits may be imployed to the defence of the Realm.

The Kings anſwer. To all which petitions anſwer was made in form following, It is agreed by the King, Earls, Barons, Juſtices, and otherwiſe Men of the Realm, that the petitions aforeſaid be made in ſufficient form of Law, according to the petitions aforeſaid.

Note that the Biſhops be not here named, and yet the Parliament ſtandeth in force. ¶ Note in this anſwer of the King (good Reader) that at the grant hereof the conſent of the Biſhops is neither named, nor expreſſed, with the other Lords of the Parliament: and yet the Parliament ſtandeth in his full force, notwithſtanding.

Notes of the Parliament holden in the Twentieth year of King Edward the Third.

Ex an. 13. Reg Ed. tit. 10. 39. The Pope proviſions refuſed. tit. 59. Aliens monks to recide, An. 20. Ed. 3. tit. 50. TO paſs further, in the twentieth year of the Kings Reign in the Parliament holden the ſame year, it was propounded; That all alien Monks ſhould avoid the Realm by the day of S. Michael, and that their livings ſhould be diſpoſed, to young Engliſh Scholars. The livings of theſe the King took to his hands.

The Liuings of ſtrangers Eccleſiaſtical taken into the Kings hands. An. 20. Ed. 3. tit. 1. The Liuings of ſtrangers diſpoſed to Engliſh men tit. 39, 33. Item, That the King may take the profits of all other ſtrangers Livings, as Cardinals and others, during their lives. The profits of whom were alſo in the Kings hands.

The Church of England fulfilled by the Pope and his Factours. That ſuch Aliens enemies, as be advanced to Livings here in England (being in their own Countries, Shoemakers, Taylers, or Chamberlains to Cardinals) ſhould depart before Michaelmas, and their Livings be diſpoſed to poor Engliſh Scholars. The Livings alſo of theſe remained in the Kings hands.

The Commons denyed to pay any payment to any Cardinals, lying in France to entreat of War or Peace, which alſo was granted of the Kings part as reaſonable.

The Act of Edward the firſt renewed. Cardinals deprived of their Livings in England. tit. 34. Item, propounded and fully agreed, That the yearly advancement of two thouſand marks (granted by the Pope to two Cardinals, out of the Provinces of Canterbury and York) ſhould be reſtrained, and ſuch as ſhall purſue therefore to be out of the Law.

Likewiſe enacted and agreed, That no Engliſh Man ſhould take any thing in farm of any Alien Religious, ne buy any of their goods, nor be of their counſel, on pain of perpetual impriſonment.

Enacted further, That no perſon ſhould bring into the Realm, to any Biſhop or other, any Bull, or any other Letters from Rome, or from any Alien; unleſs he ſhew the ſame to the Chancellor or Warden of the Cinque Ports, upon loſs of all he hath.

Finally, in the end of the ſaid Parliament the Biſhops were commanded, before the next Convocation, to certifie unto the Chancery the names of ſuch Aliens, of their Benefices, and the values of the ſame.

Ex Archiv. Ao. Reg. Ed. 3. The Popes firſt fruits and reſervations hereſied to the Realm ſith all the Kings wars. An. 19. tit. 14. THE Parliament of the 25. year, was begun the ſixth day of February, the 25*th.* year of King Edward the Third. In the which Parliament beſide other matters moe, was propounded; that remedy might be had againſt the Popes reſervations by which brocage and means the Pope received the firſt fruits of all Eccleſiaſtical Dignities: A more Conſumption to the Realm, than all the Kings Wars.

To break of all ſuch pain to Rome, tit. 4. Alſo that the like remedy might be had againſt ſuch as in the Court of Rome preſume to undo any judgment given in the Kings Court, as if they enforced to undo the Laws of the Realm.

Whereunto it was anſwered, That there was ſufficient remedy provided by Law.

Notes of the eight and thirtieth year of King Edward the Third.

The requeſt of the King for cauſes not to be determined at Rome, tit. 7. IN the Parliament holden at Weſtminſter, the 38*th.* year of Edward the Third, in the Utaves of Hilary (Simon Biſhop of Ely being Lord Chancellor) it was required by the Kings own mouth, and declared to the whole Eſtates; How daily citation and falſe ſuggeſtions were made to the Pope, for matters determinable in his Courts within the Realm, and for procuring proviſions to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, to the great deficing of the ancient Laws, to the ſpoiling of his Crown, to the daily conveying away of the Treaſure, to the waſting of Eccleſiaſtical Livings, to the withdrawing of Divine Service, Alms, Hoſpitality, and other acceptable works, and to the daily increaſe of all miſchiefs: Wherefore, in perſon by his own mouth the King required the whole Eſtate to provide hereof due remedy.

What miſchiefs come by tranſportation, cauſes to Rome, tit. eadem. It is to be noted finally in this Parliament of the 38*th.* year, that the Act of Proviſions, the firſt Parliament, although in the Printed Copy, Chap. 1, 2, 3, 4. it doth agree with the Record, in manner; yet in the ſaid Records unprinted are moe biting words againſt the Pope: a myſtery not to be known of all Men.

Notes of the fortieth year of King Edward the Third.

Ex An. Reg. Ed. 40. tit. 8. weſtminſt. IT followeth moreover in the ſaid Acts of King Edward the Third, and in the 40*th.* year of his Reign, another Parliament was called at Weſtminſter the 3*d.* of May, An. 1366. the Biſhop of Ely being Lord Chancellor and Speaker. Who in the ſecond day of the ſaid Aſſembly in the preſence of the King, Lords and Commons, declared; how the day before generally they underſtood the cauſe of this their Aſſembly, and now more particularly ſhould underſtand the ſame; ſpecially how that the King underſtood, that the Pope (for the homage which King John made to the See of Rome for the Realms of England and Ireland, and for the tribute by him granted) meant by Proceſs to cite the King to Rome, to anſwer thereto. Wherein the King required their advices, what were beſt for him to do, if any ſuch thing were attempted. The Biſhops by their ſelves required a reſpite of anſwer, until the next day. So did the Lords and Commons every of them by their ſelves.

The Pope miſdeth to the King up by Proceſs.

King John could not without conſent of Parliament become tributary to the Pope. tit. 8. The ſame next day the whole Eſtates re-aſſembled together, and by common conſent enacted in effect following, viz. Foraſmuch as neither King John, nor any other King, could bring his Realm and people in ſuch thraldom and ſubjection, but by common aſſent of Parliament, the which was not done; and therefore was done againſt his Oath at his Coronation (whether many other cauſe) It agreed therefore the Pope ſhould attempt any thing againſt the King, by Proceſs or other matter indeed; That the King with all his Subjects ſhould with all their force and power reſiſt the ſame. Agreed by parliament, that the King by force ſhould reſiſt the Pope.

Here moreover is not to be omitted, how in the ſaid preſent Parliament the Univerſities of Oxford and Cambridge on the one ſide, and the Friers of the four Orders of Mendicants in the ſaid Univerſities on the other ſide, made long complaints the one againſt the other to the King in Parliament, and in the end ſubmitted themſelves to the Kings Order. Braul between the four orders of Friers and the two Univerſities Ex tit. 10.

After which, the King upon full diſgeſting of the whole matter (by aſſent of Parliament) took order; that as well the Chancellor and Scholars, as the Friers of thoſe Orders in the ſaid Univerſities, ſhould in all Graces and other School Exerciſes uſe each other in friendly wiſe, without any rumor as before. That none of thoſe Orders ſhould receive any Scholars into their ſaid Orders, being under the age of eighteen years.

The Friers ſhall not procure Bulls, but from the Kings Order only in all their controverſies, Parliament, tit. 12. That the ſaid Friers ſhall take no advantage, ne procure Bulls, or other Proceſs from Rome, againſt the ſaid Univerſities, or proceed therein.

Notes of the fiftieth year of King Edward the Third.

IN proceſs of the foreſaid Acts and Rolls, it followeth more, that in the 50*th.* year of the Reign of King Edward the Third, the year of our Lord 1376. another great Parliament was aſſembled at Weſtminſter the 24*th.* day of April: where, Sir John Knyvet being Lord Chancellor of England, a certain long Bill was put up againſt the uſurpations of the Pope; as being the cauſe of all the plagues, murrions, famine, and poverty of the Realm, ſo as thereby was not left the third perſon, or other commodity within the Realm that lately was.

2. That the Taxes paid to the Pope of Rome for Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, do amount to five-fold as much, as the Tax of all profits which appertain to the King, by the year, of his whole Realm; And that for ſome one Biſhoprick or other Dignity, the Pope, by way of tranſlation and death, hath three, four, or five ſeveral Taxes.

That the brokers of that ſinful City for money promote many Caitiffs (being altogether unlearned and unworthy) to a thouſand Marks Living by year, where the the learned and worthy can hardly obtain twenty Marks, whereby learning decayeth.

4. That Aliens (enemies to this Land) who never ſaw ne care not to ſee their Pariſhioners, have thoſe Livings, whereby they deſpiſe Gods ſervice, and convey away the Treaſure, and are worſe than Jews or Saracens.

5. Alſo it was put up in the ſaid Bill to be conſidered, That the Laws of the Church would have ſuch Livings to be beſtowed for Charity only, without praying or paying.

6. That reaſon would that Livings given of Devotion ſhould be beſtowed in Hoſpitality.

7. That God had committed his ſheep to the Pope, to be paſtured, and not ſhorn or ſhaven.

The Pope giveth example to fell Benefices, an. 99.

8. That Lay Patrons, perceiving the Covetouſneſs and Simony of the Pope, do thereby learn to ſell their Benefices unto Beaſts, none otherwiſe than Chriſt was ſold to the Jews.

9. That there is none ſo rich a Prince in Chriſtendom, that hath the fourth part of ſo much treaſure, as the Pope hath out of this Realm for Churches, moſt ſinfully.

10. Over and beſides in the ſaid Bill, repearing again the tender zeal for the honour of the Church; were declared and particularly named, all the plagues which have juſtly fallen upon this Realm, for ſuffering the ſame Church to be ſo defaced, with declaration that it will daily increaſe without redreſs.

Reformation of the church of England deſired in the Parliament, an. 101.

11. Whereupon with much perſwaſion this was deſired, to help to re-edifie the ſame: and the rather for that this was the year of Jubile, the 50*th*. year of the Kings Reign, the year of joy and gladneſs, than the which there could be no greater.

12. The means how to begin this was to write two Letters to the Pope; the one in Latine under the Kings Seal, the other in French under the Seals of the Nobles, importing their particularities, and requiring redreſs; of the which Letter of the Lords the effect may be ſeen in a like Letter mentioned before, pag. 436.

Acts made for no money to be tranſported, an. 103.

13. And for a further accompliſhment hereof, to enact, that no money were carried forth of the Realm by Letter of Lumbardy or otherwiſe, on pain of forfeiture and impriſonment, and to Enact the Articles hereafter enſuing.

14. The King hath heretofore by Statute provided ſufficient remedy, and otherwiſe purſueth the ſame with the Holy Father the Pope, and ſo mindeth to do from time to time, until he hath obtained as well for the matters before, as for the Articles enſuing, being in a manner all one.

Againſt the Pope, Legates and Collectors, an. 104.

17. That Cardinals and other Aliens remaining at Rome, whereof one Cardinal is Dean of York, another of Salisbury, another of Lincoln, another Archdeacon of Canterbury, another Archdeacon of Dureſme, another Archdeacon of Suffolk, another Archdeacon of York, another Prebendary of Thame and Noſſington, another Prebendary of Bucks in the Church of York, have divers of the beſt Dignities of England and have ſent over to them yearly twenty thouſand Marks, over and above that which Engliſh Brokers lying here have.

The Law of Premunire to be renewed.

21. To renew all the Statutes againſt Proviſors from Rome; ſith that the Pope reſerveth all the Benefices of the world for his own proper gifts, and hath this year created twelve new Cardinals; ſo as now there are thirty, where was wont to be but twelve, and all thoſe Cardinals, except two or three, are the Kings enemies.

Againſt the Popes uſurpation, an. 111.

22. That the Pope in time will give the Temporal Manors of thoſe Dignities to the Kings Enemies, ſith he ſo dayly uſurpeth upon the Realm, and the Kings Regalities.

23. That all Houſes and Corporations of Religion, who unto the Kings Reign now had free Election of heads, the Pope hath incroached the ſame to himſelf.

24. That in all Legacies from the Pope, whatſoever, the Engliſh Clergy beareth the charge of the Legates, and all for the goodneſs of our money.

25. And ſo it appeareth, that if the money of the Realm were as plentiful as ever it was; the Collectors aforeſaid, with the Proctors of Cardinals, would ſoon convey the ſame.

26. For remedy hereof it may be provided, That no ſuch Collector or Proctor do remain in England, on pain of life and member. And that no Engliſh-man, on the like pain, become any ſuch Collector or Proctor, or remain at Rome.

27. For better information hereof, and namely touching the Popes Collector, for that the whole Clergy being obedient unto him, dare not diſpleaſe him: It were good, that Sir John Stronſale, Parſon of Saint Botolphs in Holborn, may be ſent to come before the Lords and Commons of this Parliament. Who being ſtraitly charged, can declare much more; for that he ſerved the ſame Collector in Houſe five years.

Ex actis Parliamenti in An. Reg. Edw. Tertii 15. an. 24.

In theſe Rolls and Records of ſuch Parliament as were in this Kings time continued, divers other things are to be noted much worthy to be marked, and not to be ſuppreſſed in ſilence. Wherein the Reader may learn and underſtand the ſtate of the Kings juriſdiction here within this Realm, not to be ſtrained in thoſe days (although the Pope then ſeemed to be in his chief ruff) as afterward ſince in other Kings days was ſeen. As may appear in the Parliament of the fifteenth year of this King Edward the Third, and in the Twenty fourth Article of the ſaid Parliament: where it is to be read, That the Kings Officers and Temporal Juſtices did then both puniſh Uſurers, and impeached the Officers of the Church for bribery, and for taking money for temporal pain, probate of Wills, ſolemnity of Marriage, &c. all the pretended liberties of the Popiſh Church to the contrary notwithſtanding.

Furthermore, in the Parliament of the 25*th*. year it appeareth, That the liberties of the Clergy, and their exemptions in claiming the deliverance of Men by their Book under the name of Clerks, ſtood then in little force, as appeared by one Hauksine Honby Knight: who, for impriſoning one of the Kings Subjects till he made fine of twenty pound, was therefore executed, notwithſtanding the liberty of the Clergy, which by his Book would have ſaved him, but could not.

The like alſo appeared by judgment given againſt a Prieſt at Nottingham, for killing of his Maſter.

Beſides theſe truths and notes of the Kings Parliaments, wherein may appear the toward proceedings of this King and all his Commons againſt the pretended Church of Rome; this is moreover to be added to the commendation of the King, how in the Volumes of the Acts and Rolls of the King it appeareth; That the ſaid King Edward the Third ſent alſo John Wickliff, B. cader then of Divinity Lecture in Oxford, with certain other Lords and Ambaſſadors over into the parts of Italy, to treat with the Popes Legates concerning affairs betwixt the King and the Pope with full commiſſion: the tenor whereof here followeth expreſſed.

John Wickliff ſent with the Kings Ambaſſadors by the King.

R EX Univerſis, ad quorum notitiam præſentes literæ perveverint, &c.

In Engliſh thus:

The King to all and ſingular to whom theſe preſents ſhall come, Greeting. Know ye, that we repoſing aſſured confidence in the fidelity and wiſdom of the Reverend Father John Biſhop of Bangor, and other our loving and faithful ſubjects, M. John Wickliff, Reader of the Divinity Lecture, M. John Guntar Dean of Segobyen, and M. Simon Moulton Doctor of Law, Sir William Burton Knights, M. John Belknap, and M. John Honnington; have directed them as our Ambaſſadors and ſpecial Commiſſioners to the parts beyond the Seas. Whereupon of late we ſent hereafore the ſaid Biſhop, and William Ughtred Monk of Dureſme, and M. John Shepy to the See Apoſtolical: And hereof to make full relation of all things done and paſt in the ſaid Aſſembly, that all ſuch things which may tend to the honour of Holy Church and the advancements of our Crown and this our Realm, may by the aſſiſtance of God and wiſdom of the See Apoſtolical be brought to good effect, and accompliſhed accordingly. Witneſs our ſelves, &c. at London, dated the 26*th*. day of July in the forty eighth year of our Reign.

By the which it is to be noted, what good will the King then bare to the faid Wickliff, and what ſmall regard he had to the ſinful See of Rome.

Of the which John Wickliff, becauſe we are now approached to his time, it remaineth conſequently for our Story to entreat of, ſo as we have heretofore done of other like valiant Souldiers of Chriſts Church before him.

John Wickliff.

Here begineth the Hiſtory of John Wickliff.

AFter all theſe heretofore recited, by whom (as ye have heard) it pleaſed the Lord ſomething to work againſt the Biſhop of Rome, and to weaken the pernitious ſuperſtition of the Friers: it now remaineth conſequently, following the courſe of years, orderly to enter into the ſtory and tractation of John Wickliff our Country-man, and other moe of his time, and ſame Country, whom the Lord (with the like zeal and power of ſpirit) raiſed up here in England, to detect more fully and amply the poyſon of the Popes Doctrine, and falſe Religion ſet up by the Friers. In whoſe opinions and aſſertions, albeit ſome blemiſhes perhaps may be noted; yet ſuch blemiſhes they be, which rather declare him to be a Man that might err, than which directly did fight againſt Chriſt our Saviour, as the Popes proceedings and Friers did. And what Doctor or learned Man hath been from the prime age of the Church ſo perfect, ſo abſolutely ſure, in whom no opinion hath ſometime ſwarved awry? And yet be the ſaid Articles of his neither in number ſo many, nor yet ſo groſs in themſelves and ſo Cardinal, as thoſe Cardinal enemies of Chriſt perchance do give them out to be; if his Books which they abolished, were remaining to be conferred with thoſe blemiſhes, which they have wreſted to the worſt, as evil-will never ſaid the beſt.

The blemiſh's of Wickliff made worſe than they be.

This is certain and cannot be denied, but that he, being the publick Reader of Divinity in the Univerſity of Oxford, was for the rude time wherein he lived, ſtrongly reputed for a great Clerk, a deep School-man, and no leſs expert in all kind of Philoſophy. The which doth not only appear by his own most famous and learned Writings and Monuments, but also by the confession of Walden his most cruel and bitter Enemy. Who in a certain Epistle written unto Pope Martin the fifth, saith, That he was wonderfully astonished at his most strong Arguments, with the places of authority which he had gathered, with the vehemency and force of his reasons, &c. And thus much out of Walden. It appeareth by such as have observed the order and course of times, that this Wickliff flourished about the year of our Lord 1371, Edward the Third Reigning in England: for thus we do find in the Chronicles of Caxton: In the year of our Lord { Ann. 1371. } (saith he) Edward the Third, King of England in his Parliament was against the Popes Clergy: He willingly hearkned and gave ear to the voyces and tales of Hereticks with certain of his council: conceiving and following sinister opinions against the Clergy. Wherefore (afterward) he tatted and suffered much adversity and trouble. { Ann. 1372. } And not long after in the year of our Lord (saith he) 1372, he wrote unto the Bishop of Rome, that he should not by any means intermeddle any more within his Kingdom, as touching the reservation or distribution of Benefices, and that all such Bishops as were under his dominion, should injoy their former and antient liberty, and be confirmed of their Metropolitans, as hath been accustomed in times past, &c. Thus much writeth Caxton. But as touching the just number of the year and time, we will not be very curious or carfil about it at this present. This is out of all doubt, that at what time all the world was in most desperate and vile estate, and that the lamentable ignorance and darkness of God his Truth had over-shadowed the whole Earth, this Man stepped out like a valiant Champion, unto whom it may justly be applyed that is spoken in the Book called Ecclesiasticus, of one Simon the Son of Onias: Even as the morning Star being in the midst of a Cloud, and as the Moon being full in her course, and as the bright beams of the Sun; so doth he shine and glister in the Temple and Church of God.

The time of Iohn Wickliff.

Ex Cax-ton.

Thus doth Almighty God continually succor and help, when all things are in despair: being always (accordding to the Prophecy of the Psalm) a helper in time of need. The which thing never more plainly appeared, than in these later days and extream age of the Church; when as the whole state and condition, not only of worldly things, but also of Religion, was depraved and corrupted. That like as the disease named Lethargus amongst the Phisitians, even so the state of Religion amongst the Divines, was past all Mans help and remedy. The only name of Christ remained amongst the Christians, but his true and lively Doctrine was as far unknown unto the most part, as his name was common unto all Men. As touching Faith, Confolation, the end and use of the Law, the Office of Christ, of our impotency and weakness, of the Holy Ghost, of the greatness and strength of Sin, of true Works, Grace and free justification by Faith, of liberty of a Christian Man, wherein consisteth and resteth the sum and matter of our profession, there was no mention, nor any word almost spoken of. Scripture, Learning, and Divinity, was known but unto a few, and that in the Schools only, and there also turned and converted almost all into Sophistry. Instead of Peter and Paul, Men occupied their time in studying Aquinas and Scotus, and the Master of Sentences. The world leaving and forsaking the lively power of Gods spiritual Word and Doctrine, was altogether led and blinded with outward Ceremonies and humane Traditions, wherein the whole scope, in a manner, of all Christian perfection did consist and depend. In these was all the hope of obtaining salvation fully fixed: hereunto all things were attributed. Insomuch that scarcely any other thing was seen in the Temples or Churches taught or spoken of in Sermons, or finally intended or gone about in their whole life, but only heaping up of certain shadowed Ceremonies upon Ceremonies, neither was there any end of there heaping.

A description of Wickliff's time.

The people were taught to worship no other thing but that which they did see; and did see almoit nothing which they did not worship.

The Church being degenerated from the true Apostolick institution above all measure (reserving only the name of the Apostolick Church, but far from the truth thereof in very deed) did fall into all kind of extreme tyranny; whereas the poverty and simplicity of Christ was changed into cruelty and abomination of life. Instead of the Apostolick gifts and continual labors and travels, sloathfulness and ambition was crept in amongst the Priests. Beside all this, there arose and sprung up a thousand sorts and fashions of strange Religions, being the only root and Well-head of all superstition. How great abuses and depravations were crept into the Sacraments, at what time they were compelled to worship similitudes and signs of things for the very things themselves: and to adore such things as were instituted and ordained only for memorials? Finally, what thing was there in the whole state of Christian Religion so sincere, so found and pure, which was not defiled and spotted with some kind of superstition? Besides this, with how many bonds and snares of daily new fangled Ceremonies were the silly Consciences of Men, redeemed by Christ to liberty, snared and snarled? Insomuch that there could be no great difference almoit perceived between Christianity and Jewishness, save only the name of Christ: so that the state and condition of the Jews might seem somewhat more tolerable than ours. There was nothing sought for out of the true Fountains, but out of the durty puddels of the Philistines; The Christian people were wholly carried away as it were by the Noses, with meer decrees and constitutions of Men, even whither as pleased the Bishops to lead them, and not as Christs Will did direct them. All the whole world was filled and over-whelmed with error and darkness. And no great marvel: for why, the simple and unlearned people, being far from all knowledge of the Holy Scripture, thought it sufficient enough for them, to know only these things which were delivered them by their Pastors and Sheepherds, and they on the other part taught in a manner nothing else, but such things as came forth of the Court of Rome; whereof the moit part tended to the profit of their Order, more than to the glory of Christ.

All good things defiled and coloured with superstitions.

Pope Urban.

Lambert Pope.

The Christian Faith was efteemed or counted none other thing then, but that every Man should know that Christ once suffered, that is to say, That all Men should know and understand that thing which the Divels themselves also knew. Hypocrisie was counted for wonderful Holiness. All Men were so addict unto outward shews, that even they themselves, which profeised the moit absolute and singular knowledge of the Scriptures, scarcely did understand or know any other thing. And this did evidently appear, not only in the common fort of Doctors and Teachers, but also in the very heads and Captains of the Church; whose whole Religion and Holiness, consisted in a manner in the observing of days, meats, and garments, and such like Rhetorical circumstances, as of place, time, person, &c. Hereof sprang so many sorts and fashions of Vestures and Garments; so many differences of colours and meats, with so many Pilgrimages to several places, as though S. Iames at Compostella could do that, which Christ could not do at Canterbury: or else, that God were not of like power and strength in every place, or could not be found, but being sought for by running gaddding hither and thither. Thus the Holiness of the whole year was transported and put off unto the Lent season. No Country or Land was counted Holy, but only Palestina, where Christ had walked himself with his corporal feet. Such was the blindness of that time, that Men did strive and fight for the Crois at Hierusalem, as if it had been for the chief and only force and strength of our Faith. It is a wonder to read the Monuments of the former times, to see and understand what great troubles and calamities this Cross had caused almoit in every Christian Commonwealth. For the Romish Champions never ceased, by writing, admonishing, and counselling, yea and by quarrelling, to move and stir up Princes to mind War and Battel, even as though the Faith and belief of the Gospel were of small force, or little effect without that wooden Cross. This was the cause of the expedition of the moit noble Prince King Richard unto Hierusalem. Who being taken in the same journey, and delivered unto the Emperor, could scarcely be ranlomed home again for 30 Marks, pag. 280. In the same enterprise or journey, Frederickus the Emperor of Rome, a Man of moit excellent vertue, was much endammaged, Anno. 1179. And also Philip the King of France scarcely returned home again in safety,

The Captains of the Church so blinded as well as the blindest sort.

Palestina deemed holy for Christs walking there.

{ KING Edw. 3 } safety, and not without great losses: so much did they esteem the recovery of the Holy City and Cross.

Upon this alone all Mens eyes, minds, and devotions were so set and bent, as though either there were no other Cross but that, or that the Cross of Christ were in no other place but only at Jerusalem. Such was the blindness and superstition of those days, which understood or knew nothing but such as were outwardly seen: whereas the profession of our Religion standeth in much other higher matters and greater mysteries. What is the cause why that Urbanus did so vex and torment himself, because that Antioch, with the the Holy Cross, was lost out of the hands of the Christians. For so we do find it in the Chronicles, at what time as Jerusalem with King Guido and the Cross of our Lord was taken, and under the power of the Sultan, Urbanus took the matter so grievously, that for very sorrow he died. In whose place succeeded Lambertus, which was called Gregory the eighth, by whose motion it was decreed by the Cardinals, that (letting apart all riches and voluptuousness) they should Preach the Cross of Christ, and by their Poverty and Humility first of all should take the Cross upon them, and go before others into the Land of Jerusalem. These are the words of the History; whereby it is evident unto the vigilant Reader, unto what grosiness the true knowledg of the spiritual Doctrine of the Gospel was degenerate and grown in those days; how great blindness and darkness was in those days, even in the first primacy, and supremacy of the Bishop of Rome: as though the outward succession of Peter and the Apostles had been of greater force and effect to the matter. What doth it force in what place Peter did rule or not rule? It is much more to be regarded that every Man should labour and study with all their endeavour to follow the life and confession of Peter: And that Man seemeth unto me to be true succesior of Peter against whom the Gates of Hell shall not prevail. For if that Peter in the Gospel do bear the type and figure of the Christian Church (as all Men in a manner do affirm) what more foolish or vain thing can there be; than through private usurpation to restrain and to bind that unto one Man, which by the appointment of the Lord, is of it self free and open to so many?

The knowledg of the Gospel grosly expounded by the Romanists.

The rising up of Wickliff in the times of King Edw. 3.

Thus in these so great and troublous times and horrible darknesses of ignorance, what time there seemed in a manner to be no one so little a spark of pure Doctrine left or remaining; this aforesaid Wickliff by Gods providence sprung and rose up: through whom the Lord would first waken and raise up again the world, which was overmuch drowned and whelmed in the deep streams of humane Traditions. Thus you have here the time of Wickliff's original.

Wickliff a Divine of Oxford.

Which Wickliff, after he had now a long time profeffed Divinity in the University of Oxford, and perceiving the true Doctrine of Christs Gospel to be adulterate and defiled with so many filthy inventions of Bishops, sects of Monks, and dark errors: And that he after long debating and deliberating with himself (with many secret sighs, and bewailing in his mind the general ignorance of the whole world) could no longer suffer or abide the same; he at the last determined with himself to help and to remedy such things as he saw to be wide and out of the way. But forasmuch as he saw that this dangerous medling could not be attempted or stirred without great trouble, neither that these things, which had been so long time with use and custom rooted and grafted in Mens minds, could be suddenly plucked up or taken away, he thought with himself that this matter should be done by little and little. Wherefore he taking his original at small occasions, thereby opened himself a way or mean to greater matters. And first he affailed his adversaries in Logical and Metaphysical questions, disputing with them of the first form and fashion of things, of the increase of time, and of the intelligible substance of a creature, with other such like Sophems of no great effect: but yet notwithstanding, it did not a little help and furnish him, which minded to dispute of greater matters. So in these matters first began Kenningham (a Carmelite) to dispute and argue against John Wickliff.

By these originals, the way was made unto greater points, so that at the length he came to touch the matters of the Sacraments, and other abuses of the Church. Touching which things this holy Man took great pains, protesting (as they said) openly in the Schools, That it was his chief and principal purpose and intent, to revolve and call back the Church from her Idolatry to some better amendment; especially in the matter of the Sacrament of the body and blood of Christ. But this Bile or fore could not be touched without the great grief and pain of the whole world. For first of all, the whole glut of Monks and begging Friers were set on a rage and madness, which (even as Hornets with their sharp stings) did assail this good Man on every side; fighting (as is said) for their Altars, Paunches and Bellies. After them the Priests, and then after them the Archbishop took the matter in hand, being then Simon Sudbury; who for the same cause deprived him of his Benefice, which then he had in Oxford. Notwithstanding, he being somewhat friended and supported by the King, as appeareth, continued and bare out the malice of the Friers, and of the Archbishop all this while of his first beginning, till about the year of our Lord, 1377. After which time, now to prosecute likewise of his troubles and sonflict, first I must fetch about a little compass, as requisite is, to infer some mention of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster the Kings Son, Lord Henry Percy, which were his special maintainers.

Wickliff deprived of his Benefice at Oxford by Simon Sudbury.

Ex Chron. de Abbend.

Duke of Lancaster, great maintainers of Wickliff.

As years and time grew on, King Edward the Third which had Reigned now about 51 years, after the decease of Prince Edward his Son, who departed the year before, was stucken in great age, and in such feebleness withal, that he was unwieldy through lack of strength to govern the affairs of the Realm. Wherefore a Parliament being called the year before his death, it was there put by the Knights and other the Burgesses of the Parliament because of the misgovernment of the Realm (by certain greedy persons about the King, raking all to themselves, without seeing any justice done) that twelve sage and discreet Lords, and Peers, such as were free from note of all avarice, should be placed as Tutors about the King, to have the doing and disposing under him (six at one time, and in their absence, six at another) of matters pertaining to the publick Regiment. Here by the way, I omit to speak of Alice Perris the wicked Harlot, which as the fory reporteth) had bewitched the Kings heart, and governed all, and sate upon causes her self through the diveliih help of a Frier Dominck: who by the Duke of Lancaster was caused to be taken, and was convicted, and should have suffered for the same, had not the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Friers (more regarding the liberty of their Church, than the punishment of vice) reclaimed him for their own prisoner. This Alice Perris, notwithstanding she was banished by this Parliament from the King, yet afterward she came again, and left him not, till at his death she took all his Rings upon his fingers and other jewels from him, and so fled away like an Harlot. But this of her by the way.

Alice Perris the Kings Concubine. The King bewitched by a woman through the help of a Frier.

The propets ey of an Whore.

These twelve Governors by Parliament aforesaid being appointed to have the tuition of the King, and to attend the publick affairs of the Realm, remained for a certain space about him; till afterward it fo fell out, that they being again removed, all the Regiment of the Realm next under the King, was committed to the Duke of Lancaster the Kings Son. For as yet Richard, the Son of Prince Edward, lately departed, was very young and under age.

Twelve Governors assigned about the King.

This Duke of Lancaster had in his heart of long time conceived a certain displeasure against the Popish Clergy; whether for corrupt and impure Doctrine joyned with like abominable excess of life, or for what other cause, it is not precisely expressed. Only by story the cause thereof may be guessed to rise by William Wicham Bishop of Winchester. The matter is this.

Ex Chron. Monasterii Abbend.

The Bishop of Winchester (as the saying went then) was reported to affirm, That the foresaid John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, was not the Son of King Edward, nor of the Queen. Who, being in Travail at Gaunt, had no Son (as he said) but a Daughter: which the same time by lying upon of the Mother in the Bed, was there smothered. Whereupon, the Queen, fearing the Kings displeasure, caused a certain Man Child of a Woman of Flanders (born the very same time) to be conveyed, and brought unto her instead of her Daughter aforesaid. And so she brought up the Child whom she bare not, who now is called Duke of Lancaster. And this (said the Bishop) did the Queen tell him, lying in extreames on her death-bed under seal of Confession; charging him if the said Duke should ever aspire to get the Crown, or if the Kingdom by any means should fall unto him, he then should manifest the same, and declare it to the world, that the said Duke of Lancaster was no part of the Kings blood, but a false heir of the King. This slanderous report of the wicked Bishop, as it favoureth of a contumelious lye, so seemeth it to proceed of a subtile zeal toward the Popes Religion, meaning falshood. For the foresaid Duke, by favouring of Wickliff, declared himself to be a professed enemy against the Popes profession: Which thing was then not unknown, neither unmarked of the Prelates and Bishops then in England. But the sequel of the Story thus followed:

This slanderous villany of the Bishops report being blazed abroad, and coming to the Dukes ear: he therewith being not a little discontented (as no marvel was) fought again, by what means he could, to be revenged of this forenamed Bishop. In conclusion, the Duke having now all the government of the Realm under the King his Father, in his own hands, so pursued the Bishop of Winchester, that by Act of Parliament he was condemned and deprived of all his Temporal Goods; which Goods were assigned to Prince Richard of Burdeaux, the next inheritor of the Crown after the King; and furthermore he inhibited the said Bishop not to approach near to the Court by twenty miles. Further as touching this Bishop, the story thus proceedeth: Not long after in the year of our Lord, 1377, a Parliament was called by the means of the Duke of Lancaster, upon certain causes and respects: in which Parliament great request and fute was made by the Clergy for the deliverance of the Bishop of Winchester. At length when a Subsidy was asked in the Kings name of the Clergy, and request also made in the Kings behalf for speedy expedition to be made for the diffolving of the Parliament, the Archbishop therefore accordingly convented the Bishops for the tractation thereof. To whom the Bishops with great lamentation complaining for lack of their fellow and Brother the Bishop of Winchester: Whose injury, said they, did derogate from the liberties of the whole Church: And therefore denied to joyn themselves in tractation of any such matters, before all the members together were united with the head. And (seeing the matter touched them all together in common, as well him as them) they would not otherwise do. And seemed moreover to be moved against the Archbishop for that he was not more stout in the cause, but suffered himself so to be cited of the Duke.

Wickham B. of Wint. deprived.

Bishops hold together. Liberties of the Church a great matter.

The Archbishop although having sufficient cause to excuse himself, wherefore not to send for him (as also he did) because of the perils which might ensue thereof: yet being inforced and perswaded thereunto, by the importunity of the Bishops, directed down his Letters to the foresaid Bishop of Winchester, willing him to resort unto the Convocation of the Clergy. Who being glad to obey the same, was received with great joy of the other Bishops. And at length by the means of Alice Perris, the Kings Paramour above mentioned, (giving to her a good quantity of money) the said Winchester was restored to his own Temporalties again.

B. of Winch. sent for to the convocation.

John Wickliff sent for by the Duke of Lancaster.

As the Bishops had thus sent for Winchester, the Duke in the mean time had sent for John Wickliff who, as is said, was then the Divinity Reader in Oxford, and had commenced in sundry acts and disputations contrary to the form and teaching of the Popes Church in many things: who also for the same had been deprived of his Benefice, as hath been afore touched. The opinions which he began in Oxford, first in his Lectures and Sermons to inveat of, and wherefore he was deprived, were these: That the Pope had no more power to Excommunicate any man than hath another. That if it be given by any person to the Pope to Excommunicate, yet to absolve the same is as much in the power of another Priest as in his. He affirmed moreover, That neither the King nor any Temporal Lord could give any perpetuity to the Church, or to any Ecclesiastical person: for that when such Ecclesiastical persons do sin, habitualiter, continuing in the same still, the Temporal powers ought and may meritoriously take away from them, that before hath been bestowed upon them. And that he proved to have been practised before here in England by William Rufus. Which thing (said he) if he did lawfully, why may not the same also be practised now? If he did it unlawfully, then doth the Church err (saith he) and doth unlawfully in praying for him. But of his assertions more shall fallow (Christ willing) hereafter. The story which ascribed to him these assertions being taken out (as I take it) of the Monastery of S. Albans, addeth withal: That in his teaching and preaching he was very eloquent, but a dissembler (saith he) and an hypocrite. Why he furnisseth him to be an hypocrite, the cause was this:

{KING} {Edw. 3}

Example of W. Rufus.

Eulip. Monachus Dunelmi.

First, Because he reforted much to the Orders of the begging Friers, frequenting and extolling the perfection of their poverty.

Secondly, Because he and his fellows usually accustomed in their preaching to go barefoot, and in simple ruffet Gowns.

By this I suppose, may sufficiently appear to the indifferent, the nature and condition of Wickliff, how far it was from the ambition and pride, which in the slanderous Pen of Polydore Virgil importing in his 25th Book of him, that because he was not preferred to higher honors and dignities of the Church (conceiving therefore indignation against the Clergy) he became their mortal enemy. How true was this, he only knoweth best, that rightly shall judge both the one and the other.

Striving for the Lords to pass by the people.

The slanderous Pen of Polydore.

In the mean time, by other circumstances and parts of his life, we may also partly conjecture what is to be thought of the Man. But how soever it was in him either true or false; yet it had been Polydores part either not so intemperately to have abused his Pen, or at least to have shewed some greater authority and ground of that his report. For to follow nothing else but flying fame, so rashly to defame a Man whose life he knoweth not, is not the part of a faithful Story-writer.

W. Courtney Bishop of London. The words of the Bishop of London to the Lord Percy.

Wickliff falsely charged with ambitiously Polydore.

But to return from whence we digressed. Beside these his opinions and affertions above recited, with other moe, which are hereafter to be brought in order; he began also then something nearly to touch the matter of the Sacrament, proving that in the said Sacrament, the accidents of Bread remained not without the subject of substance; both by the Holy Scriptures, and also by the authority of the Doctors, but specially by such as were most ancient. As for the later Writers, that is to say, such as have written upon that argument under the thousand years since Christs time, he utterly refused; saying, That after these years Satan was loosed and set at liberty. And that since that time the life of Man hath been most subject and in danger of errors: and that the simple and plain truth doth appear and consist in the Scriptures, whereunto all humane Traditions whatsoever they be, must be referred, and specially such as are set forth and published now of late years. This was the cause why he refused the later Writers of Decretals, leaning only to the Scriptures and ancient Doctors: most stoutly affirming out of them, That in the Sacrament of the body which is celebrate, with bread, the accidents not to be present without the substance. That is to say, That the body of Christ is not present without the bread, as the common sort of Priests in those days did dream. As for his Arguments what they were, we will shortly at more opportunity by Gods Grace, declare them in another place. But herein the truth (as the Poet speaketh very truly) had gotten John Wickliff great displeasure and hatred at many Mens hands; and especially of the Monks and richest sort of Priests.

Wickliff gloseth in touching the matter of the Sacrament.

The later writers of the Church to be misdoubted. The accidents not to be in the Sacrament without the substance.

Albeit through the favour and supportation of the Duke of Lancaster, and Lord Henry Percy, he persisted hitherto in some mean quiet against the Wolvish violence and cruelty: Till at last about the year of our Lord, 1376, the Bishops still urging and inciting their Archbishop Simon Sudbury, who before had deprived him, and afterward prohibited him also not to stir any more in those sorts of matters, had obtained by Proces and order of Citation to have him brought before them. Whereunto both place and time for him to appear, after their usual form, was to him affigned.

The

{KING} {Edw. 3}

The Duke having intelligence that Wickliff his client should come before the Bishops, fearing that he being but one, was too weak against such a multitude, calleth to him, out of the orders of Friers, four Bachelors of Divinity, out of every order one to join them with Wickliff also for more suretie. When the day was come assigned to the said Wickliff to appear, which day was Thursday, the nineteenth of February: John Wickliff went accompanied with the four Friers aforesaid, and with them also the Duke of Lancaster, and Lord Henry Percy, Lord Marshal of England; the said Lord Percy also going before them to make room and way where Wickliff should come.

B. Hist. Mauric. D. Albani ex commendat. D. Matth. Archiepisc. Cant.

Thus Wickliff (through the Providence of God) being sufficiently guarded, was coming to the place where the Bishops sate; whom by the way they animated and exhorted not to fear nor shrink awhit at the company of the Bishops there present, who were all unlearned (said they) in respect of them. For so proceed the words of my foresaid Author, whom I follow in this Narration: neither that he should dread the concourse of the people, whom they would themselves affist and defend, in such fort as he should take no harm. With these words, and with the assistance of the Nobles, Wickliff, in heart incouraged, approached to the Church of St. Paul in London, where a main press of people was gathered to hear what should be said and done. Such was there the frequency and throng of the multitude, that the Lords (for all the puissance of the high Marshal) unneth with great difficulty could get way through: Insomuch that the Bishop of London (whose name was William Courtney) seeing the stir that the Lord Marshal kept in the Church among the people, speaking to the Lord Percy, said, That if he had known before what Misfries he would have kept in the Church, he would have stopped him out from coming there. At which words of the Bishop the Duke disdaining not a little, answered to the Bishop again, and said, That he would keep such mastry there, though he said nay.

Wickliff sent for by the Bishops.

Wickliff falsely charged to sit downbefore the Bishops. Wickliff defended by the Bishop of London to sit down, setteth between the Lord Marshal and Bishop of London. The people set in a fire. Strife between the Duke of Lancaster and Bishop of London. The Bishop overpoweth the Duke in scolding.

At last, after much wrastling they pierced through and came to our Ladies Chappel; where the Dukes and Barons were sitting together with the Archbishops and other Bishops. Before whom the foresaid John Wickliff, according to the manner, stood to know what should be laid unto him. To whom first spake the Lord Percy, bidding him to sit down, saying, That he had many things to answer to, and therefore had need of some better ease. But the Bishop of London, cast eftsoons into a fumish chafe with those words, said, He should not sit there. Neither was it, said he, according to Law or Reason, that he, which was cited there to appear to answer before his Ordinary, should sit down during the time of his answer, but should stand. Upon these words a fire began to heat and kindle between them: Insomuch that they began so to rate and revile one the other, that the whole multitude, therewith disquieted, began to be set on a hurry.

With Bishop of London was W. Courtney son to the Earl of Devonshire.

The Duke thereuntoth to draw the Bishop by the hair out of the Church. Londoners take part with their Bishop.

Then the Duke, taking the Lord Percies part, with hafty words began also to take up the Bishop. To whom the Bishop again nothing inferior to reproachful checks and rebukes, did render and requite not only to him as good as he brought; but also did so far excel him in this railing art of scoulding, that to use the words of mine Author, Eruhuit Dux quod non potuit prævalere litigio. i. that the Duke blushed and was athamed, because he could not overpass the Bishop in bawling and railing, and therefore fell to plain threatning, menacing the Bishop, that he would bring down the pride not only of him, but also of all the Prelacy of England. And speaking moreover unto him: Thou (said he) beareft thy self so brag upon thy Parents, which shall not be able to help thee; they shall have enough to do to help themselves. For his Parents were the Earl and Countess of Devonshire. To whom the Bishop again answered, That to be bold to tell truth, his confidence was not in his Parents, nor in any man elfe, but only in God in whom he trusted. Then the Duke softly whispering in the Ear of him next by him, said, That he would rather pluck the Bishop by the Hair of his Head out of the Church, than he would take this at his Hand. This was not spoken so secretly, but that the Londoners overheard him. Whereupon being set in rage, they cried out, saying, That they would not suffer their Bishop so contemptuously to be abused. But rather they would lose their lives, than that he should so be drawn out by the hair. Thus that Council, being broken with scolding and brawling for that day, was dissolved before nine of the Clock. And the Duke with the Lord Percy went to the Parliament; where the same day before dinner, a Bill was put up in the name of the King by the Lord Thomas Woftock, and Lord Henry Percy, that the City of London should no more be governed by a Mayor, but by a Captain, as in times before. And that the Marshal of England should have all the ado in taking the Arrests within the said City, as in other Cities besides, with other Petitions more, tending to the like derogation of the Liberties of London. Which Bill being read, John Philpot, Burgess then for the City, standeth up, saying to them which read the Bill, That that was never seen so before; and adding moreover, That the Mayor would never suffer any such things, or other Arrest to be brought into the City, with more such words like rhoutnes.

Petitions put up to the Parliament against the City of London.

Hasty counsel of the Londoners.

The next day following the Londoners assembled themselves in a Council, to consider among them upon the Bill for changing the Mayor, and about the Office of the Marshal, also concerning the injuries done the day before of to their Bishop.

In which mean time they being busie in long Consultation of this matter, suddainly and unawares entred in the place two certain Lords, whether to come to spy, or for what other cause the Author leaveth it uncertain, the one called Lord Fitz-Walter, the other Lord Guy Brian. At the first coming in of them the vulgar fort was ready forthwith to fly upon them as spies, had not they made their protestation with an Oath, declaring that their coming in was for no harm toward them. And so they were compelled by the Citizens to Swear to the City their truth and fidelity, contrary to the which Oath if they should rebel, they would be contented to forfeit whatsoever Goods and Possessions they had within the City.

The Oration of the Lord Fitz-Walter to the Londoners.

This done, then began the Lord Fitz-Walter in this wise to perswade and exhort the Citizens; first declaring how he was bound and obliged to them and to their City; to not for the Oath only now newly received, but of old and ancient good will from his great Grand-fathers time. Besides other divers duties, for the which he was chiefly bound to be one of their principal fautors; forasmuch as whatsoever tendeth to their damage and detriment, redounded also no less unto his own; for which cause he could not otherwise chuse, but that what he did understand to be attempted against the publick Profit and Liberties of the City, he must needs communicate the same to them. Who unless they with speedy circumspection do occur and prevent perils that may and are like to ensue, it would turn in the end to their no small incommodity. And as there were many other things, which required their vigilant care and diligence, so one thing there was, which he could in no wise but admonish them of; which was this, necessary to be considered of them all, how the Lord Marshal Henry Percy in his place within himself had one in Ward and Custody, whether with the knowledge, or without the knowledge of them, he could not tell: this he could tell, that the said Lord Marshal was not allowed any such Ward or Prison in his House, within the Liberties of the City. Which thing if it be not seen to in time, the example thereof being suffered, would in fine breed to such a prejudice unto their Customs and Liberties, as they should not hereafter, when they would, reform the injury thereof.

The Londoners break up the Lord Percy his House at Savoy.

These words of the Lord Fitz-Walter were not so soon spoken, but they were as soon taken of the rash Citizens; who in all hafty fury running to their Armor and Weapons, went incontinently to the House of the Lord Percy, where, breaking up the Gates, by violence they took out the Prisoner, and burned the Stocks wherein he fate, in the midst of London. Then was the Lord Percy sought for; whom (saith the Story) they would doubtless have slain if they might have found him. With their Bills, and Javelins all corners and privy Chambers were searched, Beds and Hangings torn asunder. But the Lord Percy (as God would) was then with the Duke, whom one John Iper the same day with great instance had desired to Dinner.

Gods revelation in saving his servants.

The House of the Duke of Lancaster searched by the Londoners.

The Londoners not finding him at home, and suppoling that he was with the Duke at Savoy, in all hafty heat turned their power thither, running as fast as they could to to the Dukes House; where alſo in like manner they were diſappointed of their cruel purpoſe. In the mean while as this was doing, cometh one of the Dukes men running in poſt haſte to the Duke and to the Lord Percy, declaring what was done. The Duke being then at his Oyſters, without any further tarrying, and alſo breaking both his thins at the Form for haſte, took Boat with the Lord Percy, and by Water went to Kingſtone, where then the Princeſs with Richard the young Prince did lie. Who there declared unto the Princeſs all the whole matter, concerning the outrage of the Londoners as it was. To whom ſhe promiſed again, that ſuch an order ſhould be taken in the matter, as ſhould be to his contentation. At what time the Commons of London thus as is ſaid, were about the Dukes Houſe at Sawoy, there meeteth with them a certain Prieſt, who marvelling at the ſuddain rage and concourſe, asked what they fought. To whom anſwer was given again of ſome, that they fought for the Duke and the Lord Marſhal, to have of them the Lord Peter de la Mare, whom they wrongfully had detained in Priſon. To this the Prieſt anſwered again more boldly than opportunely: That Peter (ſaid he) is a falſe Traitor, to the King, and worthy long ſince to be hanged. At the hearing of theſe words the furious people with a terrible ſhout cried out upon him, that he was a Traitor and one that took the Dukes part, and ſo falling upon him with their Weapons, ſtrived who might firſt ſtrike him. Who after they had wounded him very ſore, ſo being wounded they had him into Priſon, where within few days upon the ſoreneſs of his wounds he died.

The Duke and Lord Percy fly to the Prince.

A Prieſt in the Duke of Lancaſter's Houſe cruelly killed.

Neither would the rage of the people thus have ceaſed, had not the Biſhop of London, leaving his Dinner, come to them at Sawoy, and putting them in remembrance of the bleſſed time (as they term it) of Lent, had perſwaded them to ceaſe and to be quiet.

The villany of the Londoners againſt the Duke.

The Londoners ſeeing that they could get no vantage againſt the Duke, who was without their reach; to wreak their anger they took his Arms, which in moſt deſpiteful ways they hanged up, in the open places of the City in ſign of reproach, as for a Traitor. Inſomuch that when one of his Gentlemen came through the City, with a Plate containing the Dukes Arms, hanging by a Lace about his Neck, the Citizens not abiding the ſight thereof, caſt him from his Horſe, and pluckt his Eſcutcheon from him, and were about to work the extremity againſt him, had not the Mayor reſcued him out of their hands, and ſent him home ſafe unto the Duke his Maſter. In ſuch hatred was then the Duke among the vulgar people of London.

The meſſage of the Princeſs to the Londoners.

After this the Princeſs, underſtanding the hearts and broil of the Londoners ſet againſt the foreſaid Duke, ſent unto London three Knights, Sir Albred Lewer, Sir Simon Burle, and Sir Lewes Cliffort, to entreat the Citizens to be reconciled with the Duke. The Londoners anſwered, That they, for the honour of the Princeſs, would obey and do with all reverence what ſhe would require. But this they required and enjoyned the Meſſengers to ſay to the Duke by word of mouth: that he ſhould ſuffer the Biſhop of Wincheſter afore-mentioned, and alſo the Lord Peter de la Mare, to come to their anſwer, and to be judged by their Peers. Whereby either they might be quit if they were guiltleſs; or otherwiſe if they be found culpable, they might receive according to their deſerts after the Laws of the Realm. What grief and diſpleaſure the Duke conceived and retained in his mind thereof: Again, what means and ſuit the Londoners for their part made to the old King for their Liberties: What Rimes and Songs in London were made againſt the Duke: How the Biſhops at the Dukes requeſt were moved to Excommunicate thoſe malicious { KING } { Edw. 3 } The Londoners cauſed to bear a Taper of Wax in proceſſion in honour of the Duke.

As theſe foreſaid for brevity ſake I paſs over, ſo will I not be long, and yet cannot omit that, which happened the ſame time and year to the Biſhop of Norwich, to the intent that this Poſterity now may ſee, to what pride the Clergy of the Popes Church was then grown. The ſame time as this broil was at London, the Biſhop of Norwich a little after the time of Eaſter coming to the Town of Lennam, belonging to his Lordſhip: being not contented with the old accuſtomed honour due unto him, and uſed of his predeceſſors before in the ſame Town, required moreover with a new and unuſed kind of magnificence to be exalted: Inſomuch that when he ſaw the chief Magiſtrate or Mayor of that Town to go in the ſtreets with his Officer going before him, holding a certain Wand in his hand tipped at both ends with black Horn, as the manner was; he reputing himſelf to be Lord of that Town (as he was) and thinking to be higher than the higheſt, commanded the honour of that Staff due to the Mayor, to be yielded and born before his Lordly perſonage. The Mayor or Baliff with other the Townſmen, courteouſly anſwered to him again, That they were right willing and contented with all their hearts to exhibit that reverence unto him, and would ſo do, if he firſt of the King and Council could obtain that Cuſtom, and if the ſame might be induced after any peaceable way with the good wills of the Commons and Body of the Town: Otherwiſe ſaid they, as the matter was dangerous, ſo they durſt not take in hand any ſuch new alteration of ancient Cuſtoms and Liberties, leſt the people (which is always inclinable and prone to evil) do fall upon them with ſtones, and drive them out of the Town. Wherefore kneeling on their knees before him, there humbly they beſought him that he would require no ſuch thing of them: that he would ſave his own honour and their lives, who otherwiſe if he intended that way, were in great danger. But the Biſhop, youthful and haughty, taking occaſion by their humbleneſs, to ſwell the more in himſelf, anſwered, That he would not be taught by their counſel, but that he would have it done, though all the Commons (whom he named Ribals) ſaid nay. Alſo he rebuked the Mayor and his Brethren for Meccks and daſtards, for ſo fearing the vulgar fort of people.

Example of Pride in the Popiſh Clergy.

The contumelies of King Ludward.

The counſel of the Townſmen toward the Biſhop.

The firſt anſwer of the Biſhop to the Townſhip.

The Citizens perceiving the wilful ſtoutneſs of the Biſhop, meekly anſwering again, ſaid, They minded not to reſiſt him, but to let him do therein what he thought good: only they deſired him that he would License them to depart, and ſhold them excuſed for not waiting upon him, and conducting him out of the Town with that reverence which he required. For if they ſhould be ſeen in his company, all the ſuſpition thereof would be upon them, and ſo ſhould they be all in danger, ſo much as their lives were worth. The Biſhop not regarding their advice and counſel, commanded one of his men to take the Rod born before the Mayor, and to carry the ſame before him. Which being done, and perceived of the Commons, the Biſhop after that manner went not far, but the rude people running to ſhut the Gates, came out with their Bows, ſome with Clubs and Staves, ſome with other inſtruments, ſome with Stones, and let drive at the Biſhop and his men, as faſt as they might; in ſuch ſort, that both the Biſhop and his Horſe under him with moſt part of his men were hurt and wounded. And thus the glorious pride of this jolly Prelate, ruffling in his new Scepter, was received and welcomed there. That is, he was ſo pelted with Bats and ſtones, ſo wounded with Arrows and other inſtruments fit for ſuch a skirmiſh, that the moſt part of his men, with his Mace-bearer, all running away from him, the poor wounded Biſhop was there left alone, not able to keep his old power, which went about to uſurp a new power more than to him belonged. Thus as it is commonly true in all, ſo is it well exemplified here, which is commonly ſaid, and as it is commonly ſeen, that Pride will have a fall, and Power uſurped will never ſtand. In like manner, if the Citizens of Rome,

The Torrent of Londons reſiſteth the Biſhop.

Pride will have a fall. Power uſurped will never ſtand.

{ KING } { Edw. 3 } Rome, following the example of theſe Lennam-men, as they have the like cauſe, and greater, to do by the uſurped power of their Biſhop, would after the ſame ſawce handle the Pope, and unſcepter him of his Mace and regality, which nothing pertaineth to him; they in ſo doing both ſhould recover their own liberties, with more honor at home, and alſo with much more commendation abroad. Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani.

The uſurped power of the Pope would have a bridle.

This Tragedy with all the parts thereof, being thus ended at Lennam, which was a little after Eaſter, (as is ſaid) about the month of April, An. 1377. the ſame year upon the 21*th.* day of the month of June next after, died the worthy and victorious Prince King Edward the Third, after he had Reigned 51 years. A Prince no more aged in years than renowned for many ſingular and Heroical vertues, but principally noted and lauded for his ſingular meekneſs and clemency towards his ſubjects and inferiors, ruling them by gentleneſs and mercy without all rigor or auſtere ſeverity. Among other Noble and Royal Ornaments of his nature, worthily and copiouſly ſet forth of many, thus he is deſcribed by ſome, which may briefly ſuffice for the comprehenſion of all the reſt: Orphanis erat quaſi pater, afflictis compatiens, miſeris condolens, oppreſſos relevans, & cunctis indigentibus impendens auxilia opportuna. That is, To the Orphans he was as a Father, compatient to the afflicted, mourning with the miſerable, relieving the oppreſſed, and to all them that wanted an helper in time of need, &c. But chiefly above all other things in this Prince, in my mind, to be commemorate is this, that he above all other Kings of this Realm, unto the time of King Henry the eighth, was the greateſt bridler of the Popes uſurped power, and outragious oppreſſions: during all the time of which King, neither the Pope could greatly prevail in this Realm, and alſo John Wickliff was maintained with favour and aid ſufficient.

{ Anno } { 1377. } The death of King Edward.

But before we cloſe up the ſtory of this King, there cometh to hand that which I thought good not to omit, a noble preſcript of the King in requiring a view to be taken in all his Dominions of all Benefices and Dignities Eccleſiaſtical remaining in the hands of Italians and Aliens, with the true valuation of the ſame, directed down by Commiſſion; whereof the like alſo is to be found in the time of King Richard the Second, the tenor of which Commiſſion of King Edward I thought here under to ſet down for worthy memory.

{ Anno } { 48 } Edwardi Tertii.

EDward by the Grace of God, King, &c. To the Reverend Father in Chriſt N. by the ſame Grace Biſhop L. Greeting. Being willing upon certain cauſes to be certified what and how many Benefices as well Archdeaconries and other Dignities, as Vicarages, Perſonages, Prebends and Chappels, within your Dioceſs, be at this preſent in the hands of Italians and other ſtrangers, what they be, of what value, and how every of the ſaid Benefices be called by name; and how much every of the ſame is worth by the year, not as by way of Tax or extent, but according to the true value of the ſame; and likewiſe of the names of all and ſingular ſuch ſtrangers being now Incumbents or occupying the ſame and every of them; moreover the names of all them, whether Engliſh-men or Strangers, of what ſtate or condition ſoever they be, which have the occupation or diſpoſition of any ſuch Benefices with the fruits and profits of the ſame, in the behalf, or by the authority of any the foreſaid ſtrangers by way of farm, or title, or procuration, or by any other ways or means whatſoever, and how long they have occupied or diſpoſed the ſame; and withal if any the ſaid ſtrangers be now reſidents upon any Benefices; we command you, as heretofore commanded you, that you ſend us a true certificate of all and ſingular the premiſes, into our High Court of Chancery under your Seal diſtinctly and openly, on this ſide the Feaſt of the Aſcenſion of our Lord next coming, without further delay: returning unto us this our Writ withal. Witneſs our ſelf at Weſtminſter the 16*th.* day of April in the 48*th.* year of our Reign of England, and over France the 35*th.* year.

By vertue hereof, Certificate was ſent up to the King into his Chancery, out of every Dioceſs of England, of all ſuch Spiritual Livings as were then in the occupation either of Priors Aliens, or other ſtrangers; whereof the number was ſo great, as being all ſet down, it would fill almoſt half a Quier of Paper. Whereby may appear that it was high time for the King to ſeek remedy herein, either by treaty with the Pope or otherwiſe; conſider ſo great a portion of the revenues of his Realm was by this means conveyed away and employed either to the relief of his Enemies, or maintenance of the Foreigners: amongſt which number the Cardinals of the Court of Rome lacked not their ſhare; as may appear by this which followeth.

Like matter is alſo found in the time of King Richard the Second, upon what occaſion it is uncertain: but as it ſeemeth by record that of time; A new Pope being come in place, he would take no knowledge of any matter done by his Predeceſſors, that might any way abridge his commodity. And therefore this King was forced to begin anew, as may appear by this following.

Ex Bundelio Brevium Regis de An. 2. Rich. 2. part. 1.

King RICHARD the Second.

King Richard II.

AFTER King Edward the Third ſucceeded his Son Richard the Second, being yet but young, of the age of eleven years: who in the ſame year of his Fathers deceaſe with great pomp and ſolemnity was Crowned at Weſtminſter, An. 1377. who, following his Fathers ſteps was no great diſavourer of the way and Doctrine of Wickliff: albeit at the firſt beginnings, partly through the iniquity of time, partly through the Popes Letters, he could not do that he would. Notwithſtanding ſomething he did in that behalf, more perhaps than in the end he had thank for of the Papiſts, as more (by the grace of Chriſt) ſhall appear. But as times do change, ſo changeth changeth commonly the cauſe and ſtate of Man. The Biſhops now ſeeing the aged King to be taken away, during the time of whoſe old age all the government of the Realm depended upon the Duke of Lancaſter; And now the ſaid Biſhops again ſeeing the ſaid Duke, with the Lord Percy, the Lord Marſhal, to give other Offices, and to remain in their private Houſes without intermedling; thought now the time to ſerve them, to have ſome vantage againſt John Wickliff: who hitherto, under the protection of the foreſaid Duke and Lord Marſhal, had ſome reſt and quiet. Concerning the ſtory of which Wickliff, I truſt, (gentle Reader) it is not out of thy memory what went before, pag. 487. how he being brought before the Biſhops, by the means of the Duke and Lord Henry Percy, the Council was interrupted, and brake before nine of the Clock. By reaſon whereof Wickliff at that time eſcaped without any further trouble. Who notwithſtanding, being by the Biſhops forbid to deal in that Doctrine any more, continued yet with his fellows going barefoot, and in long Friſe Gowns, preaching diligently unto the people. Out of whoſe Sermons theſe Articles moſt chiefly at that time were collected.

{KING} {An. 2.}

The Biſhops take vantage of time.

The firſt Article collected out of Wickliffs Sermons.

That the Holy Euchariſt, after the Conſecration, is not the very body of Chriſt, but figuratively.

That the Church of Rome is not the head of all Churches more than any other Church is: Nor that Peter hath any more power given of Chriſt, than any other Apoſtle hath.

Item, That the Pope of Rome hath no more in the Keys of the Church, than hath any other within the Order of Prieſthood.

Item, If God be, the Lords Temporal may lawfully and meritoriouſly take away their Temporalties from the Church-men offending habitualiter.

Item, If any Temporal Lord do know the Church ſo offending, he is bound, under pain of damnation, to take the Temporalties from the ſame.

Item, That all the Goſpel is a rule ſufficient of it ſelf to rule the life of every Chriſtian Man here, without any other rule.

Item, That all other rules, under whoſe obſervances divers Religious perſons be governed, do add no more perfection to the Goſpel, than doth the white colour to the Wall.

Item, That neither the Pope, nor any other Prelate of the Church, ought to have priſons wherein to puniſh tranſgreſſors.

The Articles of Wickliff ſent to the Pope.

Pope Gregory 11. cit.

Wickliff called before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Beſides theſe Articles, divers other concluſions afterward were gathered out of his writings and preachings by Biſhops at England, which they ſent diligently to Pope Gregory at Rome: Where the ſaid Articles being read and peruſed, were condemned for Heretical and erroneous by three and twenty Cardinals.

In the mean time the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, ſending forth his citations, as is aforeſaid, called before him the ſaid John Wickliff in the preſence of the Duke of Lancaſter, and Lord Percy; who, upon the declaration of the Popes Letters made, bound him to ſilence, forbidding him not to intreat any more of theſe matters. But then through the diſturbance of the Biſhop of London and the Duke, and Lord Percy, that matter was ſoon diſpatched, as hath been above recorded, pag. 487. And all this was done in the days and laſt year of King Edward the Third, and Pope Gregory the Eleventh.

{Anno} {1378}

The next year following, which was the year of our Lord 1378. being the firſt year of King Richard the Second, the ſaid Pope Gregory taking his time, after the death of King Edward, ſendeth his Bull by the hands and means (peradventure) of one Maſter Edmund Stafford, directed unto the Univerſity of Oxford, rebuking them ſharply, imperiouſly, and like a Pope, for ſuffering ſo long the Doctrine of John Wickliff to take root, and not plucking it up with the crooked ſickle of their Catholick Doctrine. Which Bull when it came to be exhibited unto their hands, by the Popes Meſſenger aforeſaid; Proctors and Maſters of the Univerſity, joyning together in conſultation, ſtood long in doubt, deliberating with themſelves whether to receive the Popes Bull with honor, or to refuſe and reject it with ſhame.

Edmund Stafford bringer of the Popes Bull.

The Maſters of Oxford doubt whether to receive the Popes Bull.

I cannot here but laugh in my mind to behold the Authors of this ſtory whom I follow; what exclamations, what wondrings and marvels they make at theſe Oxford Men, for ſo doubting at a matter ſo plain, ſo manifeſt of it ſelf, (as they ſay) whether the Popes Bull ſent to them from Rome was to be received or contrary. Which rating to our Monkiſh writers ſeemed then ſuch a prodigious wonder, that they with bluſhing cheeks are fain to cut off the matter in the midſt with ſilence.

The Copy of this wild Bull, ſent to them from the Pope, was this:

The Popes mad Bull ſent to Oxford.

Gregory the Biſhop, the ſervant of Gods ſervants, to his well-beloved Sons, the Chancellor and Univerſity of Oxford, in the Dioceſs of Lincoln, Greeting and Apoſtolical Benediction.

WE are compelled not only to marvel, but alſo to lament, that you, conſidering the Apoſtolical Seat hath given unto your Univerſity of Oxford ſo great favour and priviledge, and alſo for that you flow as in a large Sea in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, and ought to be champions and defenders of the ancient and Catholick Faith, (without the which there is no ſalvation) by your great negligence and ſloth will ſuffer wild Cockle, not only to grow up among the pure Wheat of the flouriſhing field of your Univerſity, but alſo to wax ſtrong and choke the Corn. Neither have ye any care (as we are informed) to extirp and pluck the ſame up by the roots, to the great blemiſhing of your renowmed name, the peril of your ſouls, the contempt of the Church of Rome, and to the great decay of the antient Faith. And further (which grieveth us) the increaſe of that filthy weed was more ſharply rebuked and judged of in Rome, than in England where it ſprang. Wherefore let there be means ſought by the help of the faithful, to root out the ſame. Grievouſly it is come to our ears, that one John Wickliff, Parſon of Lutterworth in Lincoln Dioceſs, a profeſſor of Divinity (would God he were not rather a Maſter of Errors) is run into a kind of deteſtable wickedneſs, not only and openly publiſhing, but alſo vomiting out of the filthy dungeon of his breaſt, diverſe propoſitions, falſe and erroneous concluſions, and moſt wicked and damnable Hereſies. Whereby he might defile the faithful ſort, and bring them from the right path headlong into the way of perdition, overthrow the ſtate of the Church, and utterly ſubvert the ſecular policy. Of which his miſchievous Hereſies ſome ſeem to agree (only certain names and terms changed) with the perverſe opinions, and unlearned Doctrine of Marſilius of Padua, and of John Gandine, of unworthy memory, whoſe Books were utterly abroliſhed in the Realm of England, by our predeceſſor of happy memory John the 22th. which Kingdom doth not only flouriſh in power, and abundance of faculties, but is much more glorious and ſhining in pureneſs of Faith; accuſtomed always to bring forth Men excellently learned in the true knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, ripe in gravity of manners, Men not ſlow to devotion, and defenders of the Catholick Faith. Wherefore we will and command you by our writing Apoſtolical in the name of your obedience, and upon pain of privation of our favour, indulgences and priviledges granted unto you and your Univerſity from the ſaid See Apoſtolical; that hereafter ye ſuffer not thoſe peſtilent Hereſies, and thoſe ſubtil and falſe concluſions and propoſitions, miſconſtruing the right ſenſe of faith and good works (howſoever they term it, or what curious implication of words ſoever they uſe) any longer to be diſputed of, or brought in queſtion; Leſt if it be not withſtood at the firſt, and plucked up by the roots, it might perhaps be too late hereafter to prepare Medicines when a greater number is infected with the contagion. And further, that ye apprehend immediately, or cauſe to be apprehended the ſaid* John Wickliff, and deliver him to be detained in the ſafe cuſtody of our well-beloved brethren, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of London, or either of them. And if you ſhall find any gainſayers, corrupted with the ſaid Doctrine (which God forbid) in your ſaid Univerſity within your juriſdiction, that ſhall obſtinately ſtand in the ſaid errors, that then in like manner ye apprehend them, and commit them to ſafe cuſtody, and otherwiſe to do in this caſe as it ſhall appertain

The Popes complaint of John Wickliff.

Marſilius Patavinus, Joan de Gandavo noted.

Here the wild Bull ſtriketh.

pertain unto you: So as by your careful proceedings herein, your negligence paſt concerning the premiſes may now fully be ſupplied and recompenced with preſent diligence. Whereby you ſhall not only purchaſe unto you the favour and benevolence of the ſeat Apoſtolical, but alſo great reward and merit of Almighty God.

Yeven at Rome at S. Maries the greater, xi. Kalend. of June, and in the 7th. year of our Confecration.

Beſide this Bull ſent to the Univerſity of Oxford, the ſaid Pope Gregory directed moreover his Letters the ſame time to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Simon Sudbury, to the Biſhop of London named William Courtney, with the concluſions of John Wickliff therein incloſed, commanding them, by vertue of thoſe his Letters Apoſtolical, and ſtraitly enjoyning them to cauſe the ſaid John Wicklif to be apprehended, and caſt into priſon; and that the King and the Nobles of England ſhould be admonithed by them, not to give any credit to the ſaid John Wickliff, or to his Doctrine in any wiſe.

Simon Sudbury Archbiſhop of Canterbury. W. Courtney Biſhop of London.

Beſide this Bill or Bull of the Pope, ſent unto the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and to the Biſhop of London, bearing date, 11. Kalend. Jun. and the ſeventh year of the Reign of the Pope; I find moreover in the ſaid ſtory two other Letters of the Pope concerning the ſame matter, but differing in form, ſent unto the ſame Biſhops and all bearing the ſame date, both of the day, year, and month of the Reign of the ſaid Pope Gregory. Whereby it is to be ſuppoſed, that the ſaid Pope either was very exquiſite and ſolicitous about the matter, to have Wickliff to be apprehended, which wrote three divers Letters to one perſon, and all in one day, about one buſineſs; or elſe that he did ſuſpect the bearers thereof; the ſcruple whereof I leave to the judgement of the Reader.

Three ſunday Letters of the Pope to one perſon, about one matter.

Furthermore, beſide theſe Letters written to the Univerſity, and to the Biſhops, he directeth alſo another Epiſtle bearing the ſame date unto King Edward; as one of my ſtories ſaith, but as another ſaith, to King Richard, which ſoundeth more near to the truth, foraſmuch as in the ſeventh year of Pope Gregory the 11th. which was the year of our Lord, 1378. King Edward was not alive. The Copy of his Letters to the King here followeth.

The Copy of the Epiſtle ſent by the Biſhop of Rome to Richard King of England, to perſecute John Wickliff.

The Popes Letter to K. Richard againſt John Wickliff.

UNTO his Welbeloved Son in Chriſt, Richard, the moſt noble King of England, health, &c.

The Kingdom of England, which the moſt bliſſed hath put under your power and governance, being ſo famous and renowned in valiancy and ſtrength, ſo abundant and flowing in all kind of wealth and riches, but much more glorious, reſplendent and ſhining through the brightneſs and clearneſs of all godlineſs and faith, hath acculſomed always to bring forth Men indued with the true knowledge and underſtanding of the Holy Scriptures, grave in years, fervent in devotion, and defenders of the Catholick Faith: The which have not only directed and inſtructed their own people through their wholeſome Doctrine and precepts into the true path of Gods Commandments; but alſo we have heard by the report and information of many credible perſons (to our great grief and heart ſorrow) that John Wickliff Parſon of Lutterworth, in the Dioceſs of Lincoln, profeſſor of Divinity (I would to God he were no author of Hereſie) to be fallen into ſuch a deteſtable and abominable madneſs, that he hath propounded and ſet forth diverſe and ſundry concluſions full of errors, and containing moſt manifeſt Hereſie, the which do tend utterly to ſubvert and overthrow the ſtate of the whole Church. Of the which, ſome of them Called it under coloured phraſe and ſpeech) ſeem to ſmell and favour of perverſe opinion, the fooliſh doctrine of condemned memory of Marſilius of Padua, and John of Gandano, whoſe Books were by Pope John the 22th. our predeceſſor, a Man of a moſt happy memory, reproved and condemned, &c.

Hitherto, gentle Reader, thou haſt heard how Wickliff was accuſed by the Biſhop. Now you ſhall alſo hear the Popes mighty reaſons and arguments, by the which he did conſute him, to the King. It followeth.

{KING Ric. 2}

Therefore, forſomuch as our Reverend Brethren the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of London have received a ſpecial commandment from us, by our authority to apprehend and commit the forenamed John Wickliff unto priſon, and to tranſport his confeſſion unto us: if they ſhall ſeem in the proſecution of this their buſineſs to lack your favour or help, we require and moſt earneſly deſire your Majeſty, even as your moſt noble predeceſſors have always been moſt earneſt lovers of the Catholick Faith (whoſe caſe or quarrel in this matter is chiefly handled) that you would vouchſafe (even for the reverence of God, and the Faith aforeſaid, and alſo of the Apoſtolick Seat, and of our perſon) with your help and favour to aſſiſt the ſaid Archbiſhop and all other that ſhall go about to execute the ſaid buſineſs. Whereby beſides the praiſe of Men, you ſhall obtain an Heavenly reward and great favour and good will at our hand, and of the See aforeſaid. Dated at Rome at S. Mary the greater, the 11th. Kal. of June in the 7th. year of our Biſhoprick, *An.*1378.

Here is paſſed, but no touching.

The Articles included in the Popes Letters, which he ſent to the Biſhops, and to the King againſt Wickliff, were theſe which in order do follow.

The Concluſions of J. Wickliff, exhibited in the Convocation of certain Biſhops at Lambeth.

Certain Concluſions of John Wickliff.

ALL the whole race of Mankind here on Earth, beſides Chriſt, hath no power ſimply to ordain, That Peter and all his off-ſpring ſhould politickly rule over the world for ever.

Wickliff's again called before the Biſhops. Lewis Clifford.

2. God cannot give to any Man for him and his heirs any Civil Dominion for ever.

3. All writings invented by Men, as touching perpetual heritage, are impoſſible

John Wickliff again delivered from the Biſhops.

4. Every Man, being in grace juſtifying, hath not only right unto the thing, but alſo for his time hath right indeed above all the good things of God.

5. A Man cannot only miniſtratorioufly give any temporal or continual gift, either as well to his natural Son, as to his Son by imitation.

6. If God be, the temporal Lords may lawfully and mettitoriouſly take away the riches from the Church when they do offend habituliter.

7. We know that Chriſt's Vicar cannot, neither is able by his Bulls, neither by his own will and conſent, neither by the conſent of his College, either to make able or diſable any Man.

8. A Man cannot be Excommunicated to his hurt or undoing, except he be firſt and principally Excommunicate by himſelf.

9. No Man ought, but in Gods cauſe alone, to Excommunicate, ſuſpend, or forbid, or otherwiſe to proceed to revenge by any Eccleſiaſtical cenſure.

10. A Curſe or Excommunication doth not ſimply bind, but in caſe it be pronounced and given out againſt the adverſary of Gods Law.

11. There is no power given by any example, either by Chriſt or by his Apoſtles, to Excommunicate any ſubject, ſpecially for denying of any temporalties, but rather contrariwiſe.

12. The Diſciples of Chriſt have no power to excit, by any civil authority, temporalties by cenſures.

13. It is not poſſible by the abſolute power of God, that if the Pope, or any other Chriſtian do pretend by any means to bind or to looſe, that thereby he doth ſo bind and looſe.

14. We ought to believe that the Vicar of Chriſt doth at ſuch times only bind and looſe, when as he worketh conformably by the Law and Ordinance of Chriſt.

15. This ought univerſally to be believed, that every Prieſt rightly and duly ordered, according unto the Law of Grace, hath power according to his vocation, whereby he may miniſter the Sacraments, and conſequently abſolve any any man confeſſing his fault, being contrite and penitent for the ſame.

16. It is lawful for Kings, in cauſes licenſed by the law, to take away the temporalties from the ſpiritualty, ſinning habitualiter, that is, which continue in the cuſtoms of ſin, and will not amend.

17. Whether they be temporal Lords, or any other men whatſoever they be, which have endowed any Church with temporalties; it is lawful for them to take away the ſame temporalties, as it were by way of medicine, to avoid ſin, notwithſtanding any Excommunication or other Eccleſiaſtical cenſure; forſomuch as they are not given but under a condition.

18. An Eccleſiaſtical Miniſter, and alſo the Biſhop of Rome, may lawfully be rebuked of his Subjects, and for the profit of the Church be accuſed either of the Clergy or of the Laity.

These Letters with the Articles incloſed being thus received from the Pope, the Biſhops took no little heart, thinking and fully determining with themſelves, and that in open profeſſion before their provincial Council, that all manner reſpects of fear or favour ſet apart, no perſon neither high nor low ſhould let them, neither would they be ſeduced by the intreaty of any Man, nor by any threatnings or rewards, but that in this cauſe they would execute moſt ſurely upright juſtice and equity: yea albeit preſent danger of life ſhould follow thereupon. But theſe ſo fierce braggs, and ſtout promiſes, with the ſubtil practices of theſe Biſhops, which thought them ſo ſure before, the Lord (againſt whom no determination of Mans counſel can prevail) by a ſmall occaſion did lightly confound and overthrow. For the day of the Examination being come; a certain perſonage of the princes Court, and yet of no great Noble birth, named Lewes Clifford, entring in among the Biſhops, commanded them that they ſhould not proceed with any definitive ſentence againſt John Wickliffe. With which words they all were ſo amazed, and their Combs ſo cut, that (as in the Story is mentioned) they became ſo mute and ſpeechleſs, as men having not one word in their mouths to anſwer. And thus by the wonderous work of God his providence, eſcaped John Wickliffe the ſecond time out of the Biſhops hands; and was by them clearly diſmiſſed upon his declaration made of his Articles, as anon ſhall follow.

The ſtout braggs of the Biſhops overthrown.

Moreover, here is not to be paſſed over, how at the ſame time, and in the ſaid Chappel of the Archbiſhop at Lambeth, where the Biſhops were ſitting upon John Wickliffe, the Story writing of the doing thereof, addeth theſe words, ſaying, Non dico cives tamum Londinenſes, ſed viles iſtius civitatis ſe impudenter ingerere præſumpſerunt in eandem capellam & verba facere pro eodem, & iſtud negotium impedire, conſiſi, ut reor, de ipſorum præmiſſa negligentia præſatorum, &c. That is, I ſay not only, that the Citizens of London, but alſo the vile abjects of the City preſumed to be ſo bold in the ſame Chappel at Lambeth, where the Biſhops were ſitting upon John Wickliffe, both to intreat for him, and alſo to let and ſtop the ſame matter: truſting, as I ſuppoſe, upon the negligence which they ſaw before in the Biſhops, &c.

Over and beſide, here is not to be forgotten, how the ſaid John Wickliffe, the ſame time of his Examination, offered and exhibited unto the Biſhops in writing a proteſtation, with a declaration or expoſition of his own mind, upon the ſaid his Articles, the effect hereof followeth.

The Proteſtation of John Wickliffe.

The Proteſtation of John Wickliff.

FIrſt I proteſt (as I have often before done) that I do mind and intend with my whole Heart (by the grace of God) to be a true Chriſtian, and as long as breath ſhall remain in me, to proteſs and defend the Law of Chriſt. And if it ſhall happen that through ignorance or otherwiſe I ſhall fall therein: I deſire my Lord God of pardon and forgiveneſs. And now again as before alſo, I do revoke and make retractation; moſt humbly ſubmitting my ſelf under the correction of our Holy mother the Church. And forſomuch as the ſentence of my faith, which I have holden in the ſchools and elſewhere, is reported even by Children, and moreover is carried by children even unto Rome: therefore leſt my Dear beloved Brethren ſhould take any offence by me, I will ſet forth in writing the ſentence and articles, for the which I am now accuſed and impeached: the which alſo even unto the death I will defend, as I believe all Chriſtians ought to do, and ſpecially the Biſhop of Rome and all other Prieſts and Miniſters of the Church. For I do underſtand the concluſions after the ſenſe and manner of ſpeaking of the Scriptures and holy Doctors, the which I am ready to expound: And if they ſhall be found contrary to the faith, I am ready to revoke, and ſpeedily to call them back again.

An Expoſition upon the Concluſions of John Wickliffe, exhibited by him to the Biſhop.

Expoſition of John Wickliffe upon his concluſions.

1. ALL the race of mankind here in Earth beſide Chriſt, hath no power ſimply to ordain, that Peter, &c.

This concluſion of it ſelf is evident, foraſmuch as it is not in Mans power to ſtop the coming of Chriſt to his final Judgment, but he muſt needs come, according to the Article of our Creed, to judge both the quick and the dead. And then (as the Scripture teacheth) ſhall ſurceaſe all civil and politick rule here; I underſtand the temporal and ſecular Dominion pertaining to men here dwelling in this mortal life. For ſo do the Philoſophers ſpeak of civil Dominion. And although the thing which is terminable, and hath an end, is called ſometimes perpetual: yet becauſe in holy Scripture, and in uſe of the Church, and in the Books of Philoſophers moſt commouly that is taken to be perpetual, which hath no end of time hereafter to come: according to the which ſenſe the Church ſingeth Gloria patri &c. Nunc & in perpetuum; I alſo after the ſame ſignification do take here this word (perpetually) and ſo is this concluſion conſonant to the principles of the Scripture, that it is not in Mans power to ordain the courſe and voyage of the Church, here perpetually to laſt.

2. God cannot give to any man, &c.

Expoſition of the ſecond concluſion.

To the Second concluſion I anſwer, underſtanding civil Dominion, as in the concluſion before. And ſo I hold, that God firſt by his ordinate power cannot give to any perſon civil Dominion here for ever. Secondly, by his abſolute power it is not probable that he will ſo do: Forſomuch as he cannot ever detain his ſpouſe in perpetual priſon of this life, nor always defer the final beatitude of his Church.

3. To the Third concluſion. Many writings or charts invented by men, as touching perpetual Heritage civil, be impoſſible.

The verity of this concluſion is incident. For we muſt not Canonize all manner of charts whatſoever, as Catholick, or Univeral: for then it were not lawful by any means to take away or ſequeſter things given by Chart or charter, when any doth unjuſtly occupy the ſame. And ſo if that ſtand confirmed and ratified by the Faith of the Church, great occaſion thereby ſhould be miniſtred to men ſo chartered, to truſt to their temporal Charts; and ſo might grow thereby much liberty and licence to ſin. For like as by ſome ſuppoſition every truth is neceſſary: So by the ſame ſuppoſition every falſe thing is poſſible, as it is plain by the Teſtimony of the Scripture, and of holy Doctors ſpeaking of neceſſity of things to come.

In what ſignification he ſpeaketh of the finalleſt.

4. Every man being in grace juſtifying finally, hath not only right unto the thing, but alſo for his time hath right indeed over all the good things of God.

The verity hereof is evident, by holy Scripture, *Mat.*24. Where verity promiſeth to every man entring into his joy: verily (ſaith he) I tell you, he ſhall ſet and place him over all the goods he hath. For the right and title belonging to the Communion of Saints in their countrey (he meaneth in the Kingdom of Heaven) Fundatur objective ſupra univerſitatem bonorum Dei: That is, Hath his relation, as unto his object, to all the goods and poſſeſſion of God.

Note here he ſpeaketh only of the right of things in the country to come, and not in this exile.

5. A man can but only miniſtratorioufly give any temporal Dominion or gift perpetual, as well to his own natural ſon, as to his ſon by imitation.

It is evident. For every man ought to recognize himſelf in all his works and doings, as an humble ſervant and miniſter of God. As the words of Scripture do teach us. Let a man ſo eſteem of us as the Miniſters of Chriſt.

Yea, so Christ himself did teach his chief Apostles to minister; but in their country the Saints shall give unto their fellow Brethren the Dominion of their goods, Ut patet de suis corporibus & bonis eis inferioribus in natura, according to the words of Luke 6. They shall give you, and put into your bosoms a good measure and perfect, well filled and heaped up, and running over.

6. If God be temporal Lords may lawfully and meritoriously take away the goods of Fortune from the Church when they do offend habitualiter.

This conclusion is Correlative with the first Article of our Faith: I believe in God the Father Almighty, &c. Where I understand this word (may) in this conclusion after the manner of Authentick Scripture, which saith and granteth, that God is able of these stones to raise up children to Abraham; for otherwise all Christian Princes were Hereticks. For upon this conclusion thus standeth the reason: If God be, he is Omnipotent, and if he be Almighty, he is able to command the Lords temporal so to do: and if he may so command, then may they lawfully so take away such goods, &c. And so by the vertue of the same principle, Christian Princes have practised the said sentence upon the Churchmen heretofore, as did William Rufus, &c. But God forbid that any should believe hereby my intention to have been, that secular Lords may lawfully take away what goods soever, and by what means soever, by their own naked authority at their pleasure: But only by the Authority of the Church they may so do, in cases and form limited by the Law.

7. We know that it is not possible that the Vicar of Christ is able by his pure Bulls, &c.

¶ This is manifest by the Catholick Faith; forasmuch as the Church doth fully believe that the enabling of any man ought first to proceed and come of God; wherefore no Man being Christ his Vicar, hath any power in this matter, but only as Vicar in the name of the Lord, so far forth as he is enabled of the Lord, to notifie unto the Church whom God hath enabled. Wherefore if any Man do any thing, not as Vicar in the name of the Lord, whom he ought to forethink to be his author and head; it is a presumption of Lucifer, forsomuch as Christ by his Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 3. All our ability or sufficiency cometh of God. And so consequently, it cometh not purely by the Ministery of his Vicarship, that he is enabled; but the ableness or unableness of him, being the Vicar of Christ, cometh to him another way from above.

8. A Man cannot be Excommunicate to his hurt or undoing, except he be Excommunicate first and principally of himself.

It is evident, forsomuch as all such Excommunication ought to proceed and begin originally of his own sin which is damnified: whereupon Augustine saith, De verbis Domini Sermone 51. Do not thou conculcate thy self, and Man overcometh thee not. And moreover the Faith of the Church doth teach, quod nulla ei nocebit adversitas, si nulla dominetur iniquitas: That is to say, No adversity shall hurt, if no inquity hath the upper hand. And yet notwithstanding, every Excommunication for many causes is also to be feared, although that the Excommunication of the Church, to the humble Man being Excommunicated, be not damnable but wholsome.

9. No man ought but in Gods cause alone to Excommunicate, suspend, &c.

It is clear, forasmuch as every just cause is the cause of God, whose respect ought chiefly to be weighed and pondred. Yea, the love of the person excommunicate, ought to surmount the zeal of revengement, and the desire of all temporal goods whatsoever; for otherwise he that doth excommunicate, doth damnifie himself. To this 9th conclution notwithstanding, it is congruent, that a Prelate may excommunicate in the cause also of Man, so that his principal respect in so doing be had to the injury done to his God, as appeareth 13. quæst. 4. Inter querelas.

10. No curse or Excommunication can bind simply, but in case it be given out against the adversary of Christs Law.

And it appereth thus, because that God doth bind simply every one that is bound, who cannot excommunicate but only for transgreſſion of his Law. Whereunto it is consonant notwithstanding, that the censure of the Church doth not bind simply, but secondarily in that case and respect, as it is denounced against the adversary of the members of the Church.

{KING Ric. 2.}

11. There is no example of Christ, which giveth power to his Disciples to excommunicate any subject (especially for denying of any temporalties) but contrary.

Which is thus declared by the faith, whereby we believe that God is to be beloved above all things, and our neighbour and enemy are to be beloved above all temporal goods of this world necessarily; for the Law of God cannot be contrary unto it self.

12. The Disciples of Christ have no power by any civil coaction to exact temporal things by their censures.

This appeareth by the faith of the Scripture, Luke 23. Where Christ did forbid his Apostles civilly to reign or to bear any Lordship. The Kings (saith he) of the Gentiles bear rule over them; but you not so. And after this sense it is expounded of S. Bernard, of S. Chrysostome, and other holy Men: which conclution notwithstanding, yet may they exact temporal things by Ecclesiastical censures incidently, if cause be that it appertain to the revengement of their God.

13. It is not possible by the absolute power of God, that if the Pope or any other Christian do pretend to bind or loose at their pleasure by what means soever, that thereby he doth so bind and loose.

The contrary of this conclusion will destroy the whole Catholick Faith, importing no less but him to be a blasphemer who doth so usurpeth such absolute power of the Lord. And yet by this conclution I intend not to derogate from the power of the Pope, or of any other Prelate of the Church, but that he may by the vertue of the head so bind and loose: But do understand the conditional of this negative (to be impossible) after this sense, that it cannot be that the Pope or any other Prelate of the Church can pretend by himself to bind or loose (how and after what manner he lift himself) except in such sort, that he do indeed so bind and loose before God, as he doth pretend to do.

The power of all Prelates and God equal.

14. We ought to believe, that the Vicar of Christ doth at such times only bind and loose, when as he worketh conformably by the Law and ordinance of Christ, &c.

Gods sentences now stands as they stood.

The reason thereof is this, because otherwise it is unlawful for him so to do, except he should do it in the vertue of that Law; and so consequently, unless it be conformable to the Law and ordinance of Christ.

Pontifex nihil potest contra Deum.

15. To this conclusion, this ought universally to be believed, that every Priest rightly and duly ordered hath power according to his vocation, &c.

The reason hereof is this, because that the order of Priesthood in his own nature and substance receiveth no such degrees, either of more or less. And yet notwithstanding the power of inferior Priests in these days, is upon due consideration restrained, and sometimes again, in time of extream necessity, released. And thus according to the Doctors, a Prelate hath a double power, to wit, the power of order, and the power of jurisdiction or regiment. And according to this second power, the Prelates are in a higher majesty and regiment.

16. It is lawful for Princes and Kings (in cases by the Law limited) to withdraw temporal Commodities from Churchmen, abusing the same habitualiter.

The reason thereof is plain, for that temporal Lords ought rather to lean to spiritual Alms, which bringeth with it great fruit, than to temporal Alms, the case so standing, that sometime it were a necessary work of spiritual Alms, to chastise such Clerks by taking from them their temporal livings, which use to abuse the same, to the damnifying both of their soul and body. The cases which the Law doth limit in this matter, were the defect of correcting his spiritual Head, or els for lack of correcting the Faith of the Clerk which so offendeth, as appeareth. 16. q. 7. filius, Dist. 40. cap. Si Papa.

16. q. 7. filius.

17. Whether they be temporal Lords, or any other men whatsoever, which have indued any Church with temporalties, &c.

The truth thereof is evidently seen, for that nothing ought to stop a Man from the principal works of Charity necessarily, because in every action and work of Man is to be understood a privy condition necessary of God, his good will concurring withal, as it is in the civil Law de eo Cornab. cap. 5. in fine collat. 2. And yet, God forbid, that that by these words occasion should be given to the Lords temporal to take away the goods of fortune from the Church.

18. An Ecclesiastical Minister, yea, the Bishop of Rome may lawfully be rebuked of his Subjects, and for the profit of the Church be accused, either of the Clergy, or of the Laity.

The proof of this is manifest hereby, because the said Bishop of Rome is subject to fall into the sin against the holy Ghost, as may be supposed, saving the Sanctitude, Humility and Reverence due to such a Father. For so long as our Brother is subject unto the infirmity of falling, he lieth under the Law of Brotherly correction. And when the whole College of Cardinals may be slothful in Ministring due correction for the necessary prosperity of the Church: it is apparent that the residue of the Body of the Church, which possibly may stand most of Lay men, may wholsomely correct the same, accuse and bring him to a better way. The possibility of this case is touched, Dist. 40. Si Papa. If the Pope do erre from the right Faith, &c. For like as such a great fall ought not to be supposed in the Lord Pope without manifest evidence: So again, such an obstinancy ought not to be supposed in him, possibly being fallen, but that he will humbly receive the wholsome Medicine of his superior, correcting him in the Lord. The practice of which conclusion also is testified in many Chronicles. For be it from the Church of Christ, that verity should be condemned which foundeth evil to transgressors and other slothful persons, for then the whole Faith of the Scripture were in a damnable case.

Thus John Wickliffe in giving his expositon unto his forefaid propositions and conclusions, as is above prefixed, through the favour and diligence of the Londoners, either shifted off the Bishops, or else satisfied them so, that for that time he was dismissed and scaped clearly away, only being charged and commanded by the said Bishops, that he should not Teach or Preach any such Doctrine any more, for the offence of the Lay people.

Thus this good Man, being escaped from the Bishops with this charge aforesaid, yet notwithstanding ceased not to proceed in his Godly purpose, labouring and profiting still in the Church as he had begun.

Unto whom also (as it happened by the providence of God) this was also a great help and stay, for that in the same year, or in the beginning of the next year following, the foresaid Pope Gregory the Eleventh which was the stirrer up of all this trouble against him, turned up his heels and died. After whom ensued such a Schism in Rome, between two Popes, and other succeeding after them, one striving against another; that the Schism thereof endured the space of 39. years, until the time of the Council of Constance.

The death of Pope Gregory the 11th.

A Schism in Rome.

Urbanus 6th Pope.

The occasion of which Schism first was Pope Urban the Sixth, who in the first beginning of his Popedom was so proud and insolent to his Cardinals, and other, as to Dukes, Princes, and Queens, and so set to advance his Nephews and kindred, with injuries to other Princes, that the greatest number of his Cardinals and Coutiers by little and little shrunk from him, and set up another French Pope against him, named Clement, who Reigned 11. years. And after him Benedictus the Thirteenth who Reigned 26. years. Again of the contrary side after Urbanus the Sixth, succeeded Boniface the Ninth, Innocentius the Eighth, Gregory the Twelth, Alexander the Fifth, John the Thirteenth.

Papæ.	Years.	Months.	Antipapæ.	Years.
Urbanus 6.	11.	8.	Clement.	11.
Bonifacius 9.	14.	9.	Benedictus, 13.	26.
Innocentius 8.	2.	0.
Gregorius 12.	2.	7.
Alexander 5.	0.	11.
Johannes 13.	5.	10.

As touching this Pestilent and most miserable Schism, it would require here another Iliad to comprehend in order all the circumstances and tragical parts thereof, what trouble in the whole Church, what parts taking in every Countrey, what apprehending and imprisoning of Priests and Prelates taken by Land and Sea, what shedding of blood did follow thereof. How Otho, Duke of Brunswick and Prince of Tarentum, was taken and murthered. How Joan his Wife, Queen of Jerusalem and Sicilia, who before had sent to Pope Urban, beside other gifts at his Coronation, 40000 Duckets in pure Gold, was after by the said Urban committed to prison, and in the same prison strangled. What Cardinals were racked, and miserably without all mercy tormented on Gibbets to death, what slaughter of men, what barrels were fought between the two Popes, whereof 5000 on the one side were slain, beside the number of them which were taken prisoners. Of the beheading of five Cardinals together after long torments, and how the Bishop of Aquilonensis, being suspected of Pope Urban, for not Riding safter with the Pope, his Horse being not good, was there slain by the Popes commandment, sending his Souldiers unto him to slay him, and cut him in pieces. All which things, with divers other more Acts of horrible cruelty, hapning in the time of this abominable Schism, because they are abundantly discourted at full by Theodoricus a Niem, de schismate, I pass over.

Was not here a jolly agreement?

Theodoricus a Niem, de schismate.

About the same time also, about three years after, there fell a cruel Diffention in England, between the Common people and the Nobilty, the which did not a little disturb and trouble the Common-wealth. In this tumult Simon of Sudbury Archbishop of Canterbury, was taken by the rustical and rude people, and was beheaded. In whose place after succeeded William Courtney, which was no less diligent than his Predeceſſor had been before him, in doing his diligence to root out Hereticks. Notwithstanding in the mean seafon Wickliff's Sect increased privily, and daily drew to greater force, until the time that William Barton Vicechancellor of Oxford, about the year of our Lord 1380, had the whole Rule of that Univerſity: who calling together eight Monastical Doctors, and four other, with the consent of the reſt of his affinity, putting the common Seal of the Univerſity unto certain writings, set forth an Edict, declaring unto every Man, and threatning them under a greivous penalty, that no Man should be so hardy, hereafter to afficiate themſelves with any of Wickliffs fautors or favourers: and unto Wickliffe himself he threatned the greater excommunication, and further imprisonment, and to all his fautors, unleſs that they after three days Canonical admonition or warning, or as they call it, peremptory, did repent and amend. The which thing when Wickliffe underſtood, forſaking the Pope and all the Clergy, he thought to appeal unto the Kings Majesty: But the Duke of Lancaster coming between, forbade him, that he ſhould not hereafter attempt or begin any ſuch matters, but rather ſubmit himſelf unto the cenſure and judgment of his Ordinary. Whereby Wickliffe being beſet with troubles and vexations, as it were in the middeſt of the waves, he was forced once again to make confeſſion of his Doctrine: in the which his confeſſion, to avoid the rigor of things, he anſwered as is aforeſaid, making his declaration, and qualifying his aſſertions after ſuch a ſort, that he did mitigate and aſſwage the rigor of his Enemies.

An edict against the Wickliffists.

The next year after, which was 1382, by the commandment of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, there was a Convocation holden at London, whereas John Wickliffe was alſo commanded to be preſent. But whether he there appeared perſonally or not, I find it not in ſtory certainly affirmed. The mandate of the Archbiſhop William Courtney (ſent abroad for the conventing together of his Council) here followeth under-written, truly copied out of his own Regiſters.

Anno 1382.

Ex Regiſtro Archiepiſcopi Williami Courtney.

and Legate of the See Apostolical, being minded to execute our office and duty herein; have convocated or called together certain of our fellow Brethren and others a great many, as well Doctors and Bachelors of Divinity, as Doctors of the Canon and civil Law, and these whom we thought to be the most famous Men, skilfullest Men, and Men of soundest Judgment in Religion, that were in all the Realm, whose names hereunder ensue. And the same being (the 17th day of the Month of May) in the Year of our Lord 1382. in a certain Chamber within the Territories of the Priory of the Friers Preachers of London, before us and our foresaid fellow Brethren assembled, then and there personally present: After that the said conclusions (the Tenor whereof hereunder ensueth) were openly proponed, and distinctly and plainly read: We burthened our foresaid fellow Brethren, Doctors and Bachelors, in the faith wherein they stood bound to our Lord Jesus Christ, and as they would answer before the High Judge in the day of Judgment, that they should speak their opinions touching the said conclusions, and what every of them thinketh therein.

And at length, after good deliberation had upon the premisses, the foresaid our Brethren the Bishops, Doctors and Bachelors reassembled before us the 21st day of the same Month in the foresaid Chamber, the foresaid Conclusions being again and again repeated and plainly read; by us and by the common consents of us all it remaineth published and declared, that some of the said conclusions are heretical, and othersome erroneous and contrary to the determination of the Church, as hereafter most manifestly shall appear. And forasmuch as by sufficient information we find and perceive, that the said conclusions in many places of our said Province have been, as is said, both taught and preached; and that divers other persons do hold and maintain the same, and be of Heresie vehemently and notoriously suspected: we have thought good, as well generally as specially, to send out this Process underwritten.

The names of the Jurors were these.

Imprimis Eight Bishops, Canterbury, Winchester, Durham, Exceter, Hereford, Sarum, Rochester, and Frier Botlesham. B.

Item, Three Friers Preachers, Siward, Paris, Langley.

Item, Four Minorities, Folvile, Carlel, Frisly, Bernwel.

Item, Augustine Friers four, Ashborne, Bowkin, Woldley, Hermington.

Item, Carmelites Four, Glanvile, Dis, Lomey, Kingham.

Item, Monks four, Wels, Ramsey, Bloxam, Marton.

Item, Doctors of the Canon and civil Law, fourteen, Appelly, Waltrom; Baketon, Chadesen, Tregision, Stow, Blanchard, Rocombey, Lidford, Welbourne, Flatnburgh, Motrum, Brandon and Prophet.

Item, Bachelors of Divinity fix, Humbleton. Pickwech, Lindlow, Wich, Chiseden, Tomson.

The Articles of John Wickliffe here above specified, whereof there were ten which were by these Friers condemned as Heretical, the rest as Erroneous, here in order follow, and are these. Although it may be thought, that some of them were made worse by their sinister collecting, than he meant them in his own works and writings.

The Articles of John Wickliff, condemned as Heretical.

1. THe substance of material Bread and Wine, doth remain in the Sacrament of the Altar after the consecration.

2. The accidents do not remain without the subject in the same Sacrament, after the consecration.

3. That Christ is not in the Sacrament of the Altar truly and really, in his proper and corporal person.

4. That if a Bishop or a Priest be in deadly sin, he doth not Order, Consecrate, nor Baptize.

5. That if a Man be duly and truly contrite and penitent, all exterior and outer confession is but superfluous and unprofitable unto him. {KING Rich. 2.}

6. That it is not found or stablished by the Gospel, that Christ did make or ordain Mass. This Article either is slanderously reported, or else can hardly be defended.

7. If the Pope be a reprobate and evil Man, and consequently a Member of the Devil; he hath no power by any manner of means given unto him over faithful Christians, except peradventure it be given him from the Emperor.

8. That since the time of Urban the sixth, there is none to be received for Pope, but every Man is to live after the manner of the Greeks, under his own Law. He meaneth Church goods not to be given unto Prelates to maintain Ministers, but that they may be taken away if they do offend.

9. That it is against the Scripture, that Ecclesiastical Ministers should have any temporal possessions.

The other Articles of John Wickliff, condemned as Erroneous.

10. THat no Prelate ought to Excommunicate any Man except he knew him first to be Excommunicate of God.

11. That he, which doth so Excommunicate any Man, is thereby himself either an Heretick or Excommunicated.

12. That a Prelate or Bishop Excommunicating any of the Clergy, which hath appealed to the King or the Council, is thereby himself a Traitor to the King and Realm.

13. That all such, which do leave off Preaching or hearing the Word of God or Preaching of the Gospel for fear of Excommunication; they are already Excommunicated, and in the day of Judgment shall be counted as Traitors unto God.

14. That it is lawful for any Man, either Deacon or Priest, to Preach the Word of God without Authority or Licence of the Apostolick See or any other of his Catholicks.

15. † That so long as a Man is in deadly sin, he is neither Bishop nor Prelate in the Church of God. † This Article peradventure was scarce forgiven at the moment of him article was gathered as heterodox.

16. * Also that the temporal Lords may, according to their own will and discretion take away the temporal goods from the Churchmen whensoever they do offend.

17. That tenths are pure alms, and that the Parishioners may, for offence of their Curates, detain and keep them back, and bestow them upon others, at their own will and pleasures. This Article expoundeth the tenth Article above.

18. Also, that all special Prayers applied to any private or particuler person, by any Prelate or religious Man, do no more profit the same person, than general or universal Prayers do profit others, which be in like case or state unto him.

19. Moreover, in that any Man doth enter into any private Religion, whatsoever it be, he is thereby made the more unapt and unable to observe and keep the Commandments of God.

20. That holy Men, which have instituted private religions, whatsoever they be (as well such as are indued and possessed, as also the Order of begging Friers having no possessions) in so doing, have grievously offended.

21. That religious Men, being in their private Religions, are not of the Christian Religion.

22. That Friers are bounden to get their living by the labour of their Hands, and not by begging.

23. That whosoever doth give any Alms unto Friers, or to any begging observant, is accursed, or in danger thereof.

The Letter of the Archbishop directed to the Bishop of London, against John Wickliff and his adherents.

WIlliam by Gods permission Archbishop of Canterbury, Metropolitan of all England, and of the Apostolical See Legate. To our Reverend Brother by the Grace of God Bishop of London, Salutation. The Prelates of the Church ought to be so much the more vigilant and attentive about the charge of the Lords flock committed unto them; how much the more they shall understand the A Letter of the Archbishop of Canterbury against Wickliffe.

{KING Rich. 2.} the Wolves, being clothed in sheeps apparel, fraudulently to go about to worry and scatter the sheep. Truly by the continual cry and bruted fame (which it grieveth me to report) it is come to our knowledge that although by the Canonical Sanctions, no Man being forbidden or not admitted, should either publickly or privately without the Authority of the Apostolical See or Bishop of that place, usurpe or take upon him the Office of a Preacher: Some notwithstanding, such as are the children of damnation, being under the vale of blind ignorance, are brought into such a doting mind, that they take upon them to Preach, and are not affraid to affirm and teach diverse and sundry propositions and conclusions here under recited, both heretical, erroneous and false, condemned by the Church of God, and repugnant to the decree of holy Church, which tend to the subverting of the whole State of the same, of our Province of Canterbury, and to the destruction and weakning of the tranquility of the same; and that as well in the Churches, as in the Streets, as also in many other prophane places of our said Province, generally, commonly, and publickly, do Preach the same, infecting very many good Christians, causing them lamentably to wander out of the way, and from the Catholick Church, without which there is no salvation. We therefore, considering that so pernicious a mischief, which may creep amongst many, we ought not to suffer, and by dissimulation to pass over, which may with deadly contagion slay the souls of men, lest their blood be required at our hands; are willing so much as God will permit us to do, to extirpate the same. Wherefore, by the Counsel and consent of many of our Brethren and Suffragans, we have convented divers and sundry Doctors of Divinity, as also professors and other Clerks of the Canon and civil Laws, the best learned within the Realm, and of the most soundest opinion and judgment in the Catholick Faith, to give their opinions and judgments concerning the foresaid conclusions. But forasmuch as the said conclusions and assertions, being in the presence of us, and our fellow Brethren and other convocates openly expounded, and diligently examined, were in the end found by the Common council and consent as well of them as of us, and so declared that some of those conclusions were heretical, and some of them erroneous, and repugnant to the determination of the Church, as hereunder are described. We will and command your brotherhood and by vertue of holy Obedience straitly injoyn all and singular our Brethren, and Suffragans of our body and Church of Canterbury, that with all speedy diligence you possibly can, you likewise enjoyn them (as we have enjoyned you) and every of them. And that every one of them in their Churches and other places of their City and Diocese do admonish and warn, and that you, in your Church and other Churches of your City and Diocese do admonish and warn as we by the Tenor of these presents do admonish and warn the first time, the second time, and the third time; and yet more straitly do warn, assigning for the first admonition one day, for the second admonition another day, and for the third admonition Canonical and peremptory, another day: That no Man from henceforth of what estate or condition soever, do hold, preach, or defend the foresaid Heresies and errors or any of them; nor that he admit to preach any one that is prohibited or not sent to preach, nor that he hear or hearken to the Heresies or errors of him or any of them, or that he favour or lean unto him either publickly or privately; but that immediately he flush him, as he would avoid a Serpent putting forth most pestiferous poison, under pain of the greater Curse, the which we command to be thundred against all and every one which shall be disobedient in this behalf; and not regarding these our monitions, after that those three days be past which are assigned for the Canonical monition, and that their delay, fault or offence committed require the same: And then according to the Tenor of these writings, we command both by every one of our fellow Brethren and our Suffragans in their Cities and Dioceses, and by you in your City and Dioces (so much as belongeth both to you and them) that to the uttermost both ye and they cause the same Excommunications to be pronounced. And Furthermore we will and commend our foresaid fellow Brethren, and all and singular of you apart by our selves, to be admonished, and by the aspersion of the blood of Jesus Christ we likewise admonish you; that according to Yea rather for the honour of your Pope and the destruction of Christian Faith.

Here is not to be passed over the great miracle of Gods divine admonition or warning; for when as the Archbishop and Suffragans, with the other Doctors of Divinity and Lawyers, with a great company of babling Friers and religious persons were gathered together to consult as touching John Wickliffs Books, and that whole Sect; When as I say, they were gathered together at the Gray-Friers in London, to begin their business, upon S. Dunstans day after Dinner, about two of the Clock, the very hour and instant that they should go forward with their business, a wonderful and terrible Earthquake fell throughout all England: Whereupon diverse of the Suffragans, being feared by the strange and wonderful Demonstration, doubting what it should mean, thought it good to leave off from their determinate purpose. But the Archbishop (as chief Captain of that Army, more rash and bold than wise) interpreting the chance which had happened clean contrary to another meaning or purpose, did confirm and strengthen their hearts and minds, which were almost daunted with fear, stoutly to proceed and go forward in their attempted enterprise. Who then discoursing Wickliffs Articles, not according unto the Sacred Canons of the holy Scripture, but unto their own private affections and traditions, pronounced and gave sentence, that some of them were simply and plainly Heretical, other some half Erroneous, other Irreligious, some Seditious, and not consonant to the Church of Rome. An Earthquake what time Wickliffe was examined. 2 Esr. Chron. Matt. Paris.

Item, The Twelth day of June, in the year aforesaid, in the Chamber of the Friers Preachers, the foresaid Master the Archbishop of Canterbury, being examined what his opinion was touching the foresaid Articles, publickly affirmed and declared, that certain of those conclusions were heretical, and certain erroneous, as the other Doctors and Clerks afore mentioned had declared. And then immediately next after him, the foresaid Thomas Brightwel was examined, which upon some of the Conclusions at first somwhat staggered, but in the end being by the said Archbishop diligently examined upon the same, did affirm and repute the same to be heretical and erroneous, as the foresaid Chancellor had done. Another Bachelor of Divinity also there was named N. stammering also at some of those conclusions, but in the end affirmed that his opinion therein was, as was the judgment of the foresaid Chancellor and Thomas as is above declared. Whereupon the said Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, willing to let and hinder the peril of such heresies and errors, delivered unto the foresaid Chancellor, there being publickly read, his Letters Patents to be executed, the Tenor whereof in these words doth follow. Determination upon the Articles of Wickliff. A Letter of the Archbishop of Canterbury to the Chancellor of Oxford.

And further our will is, that whatſoever you ſhall do in the premiſſes, in manner and form of our Proceſs in this behalf it be had and done: and that you for your part, when you ſhall be required thereunto, plainly and diſtinctly do certifie us by your Letters Patents, having the tenour hereof.*

The Concluſions and Articles here mentioned in this Letter are above prefixed. Of which ſome were condemned for hereticall, ſome for erroneous.

After this, within few days the foreſaid Archbiſhop William Courtney directed down his Letters of Admonition to Robert Rigge Commiſſary of Oxford, for the repreſſing of this Doctrine: which yet notwithſtanding, both then, and yet to this day (God be praiſed) doth remain: the Copy of his monition to the Commiſſary here out of his own Regiſter followeth.

IN Dei nomine, Amen. Whereas we Will. by the permiſſion of God Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Lord Primate of England, and Legate of the Apoſtolical See, by the conſent of our Suffragans, have cauſed to be aſſembled together divers Clerks both ſecular and regular of the Univerſity of Oxford, within our Province of Canterbury, and other Catholick perſons to inform us of, and upon certain Concluſions hereticall and erroneous, generally and commonly preached and publiſhed in divers places of the ſaid Province of Canterbury, to the ſubverſion of the whole State of the Church, and our ſaid Province: And whereas alſo mature deliberation had upon the ſame, by the Common Council of the ſaid our Suffragans and their Convocates, it was declared, that certain of the ſaid Concluſions, have been and be condemned, ſome for hereticall, and ſome for erroneous, and notoriouſly repugnant to the determination of the Church, which we alſo our ſelves have declared to be damnable: And have underſtood by credible information, and partly by experience, that thou Robert Rigge, Chancellor of the Univerſity aforeſaid, haſt and doſt incline partly to the foreſaid damnable Concluſions, whom alſo we in this part have partly ſuſpected, doſt intend to moleſt theſe our Clerks above ſpecified, and others adhering unto us in the behalf as they ought to do, through thy ſubtil and ſophiſtical imaginations, ſundry and manifold ways: therefore we admoniſh thee Maſter Robert Chancellor aforeſaid, the firſt, ſecond, and third time, and peremptorily, that thou doſt not grieve, let, or moleſt, judicially or extrajudicially, openly or privily, or cauſe to be grieved, let, and moleſted, or procure directly or indirectly by thy ſelf or any other, as much as in thee lieth to be grieved, the foreſaid Clerks ſecular or regular, or ſuch as favour them in the premiſes, in their ſcholaſtical acts, or in any other condition whatſoever. And that thou ſuffer none hereafter to teach, maintain, preach or defend any ſuch Hereſies or Errors in the ſaid Univerſity, either within or without the Schools: Neither that thou do admit John Wickliff, Nicholas Herford, Philip Reppington, John Ashton, or Lawrence Redman, *which are vehemently and notoriouſly ſuſpected of Hereſie, or any other ſo ſuſpected or defamed unto that Office of Preaching; but that thou denounce the ſaid perſons to be ſuſpended, whom we have ſuſpended from all ſcholaſtical act, whilſt they clear their Innocency in this part before us, under the pain of the great Curſe, which we here in theſe writings denounce againſt thy perſon if thou ſhalt not obey thoſe our admonitions with effect, as thy crime, ſubtilty and offence in this behalf ſhall require according to this our admonition premiſed; which we repute in this part for Canonical, as well then, as now, and now as well as then; reſerving the abſolution of this ſentence Excommunicatory, if it happen to light upon thee, (as GOD forbid) ſpecially unto our ſelves. The Examination of Nicholas Herford, Philip Reppington, and John Ashton.

THe 18*th* day of the month and year aforeſaid, in the Chamber of the Preaching-Fryers afore-mentioned, before the foreſaid Archbiſhop in the preſence of divers Doctors and Bachelors of Divinity, and many Lawyers both Canon and Civil, whoſe names are under written, appeared M. Nicholas Herford, Philip Reppington, and John Aſhton Bachelors of Divinity. Who after a corporal Oath taken to ſhew their judgment upon the Concluſions aforeſaid, were examined ſeverally, each one by himſelf, before the Archbiſhop. Who there required day and place to deliberate upon the Concluſions aforeſaid, and to give their anſwer unto the ſame in writing. And alſo required to have a Copy of the ſaid Concluſions to be delivered unto them. The which Copy the ſaid Nicholas and Philip (being openly read unto them) received. Alſo the foreſaid M. John Aſhton likewiſe was examined, and judicially admoniſhed by the ſaid Archbiſhop by vertue of the Oath, that he, ſetting aſide all ſophiſtical words and ſubtilties, would ſay his mind fully and plainly upon the Concluſions aforeſaid. And being asked moreover by the ſaid Archbiſhop whether he would have a further day to deliberate upon his Anſwers, as the foreſaid Nicholas and Philip had before; ſaid expreſly that he would not, but would anſwer preſently to thoſe Concluſions; and ſo for

The proteſtation of Herford and Aſhton exhibited to the Archbiſhop.

WE proteſt here as before, publickly in theſe preſents, that we intend to be humble and faithful Children to the Church and holy Scripture, and to obey in all things the determinations of the Church. And if it ſhall chance us at any time, which God forbid, to ſwarve from this our intention, we ſubmit our ſelves humbly to the correction of our reverend Father, Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Primate of all England: and of all other which have intereſt to correct ſuch Swarvers. This Proteſtation premiſed, thus we anſwer to the concluſions aforeſaid.

Articles with the anſwers.

That the ſubſtance of material Bread and Wine remaineth in the Sacrament of the Altar after Conſecration.

After the ſenſe contrary to the Decretal, beginning Firmiter credimus, we grant that it is Hereſie.

That the accidents do not remain without the ſubject, after conſecration of the Sacrament.

After the ſenſe contrary to that Decretal, Cum Marthe: we grant that it is Hereſie.

That Chriſt is not in the Sacrament of the Altar truly and really in his own corporal preſence.

Although this concluſion as the words ſtand, found to be probable and intelligible, yet in the ſenſe contrary to the Decretal in Ele. Si dudum, we grant that it is Hereſie. And briefly concerning this whole matter of the Sacrament of the Altar, as touching alſo all other things, we profeſs that we will both in word and ſenſe hold with the holy Scripture, with the determination of the holy Church, and ſayings of the holy Doctors.

Obſtinately to affirm that it hath no foundation in the Goſpel, that Chriſt ordained the Maſs;

We grant that it is Hereſie.

That God ought to obey the Devil.

In this ſenſe, that God in his own Perſon or Eſſence, ought to obey the Devil with the obedience of neceſſity;

We grant that it is Hereſie.

If a man be duly contrite, that all external confeſſion is to him ſuperfluous and unprofitable;

We grant that it is Hereſie.

If the Pope be a Reprobate, and an evil man, and conſequently a Member of the Devil, he hath no Power over the faithful of Chriſt given to him of any, unleſs it be of Cæſar;

We grant that it is Hereſie.

That after Pope Urban the Sixth none is to be received for Pope, but that we ought to live after the manner of the Grecians, under our own Laws;

We grant that it is Hereſie.

To ſay that it is againſt the holy Scripture for Eccleſiaſtical Perſons to have Temporal Poſſeſſions.

If obſtinacy be joyned withall, we grant that it is Hereſie.

That no Prelate ought to Excommunicate any man, unleſs he know him before to be excommunicated of God. We grant that it is an Error; Underſtanding this knowledge to ſignifie an experimental knowledge; ſo that herewith may ſtand the Decree of the Church. 11. q. 3. Nemo Epiſco.

That he which doth ſo Excommunicate, is thereby an Heretick or Excommunicate.

After the ſenſe, agreeing with the other before, we grant to be an Error.

That a Prelate Excommunicating a Clerk, which appealeth to the King or Council of the Realm, in ſo doing is a Traitor to God, the King, and the Realm;

We grant it is an error.

That they which leave off to preach, or to hear the Word of God and the Goſpel Preached, for the Excommunication of Men, are Excommunicate, and in the day of Judgment ſhall be counted for Traitors to God.

Underſtanding this concluſion univerſally, ſo as Scripture and Laws do underſtand ſuch indefinite propoſitions;

We grant it is an error.

To affirm that it is lawful for any Deacon or Prieſt to Preach the Word of God without the Authority of the See Apoſtolick, or Catholick Biſhop, or of any other whoſe Authority he knoweth ſufficient;

We grant it is an error.

To affirm that there is no civil Lord, no Biſhop nor Prelate, whileſt he is in Mortal ſin; We grant it is an error.

That temporal Lords may at their pleaſure take away the temporal Goods from the Churches, offending habitualiter; We grant it is an error, After this ſenſe, that they may ſo take away temporal Goods of the Churches, without the Caſes limited in the Laws of the Church and Kingdoms.

That the vulgar people may correct the Lord offending at their pleaſure: underſtanding by this word May, that they may do it by the Law, We grant it is an error, becauſe that ſubjects have no power over their Lords.

That Tithes be pure Alms, and that Pariſhioners may, for the offences of their Curates, detain the ſame, and beſtow them to others at their pleaſure: underſtanding by his word May, as before, to may by the Law, We grant it is an error.

That

That ſpecial prayers applied to any one perſon by Prelates or religious men, do no more profit than the general prayers, if there be no let by the way to make them unlike: underſtanding this Concluſion univerſally negatively, and underſtanding by ſpecial prayers, the prayers made upon ſpecial devotion, and general prayers of general devotion: then after this ſenſe, no ſuch ſpecial prayers, applied to any one perſon, by ſpecial Orators, do profit more ſpecially the ſaid perſon, than general prayers do, which are made of the ſame, and for the ſame perſons, we grant it is an Error.

He that giveth Alms to the Fryers, or to any Fryer that preacheth, is Excommunicate; both he that giveth, and he that taketh: underſtanding this Propoſition univerſally, or conditionally, as is aforeſaid; we grant to be an Error.

That who ſo entreth into any private Religion whatſoever is thereby made more unapt and unmeet to obey the Commandments of God; we grant it is an Error.

That ſuch holy men as did inſtitute any private Religions whatſoever, as well of ſecular having poſſeſſions, as of Fryers having none, in ſo inſtituting did ſin: underſtanding this reduplicatively or univerſally, we grant it an Error. After this ſenſe, that what Saint ſoever did inſtitute private Religion, inſtituting the ſaid Religion upon that conſideration as they did, did ſin.

That religious men living in private Religions, be not of the Religion of Chriſt: underſtanding the Propoſition univerſally, as is aforeſaid; we grant it is an Error.

That Fryers are bound to get their Livings by the labour of their hands, and not by begging: underſtanding this Propoſition univerſally, as before; we grant it is an Error.

Theſe things have we ſpoken reverend Father and Lord, in all humility, under your gracious ſupportation and benign correction, according to our abilities and ſlender capacities for this preſent (the honour of GOD, the verity of our Belief, and ſafe Conſcience in all points reſerved) more humbly yet befeeching you, that if any other thing there be, that ſeemeth meet unto your Excellency and Direction to be more or otherwiſe ſaid and ſpoken, that your gracious Fatherhood would vouchſafe to inform us as Children by the Sacred Scriptures, by the determination of the Church, or authorities of the holy Doctors. And doubtleſs with ready Wills, and obedient Minds, we will conſent and agree unto your wholſome Doctrine. May it therefore pleaſe your Fatherhood, right reverend in God, according to the accuſtomed manner of your benignity, favourably to accept theſe our words and ſayings, foraſmuch as the foreſaid Concluſions were never by us either in Schools affirmed, or elſe in Sermons publickly preached.

Further Examinations and Proceedings againſt the foreſaid Nicholas Herford, P. Reppington, and John Aſhton.

Further Examinations againſt the ſaid Nicholas, Philip, and John, Nicholas Herford, Philip Reppington, John Aſhton examined. An. Domini, Anno 1382.

WHen all theſe Anſwers were made unto the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the ſaid Nicholas and Philip, for that they anſwered not unto the meaning and words of the firſt Concluſion expreſly, but contrary to the ſenſe of the decretal Firmiter credimus, were there judicially examined what their ſenſe and meaning was; but they would not expreſs the ſame. Then was it demanded of them, according to the ſenſe of the ſame Concluſion declared on the behalf of the ſaid Lord of Canterbury, whether the ſame material bread in numero, which before the Conſecration is laid upon the Altar, remain in proper ſubſtance and nature, after the Conſecration in the Sacrament of the Altar; and likewiſe of the wine? To this the ſaid Nicholas and Philip anſwered, That for that time they could ſay no more therein, than that they already anſwered, as is before alledged in writing. And for that unto the ſenſe and words of the ſecond Concluſion they anſwered not fully and expreſly, but in a ſenſe contrary to the Decretal Cum Marthe: being asked what was their meaning, they would not expreſs the ſame: therefore it was demanded of them, according to the ſenſe of the ſame Concluſion, declared in the behalf of the ſaid Lord of Canterbury, whether thoſe corporal accidents which formally were in the bread and wine before the conſecration of them, were in the ſame bread and wine after the conſecration, or elſe were ſubjected in any other ſubſtance? To this they anſwered, That better to anſwer, than before in their writings they already had, for that time they could not. To the meaning alſo and words of the third Concluſion for that they anſwered not plainly and expreſly, but in ſenſe contrary to the Decretal in the Clementines, Si dudum, being asked what was that ſenſe and meaning, would not declare the ſame. Wherefore it was then demanded of them, according to the ſenſe of the ſame Concluſion, declared on the behalf of the ſaid Lord of Canterbury, Whether the ſame Body of Chriſt, which was aſſumed of the Virgin, be in the Sacrament of the Altar, ſecundum ſeipſum, even as he is really in camal ſubſtance, proper eſſence and nature? To this they anſwered, That for that time they could ſay no more than that they had ſaid, as before is ſpecified in writing.

{KING} {Ric. 2.}

Furthermore, to the ſenſe and text of the ſixth Concluſion, for that they anſwered not fully and expreſly, being asked whether God ought any manner of obedience to the Devil or not: they ſaid, Yea, as the obedience of love, becauſe he loveth, and puniſhed him as he ought. And to prove that God ought ſo to obey the Devil, they offered themſelves to the fire.

To the 11*th* Concluſion, for that they anſwered not expreſly, being asked whether a Prelate might Excommunicate any man being in the ſtate of Grace: they ſaid, Yea.

Unto the 20*th* Concluſion, for that they anſwered not fully, ſimply, and expreſly; being demanded whether ſpecial or general prayers did moſt profit, and were of greater force; they would not ſay but that ſpecial.

Unto the laſt Concluſion, for that they anſwered neither ſimply, nor expreſly; and being demanded particularly, whether any Fryer were bound to get his living with his manual labour, ſo that it might not be lawful for them to live by begging; they would make no anſwer at all.

After that, the foreſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury demanded of all the foreſaid Doctors, what their judgment was touching the anſwers that were made upon all and ſingular ſuch Concluſions. All which Doctors and every of them ſeverally ſaid, That all the anſwers given unto the firſt, ſecond, third, and ſixth Concluſions (as is before recited) were inſufficient, heretical and fabrik; and that all the anſwers made ſpecially to the ninth, tenth, and laſt Concluſions, as is above mentioned, were inſufficient, erroneous, and perverſe. Whereupon the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, conſidering the ſaid anſwers to be heretical, fabtil, erroneous, and perverſe, accordingly as the ſaid Doctors (as is aforeſaid) had weighed and conſidered, admoniſhed the ſaid Nicholas and Philip ſufficiently under this form of words.

The judgments of the Doctors upon theſe Articles.

Admoniſhment and citation of the Archbiſhop againſt the Examinants.

The name of Chriſt being called upon, we William by Gods permiſſion, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Metropolitan of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, and through all our Province of Canterbury, Inquiſitor of all heretical Pravity, do ſufficiently and lawfully admoniſh and cite you Nicholas Herford and Philip Reppington, Profeſſors of Divinity, having this day and place aſſigned you by your own conſent and our preſcition, peremptorily to anſwer and to ſay fully and plainly your Opinions touching theſe Concluſions, wherevnto we do refer you (all ſubtil, ſophiſtical, and logical words ſet apart) being thereunto ſworn, cited, and commanded. Which thing to do, without cauſe reaſonable or any licence given thereunto, you neither have been willing, nor are willing, nay rather ye contemptuouſly refuſed to anſwer to ſome of thoſe Concluſions before us judicially, according to the effect of our monition, citation and commandment beforeſaid. But for that ye have anſwered unto ſome of them heretically, and to other ſome erroneouſly, although not fully; we admoniſh and cite you once, twice, and thrice, and that peremptorily, that plainly and fully (all ſubtil, ſophiſtical and logical words ſet apart) you and every of you anſwer unto the ſame Concluſions, and unto that ſenſe and meaning by us limited, under the pain that otherwiſe ſuch Concluſions by you confeſſed deſerve, and that for the ſame Concluſions you ought to have.

Which Admonition being made and done, for that the foreſaid Nicholas and Philip would make none other anſwer,

{KING} {Ric. 2.}

Another day aſſigned for the examinants to appear.

anſwer, the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury concluded that buſineſs, prefixing and aſſigning unto the foreſaid Nicholas and Philip, eight days ſpace; that is to ſay, until the 27*th* day of the ſame month, and that then they ſhould appear before the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, whereſoever within the ſame his Province of Canterbury he ſhould fortune to be, to hear his Decree that ſhould be made in that behalf. This done, the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury moniſhed and cited lawfully and ſufficiently, John Aſhton under the tenour of theſe words following.

Proceſs made by the Archbiſhop againſt John Aſhton.

In the Name of God; We William by Gods permiſſion, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, Legate of the See Apoſtolical, and through all our Province of Canterbury, of all heretical pravity chief Inquiſitor, do moniſh and cite thee J. Aſhton, Maſter of Art, and Student in Divinity, appearing before us, judicially to ſay and ſpeak the plain verity touching theſe Concluſions, to the which we do refer thee; and to the which we have cauſed thee to ſwear, laying thy hand upon a Book; as being alſo otherwiſe by us admoniſhed and commanded to keep this day and place by us appointed, for the third time peremptorily, to propone ſuch reaſonable cauſe (if thou haſt any) wherefore thou oughteſt not to be pronounced an Heretick. And ſufficiently and lawfully we moniſh and cite thee, the firſt, ſecond, and third time, and that peremptorily, that thou fully and plainly (all ſubtil, ſophiſtical, and logical words ſet apart) do anſwer unto the ſame Concluſions under the pain that unto ſuch Concluſions belong, and on thy part confeſſed, and that thou for ſuch Concluſions oughteſt to ſuffer. Which monition being thus premiſed, the ſaid Archbiſhop read the firſt Concluſion, and of the ſaid John inquired what was his opinion and meaning therein? and hereupon he ſaid his mind concerning the foreſaid monition. Then the foreſaid John Aſhton, being often required by the Archbiſhop, that he would anſwer in the Latin-Tongue, to thoſe queſtions which were demanded of him, becauſe of the Lay-people that ſtood about him; he crying out in the Engliſh-Tongue, uttered frivolous and opprobrious Contumelies to move and excite the people againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop; as it ſhould ſeem. Neither did he unto the firſt Concluſion, nor unto any of theſe other Concluſions, effectually and pertinently ſeem to them to anſwer; but rather by ſubtilties and ſhifts, ſaying oftentimes, and as expreſly as Luke ſaid, it was ſufficient for him to believe as the holy Church believed. Then the ſaid Archbiſhop examined him upon the firſt Concluſion touching the Sacrament of the Altar; whether that after the words of Conſecration there remaineth material bread, particular bread, or univerſal bread? He ſaid the matter paſſed his underſtanding, and therefore ſaid, he would in that form and manner anſwer, and otherwiſe not: But amongſt other things, he ſpake in deriding-wiſe unto the ſaid Archbiſhop againſt this word Material, ſaying, You may put that in your purſe, if you have any. Whereupon the ſaid Archbiſhop calling that an unwiſe and fooliſh anſwer, as the reſt of the Doctors did (of whom mention was made before) the rather for that he was a Graduate in the Schools, farther proceeded againſt the ſaid John Aſhton in this wiſe.

John Aſhton ſeverally examined.

The Archbiſhop and his Fryers do fear the Engliſh Tongue for the people.

Whether material bread remain in the Sacrament.

And thou John Aſhton moniſhed and commanded by us, as is aforeſaid, after thine Oath taken, without any reaſonable cauſe or any other licence, neither wouldſt thou, nor yet wilt, but refuſeſt, and yet doſt contemptuouſly, to anſwer unto ſuch Concluſions before us; judicially according to our monition and commandment aforeſaid; we do hold all ſuch Concluſions to be by thee confeſſed, and thee the foreſaid John, with all thy foreſaid Concluſions, convicted. And therefore we do pronounce, and declare by Sentence giving, that thou John Aſhton, concerning thoſe Concluſions, which by us with good deliberation of divers Prelates our Suffragans, and alſo divers and ſundry Profeſſors of Divinity, and other wiſe men and learned in the Law, according to the Canonical Sanctions, being condemned and declared for an Heretick, and heretical haſt been, and ſtill art an Heretick, and thy Concluſions heretical. And as touching thy other Concluſions, by us heretofore counted erroneous, and for erroneous condemned, we do pronounce and declare ſententially by theſe our Writings, that both thou haſt erred, and doſt err.

Upon the ſame 20*th* day of June, in the year and place above recited, the foreſaid Lord of Canterbury being deſirous, as he pretended, to be informed by Thomas Hilman, Bachelor of Divinity, there being preſent, and ſomewhat favouring the ſaid Maſter John Aſhton, what his Judgment and Opinion was touching the foreſaid Concluſions, prefixed and aſſigned unto the ſaid Thomas (for that time demanding the ſame deliberation and day) eight days after; that is to ſay, the 28*th* of the ſaid month, to appear before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, whereſoever within his ſaid Province of Canterbury he ſhould then happen to be, to declare plainly and fully what his judgment and opinion was touching the foreſaid Concluſions. Ex Regiſt. W. Courtney.

The 28*th* day of June An. 1382.

The Fryday next following, that is to ſay, the 28*th* day of June, the foreſaid M. Nicholas, Philip, and Thomas Hilman, appeared before the ſaid Archbiſhop and Lord Inquiſitor of Canterbury, in the Chappel of his Mannor of Oſford, in the Dioceſs of Canterbury there ſitting in his Tribunal-Seat. To whom the ſaid Biſhop of Canterbury ſaying, That becauſe at that time he had not the preſence and aſſiſtance of the Doctors in Divinity and of the Canon and Civil Law, he continued the ſaid buſineſs touching the ſaid Nicholas, Philip and Thomas, in the ſame ſtate wherein then it was, till Tueſday next and immediately enſuing; that is to ſay, the firſt day of July, the year of our Lord aforeſaid: and prefixed unto the ſaid Nicholas Philip, and Thomas Hilman the ſame day to appear before him, wherſoever within his Province of Canterbury he ſhould then chance to be, to do that which upon the ſaid 28*th* day, they were purpoſed to do together or apart.

The 1*ſt* day of July, An. 1382.

Which Tueſday being come, the foreſaid Archbiſhop in the chief houſe of his Church at Canterbury, before the hour of Nine with the Doctors, whoſe names are under contained, and other Clerks a great multitude; expected the foreſaid Nicholas, Philip, and Thomas long time, by the Beadle, calling them and looking after them; who nevertheleſs appeared not before two of the Clock after dinner the ſame day, continuing the foreſaid buſineſs in the priſtine ſtate till the ſame hour. At which hour the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, having Aſſiſtants the Doctors and Clerks under recited, examined the foreſaid Maſter Thomas Hilman, then and there judicially appearing, what his opinion was touching the foreſaid Concluſions; who at them and the meaning of them ſomewhat ſtammering, at laſt to all and ſingular the ſame Concluſions then to him read and expounded, thus anſwered, I ſuppoſe and judge all and ſingular thoſe Concluſions lately condemned by my Lord of Canterbury that now is, together with the council and conſent of his Clerks, to be heretical and erroneous, even as the ſame my Lord of Canterbury and other Doctors of Divinity, of the Canon and Civil Law, by common conſent and counſel have ſuppoſed and thought. And the ſame (being for Hereſies and Errors, as before is ſaid condemned) I do as much as in me is condemn; proteſting that I will hold and affirm the contrary of thoſe Concluſions, and in the ſame Faith live and die. Then the ſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury, then and there ſitting as Tribunal or Judge, pronouncing the ſaid Maſters, Nicholas and Philip, long in Court called before and tarried for, and yet not appearing, guilty of Contumacy and Diſobedience; excommunicated them for the penalty of this their Contumacy, in tenour of theſe words following:

The anſwer of Thomas Hilman.

Nic. Herford and Philip Reppington, for not appearing, excommunicated.

We William by the Grace of God Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of England, Legate of the Apoſtolical

See,

Excommunic. tion pronounced by the Archbishop.

See, and through all our Province of Canterbury; of all Heretical pravity chief Inquisitor; do pronounce Master Nicholas Herford and Master Philip Reppington, Professors of Divinity, having this day and place by our prefixion appointed to hear and decree in this business of Heretical pravity (being in Court by our Bedle long called and tarried for, and yet not appearing) to be stubborn and disobedient persons; and, for the penalty of this their contumacy, we do Excommunicate them and either of them by these presents.

The denouncing of the Excommunication against Nicholas Herford, and Philip Reppington.

The 13th day of July, An. 1382. Excommunication to be denounced at Pauls Cros.

William by Gods permission Archbishop of Canterbury, &c. To our beloved Son in Christ, whosoever he be, that this instant Sunday shall Preach at Pauls Cros in London, salutation grace and blessing. Forasmuch as we prefixed a certain competent day and place to Master Nicholas Herford, and Master Philip Reppington, Canon Regular of the Monastery of our Lady of Leicester, being Doctors of Divinity, and of Heretical pravity vehemently suspected (after certain answers not fully made, but impertinent and nothing to the purpose, as also Heretical and Erroneous) in divers places of our said Province commonly, generally, and publickly taught and preached; and that therefore they should judicially appear before us, to do and to receive peremptorily in that behalf, what thing soever the quality of that business should move us unto: and that we have for their contumacy in not appearing before us at that day and place, judicially appointed, as right therein required: We by these presents command and commit unto you, firmly injoyning you, that when all the multitude of People shall be gathered together to hear your Sermon, that in the day and place appointed you publickly and solemnly denounce the foresaid Nicholas and Philip, holding up a Cross, and lighting up a Candle, and then throwing down the same upon the ground, to have been so and in such manner Excommunicated, and still be.

Fare ye well. In our Mannor House at Lambeth, the 13*th* day of July, the Year of our Lord, 1382. and first Year of our Translation.

The Citation against the said Nicholas and Philip.

William by the Grace of God, &c. To our Welbeloved Son M. Robert Rigge, Chancellor of the Universsity of Oxford, Salutation, &c. Forasmuch as we have prefixed a competent day and place to M. Nicholas Herford, and M. Philip Reppington, &c. As before: We straitly charge and command you, that you publickly and solemnly denounce in the Church of our Lady, and in the Schools of the Universsity, the foresaid Nicholas and Philip to have been by us Excommunicated, and still be. And that you further cite, or cause to be cited peremptorily the foresaid Nicholas and Philip, that they and every of them appear before us within 15. days after the date of this Citation, wheresoever it shall fortune us, within our said Province of Canterbury, then to be: To hear and see how we proceed to proceed against them, and every of them, concerning the foresaid Heretical and Erroneous conclusions, according to the form of retroactions, and quality of the business in this behalf had and used. And that both of the day of the receit of this present Citation, of the manner and form thereof; or if that you shall apprehend by personal Citation the said Nicholas and Philip, or either of them, or whether they shall be absent and hide themselves, as of every thing else, which in this behalf you shall think meet to be done; that between this and the Feast of S. Laurence, you clearly certifie us by your Letters Patents, containing the effect of these things.

Fare ye well. At our Mannor of Lambeth, the 13th day of July in the Year of our Lord 1382. and first Year of our Translation.

Against this blind Excommunication of the said Archbishop the parties Excommunicate commenced and exhibited their appeal unto the Bishop of Rome. Which appeal of theirs as insufficient, or rather to him unpleasant, the said Archbishop utterly rejected (as might oftentimes overcometh right) proceeding in his preconceived Excommunication against them, and writing moreover his Letters to him that should Preach next at Pauls Cros, as is aforesaid, to denounce and to publish openly the said Nicholas Herford, and Philip Reppington to be Excommunicate, for not appearing at their tearm affigned. Which was in the 13*th* day of the Month of July.

The Excommunication of Herford and Reppington denounced at Pauls Cros.

13th day of July, An. 1382.

Which Archbishop moreover the said year, the month and day aforesaid, sent also another Letter to M. Rigge, Commissary of Oxford, straightly injoyning and charging him, not only to denounce the said sentence of Excommunication, and to give out publick Citation against them, but also to make diligent search and inquisition through all Oxford for them, to have them apprehended and sent up to him, personally before him to appear at a certain day prescribed for the same. Whereby may appear how busie this Bishop was in disquieting and persecuting these poor Men, whom rather he should have nourished and Cherished as his Brethren. But as his labor is past, so his reward will follow, at what day the great Archbishop of our souls shall judicially appear in his Tribunal Seat, to Judge both the quick and the dead.

Other Letters of the Archbishop sent to the Chancellor of Oxford.

The Archbishop not yet contented with this, doth moreover by all means possible solicite the King to joyn withal the power of his temporal Sword; for that he well perceived, that hitherto as yet the Popish Clergy had not Authority sufficient, by any publick Law or Statute of this Land, to proceed unto death against any person whatsoever, in case of Religion, but only by the usurped Tyranny and example of the Court of Rome. Where note (Gentle Reader) for thy better understanding the practice of the Romish Prelates in seeking the Kings help to further their bloody purpose against the good Saints of God. Which King being but young, and under years of ripe Judgment, partly induced, or rather seduced by importune sute of the foresaid Archbishop, partly also either for fear of the Bishops (for Kings cannot always do in their Realms what they will) or else perhaps inticed by some hope of lubtidy to be gathered by the Clergy, was content to adjoyn his private assent (such as it was) to the setting down of an ordinance, which was indeed the very first Law that is to be found made against Religion and the professors thereof, bearing the name of an Act made in the Parliament holden at Westminster, An. 5. Rich. 2. Where among sundry other Statutes then published, and yet remaining in the printed Books of Statutes, this supposed Statute is to be found, cap. 5. & ultimo.

Hitherto no Law to burn any Man for Religion.

The King circumvented by the Archbishop.

The selfsame to be found prejudicial to the Clergy for burning the professors of religion. An. 5. Rich. Secundi.

Item, Forasmuch as it is openly known that there be divers evil persons within the Realm, going from County to County, and from Town to Town, in certain habits under dissimulation of great Holiness, and without the licence of the Ordinaries of the places, or other sufficient Authority, Preaching daily not only in Churches and Churchyards, but also in Markets, Fairs, and other open places where a great Congregation of people is, divers Sermons containing Heresies and notorious Errors, to the great empblemishing of Christian Faith and destruction of the Laws, and of the Estate of holy Church, to the great peril of the souls of the people, and of all the Realm of England as more plainly is found, and sufficiently proved before the Reverend Father in God the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishops and other Prelates, Masters of Divinity, and Doctors of Canon and of civil Law, and a great

This Statute was made by the Clergy, without consent or knowledge of the Commons.

{KING Rich. 2.} a great part of the Clergy of the said Realm, specially assembled for this great cause; which persons do also preach divers matters of slander, to ingender discord and dissention betwixt divers Estates of the said Realm, as well Spiritual as Temporal, in exciting of the people to the great peril of all the Realm: which Preachers being cited or summoned before the Ordinaries of the places, there to answer to that whereof they be impeached, they will not obey to their Summons and Commandments, nor care not for their Monitions nor Censures of the holy Church, but expressly despise them; and moreover, by their subtil and ingenious words, do draw the people to hear their Sermons, and do maintain them in their Errors by strong hand, and by great routs: It is ordained and affented in this present Parliament, That the Kings Commissions be made and directed to the Sheriffs, and other Ministers of our Sovereign Lord the King, or other sufficient persons learned, and according to the Certifications of the Prelates thereof, to be made in the Chancery from time to time, to arrest all such Preachers, and also their Fautors, Maintainers and Abbetters, and to hold them in arrest and strong prison, till they will justifie themselves according to the law and reason of holy Church. And the King willeth and commandeth, that the Chancellor make such Commissions at all times, that he by the Prelates, or any of them shall be certified and thereof required, as is aforesaid.

Note that this Statute was repealed after, under the influence of the Commons.

An Examination of the foresaid supposed Statute, and of the invalidity thereof.

Which supposed Statute forasmuch as it was the principal ground whereupon proceeded all the persecution of that time; it is therefore not impertinent to examine the same more particularly, whereby it shall appear, that as the same was fraudulently and unduely devised by the Prelates only, so was it in like manner most injuriously and unorderly executed by them. For immediately upon the publishing of this Law, without further warrant either from the King or his Council, Commissions under the Great Seal of England were made in this form, Richard by the Grace of God, &c. ut patet. act. pag. 541. Witnes my self at Westminster the 26th day of June, in the sixth year of our Reign. Without more words of warrant underwritten, such as in like cases are both usual and requisite, viz. per ipsum Regem: per Regem & concilium: per breve de privato Sigillo. All or any which words being utterly wanting in this place, as may be seen in the Kings Records of that time; it must therefore be done either by warrant of this foresaid Statute, or else without any warrant at all. Whereupon it is to be noted, that whereas the said Statute appointed the Commissions to be directed to the Sheriff, or other Ministers of the Kings, or to other sufficient persons learned for the arretting of such persons; the said Commissions are directed to the Archbishop and his Suffragans, being as it appeareth Parties in the case, authorizing them further without either the words, or reasonable meaning of the said Statute, to imprison them in their own houses, or where else pleased them.

No usual words of warrant affixed to this Commission

Besides also, what manner of Law this was, by whom devised, and by what authority the same was first made and established, Judge by that that followeth, viz.

In the Utas of Saint Michael next following, at a Parliament summoned and holden at Westminster, the sixth year of the said King, among sundry Petitions made to the King by his Commons, whereunto he assented, there is one in this form, Article 52.

The petition of the Commons for the repealing of the foresaid Statutes.

Item, prayen the Commons, That whereas an Estatute was made the last Parliament in these words, It is Ordained in this present Parliament, That Commissions from the King be directed to the Sheriffs, and other Ministers of the King, or to other sufficient persons skilful, and according to the Certificates of the Prelates thereof, to be made unto the Chancery from time to time, to arrest all such Preachers, and their Fautors, Maintainers and Abbetters: And them to detain in strong prison, until they will justifie themselves according to reason, and law of holy Church: And the King willeth and commandeth, that the Chancellor make such Commissions at all times as he shall be by the Prelates or any of them certified, and thereof required, as is aforesaid. The which was never agreed nor granted by the Commons: but whatsoever was moved therein, was without their assent. That the said Statute be therefore disannulled. For it is not in any wise their meaning, that either themselves, or such as shall succeed them, shall be further justified or bound by the Prelates, than were their Ancestors in former times, whereunto is answered, il plaist al, Roy.

The Statute repealed.

The King ratifieth the repeal.

The King is pleased.

Hereby notwithstanding the former unjust Law of An. 5. was repealed, and the fraud of the Framers thereof sufficiently discovered: yet such means was there made by the Prelates, that this Act of repeal was never published, nor ever sithence imprinted with the rest of the Statutes of that Parliament. Insomuch as the said Repeal being concealed, like Commissions and other Process were made from time to time, by vertue of the said Bastard-Statute, as well during all the Reign of this King, as ever sithence against the Professors of Religion; as shall hereafter by the Grace of God appear in the second year of King Henry the Fourth, where the Clergy pursued the like practice. And now again to the story of our Oxford Divines, and of the Archbishop, to whom the King writeth his Letters Patents, first to the Archbishop, then to the Vice-Chancellor in Oxford as followeth.

The Kings Letters Patents to the Archbishop.

The Kings Letters against the Favourers of Wickliff.

Richard by the Grace of God King of England, and Lord of Ireland. To all those to whom these present Letters shall come, greeting. By the Petition of the reverend Father in God, William Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of England, exhibited unto us, we right well understand: That divers and sundry Conclusions, very contrary to wholsome Doctrine, and redounding both to the subversion of the Catholick Faith, the holy Church, and to his Province of Canterbury, in divers and sundry places of the same his Province, have been openly and publickly preached, although damnably preached: Of the which Conclusions, some as Heresies, otherwise as Errors have been condemned, but not before good and mature deliberation first therein had and used; and by common council of the said Archbishop, his Suffragans, and many Doctors in Divinity, and other Clerks and learned men in the holy Scriptures, were sententially and wholsomely declared. Whereupon the said Archbishop hath made his Supplication unto us; that both for the coertion and due castigation of such as shall henceforth of an obstinate mind, preach or maintain the foresaid Conclusions, we would vouchsafe to put to the arm and helping hand of our Kingly Power. We therefore moved by the zeal of the Catholick Faith, whereof we be, and will be Defenders, and unwilling that any such Heresies or Errors should spring up within the Limits of our Dominion: Give and grant special Licence and Authority, by the tenour of these presents, unto the foresaid Archbishop, and to his Suffragans, to arrest and imprison either in their own prisons, or any other, all and every such person and persons, as shall either privily or openly preach and maintain the foresaid Conclusions, so condemned; and the same persons so imprisoned there at their pleasures to detain, till such time as they shall repent them and amend them of such heretical Pravities, or else so shall be of such arrests, by us and our Council otherwise determined and provided: Further charging and commanding all and singular our Liege-men, Ministers and Subjects, of what state and condition soever they be, upon their Fidelity and Allegiance, wherein they stand bound to us, that by no means they either favour, counsel, or help the Preachers, or else Maintainers of the said Conclusions so condemned, or their Favourers, upon pain and forfeiture of all that ever they have; but that they obey and humbly attend upon the said Archbishop, his Suffragans, and Ministers, in the execution of these presents; so that due and manifest publication against the foresaid Conclusions and their Maintainers, without any perturbation, may be done and executed, as for the Defence of our Realm and Catholick Faith shall be thought most meet and requisite. In witness whereof, we have caused these our Letters Patents to be made.

The Kings Letters Patents to the Vice-Chancellor.

Another Letter of the King to the Vice-Chancellor.

THe King to the Chancellor and the Procurators of the University of Oxford which now be, or for the time being shall be greeting. Moved by the zeal of Christian Faith, whereof we be, and always will be Defenders, and for our Souls health induced thereunto, having a great desire to repress, and by condign punishment to restrain the Impugners of the foresaid Faith, which newly and wickedly go about and presume to sow their naughty and perverse Doctrine within our Kingdom of England, and to preach and hold damnable Conclusions, so notoriously repugnant and contrary to the same Faith, to the perverting of our subjects and people, as we understand: Before they any further proceed in their malicious errors, or else infect others. We have by these Presents appointed you to be Inquisitor-General (all the chief Divines of the said University being your Assistants) and the same likewise to be done of all and singular the Graduates, Divines and Lawyers of the same University. And if they shall know any which be of the Jurisdiction of the said University of Oxford, which be probably of them suspected to be in the favour, belief, or defence of any Heresie or Error, and specially of any of the Conclusions publickly condemned by the reverend Father, William, Archbishop of Canterbury, by the Council of his Clergy, or else of any other Conclusion like unto any of them in meaning, or in words; and that if henceforth you shall find any that shall believe, favour, or defend any of the foresaid Heresies or Errors, or any other such like, or else which shall be bold to receive into their Houses and Inns, Master John Wickliffe, Master Nicholas Herford, Master Philip Reppington, or Master John Ashton, or any other noted by probable suspition of any the foresaid Heresies, or Errors, or any other like unto them in meaning, or in word: Or that shall presume to communicate with any of them, or else to defend or favour any of such Favourers, Receivers, Communicants, and Defenders, within seven days after the same shall appear and be manifest unto you, that you banish and expel them from the University and Town of Oxford, till such time as they shall declare their Innocency before the Archbishop of Canterbury for the time being, by manifest purgation. So notwithstanding that such as be compelled to purge themselves, you certifie us and the said Archbishop, under your Seals, from time to time within one month, that they be such manner of men. Commanding furthermore, that through all the Halls of the said University ye cause diligently to be searched and inquired out of hand; If any man have any Book or Tractation of the Edition, or compiling of the foresaid M. John Wickliffe, or N. Herford: and that when and wheresoever ye shall chance to find any such Book or Tractation, ye cause the same to be arrested and taken, and unto the foresaid Archbishop within one month (without correction, corruption, or mutation, whatsoever) word for word, and sentence for sentence, to be brought and presented. And therefore we straitly enjoyn and command you, upon your Fidelity and Allegiance wherein ye stand bound unto us, and upon pain of forfeiture of all and singular your Liberties and Privileges of your said University, and of all that ever you have besides; that you give your diligent attendance upon the premisses, and that well and faithfully you execute the same in manner and form aforesaid. And that you obey the foresaid Archbishop, and his lawful and honest Mandates, that he shall think good to direct unto you in this behalf, as it is meet ye should. And we give in charge unto the Vice-Chancellor and Major of Oxford for the time being, and to all and singular our Sheriffs, and Under-Sheriffs, Bailiffs and Subjects by these presents; that they aid, obey, and be attendant upon you in the execution of the premisses. In witness whereof, &c. Witness the King at Westminster the thirteenth day of July, the sixth year of his Reign.

The 13th day of July, Anno 1382.

Besides these Letters Patents, the said young King moved by the unquiet importunity of the Archbishop, sendeth moreover another special Letter to the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors of the University of Oxford. Wherein, under a pretensed zeal of Defence of Christian Faith, he straitly and sharply enjoyneth and assigneth them (for the utter abolishing of those Conclusions and Opinions) to make a general Inquisition through the whole Universities, as well for the Parties aforesaid, John Wickliffe, Nicholas Herford, Philip Reppington, John Ashton, and such others; as also for all other whom they know or judge to be suspected of that Doctrine, or to be Maintainers, Receivers, and Defenders of the foresaid Parties, or their Conclusions any manner of way; to the intent that they being so apprehended through their diligent search, may be within seven days of their Admonitions expulsed the University, and cited up to the Archbishop of Canterbury, before him to appear and to stand to their Answers. Willing moreover and commanding the said Vice-Chancellor and Proctors with other Regents their Assisters, that if any person or persons in any House, Hall, or College, or in any other place shall be found to have any of their Books or Treatises compiled by the said John Wickliffe, Nicholas Herford, &c. they will cause without delay the said person or persons with their Books, to be arrested and attached, and presented within one month, without correction, corruption, or mutation, to the foresaid Archbishop, upon their Faith and Allegiance, as they will avoid the forfeiture of all and singular the Liberties and Priviledges of the Universlity appertaining. And that they will be obedient to the Archbishop aforesaid in the ordering hereof, and all other his Injunctions to be obeyed in all things lawful and honest. Giving moreover in these our Letters charge and commandment to the Major, Bailiffs, and other the Inhabitants of Oxford to be Assistant and Attendant unto the foresaid Vice-Chancellor and Proctors, touching the execution of the Premisses, bearing the date of the 14th day of July, which was the year of our Lord, 1382.

{KING} Ric. 2.

Another Charg. Letter of King Richard sent to Oxford against Wickliffe and his Sect.

The effect of the Kings Letter briefly compounded.

The persons with their Books to be arrested.

The 14th day of July, Anno 1382.

Matters incident of Robert Rigges, Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, Nicholas Herford, and Philip Reppington, with others.

THe Vice-Chancellor the same time in Oxford was M. Robert Rigge. The two Proctors were John Huntman and Walter Disch, who then, as far as they durst, favoured the Cause of John Wickliffe and that side. Insomuch that the same time and year, which was Anno 1382. when certain publick Sermons should be appointed customably at the Feast of the Ascension, and of Corpus Christi, to be preached in the Cloyster of Saint Frideswide (now called Christ's Church) before the people, by the Vice-Chancellor aforesaid and the Proctors: the doings thereof the Vice-Chancellor aforesaid and Proctors had committed to Philip Reppington and Nicholas Herford, so that Nicholas Herford should preach on the Ascension-day, and Reppington upon Corpus Christi day. First, Herford beginning was noted to defend John Wickliffe, openly to be a faithful, good, and innocent man; for the which no small ado with Out-cries was amongst the Fryers. This Herford, after he had long favoured and maintained Wickliffes part, grew first in suspition amongst the Enemies of the Truth. For assoon as he began somewhat liberally and freely to pronounce and utter any thing, which tended to the defence of Wickliffe; by and by the Carmelites, and all the Orders of Religion were on his top, and laid not a few Heresies unto his Charge; the which they had strained here and there out of his Sermons, and had compiled together in a certain forme, by the hands of certain Notaries (through the industry and diligence of one Peter Stokes a Carmelite, a kind of people prone and ready to all kind of mischief, uproars, and debate, and dissention,) After this the Feast of Corpus Christi drew near; upon which day it was looked for that Reppington should preach. This man was a Canon of Leicester, and had before taken his first Degree unto Doctorship, who preaching the same time at Brodgates, for the same Sermon he became first suspected, and hated of the Pharisaical brood of the Fryers: but through the great and notable dexterity of his wit, (which all men did behold and see in him) accompanied with like modesty and honestly, he did so overcome, or at the least asswage this cruelty and persecution which was towards him, that shortly after, by the consent of the whole Fellowship, he was admitted Doctor.

Robert Rigge Vice-Chancellor of Oxford.

Nicholas Herford preaching on the Ascension-day defended Wickliffe.

The Bishop by an Appeale.

Who assoon as he had taken it upon him, by and by he stepped forth in the Schools, and began immediately to shew forth and utter, that which he had long hidden and dissembled. Protesting openly, that in all moral matters he would defend Wickliff. But as touching the Sacrament he would as yet hold his peace, until such time as the Lord shall otherwise illuminate the hearts and minds of the Clergy.

Now the day of Corpus Christi aforesaid approaching near, when the Friers understood that this Man should preach, fearing lest that he would rub the galls of their Religion, they convented with the Archbishop of Canterbury, that the same day, a little before that Philip should preach, Wickliff's Conclusions, which were privately condemned, should be openly defamed in the prefence of the whole Universlty. The doing of which matter was committed to Peter Stokes Frier, Standard-bearer, and chief Champion of that side against Wickliff.

Peter Stokes standard-bearer to the Fryers.

There were also Letters sent unto the Commissary, that he should help and aid him in publishing of the same Conclusions, as is before declared.

These things thus done and finished, Reppington at the hour appointed, proceeded to his Sermon. In the which Sermon, among many other things, he was reported to have uttered these sayings, or to this effect:

Note of the Sermon of Reppington.

That the Popes or Bishops ought not to be recommended above Temporal Lords.

Also, That in moral matters he would defend Master Wickliff as a true Catholick Doctor.

Moreover, That the Duke of Lancaster was very earnestly affected and minded in this matter, and would that all such should be received under his protection; besides many things more, which touched the praise and defence of Wickliff.

And finally, in concluding his Sermon, he dismissed the People with this Sentence; I will (said he) in the speculative Doctrine, as appertaining to the matter of the Sacrament of the Altar, keep silence and hold my peace, until such time as God otherwise shall instruct and illuminate the hearts of the Clergy.

When the Sermon was done, Reppington entred into S. Frideswides Church, accompanied with many of his friends; who, as the enemies furnished, were privily weaponed under their garments, if need had been. Frier Stokes the Carmelite aforesaid, suspecting all this to be against him, and being afraid of hurt, kept him within the Sanctuary of the Church, not daring as then, to put out his head. The Vicechancellor and Reppington, friendly saluting one another in the Church-porch, sent away the People, and so departed every man home to his own house. There was not a little joy through the whole Universlty for that Sermon; but in the mean time, the unquiet and busie Carmelite flipt not his matter. For first, by his Letters he declared the whole order of the matter unto the Archbishop, exaggerating the perils and dangers that he was in, requiring and desiring his help and aid, pretermitting nothing whereby to move and stir up the Archbishops mind, which of his own nature was as hot as a Toft, as they say, and ready enough to prosecute the matter of his own accord, though no man had prickt him forward thereunto. Besides all this (three days after) with a fierce and bold courage, the said Frier, breathing out threatnings and Heresies against them, took the way unto the Schools, minding there to prove, that the Pope and the Bishops ought to be prayed for before the Lords Temporal. Whilst this Frier was thus occupied in the Schools, he was mocked and derided of all Men, and shortly after he was sent for by the Archbishop to London; whom immediately after the Vicechancellor and Brightwel followed up, to purge and clear themselves and their adherents, from the accusations of this Frier Peter. At the length, they being examined upon Wickliff's Conclusions that were condemned; they did all consent, that they were worthily condemned. The Vicechancellor being afterward accused for the contempt of the Archbishops Letters, when as he perceived and saw that no excuse would prevail to avoid that danger, humbling himself upon his knees, he defired pardon. The which when he had now again (as is aforesaid) albeit very hardly obtained; by the help of the Bishop of Winchester he was sent away again with certain commandments, and Suspentions of Hereticks. Then began the hatred on either part somewhat to appear and shew, and specially all men were offended, and in the tops of these Friers and Religious Men; unto whom, whatsoever trouble or mischief was raised up, they did impute it as to the authors and causers of the same. Amongst whom there was one Henry Crompe, a Monk Cistercian, a well learned Divine, which afterward was accused by the Bishops of Heresie. He at that time was openly suspected by the Commissary, because in his Lectures he called the Hereticks Lollards in his Acts (as they term them) in the School. Then he, coming by and by up to London, made his complaint unto the Archbishop, and to the Kings Council.

Whereupon he obtaining the Letters of the King, and of his Council, by the vertue thereof (returning again to the Universlty) he was released and restored again to his former state, the words of which Letter here followeth under written.

Where the Lords Temporal were to be prayed for before the Bishops.

The Frier derided and mocked in the Schools.

Reppington first Canon of Leicester, after Bishop of Lincoln.

The Reppington commended Doctor.

Religious Men first causers of this trouble.

Hen. Crompe first an accuser of others, after accused himself for Heresie.

The Copy of the King's Letter.

The Kings Letter to the Vicechancellor and Procurators of Oxf.

THE King to the Vicechancellor and Procurators of the Universlty of Oxford, greeting. Whereas we of late understanding by the grievous complaint of Henry Crompe Monk, and Regent in Divinity within the said Universlty, how that he, being affsited by the Reverend Father in God the Archbishop of Canterbury, and by other Clerks and Divines in the City of London, to proceed in the condemnation of certain conclusions erroneous and heretical, hath been therefore molested by you, and that you through smister suggestion of some adverfaries (pretending the peace of the said Universlty to have been broken by the said Henry in his last Lecture) did therefore call him before you to appear and answer; and for his not appearing, did therefore pronounce him as obstinate, and convict of peace breaking, and have also suspended the said Henry from his Lectures, and all Scholastical Acts. And whereas we by our Writ did call you up for the same, to appear and answer before our Council unto the premises; and, all things being well tried and examined by the said Council, it was found and determined, that all your process against the said Henry, was void and of none effect, and commandment given that the said Henry should be restored and admitted again to his former Lectures and Scholastical Acts, and to his prisine state as you know. To the intent therefore that this Decree aforesaid should be more duly executed of your part, we here by these Presents straitly charge and command you, that you speedily revoking again all your Process against the said Henry in the Universlty aforesaid, with all other that followed thereof, do admit and cause to be restored again the said Henry to his Scholastical Acts, his accustomed Lectures, and prisline estate, without all delay, according to the form of the decree and determination aforesaid. Enjoyning you moreover, and your Commissaries or Deputies, and your successors, and all other masters regent and not regent, and other Presidents, Officers, Ministers and Scholars of the Universlty aforesaid, upon your faith and allegiance you ow to us, that you do not impeach, molest or grieve, or cause to be grieved (any manner of way, privy or apert) the said Frier Henry for the causes premised, or Frier Peter Stokes Carmelite, for the occasion of his absence from the Universlty, or Frier Stephen Packington Carmelite, or any other religious or secular person favouring them, upon occasion of any either word or deed whatsoever, concerning the Doctrine of Mr. J. Wickliff, Nich. Herford and Ph. Reppington, or the reproof and condemnation of their Heresies and Errors, or the correction of their favourers; but that you do procure the peace, unity and quiet within the said Universlty, and chiefly between the religious and secular persons; and that you with all diligence, nourish, increase and preserve the same to the utterment of your strength. And that you in no case omit to do it accordingly, upon the forfeitures of all and singular the liberties and priviledges of the Universlty aforesaid.

Hen. Crompe complain-eth to the Kings Council of the most secular Masters of Oxford.

Hen. Crompe, Peter Stokes, Carm. Steph. Packing-ton, Carm. reffu-red by the King to their scholastical Acts.

'Witness my self at Westminster the 'fourteenth day of July.

Mention was made, as you heard a little before, how Master Rigges Vicechancellor of Oxford, coming up with Master Brightwel to the Archbishop of Canterbury, was there straitly examined of the conclusions of Wickliff, where he notwithstanding, through the help of the Bishop of Winchester, obtained pardon, and was sent away again with commandments and charges to seek out all the favourers of John Wickliff. This commandment being received, Nicholas Herford, and Philip Reppington (being privily warned by the said Vicechancellor) in the mean season conveyed themselves out of sight, and fled to the Duke of Lancaster for succour and help; but the Duke, whether for fear, or for what cause else I cannot say, in the end forsook his poor and miserable Clients.

Herford and Reppington fled to the Duke of Lancaster.

In the mean time, while they were fled thus to the Duke, great search and inquisition was made for them, to cite and to apprehend them wheresoever they might be found. Whereupon the Archbishop of Canterbury, William Courtney, directed out his Letters first to the Vicechancellor of Oxford, then to the Bishop of London named Robert Braybroke; charging them not only to excommunicate the said Nicholas and Philip within their jurisdiction, and the said Excommunication to be denounced likewise throughout all the Diocese of his Suffragans: but also moreover, that diligent search and watch should be laid for them, both in Oxford and in London, that they might be apprehended; requiring moreover by them to be certified again, what they had done in the premises. And this was written the 14*th.* day of July, Anno 1382. Ex Regist.

Letters of the Archbishop to the Vicechancellor.

Letters of the Archbishop to the Bishop of London.

Robert Braybroke Bishop of London.

The 14th. day of July, Anno 1382.

Unto these Letters received from the Archbishop diligent Certificat was given accordingly, as well of the Bishop of London his part, as also of the Vicechancellor, the tenor whereof was this:

The Letter Certificatory of the Vicechancellor to the Archbishop.

The Letter of R. Rigges Vicechancellor of Oxford to the Archbishop.

To the reverend father in Christ, Lord William Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apostolick See, Robert Rigges, Professor of Divinity, and Vicechancellor of the University of Oxford, greeting with due honour. Your Letters bearing the date of the fourteenth of July I have received; by the authority wherewof I have denounced, and caused to be denounced effectually, the foresaid Nicholas and Philip to have been, and to be excommunicate publickly and solemnly in the Church of S. Mary, and in the Schools, and to be cited, also personally, if by any means they might be apprehended, according as you commanded. But after diligent search laid for them of my part, to have them personally cited and apprehended, I could not find neither the said Mr. Nicholas, nor Mr. Philip, who have hid or conveyed themselves, unknown to me, as here is well known. Whereof I thought here to give signification to your Fatherhood. Sealed and testified with the Seal of mine office. From Oxford

The 25th. day of July, Anno 1382.

the 25th. of July.

In the mean time Nicholas Herford and Reppington being repulsed of the Duke, and destitute (as was said) of his supportation, whether they were sent, or of their own accord went to the Archbishop, it was uncertain. This I find in a Letter of the foresaid Archbishop, contained in his Register; that Reppington the 23*d.* day of October, the same year 1382. was reconciled again to the Archbishop, and also by his general Letter was released, and admitted to his scholastical Acts in the University. And so was also John Ashton, of whom (Christ willing) more shall follow hereafter. Of Nicholas Herford all this while I find no special relation.

Herford and Reppington repulsed from the Duke of Lancaster.

The 23d. day of October. Reppington released by the Archbishop.

J. Ashton reconciled by the Archbishop.

In the mean time, about the twenty third of the Month of September the said year, the King sent his Mandate to the Archbishop for collecting of a Subsidy, and to have a Convocation of the Clergy summoned against the next Parliament, which should begin the 18*th.* day of November. The Archbishop likewise, on the 15*th* day of October, directed his Letters Monitory (as the manner is) to Robert Braybroke Bishop of London, to give the same admonition to all his Suffragans, and other of the Clergy within his Province, for the assembling of the Convocation aforesaid.

A Parliament summoned the 15th. of Octob. 1382.

All which done and executed, the Parliament begun, being holden at Oxford the eighteenth day of November, where the Convocation was kept in the Monastery of Frideswide in Oxford. In the which Convocation the Archbishop, with other Bishops there sitting in their Pontifical bus, declared two causes of that their present Assembly, the one (saith he) to repress Heresies, which began newly in the Realm to spring, and for correcting other excesses in the Church. The other cause (said he) was to aid and support the King with some necessary Subsidy of Money to be gathered, which thus declared, the Convocation was continued till the day following, which was the 19*th.* of November.

The Convocation of the Province of Canterbury in Oxford the 18th. day of Nov.

At the said day and place, the Archbishop with the other Prelates, assembling themselves as before: the Archbishop after the used solemnity, willed the Procurators of the Clergy, appointed for every Diocese, to consult within themselves, in some convenient several place, what they thought for their parts touching the redress of things, to be notified and declared to him and to his brethren, &c.

The 19th. of Novemb. Anno 1382.

Furthermore, forsomuch (saith he) as it is so noised through all the Realm, that there were certain in the University of Oxford, which did hold and maintain conclusions (as he called them) Heretical and erroneous, condemned by him, and by other Lawyers and Doctors of Divinity; he therefore affigned the Bishops of Sarum, Hereford, and Rochester, with William Rugge then Vicechancellor of the University of Oxford (for belike Robert Rigge was then displaced) as also William Berton, and John Middleton Doctors; giving them his full authority with curing and banning, to compel them to search, and to enquire with all diligence and ways possible, over all, and singular whatsoever, either Doctors, Bachelors, or Scholars of the said University, which did hold, teach, maintain and defend, in Schools, or out of Schools, the said Conclusions Heretical (as he called them) or erroneous, and afterward to give Certificate truly and plainly touching the premises. And thus for that day the Assembly brake up to the next, and so to the next, and the third being Monday, the 24*th.* day of November; Ex Regist. W. Courtney.

Rob. Rigge displaced from the Vicechancellorship.

Inquisition made at Oxford.

The 24th. day of Nov. Anno 1382.

On the which day, in the presence of the Prelates and the Clergy in the Chapter house of St. Frideswide, came in Philip Reppington (otherwise called of the Brethren afterward Rampington) who there abjured the Conclusions and Assertions aforesaid, in this form of words as followeth.

The Abjuration of Ph. Reppington.

In Dei nomine, Amen. I Philip Reppington, Canon of the House of Leicester, acknowledging one Catholick and Apostolick Faith, do curse and also abjure all Heresy, namely these Heresies and errors under written, condemned and reproved by the Decrees Canonical, and by you most reverend Father touching which hitherto I have been defamed; condemning moreover, and reproving both them and the Authors of them, and do confess the same to be Catholically condemned. And I swear also by these holy Evangelists, which here I hold in my hand, and do promise, never by any perswasions of men, nor by any way hereafter, to defend or hold as true, any of the said conclusions underwritten: but do and will stand and adhere in all things, to the determination of the holy Catholick Church, and to yours, in this behalf. Over and besides, all such as stand contrary to this faith, I do pronounce them with their Doctrine and Followers worthy of everlasting curse. And if I my self shall presume at any time to hold or preach any thing contrary to the premises, I shall be content to abide the severity of the Canons. Subscribed with mine own hand, and of mine own accord, Philip Reppington. And thus the said Rampington was discharged, who afterward was made Bishop of Lincoln, and became at length the most bitter and extream Persecutor of this side, of all the other Bishops within the Realm, as in process hereafter may appear.

Philip Reppington after his abjuration became a terrible Persecutor.

After the Abjuration of this Reppington, immediately was brought in John Ashton Student of Divinity; who being examined of those Conclusions, and willed to say his mind, answered, That he was too simple and ignorant, and therefore would not, and could not answer any thing clearly or distinctly to those Conclusions. Whereupon the Archbishop affigned to him Doctor William Rugge the Vicechancellor and other Divines, such as he required himself,

A therefore is a man is one ignorant, loth to learn, afraid to be convicted. The Archbishop assigneth the action of J. Ashton.

{KING Rich. 2.} himself, to be instructed in the mystery of those conclusions against the afternoon; who then, appearing again after Dinner before the Archbishop and the Prelates, did in like sort and form of words abjure as did Reppington before.

Of this John Ashton we read, that afterward, by Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury, he was cited and condemned; but whether he died in Prison, or was burned, we have yet no certainty to shew. This is certain, by the plain words of the Chronicle of S. Albans, that when the Archbishop with his Doctors and Friers sate in examination upon this said John Ashton in London, the Londoners brake open the door of the Conclave, ipsumque Archiepiscopum in civitate fedentem impedivierunt, cum processum fecisset contra Johannem Ashton, &c. That is, And did let the Archbishop himself sitting in the City of London, when he would have made process against John Ashton, An. 1382. And thus much of John Ashton.

Ex Chr. Mon. S. Albani. The Londoners open the door where the Archbishop sate against J. Ashton.

As touching Nicholas Herford, during the time of this Convocation he did not appear; and therefore had the sentence of excommunication. Against which he put his appeal from the Archbishop to the King and his Council. The Archbishop would not admit it, but finding flays and stops, caused him to be apprehended and inclosed in Prison. Notwithstanding through the will of God and good means, he escaped out of the Prison, returning again to his former exercise and preaching as he did before, albeit in as covert and secret manner as he could. Whereupon the Archbishop, thundring out his bolts of Excommunication against him, sending to all Pastors and Ministers, willing them in all Churches, and on all Festival days, to divulge the said Excommunication against him to all Men; he writeth moreover, and sendeth special charge to all and singular of the Laity, to beware that their simplicity be not deceived by his Doctrine, but that they like Catholick children will avoid him, and cause him of all other to be avoided.

Mr. Herford would not appear. Mr. Herford appealed from the Archbishop to K. Herford cast into prison. Herford escapeth out of Prison.

Furthermore, not contented with this, he addresseth also his Letter unto the King, requiring also the aid of his temporal sword to chop off his Neck, whom he had already cast down. See and note, Reader, the seraphical charity of these Priestly Prelates towards the poor redeemed flock of Christ. And yet these be they which, waffing their hands with Pilate, say, and pretend, Nobis non licet interficere quenquam; it is not our parts to kill any man. The Copy of the Letter written to the King is this:

The Letter of the Archbishop to the King.

The cruel Letter of the Archbishop to the King against K. Herford.

To the most excellent Prince in Christ, &c. William, &c. Greeting in him by whom Kings do reign, and Princes bear rule. Unto your Kingly celsitude by the tenor of these presents we intimate, that one Master Nicholas Herford Doctor of Divinity, for his manifest contumacy and offence in not appearing before us being called at the day and place assigned, is therefore involved in the sentence of the greater curse, publickly by our ordinary authority; and in the same sentence hath continued now forty days, and yet still continueth with obdurate heart, wickedly contemning the keis of the Church, both to the great peril of his soul, and to the pernicious example of other. Forsomuch therefore, as the holy Mother the Church hath not to do, or to proceed any further in this matter, we humbly desire your Kingly Majesty to direct out your Letters for the apprehending of the said excommunicate, according to the custom of this Realm of England, wholesomely observed and kept hitherto; to the intent that such, whom the fear of God doth not restrain from evil, the discipline of the Secular arm may bridle and pluck back from offending. Your Princely celsitude the Lord long continue. From Lambeth the 15th. of January.

To this Letter of the Archbishop might not the King (gentle Reader) thus answer again, and answer well.

This is not to seek, again that which is hid by the rule of Ecclesi.

Peripopeia. What the King might have answered again.

YOur Letters with your complaint and requests in the same contained, we have received and well considered: For the accomplishing whereof ye shall understand, that as we are readily bent to gratifie and satisfie your mind in this behalf on the one side; so we must beware again on the other, that our authority be not abused, either to oppress before we know, or to judge before we have tried. Wherefore forsomuch as you in your Letters do excite and sharpen the severe discipline of our secular sword against one Nicholas Herford, for his not appearing before you; and yet shewing in the said your Letters no certain cause to us what you have to charge him withal: we therefore following the example of Alexander Magnus, or rather the rule of equity in opening both our ears indifferently, to hear as well the one part as the other, doth assign both to him, when as he may be found, and to you, when ye shall be called, a term to appear before us. To the intent that the controversie between you and him, standing upon points of religion, being tried by the true Touchstone of Gods holy word, due correction indifferently may be ministred according as the offence shall be found. In the mean time, this we cannot but something marvel at in your said Letters: First, to see you Men of the Church, and Angels of peace, to be so desirous of bloud. Secondly, to consider you again so fierce in professing the breach of your law, and yet so cold in pursuing the breach of the express law of God and his Commandments. Thirdly, to behold the unstable doubleness in your proceedings, who pretending in your publick sentence to become as intreaters for them to us in the bowels of Jesus Christ, that we will withdraw from them the rigour of our severity, yet in your Letters be they which most set us on. If not appearing before you be such a matter of contumacy in case of your law, that it is in no case to be spared; what should then our Princely discipline have done to Men of your calling? Henry Spencer Bishop of Norwich, being at Canterbury, was sent for by our special commandment, to come to our speech, who denied to come, and yet we sped him. John Stratford Archbishop, your predecessor, being required of our Progenitor King Edward the 3*d.* to come to him at York, would not appear; by the ocation whereof Scotland the same time was lost, and yet was he suffered. The like might be said of Robert Winchelsey in the days of King Edward the first, and of Edmond Archbishop of Canterbury, in the days of King Henry the third; Stephen Langton was sent for by King John to come, he came not. The like contumacy was in Becket toward K. Henry the second. Also in Anselm toward K. Henry the first. All these for their not appearing before their Princes ye do excuse, who notwithstanding might have appeared without danger of life; this one man for not appearing before you, you think worthy of death, whose life you would have condemned notwithstanding, if he had appeared. If the Squirril climing to the Tree from the Lions claws would not appear, being sent for to be devoured, it is no reason that the Eagle therefore should seise upon him without any just cause declared against the party. Wherefore, according to this and to that aforesaid, when he shall appear, and you be called, and the cause justly weighed, due execution shall be ministred.

Bishops of Canterbury appeared not before their Kings, and yet they were not persecuted.

And thus far concerning Nicholas Herford, and the other aforesaid: But all this mean while what became of John Wickliff it is not certainly known. Albeit, so far as may be gathered out of Walden, it appeareth that he was banished and driven to exile. In the mean time it is not to be doubted, but he was alive during all this while, wheresoever he was, as by his Letter may appear, which he about this time wrote to Pope Urban the sixth. In the which Letter he doth purge himself, that being commanded to appear before the Pope at Rome, he came not; declaring also in the same a brief confession of his faith. The Copy of which Epistle here followeth.

The Epistle of John Wickliff sent unto Pope Urban the sixth, Anno 1382.

The Epistle of J. Wicklif to Pope Urban.

VErily I do rejoice to open and declare unto every man the faith which I do hold, and specially unto the Bishop of Rome*: the which forsomuch as I do suppose to be found and true, he will most willingly confirm my said faith, or, if it be erroneous, amend the same.*

First, I suppose that the Gospel of Christ is the whole body of Gods Law; and that Christ, which did give that same law himself, I believe to be a very Man, and in that point, to exceed the law of the Gospel, and all other parts of the Scripture. Again, I do give and hold the Bishop of Rome, forsomuch as he is the Vicar of Christ here in earth, to be bound most of all other Men unto that law of the Gospel. For the greatness amongst Christs Disciples did not consist in worldly dignity or honours, but in the near and exact following of Christ in his life and manners: wherupon I do gather out of the heart of the law of the Lord, that Christ for the time of his pilgrimage here was a most poor man, abjecting and casting off all worldly rule and honour, as appeareth by the Gospel of St. Matthew, the 8th. Chapter, and the 2d. of the Corinthians, the 8th. Chapter.

The true Disciples of Christ seek no honour.

Hereof I do gather, that no faithful man ought to follow, either the Pope himself, or any of the holy men, but in such points as he hath followed the Lord Jesus Christ. For Peter and the Sons of Zebede, by desiring worldly honour, contrary to the following of Christs steps, did offend, and therefore in those errors they are not to be followed.

Hereof I do gather, as a counsel, that the Pope ought to leave unto the secular power all temporal dominion and rule, and thereunto effectually to move and exhort his whole Clergy; for so did Christ, and especially by his Apostles. Wherefore if I have erred in any of these points, I will most humbly submit my self unto correction, even by death, if necessity so require; and if I could labour according to my will or desire in mine own person, I would surely present my self before the Bishop of Rome; but the Lord hath otherwise visited me to the contrary, and hath taught me rather to obey God than Men. Forsomuch then as God hath given unto our Pope just and true Evangelical Institutions, we ought to pray that those motions be not extinguished by any subtile or crafty device.

And that the Pope and Cardinals be not moved to do any thing contrary unto the law of the Lord. Wherefore let us pray unto our God, that he will so stir up our Pope Urban the sixth, as he began, that he with his Clergy may follow the Lord Jesus Christ in life and manners; and that they may teach the people effectually, and that they likewise may faithfully follow them in the same. And let us specially pray, that our Pope may be preserved from all malign and evil counsel, which we do know that evil and envious men of his houshold would give him. And seeing the Lord will not suffer us to be tempted above our power, much less then will he require of any creature to do that thing which they are not able; forsomuch as that is the plain condition and manner of Antichrist.

The Pope occasion'd to his Schismatical Wars, that he had no leisure to other matters.

This much wrote John Wickliff unto Pope Urban. But this Pope Urban, otherwise termed Turbanus, was so hot in his Wars against Clement the French Pope his adversary, that he had no leisure, and less list, to attend unto Wickliff's matters. By the occation of which Schism, God so provided for poor Wickliff, that he was in some more rest and quietness. Concerning which Schismatical Wars of these Popes, forasmuch as we have here entred into the mention thereof, it shall not be impertinent from the order of our story, digressing a little from the matter of John Wickliff, to touch something of the tragical doings of these two holy Popes, striving for the Triple Crown; to the intent that the Christian Reader (judging by their fruits and proceedings) may see and understand what difference is between these Popes, and Christ and his Apostles. For though in the story of the Gospel it is read, that certain of the Disciples did strive which should be the greater; yet neither do we read that one of them took vengeance with Weapon against the other; and moreover, in the said story of the Gospel it doth appear, that they, for so striving as they did, were therefore sharply rebuked of our Saviour Christ, and were taught by him another lesson.

Difference between the Apostles and the Popes in striving for preheminence.

{ Ann. 1383 }

The Pope set to War.

About the beginning of the next year following, which was Anno 1383. Pope Urban setting all his study how to repress and conquer the contrary Pope his adversary, being then at Avinion (seeing all his other means to fail, and that his Cross-keies could do no good) took to him the Sword of Romulus, and set upon him with open War. And first devising with himself whom he might best chuse for his chief Champion; he thought none meeter for such affairs than Henry Spencer, being then Bishop of Norwich, a young and stout Prelate, more fitting for the Camping Cure, than for the peaceable Church of Christ, as partly also might appear before by his acts done at Lenham, in striving for the Mayors Mace, mentioned before pag. 488. Unto this Bishop of Norwich the Pope had sent his Bulls about this time, to Croisy whomsoever would go with him into France, to destroy the Antipope, which named himself Clement, and to make War against all those that took his part. Which Bulls, for that they gave unto him such great authority, he caused to be published in the Parliament house, and caused the Copies of the same to be sent all about, and to be set up and fastned upon all the Church Doors and Monastery Gates, that all Men might read them. In the which Bulls these priviledges were granted, the Copy whereof here followeth:

{ KING } { Ric. 2. }

1. Imprimis, That the said Bishop of Norwich may use his Sword against the Antipope, and all his adherents, favourers and counsellors, and with violence put them to death.

The very fruits of Antichrist.

2. Item, That he hath full power to enquire of all and singular such Schismaticks, and to put them in Prison, and to confiscate all their Goods, moveable and immoveable.

3. Item, That he hath power and authority to deprive all lay men that are such Schismaticks of all manner of secular Offices whatsoever, and to give their offices to other fit and convenient persons.

4. Item, That he may deprive all such Clerks, and declare them to be schismaticks, and in this behalf to give and bestow their Benefices either with Cure or without Cure, their dignities, parsonages or offices, to other persons more meet for the same.

5. Item, He hath power and authority over lay persons that are exempt, and Clerks both secular and regular, yea although they be Friers Mendicants, or Masters and Professors of other Houses or Hospitals of St. Johns of Jerusalem, or S. Mary of Flanders, or Professors of what Order soever else.

6. Item, He hath power to dispence with what secular Clerk soever, being beneficed either with Cure or without Cure, and also with such as have dignities, parsonages, or offices, being regulars either exempt or not exempt, that every one of them may be absent with him from their Dignities and Benefices, &c. under the standard of the Cross, without licence of any of their Prelates required, and yet to receive and take the entire commodities of their Benefices, as though they had been personally resident upon the same.

7. Item, There is granted to all that pass the Seas in this quarrel, either at their own expences, or at the expences of any other, full remission of their sins; and as large privileges are granted to all those that go over the Sea with him, as to any that pay their mony, or go to fight for the Holy Land.

8. Also all such as with their proper goods and substance shall give sufficient stipend to able Soldiers, at the discretion of the foresaid Lord Bishop mustered, or by any other his Deputy, although he himself be not personally at this business aforesaid; yet shall he have like remission and indulgence, as they which have been personally with him in this expedition.

9. Item, All they are partakers of this remission, which shall give any part of their goods to the said Bishop to fight against the said Schismaticks.

10. Item, If any shall chance to die in the journey that are Soldiers under the said standard of the Cross, or else before the quarrel by some means be finished; they shall fully and wholly receive the said grace, and shall be partakers of the foresaid remission and indulgence.

11. Item, He hath power to excommunicate, suspend and interdict what persons soever be rebellious or disturbers of him in the execution of his power and authority committed unto him, of what dignity, state, degree, preheminence, order, place or condition soever they shall be; whether they shall be either of Regal, Queenly or Imperial Dignity, or of what dignity else soever, either ecclesiastical or mundane.

12. Item, He hath power and authority to compel and inforce what religious person soever, and to appoint them, and send them over Sea, if it seem good to him; yea although they be professors of the Friers Mendicants, for the execution of the premises.

{ KING } { Ric. 2. }

The Popes Absolution by the Bishop pronounced.

Christs Passion hath here no place.

By the authority Apostolical to me in this behalf committed, We Absolve thee A.B. from all thy sins confessed with thy mouth, and being contrite with thy heart, and whereof thou wouldest be confessed if they came into thy memory; and we grant unto thee plenary remission of all manner of sins, and we promise unto thee thy part of the reward of all just men, and of everlasting Salvation. And as many priviledges as are granted to them that go to fight for the Holy Land, we grant unto thee; and of all the prayers and benefits of the Church, the universal Synod, as also of the holy Catholick Church, we make thee partaker.

This couragious or rather outragious Bishop, armed thus with the Popes Authority, and prompt with his priviledges, in the year aforesaid 1383. about the time of Lent came to the Parliament, where great consultation and contention, and almost no less schism, was about the Voyage of this Popish Bishop in the Parliament, than was between the Popes themselves. In the which Parliament many there were, which thought it not safe to commit the Kings People and Subjects unto a rude and unskilful Priest. So great was the diversity of judgments in that behalf that the Voyage of the said Bishop was protracted unto the Saturday before Passion Sunday. In the which Sunday was sung the solemn Anthem, Ecce Crucem Domini, fugite partes adversæ: That is, Behold the Cross of the Lord, Fly away all you adversaries. After which Sunday the parties so agreed amongst themselves by common Decree, that the Bishop should set forward in his Voyage, having to him given the Fifteenth which was granted to the King in the Parliament before. Which things thus concluded in the Parliament, this warlike Bishop preparing before all things in a readiness, fet forward in this Pope-holy journey. Who about the Month of May being come to Canterbury, and there tarrying for a Wind in the Monastery of St. Augustine, received a Writ from the King that he should return to the King, to know further of his pleasure. The Bishop fearing, that if he turned again to the King, his journey should be staid, and so all his labour and preparance lost with great derision and shame unto him, thought better to commit himself to fortune with that little Army he had, than by tarrying to be made a laughing stock to his adversaries. Wherefore he sent word back again to the King, that he was now ready prepared, and will forward on his journey; and that it was not expedient now to protract the time for any kind of talk which peradventure should be to no manner of purpose; and that it was more convenient for him to hasten in his journey to Gods glory, and also to the honour of the King. And thus he calling his Men unto him, entred forthwith the Seas, and went to Calis, where he waiting a few days for the relt of his Army, after the receipt of them, took his journey first to the Town of Gravenidge; which he besieged so desperately, without any preparance of Engines of War, or counsel, or of politick Men, skilful in such affairs, that he seemed rather to fly upon them, than to invade them. At length, through the superstition of our Men, trusting upon the Popes Absolution, he so hastily approached the Walls, and invaded the enemies, that a great number of them were pitiously slain with Shot and Wild-fire; till at the end (the inhabiters being oppressed and vanquished) our men entred the Town with their Bishop, where they at his commandment destroying both Man, Woman and Child, left not one alive of all them, which remained in the whole Town. Sicque crucis beneficio factum, ut crucis hostes ita delerentur, quod unus ex eis non remanst: that is, And so it came to pass by the vertue of the Cross, that our Men crossed so prevailed against the enemies of the Cross, that not one of them remained alive. Ex Chron. Mon. D. Albani.

O bloodshed of Antichrist.

Ex Chron. Mon. D. Alb. in vita Ric. 2.

From Gravenidge this warlike Bishop set forward to Dunkirk, where not long after the Frenchmen meeting with him, joyned with them in battel; in which battel (if the story be true) twelve thousand of the Frenchmen were slain in the Chase, and of our Men but seven only missing. It would require a long tractation here to discourse all things done in these Popish Wars. Also it would be no less ridiculous to view and behold the glorious temerity of this new upstart Captain. But certes, lamentable it is to see the pitiful slaughter and murther of Christs people by the means of these pitiful Popes, during these Wars in France. As when the Bishop coming from Dunkirk to the Siege of Ypres, a great number of Englishmen there were lost, and much Mony consumed, and yet nothing done effectually, to the great shame and ignominy of the Bishop. Again, after the Siege of Ypres, thus with shame broke up, the same Bishop proceeding with a small power to fight with the French Kings Camp, contrary to the counsel of his Captains, which counted him rash and unskilful in his attempt, was faign to break company with them; whereby part of the Army went unto Burburgh, and the Bishop with his part returned to Gravenidge; which both Towns shortly after were besieged by the French Army, to the great loss both of the English and French Men. In time, when the Bishop could keep Gravenidge no longer, the said Bishop with his Croylies, crossing the Seas, came home again as wise as he went. And thus making an end of this Pontifical War, we will return again from whence we digressed, to the story and matter of John Wickliff.

Which John Wickliff returning again within short space, either from his Banishment, or from some other place where he was secretly kept, repaired to his Parish of Lutterworth, where he was Parson; and there, quietly departing this mortal life, slept in peace in the Lord, in the beginning of the year 1384. upon Silvesters day.

Here is to be noted the great providence of the Lord in this Man, as in divers other, whom the Lord so long preserved in such rages of so many enemies from all their hands, even to his old age. For so it appeareth by Thomas Walden, writing against him in his Tomes entituled De Sacramentis contra Wiclevium, that he was well aged before he departed, by that which the foresaid Walden writeth of him in his Epilogue, speaking of Wickliff in these words; Ita ut cano placeret, quod juveni complacebat, &c. That is, so that the same thing pleased him in his old age, which did please him being young. Whereby it seemeth that Wickliff lived till he was an old Man by this report. Such a Lord is God, that whom he will have kept, nothing can hurt.

Waldensis, tomo de Sacramentis.

This Wickliff had written divers and sundry Works, the which in the year of our Lord 1410. were burnt at Oxford, the Abbot of Shrewsbury being then Commissary, and sent to oversee that matter. And not only in England, but in Bohemе likewise, the Books of the said Wickliff were set on fire by one Subinens Archbishop of Prague, who made diligent inquisition for the same, and burned them; the number of the Volumes which he is said to have burned, most excellently writted, and richly adorned with bosses of Gold, and rich Coverings (as Eneas Silvius writeth) were about the number of two hundred.

The number of Wickliffs Books came to 200 Volumes. Eneas Silvius.

Johannes Cocleus in his Book De historia Hussitarum, speaking of the Books of Wickliff, testifieth, that he wrote very many Books, Sermons and Tractations. Moreover, the said Cocleus speaking of himself, recordeth also, that there was a certain Bishop in England, which wrote unto him, declaring, that he had yet remaining in his custody two huge and mighty Volumes of John Wickliff's Works, which for the quantity thereof might seem to be equal with the Works of Saint Augustine. Hæc Cocleus.

The Books of Wickliff.

Among other of his Treatises, I my self also have found out certain, as de sensu & veritate Scripturæ. Item, De Ecclesia. Item, De Eucharistia confessio Wicklevi, which I intend hereafter, the Lord so granting, to publish abroad.

As concerning certain Answers of John Wickliff which he wrote to King Richard the second, touching the right and title of the King, and of the Pope; because they are but short, I thought here to annex them. The effect whereof here followeth:

John Wickliff's Answer unto King Richard the Second, as touching the right and title of the King and the Pope.

IT was demanded whether the Kingdom of England may lawfully in cafe of neceſſity, for its own defence, detain and keep back the treaſure of the Kingdom, that it be not carried away to foreign and ſtrange Nations, the Pope himſelf demanding and requiring the ſame under pain of cenſure, and by vertue of obedience.

Wickliff ſetting apart the minds of learned Men, and what might be ſaid in the matter, either by the Canon law, or by the law of England, or the civil law; it reſteth (ſaith he) now only to perſwade and prove the affirmative part of this doubt by the principles of Chriſts law. And firſt I prove it thus: Every natural body hath power given of God to reſiſt againſt his contrary, and to preſerve it ſelf in due eſtate, as Philoſophers know very well. Inſomuch, that bodies without life are indued with ſuch kind of power (as it is evident) unto whom hardneſs is given to reſiſt thoſe things that would break them, and coldneſs to withſtand the heat that diſſolveth them. Forſomuch then, as the Kingdom of England after the manner and phraſe of the Scriptures ought to be one body, and the Clergy with the Commonalty the members thereof, it ſeemeth that the ſame Kingdom hath ſuch power given it of God; and ſo much the more apparently, by how much the ſame body is more precious unto God, adorned with vertue and knowledge. Forſomuch then as there is no power given of God unto any creature for any end or purpoſe, but that he may lawfully uſe the ſame to that end and purpoſe; it followeth that our Kingdom may lawfully keep back and detain their treaſure for the defence of it ſelf, in what caſe ſoever neceſſity doth require the ſame.

The Popes riches is but the alms of good men.

Secondly, The ſame is proved by the law of the Goſpel. for the Pope cannot challenge the treaſure of this Kingdom, but under the title of alms, and conſequently under the pretence of the works of mercy, according to the rule of charity.

But in caſe aforeſaid, the title of alms ought utterly to ceaſe: Ergo, the right and title of challenging the treaſure of our Realm ſhall ceaſe alſo in the preſuppoſed neceſſity. Forſomuch as all charity hath his beginning of himſelf, it were no work of charity, but of meer madneſs, to ſend away the treaſures of the Realm unto foreign Nations, whereby the Realm it ſelf may fall into ruine, under the pretence of ſuch charity.

Neceſſity taketh away the Popes alms.

It appeareth alſo by this, that Chriſt the Head of the Church, whom all Chriſtian Prieſts ought to follow, lived by the alms of devout women, Luke 7.8. He hungred and thirſted, he was a ſtranger, and many other miſeries he ſuſtained, not only in his members, but alſo in his own body, as the Apoſtle witneſſeth, 2 Cor. 8. He was made poor for your ſakes, that through his poverty you might be rich: whereby in the firſt endowing of the Church, whatſoever he were of the Clergy that had any temporal poſſeſſions, he had the ſame by form of a perpetual alms, as both Writings and Chronicles do witneſs.

Whereupon S. Bernard, declaring in his ſecond Book to Eugenius, that he could not challenge any ſecular dominion by right of ſucceſſion, as being the Vicar of Saint Peter, writeth thus; That if Saint John ſhould ſpeak unto the Pope himſelf, as Bernard doth unto Eugenius, were it to be thought that he would take it patiently? But let it be ſo, that you do challenge it unto you by ſome other ways or means; but truly by any right or title Apoſtolical you cannot ſo do. For how could he give unto you that which he had not himſelf? That which he had he gave you, that is to ſay, care over the Church; but did he give you any lordſhip or rule? Hearken what he ſaith, Not bearing rule (ſaith he) as Lords over the Clergy, but behaving your ſelves as examples to the Flock. And becauſe thou ſhalt not think it to be ſpoken only in humility, and not in verity, mark the word of the Lord himſelf in the Goſpel. The Kings of the people do rule over them, but you ſhall not do ſo.

Note well the ſaying here of Bernard.

Here lordſhip and dominion is plainly forbidden to the Apoſtles, and dareſt thou then uſurp the ſame? If thou wilt be a Lord, thou ſhalt loſe thine Apoſtleſhip; or if thou wilt be an Apoſtle thou ſhalt loſe thy Lordſhip: for truly thou ſhalt depart from the one of them. If thou wilt have both, thou ſhalt loſe both, or elſe think thy ſelf to be of that number, of whom God doth ſo greatly complain, ſaying, They have reigned, but not through me; they are become Princes, and I have not known it. Now if it do ſuffice thee to rule with the Lord, then haſt thy glory but not with God. But if we will keep that which is forbidden us, let us hear what is ſaid, He that is the greateſt amongſt you (ſaith Chriſt) ſhall be made as the leaſt, and he which is the higheſt ſhall be as the Miniſter; and for example he ſet a child in the midſt of them. So this then is the true form and inſtitution of the Apoſtles trade; Lordſhip and rule is forbidden, miniſtration and ſervice commanded.

[KING] Ric. 2.

The Pope muſt leave his Lordſhip, or elſe Apoſtleſhip is loſt him ſaith Wickliffe.

The manner of the Apoſtles.

By theſe words of this bleſſed Man, whom the whole Church doth reverence and worſhip, it doth appear that the Pope hath not power to occupy the Church goods, as the Lord thereof, but as Miniſter, and Servant, and Proctor for the poor. And would to God, that the ſame proud and greedy deſire of rule and Lordſhip, which this Seat doth challenge unto it, were not a preamble to prepare a way unto Antichriſt. For it is evident by the Goſpel, that Chriſt through his poverty, humility, and ſuffering of injury, got unto him the children of his Kingdom.

Howe the Pope ought to occupy the Church goods.

The way to obtain the Kingdom of Chriſt.

And moreover, ſo far as I remember; the ſame bleſſed Man Bernard, in his Third Book, writeth alſo thus unto Eugenius, I fear no other greater poiſon to happen unto thee, than greedy deſire of rule and dominion.

This Wickliff, albeit in his life time he had many grievous enemies, yet was there none ſo cruel unto him, as the Clergy it ſelf. Yet notwithſtanding, he had many good friends, men not only of the baſe and meaneſt ſort, but alſo of the Nobility, amongſt whom theſe Men are to be numbred, John Clenbon, Lewes Cliffford, Richard Sturits, Thomas Latimer, William Nevil, John Mountegew, who plucked down all the Images in his Church. Beſides all theſe, there was the Earl of Salsbury; who, for contempt in him noted towards the Sacrament, in carrying it home to his houſe, was enjoyned by Radulph Ergon Biſhop of Salsbury, to make in Salsbury a Croſs of ſtone, in which all the ſtory of the matter ſhould be written: and he every Friday during his life, to come to the Croſs barefoot, and bareheaded in his ſhirt, and there kneeling upon his knees to do Penance for his faſt. *Ex Chron. The penance of the Earl of Salsbury

The Londoners at this time ſomewhat boldly truſting to the Mayors authority, who for that year was John of Northampton, took upon them the office of the Biſhops, in puniſhing the vices (belonging to civil law) of ſuch perſons as they had found and apprehended in committing both Fornication and Adultery. For firſt they put the Women in the Priſon, which amongſt them was then named Dolium. And laſtly, bringing them into the Market-place, where every Man might behold them, and cutting off their golden locks from their heads, they cauſed them to be carried about the Streets, with Bag-pipes and Trumpets blown before them, to the intent they ſhould be the better known, and their companies avoided; according to the ancient order then of certain Thieves that were named Appellatores, (accuſers or appeachers of others that were guiltleſs) which were ſo ſerved. And with other ſuch like opprobrious and reproachful contumelies did they ſerve the Men alſo that were taken with them in committing the forenamed wickedneſs and vices. Here the ſtory recordeth how the ſaid Londoners were incouraged hereunto by John Wickliff, and others that followed his Doctrine, to perpetrate this act, in the reproach of the Prelates being of the Clergy. For they ſaid, that they did not only abhor to ſee the great negligence of thoſe to whom that charge belonged, but alſo their filthy avarice they did as much deteſt; which for greedineſs of Mony were choaked with bribes, and winking at the penalties due to ſuch perſons by the laws appointed, ſuffered ſuch fornicators and inceſtuous perſons favourably to continue in their wickedneſs. They ſaid furthermore, that they greatly feared, feared, leſt for ſuch wickedneſs perpetrated within the City, and ſo apparently diffimuled, that God would take vengeance upon them, and deſtroy their City. Wherefore they ſaid, that they could do no leſs than purge the ſame; leſt by the ſufferance thereof God would bring a Plague upon them, or deſtroy them with the Sword, or cauſe the earth to ſwallow up both them and their City. *Hæc ex Chron. ¶ This ſtory (gentle Reader) albeit the Author thereof, whom I follow, doth give it out in reproachful wiſe, to the great diſcommendation of the Londoners for ſo doing, yet I thought not to omit, but to commit the ſame to memory; which ſeemeth to me rather to tend unto the worthy commendation both of the Londoners that ſo did, and to the neceſſary example of all other Cities to follow the ſame. After theſe things thus declared, let us now adjoyn the teſtimonial of the Univerſity of Oxford of John Wickliff.

Ex Arch. Cant. Regiſtr. Sudbur. fol. 99. b. Inſtrum. Publicum.

'UNto all and ſingular the Children of our holy Mother the Church, to whom this preſent Letter ſhall come, the Vicechancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, 'with the whole Congregation of the Maſters, with perpe-'tual health in the Lord. Forſomuch as it is not com-'monly ſeen, that the Acts and Monuments of valiant Men, 'nor the praiſe and merits of good Men ſhould be paſſed 'over and hidden with perpetual ſilence, but that true re-'port and fame ſhould continually ſpread abread the ſame 'in ſtrange and far diſtant places, both for the witneſs of 'the ſame, and example of others; Forſomuch alſo as the 'provident diſcretion of mans nature, being recompenced 'with cruelty, hath deviſed and ordained this buckler and 'defence againſt ſuch as do blaſpheme and ſlander other 'mens doings, that whenſoever witneſs by word of mouth 'cannot be preſent, the Pen by writing may ſupply the 'ſame.

'Hereupon it followeth, that the ſpecial good will and 'care which we bear unto John Wickliff, ſometime Child 'of this our Univerſity, and Profeſſor of Divinity, moving 'and ſtirring our minds (as his manners and conditions re-'quired no leſs) with one mind, voice and teſtimony, we 'do witneſs, all his conditions and doings throughout his 'whole life to have been moſt ſincere and commendable; 'whoſe honeſt manners and conditions, profoundneſs of 'learning, and moſt redolent renown and fame, we de-'ſire the more earneſtly to be notified and known unto all 'faithful, for that we underſtand the maturity and ripeneſs 'of his converſation, his diligent labours and travels to 'tend to the praiſe of God, the help and ſafeguard of others, 'and the profit of the Church.

'Wherefore we ſignifie unto you by theſe preſents, that 'his converſation (even from his youth upward, unto the 'time of his death) was ſo praiſe-worthy and honeſt, that 'never at any time was there any note or ſpot of ſuſpicion 'noiſed of him. But in his anſwering, reading, preaching 'and determining, he behaved himſelf laudably, and as a 'ſtout and valiant Champion of the faith; vanquiſhing by 'the force of the Scriptures, all ſuch, who by their wilful 'beggery, blaſphemed and ſlandered Chriſts Religion Nei-'ther was this Doctor convict of any Hereſie, either burned 'of our Prelates after his burial. God forbid, that our Pre-'lates ſhould have condemned a man of ſuch honeſty, for 'an Hereticke; who, amongſt all the reſt of the Univerſity, 'had written in Logick, Philoſophy, Divinity, Morality, and 'the ſpeculative Arts, without peer. The knowledge of 'which all and ſingular things we do deſire to teſtifie and 'deliver forth, to the intent that the fame and renown of 'this ſaid Doctor may be the more evident and had in repu-'tation amongſt them unto whoſe hands theſe preſent Let-'ters teſtimonial ſhall come.

In witneſs whereof, we have cauſed theſe our Letters teſtimonial to be ſealed with our common Seal. Dated at Oxford in our Congregation-houſe, the 1ſt. day of October, in the year of our Lord 1406.

The teſtimony and words of Mr. John Huſs, as touching Mr. John Wickliff.

The teſtimony and Iudgement of M. J. Hus concerning J. Wickliff.

VERILY, as I do not believe, neither grant, that Mr. John Wickliff is an Hereticke; ſo do I not deny, but firmly hope that he is no Hereticke; forſomuch as in all matters of doubt I ought, as near as I can, to chuſe the beſt part. Wherefore I ſurely truſt, that Maſter John Wickliff is one of the number of them which are ſaved. The words of Chriſt move me thereunto, ſaying Matt. 7. Do ye not judge, that ye be not judged; and Luke the 6th. Do not condemn, and ye ſhall not be condemned; and the words of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 4. Do ye not judge before the Lord himſelf do come, the which ſhall open thoſe things that are hid in darkneſs, to manifeſt the privities of all hearts.

Secondly, The love and charity which I ought to bear unto my neighbour (loving him as my ſelf) doth move me thereunto. Luke 10.

Thirdly, His good fame and report moveth me, the which he hath of the good Prieſts of the Univerſity of Oxford, and not of the wicked, and commonly of the vulgar ſort; although not of the covetous, proud and luxurious Prelates.

Fourthly, His own works and writings do ſtir me thereunto, by the which he goeth about with his whole endeavour to reduce all Men unto the law of Chriſt, and ſpecially the Clergy, that they ſhould forſake the pomp and dominion of this world, and with the Apoſtles lead the life of Chriſt.

Fifthly, His own proteſtations, which he doth oftentimes uſe in his ſentences, often repeating the ſame, do not a little move me.

Lib. de ſenſu & ſententia Scripturæ per J. Wick.

Sixthly, His earneſt deſire and affection which he had unto the law of Chriſt, doth not a little allure me thereunto, diſputing of the piety thereof, the which cannot fail in any one jot or title. Whereupon he made a Book of the verity of the holy Scripture, approving, even unto the uttermoſt, the truth of Gods Law.

Burning of Books proveth not by and by an Hereticke.

Wherefore, it were too fooliſh a conſequence to ſay, that becauſe the number of the Prelates and Clergy in England, France and Boheme, do count John Wickliff for an Hereticke, that therefore he is an Hereticke, &c. Like as the reaſon for burning of the Books; for it is written in the firſt Book of Machabees, the firſt Chapter, That they did burn the books of the Lord, tearing them in pieces, and whoſoever was found to have kept any books of the teſtament or will of the Lord, or which obſerved and kept the law of the Lord, they were by the Kings commandment put to death. If then the burning of the Books by wicked men, did argue, or prove the evilneſs of theſe Books, then was the law of God evil and naught.

A falſe conſequence reproved by Scripture.

So likewiſe the burning of St. Gregory's Books, and divers other Saints and good Men, ſhould argue and prove that they were evil and naughty Men. Whereupon as it doth not follow, that becauſe the Biſhops, Scribes and Phariſes, with the elders of the People, condemned Chriſt Jeſus as an Hereticke, that therefore he is an Hereticke: ſo likewiſe doth it not follow, of any other Man: The Biſhops, Maſters of Divinity, Monks and Prelates, condemned this Man as an Hereticke; Ergo he is an Hereticke. For this conſequence is reproved by John Chryſoſtome, which was twice condemned as an Hereticke by the Biſhops and whole Clergy. Likewiſe St. Gregory in his Books, was condemned by the Cardinals.

John Duke of Lancaſter defended J. Wickliff.

By like proof alſo, as they affirm by Mr. John Wickliff to be an Hereticke, John Duke of Lancaſter (a Man of worthy memory, and Progenitor of Henry King of England) ſhould alſo be an Hereticke. For the ſaid Duke defended, favoured, and greatly loved Mr. John Wickliff: Ergo, the ſaid Duke is, or was an Hereticke; the conſequence is good. The Minor is well known to the Engliſhmen. The Major appeareth in the Canon, where it is ſaid, He which defendeth an Hereticke, &c.

J. Wickliff proved no Hereticke.

But theſe things ſet apart, I demand of the adverſary, whether Maſter John Wickliff be damned for ever or no? If he ſay, that he is damned, becauſe he is an Hereticke; I propound this unto him, whether Maſter John Wickliff whilſt he lived, held any falſe Doctrine contrary to the the holy Scripture? If he do affirm it, let him then shew what Doctrine it is, and afterward declare that he held it obstinately. But he shall find that in his Books he always wrote most commendable protestations against obstinacy and stiff-neckedness. And by and by after, Master John Stokes in his Intimation saith, that Master John Wickliff in England is counted for an Heretick. This seemeth also false by the Letter testimonial of the Univerisity of Oxford: unto the which there is more credit to be given than unto him. And this shall suffice for this present.

¶ Now as we have declared the Testimony of the Univerisity of Oxford, and of John Hus, concerning the praise of John Wickliff: it followeth likewise that we set forth and express the contrary censures and judgments of his enemies, blinded with malicious hatred and corrupt affections against him, especially of the Popes Council gathered at Constance, proceeding first in condemning his Books, then of his Articles, and afterward burning of his bones. The Copy of which their sentence given against him by that Council here followeth.

The Council of Constance against John Wickliff.

The sentence given by the Council of Constance, in condemning the Doctrine, and five and forty Articles of John Wickliff.

The sentence of the Council of Constance against John Wickliff.

THE most holy and Sacred Council of Constance, making and representing the Catholick Church, for the extirpation of this present schism, and of all other errors and heresies, springing and growing under the shadow and pretence of the same, and for the reformation and amendment of the Church, being lawfully congregate and gathered together in the Holy Ghost, for the perpetual memory of the time to come.

We are taught by the Acts and Histories of the Holy Fathers, that the Catholick Faith, without the which, as the holy Apostle St. Paul saith, it is unpossible to please God, hath been always defended by the faithful and spiritual Souldiers of the Church, by the shield of faith, against the false worshippers of the same faith, or rather perverse impugners; which through their proud curiosity will seem to know more, and to be wiser than they ought to be, and for the desire of the glory of the world have gone about oftentimes to overthrow the same. These kinds of wars and battels have been prefigured to us before in those carnal wars of the Israelites against the Idolatrous people. For in those spiritual wars the holy Catholick Church through the vertue and power of faith, being illustrate with the beams of the Heavenly light, by the Providence of God, and being holpen by the help and defence of the Saints and holy men, hath always continued immaculate, and (the darknesse of errors, as her most cruel enemies being put to flight) she hath most gloriously triumphed over all. But in these our days the old and unclean enemy hath raised up new contentions and strifes, that the elect of this world might be known, whose Prince and Captain in time past was one John Wickliff a false Christian; who during his life time, taught and sowed very obstinately many Articles contrary and against the Christian Religion, and the Catholick faith. And the same John Wickliff wrote certain Books which he called a Dialogue, and a Trialogue, besides many other Treatises and Works, the which he both wrote and taught, in the which he wrote the aforesaid, and many other damnable and execrable articles the which his Books for the publication and advancement of his perverse Doctrine, he did set forth openly for every man to read. Whereby besides many offences great hurt and damage of soul hath ensued in divers Regions and Countries, but specially in the Kingdom of England and Boheme. Against whom the Masters and Doctors of the Universities of Oxford and Prague, rising up in the truth and verity of God, according to the order of Schools, within a while after did reprove and condemn the said Articles.

The Dialogue and Trialogue of J. Wickliff.

The Books of Wickliff condemned to be burned.

Moreover the most reverend Fathers the Archbishops and Bishops, (for that time present) of Canterbury, York and Prague, Legates of the Apostolick See, in the Kingdom of England and Boheme, did condemn the Books of the said Wickliff to be burnt. And the said Archbishop of Prague, Commissary of the Apostolick See, did likewise in this behalf determine and judg. And moreover he did forbid that any of those Books, which did remain unburned, should be hereafter any more read. And again, those things being brought to the knowledg and understanding of the Apostolick See, and in the General Council; the Bishop of Rome in his last Council condemned the said Books, Treatises and Volumes, commanding them to be openly burned. Most straitly forbidding that any men which should bear the name of Christ should be so hardy either to keep, read, or expound any of the said Books or Treatises, Volumes or works, or by any means to use or occupy them; or else to alledg them openly or privily, but to their reproof and infamy. And to the intent that this most dangerous and filthy Doctrine should be utterly wiped away out of the Church, he gave commandment throughout all places, that the Ordinaries should diligently enquire and seek out by the Apostolick authority and Ecclesiastical censure, for all such Books, Treatises, Volumes and Works. And the same so being found, to burn and consume them with fire; providing withal, that if there be any such found, which will not obey the same Process to be made against them, as against the favourers and maintainers of Heresies. And this most holy Synod hath caused the said forty five Articles to be examined, and oftentimes perused, by many most reverend Fathers of the Church of Rome, Cardinals, Bishops, Abbots, Masters of Divinity, and Doctors of both Laws, besides a great number of other learned men; the which Articles being so examined, it was found (as in truth it was no less) that many, yea and a great number of them be notoriously for Heretical reproved and condemned by the holy Fathers; othersome not to be Catholick, but erroneous; some full of offence and blasphemy; certain of them offensive unto godly ears, and many of them to be rashful and seditious. It is found also that his Books do contain many Articles of like effect and quality, and that they do induce and bring into the Church unsound and unwholsome Doctrine, contrary unto the faith and ordinance of the Church. Wherefore in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, this sacred Synod, ratifying and approving the sentences and judgments of the Archbishops and Council of Rome, do by this their Decree and Ordinance perpetually for evermore condemn and reprove the said Articles, and every one of them, his Books which he intituled his Dialogue and Trialogue, and all other Books of the same Author, Volumes, Treatises and Works, by what name soever they be intituled or called, the which we will here to be sufficiently expressed and named. Also we forbid the reading, learning, expoition, or alledging of any of the said Books unto all faithful Christians, but so far forth as shall tend to the reproof of the same; forbidding all and singular Catholick persons, under the pain of curse, that from henceforth they be not so hardy openly to preach, teach or hold, or by any means to alledg the said Articles, or any of them, except (as is aforesaid) that it do tend unto the reproof of them; commanding all those Books, Treatises, Works and Volumes aforesaid, to be openly burned, as it was decreed in the Synod at Rome, as is afore expressed. For the execution whereof duly to be observed and done, the said sacred Synod doth straitly charge and command the Ordinaries of the place diligently to attend and look unto the matter, according as it appertaineth unto every mans duty by the Canonical Laws and Ordinances.

Words of authority without prohibition.

Ask my fellow if I be a thief.

So we hear you say.

Unmeetness, because they teach against the counsel of the Pope. So thought the South-Britons perpetually to keep down Christ from rising. O marvel! lows sacred Synod.

Rash gallants on the back, and he will restore. At Rome, restore barrel better Herring. Enough for Squalder to watched cheese will cific.

What these Articles were here condemned by the Council, collected out of all his Works, and exhibited to that said Council, to the number of forty five, the Copy of them following under written declareth.

Other Articles of Wickliff to the number of 45. condemned by the Council of Constance

BEsides the twenty four Articles above mentioned, there were other also gathered out of his Books, to the number of forty five in all, which his malicious adversaries perversly collecting, and maliciously expounding, did exhibit up to the Council of Constance; all which to repeat, though it be not here needful, yet to recite certain of them as they stand in that Council, it shall not be superfluous.

25. All such as be hired for temporal living to pray for other, offend and sin of Simony.

26. The prayer of the reprobate prevaileth for no man.

27. Hallowing of Churches, Confirmation of Children, the Sacrament of Orders be reserved to the Pope and Bishops only, for the respect of temporal lucre.

28. Graduations and Doctorships in Universities and Colleges as they be used, conduce nothing to the Church.

29. The Excommunication of the Pope and his Prelates is not to be feared, because it is the censure of Antichrist.

30. Such as found and build Monasteries, do offend and sin, and all such as enter into the same, be members of the Devil.

31. To enrich the Clergy is against the rule of Christ.

32. Silvester the Pope, and Constantine the Emperor were deceived, in giving and taking possessions into the Church.

33. A Deacon or a Priest may preach the word of God without the authority of the Apostolick See.

34. Such as enter into Order, or Religion Monastical, are thereby unable to keep Gods Commandments, and also to attain to the Kingdom of Heaven, except they return from the same.

35. The Pope with all his Clergy, having those great possessions as they have, be Hereticks in so having, and the Secular powers in so suffering them do not well.

36. The Church of Rome is the Synagogue of Satan, neither is the Pope immediately the Vicar of Christ, nor of the Apostles.

37. The Decretals of the Pope be Apocrypha, and seduce from the faith of Christ, and the Clergy that study them be fools.

38. The Emperor and Secular Lords be seduced, which so inrich the Church with such ample possessions.

39. It is not necessary to Salvation to believe the Church of Rome to be supreme head over all Churches.

40. It is but folly to believe the Popes Pardons.

41. All Oaths which be made for any contract or civil bargain betwixt man and man, be unlawful.

42. Benedict, Francis, Dominick, Bernard, with all such as have been Patrons of private Religion, except they have repented, with such also as have entred into the same, be in a damnable state, and so from the Pope to the lowest Novices, they be altogether Hereticks.

Besides these Articles, to the number of forty and five, condemned (as is said) by the Council of Constance, other Articles also I find diverly collected, or rather wrested out of the Books and writings of Wickliff; some by William Woodford, some by Walden, by Frier Tissington, and other, whom they in their Books have impugned rather than confuted. In the number of whom William Woodford especially findeth out these Articles, and writeth against the same, to the number of eighteen, as here under follow.

Wiclifites Tiffington, writers & friars v. Wickliff.

Articles extracted out of Wickliff by Wm. Woodford.

1. The bread remaineth in his own substance, after the consecration thereof upon the Altar, and ceaseth not to be bread still.

2. As John was figuratively Helias, and not personally; so the bread is figuratively the body of Christ, and not natually. And that without all doubt it is as well a figurative speech, to say, This is my body; as to say, This John is Helias.

2. In the Decree, Ergo Berengarius, the Court of Rome hath determined, that the Sacrament of the holy Eucharist is naturally true bread.

4. They which do affirm that the Infants of the faithful, departing without the Sacrament of Baptism, are not saved, be presumptuous and fools in so affirming.

5. The administration of the Sacrament of Confirmation is not only referred to the Bishops.

6. In the time of St. Paul, only two Orders of Clerks did suffice in the Church, Priests and Deacons. Neither was there in the time of the Apostles any distinction of Popes, Patriarchs, Archbishops, and Bishops; but these the Emperors pride did find out.

7. Such as in times past, either for covetousness of temporal lucre, or in hope of mutual succour by kindred, or for cause to excuse their lust (although they despaired of issue) were married; were not coupled together by true Matrimony.

8. The causes of Divorcement, either for spiritual consanguinity, or for affinity, be not founded in Scripture, but are only Ordinances of men.

9. These words, I will take thee to wife, are rather to be taken in contract of Matrimony, than these words, I do take thee to wife. And the contract with any party, by the words of the future tense, ought not to be fruftrate for the contract with any party afterward made by the words of the prefent time.

10. There be twelve Disciples of Antichrist, Popes, Cardinals, Patriarchs, Archbishops, Bishops, Archdeacons, Officials, Deans, Monks, Canons, Friers and Pardoners.

11. In the Book of Numbers, the 18 Chapter, and in Ezechiel 44 Chapter, it is commanded simply, that neither the Priests of Aaron, nor the Levites should have any part of inheritance with other Tribes, but should live meerly of Tythes and Oblations.

12. There is no greater Heretick or Antichrist than that Clerk which teacheth, that it is lawful for Priests and Levites of the Law of Grace to be indued with Temporal possessions. And if there be any Hereticks, Apostates, or Blasphemers, these Clerks be such.

13. It is not only lawful for the Lords Temporal to take away goods of fortune from the Churchmen, issuing usually; but also they are bound so to do, under pain of eternal damnation.

14. He that is the more humble and more serviceable to the Church, and more enamored with the love of Christ, is in the Church militant the greater, and the more near Vicar of Christ.

15. If Corporal Unction or anoyling were a Sacrament (as now it is fained to be) Christ and his Apostles would not have left the ordinance thereof untouched.

16. Unto the true Dominion secular is required the vertuous life of him that ruleth.

17. All things that happen do come absolutely of neceffity.

18. Whatsoever the Pope or his Cardinals can deduce clearly out of the Scripture, that only is to be believed, or to be done at their monition: and whatsoever otherwise they do command, is to be condemned as Heretical.

Besides this W. Woodford afore-mentioned, divers other there were which wrote against these Articles of Wickliff aforesaid, maintaining the Popes part, as seemeth by flattery, rather than following any just cause so to do, or shewing forth any reason or learning in disproving the same. Notwithstanding on the contrary part some there were again both learned and godly, which taking the part of Wickliff, without all flattery, defended the most of the said Articles openly in Schools and other places, as appeareth by the works of John Hus; who in his publick determinations in the Univerisity of Prague, stood in defence of the same against all his adversaries, as partly is here to be seen in these Tractations under following.

The whole University is against the judgment of the Doctors which condemned the 45 Articles.

FOrasmuch as to condemn the truth wittingly, or without reasonable examination, doth tend to great danger of salvation, as the Lord saith, Luk. 6. Do ye not condemn, and ye shall not be condemned. Therefore to avoid this great danger, the University of Prague, and the whole Communalty thereof, the Rector, Masters, Doctors, Bachelors and Students in their general assembly, not agreeing to the condemnation pronounced by the Doctors in their Council-house, requireth of the said Doctors a reasonable proof of their condemnation, and that they should by Scripture, authority, or infallible reason, prove the falshood of every those five and forty Articles: The which being once done, the said University will agree to the said condemnation as just: For the University doth well know, that as Augustine saith in the end of his second Book of Christian Doctrine, whatsoever a man doth learn besides the holy Scriptures, if it be hurtful, there it is condemned; if it be profitable, there it is found. And when a man hath found all things therein which he hath profitably learned elsewhere, he shall much more abundantly find those things which are found in no place else, but are learned in the marvellous depth, and marvellous profoundness of those most sacred Scriptures only.

Aug. Lib. de Doct. Christ. Lib. 2.

Greg. Moral. Lib. 23.

Thus writeth Augustine. And Gregory in his Three and twentieth Book of Morals, saith thus, God in the holy Scripture hath comprehended whatsoever thing may happen unto any man, and in the same hath by the examples of those which are gone afore, taught them which are to come, how to reform their lives. Whereby it appeareth that if every of the five and forty Articles containeth in it wholly the thing that is false and untruth, the same is either plainly or darkly condemned in the holy Scriptures.

Secondly, It followeth by the sentence and mind of this holy man, that if the condemnation of the five and forty Articles be profitable, the same is found in the holy Scriptures. And whereas again St. Augustine writeth unto St. Hierom, in his Eighth Epistle, and the ninth Distinction, I (saith he) have learned to attribute this honour and reverence unto those writers only which are called Canonical, that I dare affirm none of them to have erred in their Works or Writings. As for all other Writers, I do so read them, that although they abound with never so much holiness, or excell in Doctrine, I do not by and by think it true, because they themselves do so judg; but if they can, by other Canonical Authors or probable reasons, perswade or prove that they do not digress from the truth.

Also the said Augustine in his Book de Unico Baptismo, Lib. 2. saith thus, Who doth not know or understand the holy Canonical Scripture to be contained in his own bonds and limits, and the same to be preferred before all other Letters and Decrees of Bishops, &c. And a little after he hath the like saying, as for the Letters of other Bishops which have been written, or be written, (after the Canon being confirmed) they may lawfully be reprehended and reproved, both by the word of them that be more skilful in that matter, and also by the ancient authority of other Bishops, or by the prudence and wisdom of such as be better learned, or more expert, or else by General Councils, if it so chance that they in any point have erred and gone astray from the sincere truth.

By these sayings of St. Austin and other like, &c. the University of Prague hath concluded and determined, that they will not receive the condemnation of the five and forty Articles, made by the Doctors in their Council-house as just and true, except they which condemned them, will prove their condemnation by the holy Scriptures and probable reasons upon every of the five and forty Articles.

Wherefore for the due examination of the foresaid condemnation, whether it be effectual or no, we will at this present take in hand the fourteenth Article of the number of the five and forty: which Article is this,

{KING Art. 2.}

They which leave off Preaching and hearing of the Word of God, for fear of Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicate, and in the day of judgment shall be counted the betrayers of Christ.

The 14 Article of J. Wickliff.

This Article containeth, first, that all Priests, omitting the Preaching of the Word of God, for fear of the Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicate.

The defence of the 14 Article.

Secondly, It containeth that all such as do omit the hearing of the Word of God, for fear of Excommunication, are already Excommunicated.

Thirdly, That both these sorts of men in the day of judgment, shall be counted Traytors of Christ.

The preaching of the Gospel commanded of God.

As concerning the first point, it is presupposed, that the Preaching of the Word of God is commanded unto the Apostles and their followers, as it appeareth in Mat. 10. where it is said, Jesus sent his twelve Disciples, commanding them and saying, Go and preach that the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. Also in the last of Matthew, and the tenth of Luke. Whereupon Peter the Apostle of Christ, acknowledging this precept and commandment for himself, and for the other Apostles and Successors, in the tenth of the Acts, saith thus, He commanded us to preach and testifie, that it is he which is ordained of God the Judg both of the quick and the dead. This commandment also the other Apostles did acknowledg, and specially the chosen vessel, pronouncing under a great threatning, 1 Cor. 9. Wo be unto me if I do not preach the Gospel. And Pope Nicholas considering that great threatning in 43 Distinction, saith, The dispensation and distribution of the Heavenly feed is commanded and injoyned to us: Wo be unto us if we do not sow it abroad, or if we hold our peace. Which thing when as the Vessel of Election did fear and cry out upon, how much more ought all other inferiors to fear and dread the same? To the same purpose doth Saint Gregory write in his Pastoral in the Distinction, Sit rector. It is also evident by many other Doctors and holy men, as by Saint Augustine, Hierome, Isidore, Bernard, whose words it were too long here to rehearse.

Greg. Dist. 40. cap. iii. initio.

The hearing of the word commanded by God.

As touching the second point, That the hearing of the Word and Law of God is commanded unto the people, it is evident both by the old and new Law; for it is said in the 28 of the Proverbs, He that turneth away his ear, and will not hear the Law of God, his Prayer shall be cursed. And our Saviour rebuking the Scribes and Pharisees, concludeth thus in the eighth of St. John, saying, He that is of God, heareth Gods word; but forsomuch as you are not of God, therefore you hear not his word.

Excommunication.

Thirdly, It is to be noted that Excommunication is a seperation from the Communion, the 11 Queest. 3. Nihil. & Cap. Canonica. And 27. Question, first, Vidnas, 34. Question 3. Cum Sacerdos. And this Excommunication is double, that is to say, either secret or manifest. The secret Excommunication is, whereby a man is separated from the Mystical Body of Christ, and so from God through sin, according unto the 59 of Esay, Your iniquities have made separation between your God and you. And with this Excommunication doth the Apostle Excommunicate every man which doth not love the Lord Jesus Christ; saying in the first of the Corinthians, and last Chapter, If any man do not love the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be accursed. The manifest and apert Excommunication may be divided into a manifest Excommunication by God, whereof it is spoken, Mat. 25. Go ye cursed, &c. And oftentimes elsewhere in the Law of God. Also into a manifest Excommunication by men, whereby the Prelate doth either justly or unjustly cast out any man from the participation of the Communion of the Church; whereof this shall suffice at this present.

Excommunication double.

The probation of the first part.

Then as touching the first part of the Article, it is thus argued, &c.

Whosoever forsake or leave the Commandments of God undone, they are Excommunicate of God. But the Priests which leave off the preaching of the Word of God, for fear of the unjust Excommunication of men, do leave the Commandment of God undone. Ergo, those Priests which do leave off preaching of the Word are Excommunicated of God.

The

{KING Art. 2.}

The first part of this Article is true: The Major appareth by the Psalm, Cursed be they which do decline and swerve from thy precepts. The Minor is evident by the first Proposition, which proveth that the preaching of the word of God is the Commandment of God injoyned unto those Priests and Ministers. Whereupon the saying of our Saviour, Mat. 15. is spoken unto them, Wherefore do you transgress the Commandments of God for your own Traditions? Leaving off the preaching of the word of God for fear of unjust Excommunication; and so dishonouring the Father Christ, and the Mother the holy Church.

It is thus confirmed, All they which do omit or let slip any manner of work, principally and frutily injoyned them of the Lord Jesus Christ, under the cloak and colour of grace, for fear of any Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicate. But Priests, and especially Curates, admonished by the Spirit of God, leaving off the preaching of the word of God for fear of the Excommunication of men, omit and leave off, for fear of the same Excommunication, a work principally and frutily injoyned unto them of the Lord Jesus Christ, under the cloak and colour of grace: Ergo, Priests, and specially Curates and such as be admonished and warned by the Spirit of God, omitting the preaching of the word of God for fear of Excommunication, are Excommunicate. The consequence is well known. The Major appareth by the Psalm, Cursed be they which do decline and go away from thy Commandments. The Minor is also evident again by the first supposition.

The Apostles did not obey any wicked Inhibition.

Item, If the Apostles of Christ had left off the preaching of the word of God for fear of the Excommunication of men, which the Lord did foresthew unto them in the 16th of St. John, saying, They shall Excommunicate you out of their Synagogues: They had been Excommunicated of God: Ergo, by like evidence the Priests and Ministers of Christ, being inspired with the same spirit to preach and declare the word of God, if they leave it undone for fear of the Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicate. The consequence dependeth upon a similitude. And the Antecedent is evident; for if the Apostles had left off preaching for fear of Excommunication, they had broken the Commandments of God; and so consequently had been accursed. Wherefore they willing to observe and keep the Commandments of God, and to put off the Excommunication of men, said unto the High Priests, Elders, and Scribes at Jerusalem, to Annas, Caiphas, to John and Alexander, and all other of the kindred of the Priests which were gathered together, and commanded them that they should not preach nor teach in the name of Jesus, if it be just in the sight of God, that we should rather obey you than God, that judg you, Act. 4. And in the fifth of the Acts they said unto them, We ought rather to obey God than man. By this saying of the Holy Ghost it is concluded, that the Priests and Ministers of Christ, inspired by the Holy Ghost to preach the word of God, ought rather obey the Holy Ghost, than those that shall prohibit and command them to the contrary, and to suffer the Excommunication of men patiently. Whereupon Pope Anacletus spake very well in this, as it is written, Distinction 43. We know (saith he) that many do go about to molest and trouble the Doctors and Teachers to this end, that they might utterly destroy them, and fulfill their own proper lusts and delires; yet notwithstanding the said Doctors, as much as in them lieth, ought not to depart or go back from their good doings and intent, knowing assuredly that blessed are they which suffer persecution for righteousness sake. Thus much writeth he. And for reverend Bede (upon these words, Je shall find an ass tyed up, and an he-fole with her, loose her and bring her unto me; and if any man say any thing unto you, say ye that the Lord hath need of them), writeth thus: Here it is mystically commanded unto the Doctors and Teachers, that if any adversity do let or hinder, or any man do prohibit or stop, that sinners cannot be loosed from their bonds or snares, and be brought unto the Lord by the confession of their faith, that they notwithstanding should not leave off preaching, but constantly and boldly affirm and say, that the Lord hath need of such to edifie and build again his Church. For so did the Apostles; so likewise ought all the humble and meek Ministers of Christ to do. And St. Hierome writing unto Rusticus the Bishop of Narbone, saith thus, Let no Bishop from henceforth be puffed up or inflamed with the envy of Divelish temptation, if the Priests now and then do exhort and teach the people, or preach openly in the Churches; or as it is said, do bless the people: For unto him which should deny unto me the doing hereof, I would say in this manner, He that will not that Priests should do those things which they are commanded by God, let him say that he is greater and above Christ. By the which words St. Hierom doth openly declare, that Priests are commanded to exhort and teach the people, and to preach in the Churches. Secondly, That a Bishop denying or forbidding the same to be done, specially the Priests or Ministers being apt men thereunto, is extolled above Christ. And therefore consequently is not to be obeyed nor heard in his doings.

Anacletus, Dist. 4.

Hieronymus ad Rusticum.

If the Pope be an Heretick, the godly Bishops may preach against him.

Item, Admit that the Pope be an Heretick, and teach perverse and contrary Doctrine unto the holy Scriptures, and that the Bishop be a Catholick man, unto whom the Pope giveth in commandment that he shall suffer no man to preach contrary to his opinion; as it hapned in Pope Leo, and Saint Hilary the Bishop: Adding this also, That the Bishop do execute the Popes commandment under pain of Excommunication; this notwithstanding if the Catholick Priests, learned in the Law of God, do leave off preaching against the Popes Heresies, for fear of Excommunication of men, they are already Excommunicate. The which thing is evident, forsomuch as they are accurfed through the consent of their silence, as St. Isidore saith, 11. Queest. 1. He that doth consent unto sinners, or defendeth a sinner, he shall be curfed both before God and man, and shall be punished with a most severe rebuke. And in the 7 Queestion, 4. Omnis, it is said, He that doth neglect to amend that which he may correct, committeth no less fault than he which had before offended; for not only they which do commit the offence, but also they which consent thereunto are judged partakers thereof. In like case Priests which do not preach against the Heresie which the Pope teacheth, are dumb dogs, not able to open their mouths, or bark against the wolf, which will kill the sheep of Jesus Christ: Ergo, how can it then be otherwise, but they must needs be betrayers of the sheep of their own shepherd.

Albeit the chief Priests be adulterers, yet ought the Ministers to preach against Adultery.

Item, Let it be so, that the Bishop with the chief Prelates be adulterers, or otherwise open offenders, and that he together with his Prelates do command under pain of Excommunication, that none be so hardy to preach against adultery; in such a case they which do omit their duty in preaching against Adultery, for fear of Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicated of God; Ergo, the first part of the Article is true. The Antecedent is proved: For our Saviour in the eighth of Mark saith thus, He that acknowledgeth me and my words in this wicked and adulterous generation, the Son of man shall also acknowledg and confess him when he shall come in the glory of his Father with his Angels. Therefore he that shall confess Christ, and these words of Christ, Mat. 5. You have heard that it was said to them in old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery: But I say unto you, that every one which shall behold a woman to lust after her, hath already committed adultery with her in his heart: He, I say, that shall confess these things before an adulterous Bishop with his chief Prelates, the which perchance are the wicked and adulterous generation, the Son of man shall also acknowledg him, when he shall come in the glory of his Father, and so consequently is he blessed. Contrariwise, he which for the fear of Excommunication of men will not confess Christ and his words, before the sinful and adulterous generation is accurfed. The consequence holdeth by the words of Christ, Luk. 9. He that is ashamed of me and my words, him shall the Son of man be ashamed of, when he shall come in his Majesty, and in the glory of his Father, and his holy Angels: pronouncing that which is spoken, Mat. 25. Verily I say unto you, I know you not; go you cursed into everlasting fire.

The example of Christ.

Also our Saviour Jesus Christ did not omit, or leave off the preaching of the Kingdom of God for any pretended Excommunication of the Bishops, Scribes and Pharisees; so likewise his true and humble Priests ought not to omit their preaching for any pretended Excommunication of men; the consequence holdeth by the saying of Christ, Joh. 15. Be ye mindful of the words which I have spoken unto you, the servant is not greater than his master: If they have persecuted me, they will persecute you also. The Antecedent is apparent by the saying of Saint John in his his ninth Chapter. Even now the Jews had conſpired, that whoſoever did confeſs him to be Chriſt, ſhould be Excommunicate. And likewiſe Joh. 7. Whether did any of the Princes or Rulers, or any of the Phariſees believe in him. But this people which knoweth not the Law are accurſed.

The obedience of Chriſtian Prieſts toward their Prelates.

Alſo the humble and juſt Miniſters of God ought not, under pain of ſin, to ceaſe from the fruitful preaching of the Law of God for any unjuſt Excommunication, or unlawful Commandment; and it is proved thus: the humble and juſt Miniſters of Chriſt ought not to obey their Prelates in ſuch things as are contrary to God; as all the holy Doctors, and ſuch as are learned in the Law of God, do wholly with one conſent affirm. And forſomuch as an unjuſt Excommunication, and unlawful Commandment are againſt God, therefore the juſt and true Miniſters of God ought not to obey ſuch unlawful Excommunication and Commandments; and conſequently ought not to ceaſe for them from the fruitful preaching of the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; but ought boldly and gladly to preach the ſame. Forſomuch as the Lord doth comfort them in the fifth of Matthew, ſaying thus, Bleſſed and happy are ye when ax men do curſe you, and perſecute you, and ſpeak all kind of evil againſt you, making lies and ſlanders upon you for my ſake; rejoice and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven.

The power of preaching to edification ought not to ceaſe.

Alſo every Miniſter having power given him from above to preach the Goſpel, hath the ſame given unto him for the edifying of the Church, and not for the deſtruction of the ſame.

And the Apoſtle ſaith, 2 Cor. 10. But every one leaving off the preaching of the Goſpel, for fear of any pretenſed Excommunication of men, ſhould fruſtrate the power given him for the edifying of the Church. And therefore in ſo doing he ſhould ſin againſt God and his Church, and conſequently ought rather to cauſe not to ceaſe from preaching for fear of any ſuch Excommunication, leſt that he be Excommunicate of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

The preaching of the Goſpel is not to be left off for all the Popes prohibitions.

Item, Set caſe that the Pope doth command that there ſhall be no preaching in any place, then the Miniſters of Chriſt leaving off their preaching for fear of the Popes Curſe, are already Excommunicated of God. It is evident forſomuch as they have neglected the Commandment of God for the Commandment of men. And this caſe is poſſible: for by what reaſon the Pope may command under pain of Excommunication, that there ſhall be no preaching in ſome place, and namely in the Pariſh Churches; by the ſame reaſon he may command that no man ſhould preach in any place.

The firſt part is evident by the prohibition of Pope Alexander, who in his Bull did prohibit to preach the word of God unto the people in Chappels, although the ſaid Chappels were confirmed by the priviledg of the See Apoſtolick. The which Bull the Lord Subincon, Archbiſhop of Prague, with his Canons, obtained. By theſe aforeſaid, the firſt part of the Article is evident, which is this, that all Prieſts omitting the preaching of the word of God, for fear of the Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicate.

The ſecond part of the Article.

The ſecond part of the Article is this, That all they which do omit the hearing of the word of God, for fear of the Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicate.

And it is proved thus: All ſuch as neglect the Commandments of God are Excommunicate. But they which neglect the hearing of the word of God, for the Excommunication of men, are they which neglect the Commandments of God. Therefore they which omit the hearing of the word of God, for the Excommunication are already Excommunicate.

Means neceſſary unto Salvation are not to be omitted.

The Major is apparent by the 118 Pſalm, Curſed be they which decline from thy Commandments. And the Minor is evident by the ſecond Suppoſition, which ſaith, That the hearing of the word of God is commanded unto the people.

This is confirmed, All ſuch as omit the neceſſary means unto Salvation are Excommunicate: But ſuch as omit the hearing of the word of God, for the Excommunication by men, be ſuch as do omit the neceſſary means unto ſalvation. Therefore in ſo doing they are Excommunicate. The conſequence is plain: the Major is made evident by this, That all ſuch as do omit the neceſſary means unto Salvation, do alſo neglect their Salvation, and ſo are out of the way of Salvation, and be Excommunicated of God. The Minor appeareth hereby, that to hear the word of God is the means moſt neceſſary unto Salvation, as the Apoſtle doth prove in his tenth Chapter to the Romans, How, ſaith he, ſhall they believe on him, whom they never heard of? And how ſhall they hear without a Preacher? And by and by after the Apoſtle inferreth unto the purpoſe, That faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

A man ought to do nothing againſt his conſcience.

Item, Whatſoever is done contrary unto Conſcience, doth edifie unto eternal damnation; as it is ſaid, as touching the reſtitution of the ſpoiled goods, Chap. Literas porro. But to omit the hearing of the word of God for fear of Excommunication of men, is a thing which is done againſt Conſcience. Therefore to omit the hearing of the word of God, for Excommunication doth edifie unto eternal damnation, and therefore conſequently ought not to be done, for fear of any Excommunication. Wherefore a woman being judged unto a man, whom the knoweth to be within the degrees of conſanguinity, which Gods Law hath prohibited, ought not to obey that judgment, leſt that ſhe offend againſt God; but meekly and patiently to ſuſtain the Excommunication, as it appeareth in the Chapter before alledged. So likewiſe all true Chriſtians ought rather, than to offend againſt God, meekly to ſuffer the Excommunication of men, and not to omit the hearing of the word of God. To this purpoſe alſo ſerveth that which is ſpoken in the 11 Queſt. 3. He that feareth the Omnipotent God, will not preſume by any means to do any thing contrary unto the Goſpel or Apoſtles, either contrary unto the Prophets, or the Inſtitutions of the holy Fathers. By theſe premiſſes, the ſecond part of this Article is manifeſt, that all ſuch as do omit the hearing of the word of God, for fear of Excommunication of men, are already Excommunicated.

The proof of the third part.

And forſomuch as all Chriſtians being of lawful age, not repenting at the end, ſhall be counted in a manner as Traytors to Chriſt in the day of judgment, becauſe that they were unfaithful ſervants of Chriſt; therefore they which through fear omit the preaching and hearing of the word of God, for the Excommunication of men, ſhall be counted as Traytors to Chriſt, and ſhall render account thereof unto the Lord. Whereupon Chryſoſtom touching both thoſe ſorts in the 41 Homily, ſhewing how the Lord would have ſome to be teachers, and otherſome to be teachers, and otherſome to be diſciples, ſaith thus, For unto thoſe which he would have to be teachers, he ſpeaketh thus by his Prophet Eſay, Ye Prieſts ſpeak to the hearts of the people, for if the Prieſts do not manifeſt all the truth unto the people, they ſhall render account thereof at the day of judgment: and likewiſe if the people do not learn the truth, they ſhall alſo give an account at the day of judgment. It is alſo made more evident by him upon the tenth of Matthew, Do not fear them which kill the body, leſt that through the fear of death, you do not freely ſpeak that which you have heard, neither boldly preach that unto all men which you alone have heard in your ears. So that hereby alone it is evident that not only he is a betrayer of the truth, which tranſgreſſing the truth, doth openly ſpeak lyes inſtead of the truth; but he alſo which doth not freely pronounce, or doth not freely defend the truth, which he ought boldly to defend, is alſo a Traytor unto the Truth. For like as the Prieſt is a debtor to preach the truth which he hath heard of the Lord; even ſo the lay-man is bound to defend the truth, which he hath heard of the Miniſter, approved by the Scriptures; which if he do not, then is he a Traytor unto the truth: for fledfaſt belief with the heart prevaileth unto righteouſneſs; the confeſſion which is made with the mouth helpeth unto ſalvation. Thus much writeth Chryſoſtom; who together with the people meekly bearing the Excommunication of the Biſhops, freely preached the truth, and the people heard him; and ſo by his word and his works he freely taught the truth, leſt he ſhould be a Traytor unto the truth, and conſequently be counted as a Traytor unto our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in the day of Judgment. And thus the third part of the Article aforeſaid is manifeſt.

Chryſoſtom in his 41 Homily.

Chryſoſtom although he was Excommunicate, yet he did preach.

The defenſion of the Fifteenth Article of John Wickliff by John Hus.

The 15th Article of Wickliff.

IT is lawful for any Deacon or Prieſt to Preach the Word of God without the Authority of the Apoſtolick See, or of his Catholicks.

Firſt, I underſtand here by the Authority of the Apoſtolick See, properly his ſpecial conſent authoriſing. And likewiſe I underſtand by Authority of the Biſhop, a ſpecial conſent of the Biſhop authoriſing the ſaid Deacon or Prieſt to Preach.

The conſtitution of the Article. Every man being lawfully called of the Church, ought to Preach the Word of God without the Popes licence.

Now as touching the truth of this Article, I thus argue: Like as after Matrimony once complete, the Man and Wife may lawfully, without any ſpecial licence of the Pope or Biſhop, procreate carnal children: So likewiſe of Deacons or Prieſts, by the motion of God through the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, may lawfully without any ſpecial licence either of Pope or Biſhop, generate ſpiritual children. Ergo, this Article is true, and the Antecedent is thus proved. For as it is an acceptable work unto God for Man and Wife, without the ſpecial licence of the Pope or Biſhop, to generate carnal children; ſo it is acceptable unto him, that Deacons or Prieſts, by the motion of God through the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, ſhould lawfully generate ſpiritual children, without the ſpecial licence of the Pope, or of any other Biſhop: Ergo, the aſſumption is true.

But if any Man will deny this ſimilitude, let him ſhew the diverſity. Yea, as it is worſe not to receive or to choke the Seed of Gods word, than the Carnal ſeed; ſo contrariwiſe, it is better to receive and ſow abroad that Seed of the word of God, whereby children might be raiſed up unto God, than to receive or give Seed whereby Carnal children may be gotten. Whereupon our Saviour in the 10th of Matthew ſaith thus; Whoſoever doth not receive you, neither heareth your words, wipe off the duſt from your feet: verily I ſay unto you, that in the day of judgment it ſhall be better unto the land of Sodom and Gomorrah than to that city.

Alſo a Deacon or Prieſt being ſtirred by the Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt, may Preach the Word of God without the ſpecial licence of the Pope or Biſhop. Ergo, it is lawful for him ſo to do. The conſequence is thus manifeſt; ſomuch as the Spirit of God, moving the Deacon or Prieſt unto the Preaching of the Goſpel, is of greater force than any prohibition of Pope or Biſhop invented by Man. Ergo, according unto the rule of the Apoſtles, they ought infallibly to be obedient unto the Spirit of Chriſt, which doth ſo move them thereunto, and rather to obey God than Man, Acts 5. Alſo by like reaſon, as Heldad and Medad; upon whom the Spirit of God did reſt, did lawfully prophecy without requiring any licence at Moſes hands, as it is written, Numb. 11. By the ſame reaſon may the meek Miniſter of Chriſt, upon whom the Spirit of God doth reſt, without the requiring of any licence either of the Pope or Biſhop, lawfully Preach the Word of God unto the people. And would to God in this behalf all Prelates had the Spirit of Moſes; for it is ſaid, Numb. 11. That when as Heldad and Medad were prophecying in the Tents, a child ran unto Moſes, and told him, ſaying; Heldad and Medad do prophecy in the Tents; and by and Joſua the Son of Nun, the ſervant of Moſes which he had choſen out amongſt many, ſaid, My Maſter Moſes, forbid them: and he ſaid, Why envieſt thou for my ſake? Would God that all the people could prophecy, and that the Lord would give them his Spirit. O would to God the Pope and Biſhops had the affections which this holy Man the friend of God had. Then would he not prohibit the meek Deacons and Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt to Preach the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt. The like affection had the bleſſed Man Gregory, which in his 22d Book of Morals, writing upon theſe words of Job; And I have not afflicted the Soul of his Husbandmen, ſaith thus; The Husbandmen of this Earth are theſe, which being ſet in ſamll Authority, with as fervent deſire as they can, and with as great labor as they may, do work by the preaching of grace, to the endition of the holy Church, the which Husbandmen of this World not to afflict, is not to envy their labours and doings: neither ought the Ruler of the Church, albeit he do challenge unto himſelf alone the title of Preaching, through envy gainſay others which do Preach truly and uprightly. For the Godly mind of the Paſtor, which ſeeketh not his own glory amongſt men, deſireth to be holpen: the which thing alſo the faithful Preacher doth with, if it might by any means be brought to paſs, that the truth, which he alone cannot ſufficiently expreſs, all mens mouths might declare.

God grant that all the people may prophecy.

Wherefore, when as Joſua would have reſiſted, the two which were prophecying in the hoſt, why doſt thou envy (ſaith he) for my ſake? For he did not envy that good in other which he himſelf had. Thus writeth S. Gregory.

The cauſe of the word of God ought not to be ſtopped. Bernard.

Alſo the meek Miniſters of Chriſt have, by a ſpecial gift of God, knowledge and mind to Preach the Goſpel; but neither is it lawful for the Pope or Biſhop, or any other Man to let or hinder them, leſt thereby they ſhould let the Word of God, that it have not his free courſe. Ergo, this Article is true; for the King doth not ſo much rule over the goods of his ſubjects, no not of his own Sons, but that they may give Alms to whom they will: much leſs hath the Biſhop ſo great Authority over the knowledge of the meek Miniſter, with his other gifts of God, but that he may freely under the title of ſpiritual Alms Preach the Goſpel unto the people. Ergo, foraſmuch as it ſhould ſeem ſtrange, that a Biſhop ſhould forbid any Man to give any corporal Alms to the poor that are an hungred; much more ſtrange and marvellous would it be, if that he ſhould prohibit the ſpiritual Miniſter of Chriſt to give ſpiritual Alms, by the Preaching of the Goſpel of the Word of God.

Item, No Catholick Man ought to doubt, but that a Man able for the purpoſe, is more bound to teach them which are ignorant, to counſel and comfort the weak in Spirit, to correct ſuch as are unruly, to forgive thoſe that do them wrong, than to do any other work of mercy: Forſomuch then as he that hath ſufficient is bound, under pain of damnation, to give corporal Alms, as it appeareth Matth. 25. much more he, which is able, is bound to do ſpiritual Alms. And this Alms S. Barnard, writing unto Eugenius in his 3d Book, perceived to be very neceſſary for the Biſhop of Rome, whereas he ſaid thus: I fear no greater poiſon, nor greater ſword or miſchief will happen unto thee, than this unſatiable deſire of dominion. With what face then can the faithful Miniſter withdraw or keep back the ſpiritual Alms for the Pope and any other, even without the ſpecial licence of the Pope or of the Biſhop; which licence, through the far diſtance from the Pope, the Miniſters cannot ſo eaſily obtain or come by? For all prohibition of any Prelate, being broken through neceſſity, is not to be blamed, 11. Queſt. 3. Interceſſor, and alſo in the Chapter following.

Item, All authority of preaching given unto Deacons and Prieſts in their conſecration, were but vain, except that in caſe of neceſſity, without any ſpecial licence, they might Preach the Goſpel. It is evident, forſomuch as it is not lawful for them to uſe that Authority, by their adverſary, without a ſpecial licence. Ergo, it is given them in vain. The conſequence is evident by the common ſaying of the Philoſopher, That power is but vain, whereof proceedeth no uſe of action. But foraſmuch as this Article doth as it were depend upon the Article before paſſed, therefore this ſhall ſuffice to be ſpoken thereof at this preſent.

Objections.

But againſt the affirmations of both theſe Articles this is objected out of the 16. Queſt. 1. All faithful people, and ſpecially all Prieſts, Deacons, and all others of the Clergy, ought to take heed that they do nothing without the licence of their Biſhop. It is alſo objected out of the 9th Book of Decretals, Titulo de hæreticis cap. Cum ex injuncto; where, it is ſaid, No Man ought to uſurp to himſelf indifferently the Office of Preaching, forſomuch as the Apoſtle ſaith; How ſhall they Preach, except they be ſent? Whereas alſo Innocentius doth declare, that it is not ſufficient for a Man to ſay, that he is ſent of God to Preach except he do ſhew the ſame. As touching the firſt point, the Gloſs doth ſufficiently anſwer upon this word, without licence; That is to be expounded, ſaith he without general licence; the which is obtained and given, when as a Biſhop doth appoint any Prieſt to govern the people, For thereby (ſaith he) it ſeemeth a Biſhop is thought to give him general power to Miniſter unto the people, and to Rule the Church. Thus much in the Gloſs. And to the ſame end and purpoſe pose it is said in the 7*th Quæst.* 1. Chapter, Episcopi. Bishops or Priests, if they come into the Church of another Bishop to visit the same, as it is said Glos. 1. in honore suo, Let them be received in their degree, and desired as well to Preach the Word, as to do any other confecration or oblation. Secondly, it is to be noted, which is very well spoken in the same place; No man ought to usurp unto himself the Office of Preaching, as a thing indifferent, For to usurp, is unlawfully to use any thing. Ergo, the same Deacon or Priest doth then usurp the Office of Preaching as indifferently, who living viciously, contrary unto Law the of Christ, or being ignorant of the Law of God, doth Preach either for gain, or covetousness of living, either for his belly or dainty life, or for any vain glory: But he which doth live according unto the Laws of Christ, and being moved with the affection of sincere Charity, intending purely the Honor of God, and the Salvation of himself and his neighbours, doth Preach no lies nor vain jests, or other things not authorized, but only the Law of Christ, and the minds of the holy Doctors. And he that doth so Preach, necessity occasioning or moving him thereunto, in case there be no Pope or Bishop, or in case possible to withstand the Preaching of Hereticks or false Preachers, in so doing doth not usurp the Office of Preaching; and in such case there is no doubt but he is sent of God. And this doth also answer unto that which is consequently said; that if any man will peradventure craftily answer, that such Preachers are invisibly sent of God, although not visibly of men, when as that invisible sending of God is much better than the visible sending of men: A man may reasonably answer thereunto, that forsomuch as that internal sending is secret, it is not sufficient for a Man only to say that he is sent of God, forsomuch as every Heretick may so say; but he ought to prove the same his invisible calling by the working of some miracle, or by some special Testimony of the Scripture.

The anſwers to the objection.

What is folly to usurp the Office of a Preacher.

Who is a true Minister of the Church.

Here it is to be noted, according to Saint Augustine in his 65*th* Book of Quest. unto Orosius, that there are four kinds of sending. The first is from God only, whereof we read in Moses and other, which were inspired by God. And this kind of sending looseth from the danger of the Statute: So that he whom the Spirit of God hath inspired. this Prelate giving thanks may proceed unto a better life. Whereupon Pope Urban said 19. Quæst. 2*d* There be (said he) two Laws, the one publick, the other private. The publick Law is that which is confirmed in writing by the holy Fathers such as is the canon Law, which is only given for transgressions. As for example, it is decreed in the Canons, that none of the Clergy shall go from one Bishoprick unto another, without the Letters commendatory of his Bishop; the which was ordained only for offenders, that no infamed persons should be received of any Bishop. For they were wont, when they could not celebrate or do their Office under their own Bishoprick, to go unto another: which now is forbidden by the Laws and Precepts. The private Law is that, which, by the instruction of the Holy Ghost, is written in the heart, as the Apostle speaketh of many, which have the Law of God written in their hearts. And in another place; forsomuch as the Gentiles have not the Law of God, but naturally do those things which are of the Law, they are Laws unto themselves. And afterward he saith, the private Law is much more worthy than the publick Law. For the Spirit of God is a Law; And they which are moved by the Spirit of God, are led by the Law of God. And who is he, that can worthily resist against the Holy Ghost? Whosoever therefore is led by the Spirit of God, albeit his Bishop do say him nay, let him go freely by our Authority; for the Law is not appointed for the just Man, for where as the Spirit of God is, there is liberty; and if ye be led by the Spirit of God, ye are not under the Law.

Four kinds of sending or callings.

The common Law.

The private Law.

Private Law, that is the secret and inward working of Gods spirit in the heart.

The words of Pope Urban.

Behold, here it is affirmed, that the sending by God, through inspiration, is not bound under the bondage of the Law; for that Law is more worthy than the publick Law. Secondly, that the Law is made for Transgressors and Offenders, and not for the Just. Thirdly, that whosoever is led by the Spirit of God, although his Bishop stand against him, he may proceed unto a better life. Whereby it is evident, that a Deacon or Priest disposed to Preach, and being led by the Spirit of God, may freely Preach the Gospel of Christ, without the spiritual licence of his Bishop. It is evident, forsomuch as it is good, that a Deacon or Priest do live well, and Preach fruitfully. Ergo, he may proceed from idleness unto the labor and Office of Preaching, and so unto a better life.

{KING Eliz. 2.}

But whereas it is said afore, that forsomuch as the inward sending or calling is secret, therefore it is not sufficient for a man barely to affirm only that he is sent of God, when as every Heretick may so say; but it is necessary, that he do confirm and prove his invisible sending by the working of some miracle, or by some special Testimony of the Scripture: Here is to be noted, that there are two kinds of Preachers; some true Preachers of our Saviour Christ; and others seducers, of Antichrist. The first sort following their Master Christ, teach the people in truth. The other sort, being of a corrupt mind, and reprobate touching Faith, resist against the verity; and through covetousness, by their fained words do make merchandize of the people. And these men do give, and shall give miracles, as our Saviour saith, Matth. 24. There shall arise false Christs, and false Prophets, the which shall shew great signs and wonders, insomuch that even the elect themselves, if it were by any means possible, should be brought into error. And the Apostle in the 2. to the Thessal. 2. As touching their head Antichrist, writeth thus: Whose coming shall be according to the operation of Satan, with all power and signs, false miracles, seducing unto iniquity those which do perish, because they have not received the charity and love of truth, that they might be saved: Therefore will the Lord send upon them the operation of error, that they shall give credit unto lies: that all such as have not believed the truth, but consent unto wickedness, should be judged. Behold how expredly our Saviour by himself, and by his Apostle doth teach us, how the Disciples of Antichrist, with their head, should shine through their great signs and wonders. But the true Disciples of Christ shall not so do in the time of Antichrist. For as Saint Isidore saith in his first Book, 22. De summo bono: Before that Antichrist shall appear, all vertues and signs shall cease from the Church, that he may the boldlier persecute the same, as an abject. For this profit shall all miracles and signs cease under Antichrist, that thereby the patience of the holy Men might be known, and the lightness of the reprobate, which are offended, my be opened, and also that the cruelty of the persecutors should be made more fierce. Thus writeth Saint Isidor. And Saint Gregory in his 24*th* Book of Morals faith; For why? By a terrible examination of Gods secret dispensation shall all signs of vertue or power be taken away from the holy Church, before that the Leviathan appear in that most wicked and damnable Man, whose shape he doth take upon him. For prophecy is hidden, the gift of healing is taken away, the vertue of long abstinence is diminished, the words of Doctrine are put to silence, and the wonderful works of miracles are extinguished; which things nothing can utterly take away, but only the dispensation of God. But this dispensation is not so openly and manifoldly declared, as it hath been in times past; the which also is done by a marvellous dispensation, that through one only thing both Gods love and justice should be fulfilled. For the power of miracles being a while taken away, the holy Church appeareth the more abject and forsaken, and the reward of good men doth cease, which reverenced the same for the hope of heavenly riches, and not for any prefent signs: and that the minds of evil men against the same might the sooner be known, which neglect to follow the invisible things which the Church doth promise, whiles they be led with visible signs.

Every man may pretend to be sent of God immediately.

Two kinds of Preachers.

Of the signs and wonders of Antichrist.

Why true miracles shall cease under Antichrist.

Forsomuch then as the humility of the faithful is as it were destitute of the multitude and appearing of signs by the terrible working of Gods secret dispensation, whereby mercy is given unto the good and just, wrath heaped upon the evil; Forsomuch then, as it is truly said, that before this Leviathan shall plainly and manifestly come, poverty shall go before his face (for before that time the riches of miracles shall be taken away from the faithful.) Then shall that Ancient enemy shew himself against them by open wonders; that as he is extolled through signs and wonders, so shall he the more manly be vanquished of the faithful, without any signs or miracles. Also in his 16*th* Book upon these words, which the blessed man Job said; Who shall reprehend his way before him, or who shall cast in his teeth what he hath done? Whilest he did speak of the body of all evil, he suddenly converted his speech unto the head of all the wicked; for he did see that toward the end of the world Satan should enter into man, whom the Scripture calleth Antichrist, he shall be extolled with such pride, he shall rule with such power, he shall be accused with such signs and wonders, under the pretence of holiness, that his doing cannot be controlled of men, forsomuch as his signs and tokens are joyned with power and terror, and with a certain shew of Holiness. Wherefore he saith, who shall controul his ways before him, what man is he that dare once rebuke or check him, whose look or countenance is he afraid of? But notwithstanding not only Enoch and Elias, the which are brought as example for his probation, but also the elect do argue and reprove his way, whiles that they do contemn, and by the force and power of their minds, resist his malice. But forsomuch as this thing is not done by their own power and strength, but by Gods help and grace, therefore it is very well said: Who shall argue or reprove his ways before him? Who but only God? By whose help, the elect are aided and made able to resist.

The defenpline of Antichrift out of S. Gregor.

The proof of Holineſs.

And a little after, upon the same Book of Job, Gregory saith, insomuch as holy men do withstand his iniquity; It is not they themselves which do so rebuke his ways, but it is he through whose help they are strengthened. Also in his second Book he saith; Now the holy Church doth not regard, but despise the signs and miracles of the Hereticks, if they do any; forsomuch as the Church doth sufficiently understand, that it is no kind of Holiness: For why? The proof of Holiness is not to make signs or wonders, but to love every man as himself, to think truly of the very true God, and to think better of thy Neighbour than of thy self: For true vertue and holiness consisteth in love, and not in shewing of miracles. This the verity declareth saying; Hereby shall all men know that ye are my Disciples, if ye love one another: But he saith not, that hereby men shall know that ye are my Disciples, because ye work miracles; but contrariwise, if ye love one another: declaring plainly thereby, that it is not miracles, but the mear charity and love of God, which maketh us the servants of God. Wherefore the chief Testimony of being Gods Disciple is to have the gift of brotherly love. This thorowout doth Saint Gregory write, and oftentimes in other places he speaketh very much of miracles, how that they shall cease amongst the just, and abound amongst the wicked.

Signs common and indifferent to the Ministers of Christ and Antichrist.

Also Chrysostom in his 55*th* Homily saith thus; It is a common and an indifferent work between the Ministers of God and the Ministers of the Divel, to cast out Divels; but to confess the truth, and to work righteousness, is the only work of the Saints and holy Men: therefore whomsoever thou dost see casting out of Divels, if he have not the confession of the truth in his mouth, neither righteousness in his hands, he is not a man of God: But if thou dost see a man openly confessing and declaring the truth, and doing justice, although he do not cast out any Divels, yet is he the man of God. And it followeth, Let us know, that like as at the coming of Christ, before him the Prophets, and with him the Apostles wrought miracles through the Holy Ghost; for such as the thing is which is stirred, such feat and favour will proceed from the same. He writeth also upon the beginning of Matthew, The whole world did marvel and wonder at three things, That Christ rose again after his death; that flesh ascended into Heaven; and that he did convert the whole World by his Twelve Apostles. There are four causes which wrought the same; that is to say, the contempt of riches or money; the despising of pomp and glory, the separation of themselves from all worldly occupation and business, and the patient suffering of torments. Thus much writeth Chrysostom also. Also S. Isidore in his first Book and 25*th* Chap. De summo bono, writeth thus. Like as in the Apostles, the marvellous effect and power of works was much more commendable than the vertue of their signs; even so now in the Church it is much better to live well, than to work any signs or miracles. And the cause why that the Church of God doth not at this present work miracles, as it did in the time of the Apostles, is this; that it was necessary at that time that the World should believe miracles, and now at this present, every faithful believer ought to shine with good works, for to this end were signs and miracles then outwardly wrought, that their Faith thereby might be inwardly strengthened and established: for whatsoever faithful man he be that seeketh to work miracles, he seeketh vain-glory to be praised of men, for it is written; Miracles are signs and tokens unto the infidels and unbelievers, and not unto the faithful. Thus much writeth Isidore.

The principal miracles.

The cauſe why the Church now worketh not miracles.

Item, S. Augustine in his Book of confessions, saith thus; There is no greater miracle amongst men, than to love our Enemies. By these words of these holy men a man may easily gather, that, both in our days, and in the time to come, the Disciples of Antichrist both do, and shall more flourish and shew themselves by strange signs and miracles, than the Disciples of Christ, according to the saying of our Saviour Jesus Christ; There shall rise up amongst you false prophets, which shall work strange miracles. Secondly, it is approved that they are greater and stranger miracles, to confess the truth, and to do Justice, than to work any other kind of miracle. Thirdly it is gathered thereby, that whatsoever Minister or Deacon doth love his Enemies, contemneth riches, despiseth the glory of the world, and flieth from all worldly troubles, meekly sustaineth and suffereth moft terrible and cruel threatnings and strokes for the Gospel sake; he worketh miracles, having thereby a Testimony and witness, that he is the true Disciple of Jesus Christ. And it is evident by the saying of our Saviour Jesus Christ. Mat. 5*th* Let your good works so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorifie your father which is in heaven. And likewise John 10*th* Truft unto your good works. Whereupon S. Gregory, in his first Book of Dialogues, writeth thus: The estimation of a true life consisteth in the vertue of his works, and not in the shewing of signs. Whereby it is fourthly concluded, by that which is aforesaid, that it is a more effectual Testimony and witness for a Priest or Deacon that he is sent of God to confess the truth, and follow Christ in the foresaid vertues, than to cast out Divels, or to do any other miracles, as it is evident by the saying of Chrysostome before alledged. Whomsoever thou dost see to cast out Divels, if the confession or acknowledging of the truth be not in his mouth, neither righteousness nor justice in his hands, he is not a Man of God. This is also confirmed by the words of Christ. Matth. 7. Many shall say unto me in that day; Lord, Lord, have not we prophesied in thy name; have not we cast out divels in thy name; and have not we also wrought many great wonders and miracles in thy name? Then I will answer and say unto them; forsomuch as I have not known you at any time, Depart from me ye workers of iniquity. And as touching the second part, Chrysostome saith; If you see a man confessing and preaching the truth, and working righteousness, although he do not cast out divels, he is a man of God.

A great miracle to love a mans Enemy.

The true miracles of Christs ministers.

Hereby it appeareth, that every Deacon, Priest, or Minister, confessing the truth, and working justice, hath a perfect and sure Testimony that he is sent of God; and that it is not necessary for him to approve this his sending by the working of any miracle, in stead of working righteousness; neither by any Testimonial, the which should plainly declare him by name, that he was sent of the Lord to Preach.

The Testimony of a true Priest.

The first part appeareth manifest by that which is already spoken, that all miracles in the time of Antichrist shall cease in the elect.

The second part is also evident; forsomuch as none of the present Preachers can shew by the Scripture of the Law of God, that he is specially named thereunto.

And likewise I do also affirm and say, as touching all Preachers which shall come hereafter, that they are not named by name. But let no man here object Enoch and Elias, which were ancient Preachers, and prophelied by the holy Spirit of God. And it is appeared, that like as it is not a cause sufficient to prove, that this Priest or Deacon is sent of God to Preach, because he worketh miracles; so is it not a cause sufficient to prove, that he is not sent of God to Preach, because he doth no miracles; but to confess the truth, to work righteousness, to contemn the World with the glory thereof, patiently to suffer rebukes, is a sufficient Testimony for any Priest or Deacon, having knowledge of the Law of God, freely to Preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ, forsomuch as in such case he is sent of God. And this is the sending which the Apostle speaketh of in the 10. to the Romans; How ſhould they preach, except they be ſent? Whereupon the Gloſs of S. Auguſtine writeth thus; Theſe things ſerve to ſet forth Gods grace, declaring that all our goodneſs is prevented of grace.

For he ſaith, Belief cometh of hearing, hearing cometh of Preaching, and Preaching by the ſending of God; ſo that altogether wholly cometh out of the Fountain of Grace, and Preaching truly cometh of ſending. This hath the Gloſs: how ſhall they then Preach, without they be ſent of God? And this is evident, that the great and principal ſending is from God alone, as it is approved by Moſes.

The ſecond ſending is both from God and Man; as by the example of Joſua and others, which were ſent both by God and the Rulers to Preach.

The third ſending is from Man alone; the which is not founded in the Law of God, but in mens Traditions, which they rather eſteem.

The fourth ſending, which hath but the name only, is proper to them, which of themſelves unworthily uſurp the Office of Preaching, as thoſe falſe Prophets of whom God ſpeaketh in the 23. of Jeremy: I did not ſend them, and they ran: I ſpake not unto them, and they prophecied: if they had continued in my counſels, and had declared my words unto my people, I would have converted them from their evil ways, and wicked imaginations. And our Saviour ſpeaketh of theſe Prophets in Matthew, ſaying, There ſhall ariſe falſe Prophets. And Peter his true Vicar, in his ſecond Epiſtle and ſecond Chapter, propheſying unto the faithful Believers in Chriſt, ſpeaketh thus of them; There were amongſt the people falſe Prophets, as there ſhall be amongſt you alſo Maſters of lies, through whom the truth ſhall be blaſphemed and ſlandered; and that he might the better inſtruct the people to know them, he addeth, That they ſhall go about with fained words, for covetouſneſs ſake, to make merchandize of you.

The difference between the Miniſters of Chriſt and Antichriſt.

Wherefore every faithful man, diligently weighing theſe things in his mind, may now eaſily perceive how great a number of falſe Prophets there be, through whom the Chriſtian truth is blaſphemed, and all covetous dealing is exerciſed, and theſe are they which freely Preach lies. But the humble and true Miniſters of Chriſt, wherefoever they do appear, by and by are perſecuted, whereby the prophecy of the Apoſtle is verified, which is written in the ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, the 3. All men, ſaith he, which deſire to live godly, ſhall ſuffer perſecution: But the evil men and Seducers ſhall proſper in their wickedneſs, running daily more and more into all kind of errors. The wicked have now ſo much prevailed, that they do Preach lies, making Hereticks of the faithful Chriſtians; neither is there any man that dare prohibit them their lying, ſo that they do not Preach againſt the vices of the Prelates. How then can you ſay, that Antichriſt is not exalted above all that which is called God, ſuppreſſing the members of Chriſt, in his Office, fortifying and ſoftering his members in lying? Therefore the true and faithful Diſciples of Chriſt ought to ſtand ready girt about their loins, and ſhooes upon their feet in defence of the Goſpel, taking the Sword in hand, which is the word of God. Epheſ. 6. And to fight againſt the crafts of Antichriſt, who goeth about utterly to extinguiſh the true Preaching of the Goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

The Miſdeeds of Antichriſtic do cloke the vices of their Prelates.

The ſecond diſputation in the Univerſity of Prague, upon the ſeventeenth Article of John Wickliff, moſt fruitful to be read; proving by four and Twenty reaſons out of the Scriptures, how that Princes and Lords temporal have lawful authority and juriſdiction over the ſpirituality and Churchmen, both in taking from them, and correcting their abuſes according to their doings and deſerts.

The contemnation of the xiv. Articles, and therefore is not to be allowed.

"TO the Honour of Almighty God, and of our Lord "Jeſus Chriſt, both for the trying out of truth, and "the profit of holy Mother the Church, according to the "Congregation of our Univerſity of Prague, which, avoiding always to do that whichſhall be prejudicial to the "truth, hath deferred to give their conſent unto the con- "demnation of the ſix Articles, wiſhing even unto "this preſent ſufficient probation to be given of the con- "demnation of the ſaid Articles, and particularly of every "one of them. Whereupon the ſaid Univerſity doth al- "ways require due proof of the ſame, forſomuch as Pope "Damaſius in his Canon, Diſtinction ſixty eighth Chapter, "Chorepiſcopi, ſaith thus: That it is neceſſary that whatſo- "ever thing ſtandeth not by due reaſon ſhould be rooted "out. Whereby it appeareth, that the condemnation of the "five and forty Articles, if it ſtand not with proof and ſuf- "ficient demonſtration for every Article, is neceſſary to be "rooted out.

"But if any man will object and ſay, that to require a "reaſon of every thing, is to derogate from Gods divine "power. Unto this objection Maſter William doth anſwer "himſelf in his Philoſophy, the firſt Book, almoſt at the end, "where he intreating of the place, in the ſecond Chapter of "Geneſis, God made man of the ſlime of the Earth, &c. "Hath theſe words; For in what point (ſay we) are we "contrary to the holy Scriptures, if we ſeek by reaſon to de- "clare wherefore any thing is done, which is ſaid in the "Scriptures to be done? For if that a wiſe man ſhould ſay "that a thing is done, and do not declare how it is done, "and another man ſpeaketh the very ſelf ſame thing, and "declareth how it is done, what contrariety is there? But "forſomuch as they themſelves know not the force of na- "ture, to the intent that they might have all men partakers "with them of their ignorance, they would have no man "to inquire it out. But they would have us believe as igno- "rant people, neither to ſeek any reaſon of our belief, that "the prophecy might be fulfilled: Such as the people is, "ſuch ſhall be the Prieſt. But we truly do ſay, that in all "things a reaſon is to be ſought, if it may by any means be "found. But if that any man do ſtay at any thing which "the Scriptures do affirm, let him commit the ſame un- "to faith, and unto the holy Ghoſt. For Moſes ſaith, If the "Lamb cannot be eaten, let it not be by and by conſumed "in the fire; but let him firſt call his Neighbour which "dwelleth next houſe unto him; and if they alſo be not "ſufficient to eat the Lamb, then let it be burned in the "fire. So likewiſe, when as we go about to ſeek any thing "as touching the Godhead, and that we be not able of our "ſelves to comprehend the ſame, let us call our Neighbour "which dwelleth next houſe unto us; that is to ſay, let us "ſeek out ſuch a one as dwelleth in the ſame Catholick faith "with us; and if then neither we, neither yet he be able to "comprehend the ſame, let it then be burned with the fire "of Faith.

An Alleſory upon the Paſſeover Lamb.

"But theſe men, albeit they have many Neighbours "dwelling near unto them, yet for very pride they will not "call any man unto them, chuſing rather to continue ſtill "ignorant, than to ask any queſtion. And if they do know "any man to enquire for his Neighbour in ſuch caſe, by "and by they cry out upon him as an Heretick; preſum- "ing more upon their own heads, than having confidence "in their wiſdom. But I exhort you to give no credit unto "their outward appearance, for already it is verified in "them which the Satyrical Poet ſaith; No credit is to be "given unto the outward ſhew: For which of them all is "it that doth not abound with moſt ſhameful and deteſtable "vices? And in another place he ſaith; They are very "dainty of their ſpeech, and have great deſire to keep ſi- "lence. And thus much hath M. Wilhelmus. Let all ſuch "bear whom this parable doth touch: for I will not ſpeak "of the Maſters, Bachelors, and Students of our Univerſity, "conſidering how hard a matter the condemnation of the "Forty five Articles of Wickliff, without reaſon, is, and how "grievous a thing it were if we ſhould thereunto conſent, "do call together my Neighbours, the Doctors of this "Univerſity, and all others which would object any thing "againſt the ſame, that we might preſently find out the "reaſon of the condemnation of this Article, concerning the "taking away the temporalties from the Clergy.

"Notwithſtanding I do profeſs that it is not my intents "like as it is not the meaning of the Univerſity to perſwade, "that Princes or ſecular Lords ſhould take away the goods "from the Clergy when they would, or how they would, "and convert them to what uſe they liſt. But our whole "intent is, diligently to ſearch out whether this Article, as "touching the taking away of temporalties from the Cler- "gy, may have in it any true ſenſe, whereby it may be de- "fended without reproof. Wherefore this Article, being "the ſeventeenth in the number of the Forty five, is, pro-

The ſeventeenth Article proved by 44. Arguments.

"pounded under this form: The Lords temporal "may at their own will and pleaſure, take away the tem- "poral Goods from the Clergy, if they do offend, and "therein continue. It is thus proved: The Kings of the "Old Teſtament took away the temporal Goods at Gods "commandment from the Clergy; that is to ſay, from "the Prieſts offending. Therefore the Kings alſo of the "New Teſtament, at Gods commandment, may do the "like, when as the Prieſts of the new Law do offend. The "conſequence dependeth upon a ſimilitude. And the an- "tecedent is evident. Firſt, it is proved by Solomon in the "3d of the Kings, 2. Chapter, which Solomon depoſed A- "biathar the high Prieſt, becauſe he had taken part with "Adonias the Brother of Solomon to make him King, "without the advice either of David, or of Solomon him- "ſelf, which ought to reign, and ſet up Sadoc the Prieſt in "the place of Abiathar, becauſe he had not conſented with "Abiathar unto Adonias, as it is written in the 3d Book of "Kings, 1. Chapter, where it is ſaid; Adonias, the Son "of Agithe, exalted himſelf, ſaying, I will Reign, and made "unto himſelf Chariots and Horſemen, and Fourty men "which ſhould run before him; neither did his Father re- "buke him at any time, ſaying, Wherefore haſt thou done "this? For he was very comely, being ſecond Son, next to "Abſolom, and his talk was with Joab the Son of Sarvia and "Abiathar the Prieſt, which took part with Adonias. But "Sadoc the Prieſt, and Benaias the Son of Joiada, and Na- "than the Prophet, and Semei, and Serethi, and Felethi, and "all the power of Davids Hoſt, were not on Adonias part.

Caſe of neceſſity.

"This was the cauſe of the depoſing of Abiathar, be- "cauſe he took part with Adonias, that he ſhould be King "againſt Solomon the eldeſt Son of King David: Where- "fore it is written in the third Book, and ſecond Chapter "of the Kings; The King ſaid unto Abiathar the Prieſt, "Go your ways unto Anathoth thine own Fields, for thou "art a Man of death; but this day I will not ſlay thee, "becauſe thou haſt carried the Ark of the Lord before my "Father David, and didſt labour in all things wherein my "Father laboured. Then did Solomon caſt out Abiathar, "that he ſhould be no more the Prieſt of the Lord; that "the Word of the Lord might be fulfilled, which he ſpake "upon the houſe of Heli in Silo.

"Behold, the moſt prudent King Salomon, according to "the wiſdom which was given him of God, did exerciſe "his power upon the ſaid Prieſt, putting him out of his "Prieſthood, and ſetting in his place Sadoc the Prieſt. This "was a greater matter than to take away the temporalties. "If then in the Law of Chriſt, which now reigneth over us, "a Biſhop ſhould likewiſe rebel againſt the true Heir of the "Kingdom, willing to ſet up another for King; why "ſhould not the King or his Heir have power, in like caſe, "to take away the temporalties from him ſo offending?

2. Nabuchadonoſor.

"Item, It is alſo evident by the King Nabuchadonoſor, "which had power given him of God to lead away the "children of Iſrael, with their Prieſts and Levites, into "the Captivity of Babylon, as it is written in the 4th Book "of the Kings, 25. Chapter.

3. Joas.

"Item, It is read in the 4th Book of Kings, and 12th "Chap. How that Joas the moſt godly King of Juda, ac- "cording to the wiſdom which God had granted him, took "away all the confecrate veſſels which Joſaphat, Joram, "and Ochaſias, his Fore-fathers Kings of Juda had conſe- "crated, and thoſe which he himſelf had offered, and all the "Treaſure that could be found in the Temple of the Lord, "and in the Kings Palace, and ſent it unto Azahel King "of Syria, and he departed from Jeruſalem. Mark how "this moſt holy King exerciſed his power, not only in ta- "king away the Temporalties of the Prieſts, but alſo thoſe "things which were conſecrate in the Temple of the Lord, "to procure unto the Common-wealth the benefit of peace.

4. Ezechias.

"Item, In the 4th Book, and 18th Chap. of the Kings, it "is written, how that the holy King Ezechias took all the "Treaſure that was found in the houſe of the Lord, and in "the Kings Treaſury, and brake down the Pillars of the "Temple of the Lord, and all the Plates of Gold which he "himſelf had faſtned thereupon, and gave them unto the "King of the Aſſyrians; yet was he not rebuked of the "Lord therefore, as he was for his other ſins, as it appeareth "in the 2d Book of Paralip. 32. Chap. Forſomuch then as "in time of neceſſity all things ought to be in common "unto Chriſtians, it followeth that the ſecular Lords in caſe "of neceſſity, and in many other common caſes, may law- "fully take away the moveable goods from the Clergy, "when they do offend.

5. Titus and Veſpaſian.

"Item, It is alſo read in the 12th of S. Matthew, That "the Diſciples of Jeſus, to ſlack their hunger, upon the Sab- "bath day pulled the ears of corn, and did eat them, and "the Pharifees rebuked them therefore; unto whom Chriſt "anſwered, Have ye not read what David did when he "was hungry, and thoſe that were with him: How he "entred into the Houſe of the Lord, and did eat the Shew- "bread, which it was not lawful for him, neither for "them that were with him to eat, but only for the Prieſts? "This ſtory is written in the firſt Book of the Kings, and "21. Chapter. And the commandment in the 12th Chapter "of Deuteronomie. Whereby it appeareth, that it is lawful in "time of neceſſity to uſe any thing, be it never ſo much "conſecrate. Otherwiſe children by giving their moveа- "bles to the confecration of any Temple, ſhould not be "bound to help their Parents; which is contrary and a- "gainſt the Goſpel of S. Matthew in the ſixteenth Cha- "pter. Whereas our Saviour ſharply rebuked the Phariſees, "that for their own Traditions they did tranſgreſs the "commandment of God.

6. Titus and Veſpaſian.

"Item, Titus and Veſpaſian ſecular Princes had power "given them of God, twenty four years after the Lords Aſ- "cenſion, to take away the Temporalties from the Prieſts "which had offended againſt the Lords holy one, and "thereby alſo bereft them of their lives: And it ſeemeth "unto many, they did and might worthily do the ſame "according to Gods good will and pleaſure. Then forſo- "much as our Prieſts in theſe days may tranſgreſs and of- "fend as much, and rather more againſt the Lords anoin- "ted, it followeth, that by the pleaſure of God, the ſecular "Lords may likewiſe puniſh them for their offence.

7. The example of Chriſt paying of Tribute.

"Our Saviour being King of Kings, and high Biſhop, "with his Diſciples, did give Tribute unto Cæſar, as it ap- "peareth in the 17th Chap. of S. Matthews Goſpel, and "commanded the Scribes and Phariſees to give the like "unto Cæſar, S. Matth. 22. Whereby he gave example "unto all Prieſts that would come after him to render Tri- "bute unto their Kings: Whereupon bleſſed S. Ambroſe "in his fourth Book upon theſe Words in the 5th of S. Luke, "(Caſt out your nets) writeth thus; There is another "kind of fiſhing amongſt the Apoſtles, after which man- "ner the Lord commanded Peter only to fiſh, ſaying, "Caſt out thy Hook, and that Fiſh which cometh firſt up, "take him. And then unto the purpoſe he ſaith; It is "truly a great and ſpiritual document, whereby all Chri- "ſtian men are taught, that they ought to be ſubject unto "the higher powers, and that no man ought to think that "the Laws of a King here on Earth are to be broken. For "if the Son of God did pay Tribute, who art thou ſo "great a man, that thinkeſt thou oughteſt not to pay "Tribute? He payed Tribute which had no poſſeſſions; "and thou which daily ſeekeſt after the lucre of the World, "why doſt thou not acknowledge the obedience and du- "ty of the World? Why doſt thou through the arrogan- "cy of thy mind exalt thy ſelf above the World, when "as, through thine own miſerable covetouſneſs, thou art "ſubject unto the World? Thus writeth S. Ambroſe, and "it is put in the 11. q. 1. Magnum quidem. He alſo writeth "upon theſe words in Luke 20. Shew me a peny, whoſe "Image hath it? If Chriſt had not the Image of Cæſar, "why did he pay any Tribute? He gave it not of his own, "but rendred unto the World, that which was the Worlds: "and if thou wilt not be in danger of Cæſar, poſſeſs not "thoſe things which are the Worlds; for if thou haſt riches "thou art in danger of Cæſar.

Chriſt commanded Tribute to be paid unto the Emperor.

"Wherefore if thou wilt owe nothing unto any Earthly "King, forſake all thoſe things, and follow Chriſt. If "then all Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters, having riches, ought to "be under the ſubjection of Kings, and give unto them "Tribute: It followeth that Kings may lawfully, by the "Authority which is given them take away their Tempo- "ralties from them.

Paul appealed to the Emperor.

"Hereupon S. Paul, acknowledging himſelf to be under "juriſdiction of the Emperor, appealed unto Cæſar, as it "appeareth, Acts 25.

S. Ambroſe there in the 8 Diſtinct.

"I ſtand, ſaith he, at Cæſars Judgment ſeat, there I "ought to be judged. Whereupon in the eighth Diſtinc- "on, Chapter Quo jure, S. Ambroſe alledgeth, that all " things are lawful unto the Emperor, and all things under " his Power. For the confirmation whereof it is faid, Dan. 2. " Daniel fecond Chapter, The God of Heaven hath given

" unto thee a Kingdom, Strength, Empire and Glory,
" and all places wherein the Children of men do dwell,
" and hath given into thy Power the Beafts of the field,
" and Fowls of the Air, and fet all things under thy Sub" jection.

" Alfo in the 11. queſtion and 1. he faith, If the Em-9. " peror require Tribute, we do not deny that the Lands of " the Church fhall pay Tribute; if the Emperor have need
" of our Lands, he hath power to challenge them, let him
" take them, if he will; I do not give them unto the Em-
" peror, neither do I deny them. This writeth S. Ambroſe,
" expreſly declaring that the fecular Lord hath power at " his pleaſure to take away the Lands of the Church; and
" ſo conſequently the fecular Lords have power at their " own pleaſures to take away the Temporal goods from
" the Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters, when they do offend.

10. S. Auguſtine " Item, S. Auguſtine writeth, If thou ſayſt, what have
" we do with the Emperor? But now as I faid, we ſpeak
" of manas Law. The Apoſtles would be Obedient unto
" Kings, and honour them, ſaying, Reverence your Kings;
" and do not ſay, What have I to do with the King?
" What hait thou then to do with Poſſeſſions? By the " Kings Law thy Poſſeſſions are poſſeſſed. Thou haſt ſaid,
" What have I to do with the King? but do not ſay, What " have thy Poſſeſſions to do with the King? For then haſt
" thou renounced the Laws of men, whereby thou didſt
" poſſeſs thy Lands. Thus writeth S. Auguſtine in his
" eigth Diſtinct. by whoſe words it is manifeſt, that the " King hath power over the Church-goods, and conſe-
" quently may take them away from the Clergy tranſ-
" greſſing or offending.

11. Magiſtrates, Keepers of both Laws. " Item, in his three and thirtieth Epiſtle unto Boniface,
" he ſaith, What ſober man will ſay unto our Kings, Care
" not you in your Kingdom, by whom the Church of the " Lord is maintained, or by whom it is oppreſſed; it
" pertaineth not unto you, who will be either a religious " man, or who will be a Church-Robber? Unto whom " it may be thus anſwered, Doth it not pertain unto us in " our Kingdom, who will either live a chaſt life, or who " will be an unchaſt Whoremonger? Behold, this holy
The duty of Kings to punish the Clergy. " man ſheweth here how that it is the duty of Kings to
" puniſh ſuch as are Robbers of Churches, and conſequent-
" ly the proud Clergy when as they do offend.

12. " Item, he writeth in the 33. queſt. 7. Si de rebus;
" The fecular Lords may lawfully take away the Temporal
" goods from Hereticks; and forſomuch it is a caſe greatly
" poſſible that many of the Clergy are ufers of Simony, and " thereby Hereticks, therefore the fecular Lords may very " lawfully take away their Temporalties from them. For " what unworthy thing is it, ſaith S. Auguſtine, if the Cacho-
" licks do poſſeſs, according unto the will of the Lord, thoſe
" things which the Hereticks held? Forſomuch as this is " the word of the Lord unto all wicked men, Mat. 21. The

" is it in vain which is written in the eleventh Chapter of Wiſdom 11. " the Book of Wiſdom? The juſt ſhall eat the labours of
" the wicked.

An objection of the deſire of other mens goods. " And whereas it may be objected as touching the de-
" ſire of other mens goods, S. Auguſtine anſwereth, That
" by that evidence the ſeven Nations, which did abuſe the " Land of Promiſe, and were driven out from thence by
" the Power of God, may object the ſame unto the people
" of God, which inhabit the ſame. And the Jews them-
" ſelves, from whom, according unto the word of the " Lord, The Kingdom is taken away, and given unto a " people, which ſhall do the works of Righteouſneſs, may " object the ſame unto the Church of Chriſt, as touching
" the deſire of other mens goods; but S. Auguſtines An-
" ſwer is thus:

" We, ſaith he, do not deſire another mans goods; for-
" ſomuch as they are ours by the Commandment of him,
" by whom all things were made. By like evidence the " Clergy having offended, their Temporal goods are " made the goods of others, for the profit of the Church.
S. Auguſtine 24 queſt 4. " To this purpoſe alſo, according to Saint Auguſtine
" ſerveth the fourteenth queſtion 4. Unto a misbeliever it " is not a half-penny matter, but unto the Faithful is a " whole World of riches: ſhall we not then convince all
" ſuch to poſſeſs another mans goods, which ſeemed to " have gathered great riches together, and know not how
" to uſe them? for that truly is not anothers, which is " poſſeſſed by right: and that is lawfully poſſeſſed, which " is juſtly poſſeſſed; and that is juſtly poſſeſſed, which is " well poſſeſſed. Ergo, all that which is evil poſſeſſed is " another mans, and he doth ill poſſeſs it, which doth evil
" uſe it.

" If then any of the Clergy do abuſe the Temporal

" cording unto the rule of charity, take away the ſaid Tem-

" according to the Allegation aforeſaid, the Clergy doth not
" juſtly poſſeſs thoſe Temporal goods, but the Temporal

" And although there is nothing here in this earth, that " any man may poſſeſs aſſuredly, but either he muſt hold
" it by Gods Law, by which cuncta juſtorum eſſe dicuntur;
" that is, all things be ſaid to pertain to the poſſeſſion of " Kings Power to ſet and to ordain, &c. Here, by the words

" of S. Auguſtine alledged, ye ſee all things belong to the " poſſeſſion of the Juſt, by Gods Law.

12. The Clergy ſubject unto the Emperor and King by means of their poſſeſſions. " Item, forſomuch as the Clergy by means of their poſ-
" ſeſſions are in danger of the Emperor and King: it fol-
" loweth, that if they do offend, the Emperor or King
" may lawfully take away their poſſeſſions from them:
" The conſequence dependeth on this point, forſomuch as
" otherwiſe they were not in ſubjection under the Emperor
" or King: and the antecedent is manifeſt by the eleventh
" queſtion and firſt Parag. His ita reſpondetur. Whereas
" it is ſpecified in Latin thus, His ita reſpondetur, Clerici
" ex officio Epiſcopo ſunt ſuppoſiti, ex poſſeſſionibus præ-
" diorum Imperatori ſunt obnoxii: ab Epiſcopo unctionem,
" decimas, & primitias accipiunt; ab Imperatore vero
" prædiorum poſſeſſiones nanciſcuntur: that is to ſay, The " Clergy by means of their Office are under the Biſhop, but
" by reaſon of their poſſeſſions they be ſubject unto the " Emperor: Of the Biſhop they receive Unction, Tythes,
" and Firſt-fruits; of the Emperor they receive poſſeſſions.
" Thus then it is decreed by the Emperial Law, That " Livelihoods ſhould be poſſeſſed; whereby it appeareth,
" that the Clergy by the poſſeſſion of their Livelihoods
" are in danger of the Emperor for him to take away from " them, or to correct them according to their deſervings,
" and to have the controulment of them, as it ſhall ſeem
" good unto him.

14. Uſes of Simony are puniſhed by the civil Magiſtrate. " Item, the Temporal Lords may take away the Tem-
" poralties from ſuch as uſe Simony, becauſe they are He-
" reticks. Ergo, this Article is true.

" The Antecedent is manifeſt, forſomuch as the Secular
" Lords may refuſe ſuch as uſe Simony, and puniſh them
" except they do repent. For by the decree of Pope Paſ- Paſchalis in E. 9. alis. cap. piter.
" chalis in the firſt and laſt queſtion it appeareth, that " ſuch as uſed Simony were to be refuſed of all faithful
" people, as chief and principal Hereticks; and if they do
" not repent after they be warned, they are alſo to be " puniſhed by the extern Power. For all other faults and " crimes, in compariſon of Simony, be counted but light,
" and ſeem ſmall offences.

The Laity correctors of the Clergy. " Whereupon the Gloſs, expounding the ſame Text,
" ſaith, That by this word Extern, is underſtood the Laity,
" which have power over the Clergy, beſides the Church,
" as in the 17. Diſtinct. Non licuit, & 23. queſt. 5. Prin-
" cipes. Whereby it is evident, that the Temporal Lords
" may take away the Temporal goods from the Clergy
" when as they do offend.

" Item,

{ KING } Ric. 2.

Gregory writeth to the French Queen.

" Item, S. Gregory in the Regiſter upon his ſeventh Book
" and ninth Chapter, writeth thus unto the French Queen:
" For ſo much as it is written that righteouſneſs helpeth
" the people, and ſin maketh them miſerable: then is that " Kingdom counted ſtable, when as the offence which is " known, is ſoon amended.

Wicked Prieſts the deſtruction of the people.

" Therefore, for ſo much as wicked Prieſts are the cauſe
" of the ruine of the people, (for who ſhall take upon him,
" to be Intercceſſor for the ſins of the people, if the Prieſt
" which ought to intreat for the ſame, have committed
" greater offences) and under your Dominions the Prieſts
" do live wickedly and unchaſtly: therefore that the of" fence of a few might not turn to the deſtruction of " many, we ought earneſtly to ſeek the punihment of the " ſame. And it followeth, If we do command any perſon,
" we do ſend him forth, with the conſent of your Autho" rity, who together with other Prieſts, ſhall diligently
" ſeek out, and according unto Gods word correct and
" amend the ſame. Neither are theſe things to be diſſembled,
" the which we have ſpoken of, for he that may correct
" any thing, and doth neglect the ſame, without all doubt
" he maketh himſelf partaker of the ſin or offence.

" Therefore foreſee unto your own Soul, provide for " your Nephews, and for ſuch as you do deſire to Reign
" after you, provide for your Country, and with diligence
" provide for the correction and puniſhment of that ſin, be" fore our Creator do ſtretch out his hand to ſtrike.

S. Gregory to the French King.

" And in his next Chapter he writeth unto the French
" King: Whatſoever you do underſtand to pertain either
" unto the Honour and Glory of our God, to the reverence
" of the Church, or to the honour of the Prieſts, that do
" you diligently cauſe to be decreed, and in all points to be " obſerved. Wherefore once again we do move you, that " you command a Synod to be congregate, and as we " wrote lately unto you, to cauſe all the carnal Vices, which " reign amongſt your Prieſts, and all the wickedneſs and " Simony of your Biſhops (which is moſt hard to be con" demned and reproved) utterly to be baniſhed out of your
" Kingdom; and that you will not ſuffer them to poſſeſs
" any more ſubſtance under your Dominion, than Gods
" commandment doth allow.

" Behold how carefully bleſſed Gregory doth exhort the " Queen and the King to puniſh the Vices of the Clergy, leſt
" through their negligence they ſhould be partakers of the " ſame; and how they ought to correct their Subjects.
" For as it is convenient to be circumſpect and careful " againſt the outward enemies; even ſo likewiſe ought " they to be againſt the inward enemies of the Soul. And " like as in juſt War againſt the outward enemies it is " lawful to take away their goods, ſo long as they continue
" in their malice; ſo alſo it is lawful to take away the " goods of the Clergy, being the inward enemy. The con-
" ſequence is proved thus, for ſo much as the domeſtical
" enemies are moſt hurtful.

" Item, it is thus argued; If God be, the Temporal Lords
" may meritoriouſly and lawfully take away the Temporal
" goods from the Clergy, if they do offend. For this point
" let us ſuppoſe that we ſpeak of power, as the true authen-
" tick Scripture doth ſpeak, Mat. 3. 9. God is able even
" of thoſe ſtones to raiſe up Children to Abraham.

" Whereupon it is thus argued; For if God be, he is " Omnipotent, and if he ſo be, he may give like power
" unto the ſecular Lords. And ſo conſequently they may
" meritoriouſly and lawfully uſe the ſame power. But leſt
" that any man may object, that a proof made by a ſtrange
" thing is not ſufficient; it is therefore declared how that
" the Temporal Lords have power to take away their
" Alms beſtowed upon the Church, the Church abuſing
" the ſame, as it ſhall be proved hereafter. And firſt thus,
" It is lawful for Kings, in caſes limited by the Law, to " take away the moveables from the Clergy when they do
" offend: it is thus proved, For the Temporal Lords are
" moſt bound unto the works of greateſt mercy moſt eaſie
" for them: but in caſe poſſible, it ſhould be greater Alms
" and eaſier Temporal Dominion, to take away their Alms
" from ſuch as build therewithall unto eternal damna-
" tion, through the abuſe thereof, than to give the ſaid
" Alms for any bodily relief. Ergo, the aſſumption is true.

" Whereupon firſt this Sentence of the Law of Chriſt in
" the ſecond Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians the third Chapter
" is noted, whereas the Apoſtle writeth thus; when we " were amongſt you, we declared this unto you, That he
" that would not work ſhould not eat. Wherefore the law
" of Nature doth licence all ſuch as have the Governance
" of Kingdoms, to correct the abuſe of the Temporalties,
" which would be the chief cauſe of the deſtruction of their
" Kingdoms; whether the Temporal Lords, or any other,
" had endowed the Church with thoſe Temporalties or " not. It is lawful for them in ſome caſe to take away the " Temporalties, as it were by way of Phyſick, to withſtand
" ſin, notwithſtanding any Excommunication, or other
" Eccleſiaſtical Cenſures; forſomuch as they are not en-
" dowed, but only with condition thereunto annexed.

When and how the title of any gift is loſt.

" Hereby it appeareth, that the condition annexed to the " endowing, or enriching of any Church, is, that God
" ſhould be honoured: the which condition if it once fail,
" the contrary taking place, the title of the gift is loſt, and " conſequently the Lord which gave the Alms ought " to correct the offence. Excommunication ought not " to let the fulfilling of Juſtice. Secondly, according to the " Canon Law, 16. queſtion 7. this Sentence is noted, where " it is thus ſpoken as touching the Children Nephews, and " the moſt honeſt of the Kindred of him which hath build-
" ed or endowed any Church: That it is lawful for them
" to be thus circumſpect, that if they perceive the Prieſt
" do defraud any part of that which is beſtowed, they ſhould
" either gently admoniſh or warn him, or elſe complain
" of him to the Biſhop, that he may be corrected. But if " the Biſhop himſelf attempt to do the like, let them com-
" plain of him to his Metropolitan: and if the Metropoli-
" tan do the like, let them not defer the time to report it
" in the ears of the King. For ſo ſaith the Canon, Let them
" not defer to report it in the ears of the King. To what
" end I pray you, but that he ſhould do correction? neither
" is it to be doubted, but that correction doth more apper-
" tain unto the King in this points for their good, whereof
" he is chief Lord by a ſubſtraction proportional, according " to the fault or offence.

It is lawful for the civil Rulers to correct the Clergy.

" Item, it is thus proved; It is lawful for the ſecular
" Lords by their power to do correction upon the " Clergy by ſome kind of fearful Diſcipline appertain-
" ing to their ſecular power: Ergo, by like reaſon it is " lawful for them by their power to do ſuch correction,
" by all kind of fearful Diſcipline pertaining unto their
" ſecular power. For ſo much then as the taking of " their Temporalties is a kind of fearful diſcipline pertain-
" ing unto the ſecular power; it followeth that it is law-
" ful for them thereby to do ſuch correction. And conſe-
" quently it followeth that the Truth is thus to be proved.
" The conſequence is evident; and the antecedent is " proved by Iſidore 23. queſt. 5. Principes. Where it
" is thus written, There ſhould be no ſecular powers
" within the Church, but only for this purpoſe, that " whatſoever thing the Prieſts or Miniſters cannot bring " to paſs by Preachings or Teachings, the ſecular powers
" may command the ſame by the terrour and fear of Diſ-
" cipline. For oftentimes the heavenly Kingdom is pro-
" fited and holden by the earthly Kingdom: that they
" which are in the Church, and do any thing contrary
" unto faith and diſcipline, by the rigour of the Princes
" may be trodden down, and that the power of the Rulers
" may lay that diſcipline upon the necks of the proud and " diſobeyed, which the utility and profit of the Church
" cannot exerciſe or uſe.

" Item, all things that by power ought to work or " bring to any perfect end by the reaſonable meaſuring
" of the mean thereto, may lawfully uſe by power the " ſubſtraction or taking away of the exceſs, and the ad" dition of the want of the means, according as ſhall
" be convenient or meet for the meaſure to be made.
" For ſo much then as the ſecular Lords ought by their " power to provide for the neceſſary ſuſtentation of the " Chriſtian Clergy by the reaſonable meaſuring of their " Temporalties, which they are bound to beſtow upon
" the Chriſtian Clergy, it followeth, that they may law-
" fully by their power uſe the taking away or putting " unto of thoſe Temporalties according as ſhall be conve" nient for the performance of that reaſonable matter.

" Item, it is lawful for the Clergy, by their power to " take away the Sacraments of the Church from the Laity
" cuſtomably offending, for ſo much as it doth pertain
" to the Office of the Chriſtian Miniſters by their power to

" miniſter

" minister the same unto the Lay-people. Wherefore, for
" so much as it doth pertain unto the Office of the Laity,
" according unto their power to minister, and give Tem-
" poralties to the Clergy of Christ, as the Apostle saith,
" 1 Cor. 9. It followeth, that it is also lawful for them
" by their power to take away the Temporalties from the " Clergy, when they do customably sin and offend.

20. " Item, by like power may he which giveth a stipend
" or exhibition, withdraw and take away the same from
" the unworthy Labourers, as he hath power to give the " same unto the worthy Labourers: forsomuch then as " Temporalties of the Clergy, are the stipends of the Laity;
" it followeth that the Lay-people may by as good author-
" rity take away again the same from the Clergy, which " will not worthily labour, as they might by their power
" bestow the same upon those which would worthily la" bour, according to the saying of the Gospel, Matth 21.
" The Kingdom shall be taken away from you, and given
" unto a people which shall bring forth the fruits there-
" of.

21. " Item, it is also lawful for the secular Lords, by their " power, to chastise and punish the Lay-people when they " do offend, by taking away of their Temporalties accord" ing to the exigent of their offence, forsomuch as the Lay-
" people are subject under the Dominion of the Secular
" Lords, as appears, Rom. 13. and many other places, it is " evident that it is lawful by their power to punish the " Clergy, by taking away of their Temporalties, if their " offence do so deserve.

22. " Item, the true and easie direction of the Clergy unto
" the life of Christ and the Apostles, and most profit-
" able unto the Laity, that the Clergy should not live
" contrary unto Christs Institution, seemeth to be the taking " away of their Alms, and those things which they had " bestowed upon them. And it is thus proved, That " medicine is most apt to be laid unto the sore, whereby
" the infirmity might sooneſt be holpen, and were most " agreeable unto the Patients: Such is the taking away
" of the Temporalties: Ergo, this Article is true. The " minor is thus proved, forsomuch as by the abundance of " Temporalties the Worm or Serpent of Pride is sprung " up, whereupon unstasiable desire and lust is inflamed,
" and therefrom proceedeth all kind of gluttony and le-
" chery. It is evident in this point, for so much as the " Temporalties being once taken away, every one of " those sins is either utterly taken away, or at the least
" diminished, by the contrary vertue induced and brought " in. It seemeth also most pertinent unto the Laity, for " so much as they ought not to lay violent hands upon " their Ministers, or to abject the Priestly Dignity, neither
" to judge any of the Clergy in their open Courts. It seem-
" eth also by the law of conscience to pertain unto the Lay-
" people, for so much as every man, which worketh any " work of mercy, ought diligently to have respect unto the " ability of them that he bestoweth his Alms upon; lest
" that by nourishing or helping Loyterers, he be made par-
" taker of his offence. Whereupon, if Priests do not minister
" of their Spiritualties, as Hostiensis teacheth in his third " Book, Of their Tythes, First-Fruits and Oblations, the " people ought to take away the Alms of their Tythes from " them.

23. " Item, it is confirmed by the last Chapter of the seven-
" teenth question, out of the decree of Rents appropriate
" unto the Church, Quicunque. Whereas the case is put
" thus, That a certain man having no Children, neither
" hoping to have any, gave all his goods unto the Church,
" reserving unto himself the only use and profits thereof:
" it hapned afterward that he had Children and the Bishop
" restored again his goods unto him not hoping for it.
" The Bishop had it in his power, whether to render again,
" or no, those things which were given him; but that
" was by the law of man, and not by the law of consci-
" ence. If then by the decree of the holy Doctor S. Au-
" gustine in his Sermon of the life of the Clergy, Aurelius
" the Bishop of Carthage had no power by Gods Law to " withhold that which is bestowed upon the Church for " the necessity of Children; by the which Law, the wan-
" ton, proud, and unstable Clergy, being more than sufficiently possessed and inriched, do detain and keep back the " Temporalties to the detriment and hurt of their own
" state; and of the whole Militant-Church, the secular
" Patrons being thereby so impoverished, that they are com- {KING Ric. 2.}
" pelled by penury to rob and steal, to oppress their Tenants,
" to spoil and undo others, and oftentimes by very necessity
" are driven to beggery.

24. " Item, suppose that a Priest and Minister, how grievously
" soever he do offend, by what kind or sign of offence
" soever it be, as it was in the case of Bishop Judas Isca-
" riot, of the religious Monk Sergius, of Pope Leo the " Heretick, and many other Priests, of whom the Scrip-
" ture and Chronicles make mention, and daily experience
" doth teach us the same: it is evident, that, as it is sup" posed, the Priests in the Kingdom of Boheme grievously
" offending, it is the Kings Part, for so much as he is
" Supream Head next under God, and Lord of the King" dom of Boheme, to correct and punish those Priests. And " for so much as the gentlest correction and punishment of " such as be indurate in their malice, is, the casting
" away of their Temporal goods, it followeth, that it is " lawful for the King to take away Temporalties. Where" fore it should seem very marvelous and strange, if that " Priests riding about should spoil Virgins, violently cor" rupt and defile honest Matrons; if in such case it were " not lawful for them to take away their Armors, Weapons,
" Horses, Guns and Swords from them. The like reason
" were it also, if they had unlawfully conspired the death
" of the King, or that they would betray the King unto his " Enemies.

25. " Item, whatsoever any of the Clergy doth require or " desire of the secular Power, according unto the Law
" and Ordinance of Christ, the secular power ought to " perform and grant the same. But the Clergy, being let-
" ted by riches, ought to require help of the secular power
" for the dispensation of the said riches. Ergo, the secular
" power ought in such case, by the Law of Christ, to take " upon them the office or duty of getting, keeping, and " distributing all such manner of riches. The minor is " hereby proved, that no man ought to have riches, but
" to that end, that they be helps, preferring and helping " unto the office which is appointed of God. Therefore " in case that secular possession do hinder the Clergy from " their duty, the secular power ought to take it away, for
" so did the Apostles, Acts the sixth, saying, It is not law-
" ful for us to leave the word of God untaught, and to " minister unto Tables.

" And thus hitherto hath John Hus prosecuted Wick-
" liffs Articles with long arguments and reasons; and it
" were too long a travel, neither agreeable for this place,
" to alledge all the whole order of his reasons and proofs,
" which he used in that disputation, above the number of " twenty more, besides the testimonies of all the Writers be" fore recited, the which he alledgeth out of the Scriptures,
" Decretals, S. Ambrose in his Book of Offices, S. Augustine
" in his fifth Book and fifth question, and also unto Ma-
" cedo, Isidore, the Council of Nice, Gregory his eleventh " question, Bernard unto Eugenius in his third Book, and " out of Lincolniensis the sixty first Epistle, besides
" many other more. The sum of all which Testimonies
" tend unto this end, that he might utterly take away all " earthly Rule and Dominion from the Clergy, and to " bring them under the subjection and censure of Kings
" and Emperors, as it were within certain bonds, the which " is not only agreeable unto equity and Gods word, but " also profitable for the Clergy themselves. He teacheth it
" also to be necessary, that they should rather be subject
" under the secular power, than to be above them; because " that else it were dangerous, lest that they being entangled
" with such kind of business, they should be an easier prey
" unto Satan, and sooner trapped in his Snares. And " thereby it should come to pass, that the Governance and " Principality of all things being at the length brought " into the hands of the Clergy, the lawful Authority of " Kings and Princes should not only be given over unto " them, but in a manner as it were grow out of use; spe" cially for so much as already, in certain Kingdoms and " Commonwealths, the Ecclesiastical Power is grown unto " such height, that not only in Boheme, but also almost " throughout all the Commonwealths, they do occupy the " third, or at least the fourth part of the Rents and Re" venues. And last of all, he alledgeth the Example of " Gregory and of Mauritius, and afterward the Prophecy Hildegardis.
" of Hildegardis, writing in this manner.

As

{KING Ric. 2.} " As the Ecclesiastical Ministers do willingly receive re-
" ward and praise of Kings and Rulers for their good " deeds; so also ought they, when they do offend, willing" ly suffer and receive punishment at their hands for their " evil doings. The consequence holdeth thus, For so " much as the punishment meekly and humbly received Gregorius ad Mauritium. " for his offence doth more profit a man, than his praise
" received for any good work. Whereupon Saint Gre-
" gory writeth thus unto Mauritius the Emperor, when
" he did persecute him, saying, I believe that you do
" please Almighty God so much the better, in so cruelly
" afflicting me, which have been so evil a Servant unto
" him. If then this holy Pope did so humbly and meekly,
" without any offence, suffer this affliction of the Emperor;
" why should not any of the Clergy, when they do offend,
" meekly sustain punishment at the Kings or Rulers hands,
" under whom he is bounden to be subject? When as " the true Vicar of Christ saith, the first of Peter and se" cond Chapter, Be ye subject unto every Creature for
" Gods cause, whether it be unto the King, as most excel- " lent, or unto the Rulers, as men sent of God for the punish-
" ing of the wicked, and to the praise of the good; for so
" is the good will of God.

Pope Leo submitteth himself unto the Emperor Ludovicus. " Whereupon Pope Leo, leaning unto this Rule, sub" mitted himself unto Ludovicus the Emperor, as it is " written in the second question 7. under these words, If " we have done any thing incompetently, or if we have " not observed the upright path and way of equity amongst
" Subjects, we will amend the same, either by your own
" judgment, or else by the advice or judgment of those " which you shall appoint for that purpose. For if we,
" which ought to correct and punish other mens faults, do
" commit more grievous our selves, we are not then the " Disciples of the Truth (but with sorrow we speak it) we " shall be above all other the Masters of Error.

" And in the tenth Distinction he writeth thus, As " touching the Obedience unto the Emperor, as concern-
" ing the Precepts and Commandments of our Emperors,
" and our Predecessors Bishops (the which the Gloss nameth
" Emperors, which are anointed after the manner of Bi" shops) to be observed and kept unbroken, we do profess
" our selves by all means possible, as much as in us lieth,
" or that we may and can, we will by the help of God
" preserve and keep them both now and ever. And if per" adventure any man do inform, or hereafter shall inform " you otherwise, know you him affuredly to be a lyer and " flanderer.

" Mark how this devout and holy Pope, calling the " Emperors Bishops, submitted himself according to the
The tyranny and pride of the Clergy. " rule of Saint Peter the Apostle under the Obedience, and " also punishment of the Emperor. Wherefore then should " not the Clergy of the Kingdom of Boheme submit them" selves under the Obedience of their King, for Gods cause,
" to be punished if they do offend; and not only submit
" themselves unto the King, but also unto the Rulers;
" and not only unto the Rulers, but unto every other
" Creature? For by how much they do so humble and " abase themselves in this world for Gods sake, so much
" the more shall they be exalted with him: but what is
" the let thereof, but only pride, whereby Antichrist doth
" exalt himself, above the most humble and meek Lord
The Prophesy of Hildegardis. " Jesus Christ?

" Also it seemeth to appear by that which is aforesaid
" upon the taking away of the Temporalties, out of the " Prophetie of Hildegardis the Virgin, the which he writ-
" eth in his Books under Eugenius the Pope in the Council
" of Treverey, approved and allowed by many Bishops of " France, Italy and Almaine, which were there present
" whereas also Saint Bernard himself was present; the " which Virgin prophesying, spake in this manner: The " Kings and other Rulers of the world, being stirred up
" by the just Judgment of God, shall set themselves against " them, and run upon them, saying, We will not have " these men to Reign over us with their rich Houses and " great Possessions, and other worldly riches, over the
" which we are ordained to be Lords and Rulers; and
" how is it meet or comely that those shavelings with their " stoles and chisils should have more Souldiers, or more or " richer Armour or Artillery than we? So is it not conve" nient that one of the Clergy should be a man of war,
" neither a Souldier to be one of the Clergy. Wherefore let " us take away from them that, which they do not justly,
" but wrongfully possess. And immediately after the faith,
" The Omnipotent Father equally divided all things; that " is to say, the Heavens he gave unto the heavenly Crea" tures, and the Earth unto the earthly. And by this " means was there a just division made between the Chil" dren of men, that the Spirituality should have such things
" as belong unto them, and the secular people, such things
" as are meet and necessary for them, so that neither of " these two sorts should oppress each other by violence;
" for God doth not command, that the one Son or Child
" should have both the Cloke and the Coat, and the other
" should go naked, but he willed that the one should have " the Cloke, and the other the Coat. Wherefore the se-
" cular sort ought to have the Cloke for the greatness of " their worldly Cares, and for their Children, which daily
" increase and multiply. The Coat he giveth unto the " Spirituality, that they should not lack clothing, and that " they should not possess more than necessity doth require.
" Wherefore we judge and think it good, and all these " aforesaid be divided by reason and equity. And whereas " the Cloke and the Coat are both found, there the Cloke
" should be taken away, and given unto the needy, that " they do not perish for lack or want. These aforesaid
" spake the Virgin Hildegardis, plainly forethewing the " taking away of the Temporalties from the Clergy by the " secular Lords, and shewing for what cause they shall be " so taken away. And what manner of division shall be " made of those things that are taken away, that they be
" not consumed, and spent unprofitably.

Forsomuch as mention is here made of Hildegardis, it shall not seem impertinent, moved by the occasion hereof, to give forth unto the Reader such things as we have found in certain old Volumes, touching her Prophecy of the coming of certain false Prophets, only meaning, as it seemeth, the begging-Fryers which sprang up shortly after her time. The tenour whereof is this, word for word, as we find it written.

" In those days there shall rise up a people without un- Hildegardis prophesying of Fryers and Monks.
" derstanding, proud, covetous, untrusty, and deceitful, the " which shall eat the sins of the people, holding a certain
" Order of foolish devotion, under the the fained Cloke
" of beggery, preferring themselves above all other, by " their fained devotion, arrogant understanding, and pre-
" tended holiness, walking without shamefastness, or the " fear of God, inventing many new mischiefs, being strong
" and stout: but this Order shall be accursed of all wise
" men and faithful Christians; they shall cease from labour,
" and give themselves over unto idleness; clooching, rather
" to live through flattery and by begging. Moreover, they " shall together study, how they may perverstly resist the " Teachers of the Truth, and stay them together with the " Noblemen; how to seduce and deceive the Nobility, for
" the necessity of their living and pleasures of this world;
" for the Devil will graft in them four principal Vices: that " is to say, flattery, envy, hypocrities and slander. Flattery,
" that they may have large gifts given them. Envy, when " they see gifts given unto other, and not unto them. Hy-
" pocrisie, that by false dissimulation, they may please men.
" Detraction, that they may extol and commend themselves,
" and backbite others, for the praise of men, and seducing
" of the simple. Also they shall instantly preach without " devotion or example of the Martyrs, and shall detract the " secular Princes, taking away the Sacraments of the Church
" from the true Pastors, receiving Alms of the poor, diseased
" and miserable, and also afficiating themselves with the " common people, having familiarity with women, in" structing them how they shall deceive their Husbands
" and Friends by their flattery and deceitful words, and rob
" their Husbands to give it unto them: for they will take
" all these stollen and evil gotten goods, and say, Give it
" unto us, and we will pray for you; so that they being curi" ous to hide other mens faults, do utterly forget their owns
" and alas, they will receive all things of Rovers, Pickers,
" Spellers, Thieves and Robbers, of sacrilegious Persons,
" Usurers, and Adulterers, Hereticks, Schismaticks, Apostates,

{KING Hic. 2.} {KING Hic. 2.}

In the third Act the ſame year, after the Feaſt of S. Vitis, as touching Tythes, &c.

Tythes are pure Alms.

UPon this Article it is to be noted, that forſomuch as Alms is a work of mercy, as S. Auguſtine, S. Chryſoſtome, and others do joyntly affirm, and that mercy (according to Lincolnienſis mind) for the preſent is a love or deſire to help the miſerable out of his miſery: and forſomuch as the miſery of Mankind is double; that is to ſay, ſpiritual and bodily, the which is the want or taking away of the goods and the goods of man is either the goods of the Soul or of the Body: And the goods of the Soul is double (that is to ſay, the lightning of the mind, and the uprightneſs of affection) the miſery of the Soul is alſo double, as the darkneſs of ignorance, and a froward and wilful ſwarving from the Truth. And both the goods of the Soul are wont to be comprehended under one Title of name; that is to ſay, Wiſdom: and both the miſeries of the Soul under the name of Folly. Whereupon all the whole goodneſs of the Soul is Wiſdom, and all the whole miſery thereof is ignorance: The miſeries of the Body are, lack of meat; that is to ſay, Hunger; and lack of drink, called Thirſt: and briefly, all miſery is the want of ſome thing which is deſired. Alſo theſe are bodily miſeries, nakedneſs, lack of harbour, ſickneſs, and impriſonment. All the miſeries therefore being numbred together, are but one of the Soul, the which is folly and lack of wiſdom, and ſix of the Body: the which the Lord in the twenty fifth Chapter of S. Matthew doth plainly rehearſe. There are alſo commonly appointed ſeven bodily Alms; that is to ſay, to feed the hungry, to give drink unto the thirſty, to cloth the naked, to harbour the ſtranger or harbourleſs, to viſit the ſick, and to bury the dead, the which all together are contained in theſe Verſes:

Alms. Mercy.

Two kinds of miſeries. Two kinds of goodneſs.

Tythes

Wiſdom. Folly.

The miſeries of the Mind and Body.

Viſito, poto, cibo, redimo, tego, colligo, condo.

The which Verſe is thus Engliſhed, word for word:

Viſit the Sick, the Hungry feed,
Give drink to the Thirſty, cloth the Naked,
Buy the Dead, the Captive redeem,
The Harbourleſs receive to thy Lodging.

There be alſo ſeven other ſpiritual Alms appointed; which are theſe; To teach the ignorant; To counſel him that is in doubt; To comfort him which is in heavineſs; To correct the Offender; To forgive him which hath offended againſt thee; To bear thoſe which are grievous; And to pray for all man: The which are alſo contained in theſe Verſes following:

What is Alms.

Conſule, caſtiga, ſolare, remitte, fer, ora.

The which Verſe is thus Engliſhed, word for word:

Inſtruct the Ignorant, the Weak confirm,
Comfort the heavy Heart, and correct Sin:
Forgive the Offender, bear with the Rude,
Pray for all men both Evil and Good.

So that notwithſtanding under the ſame Counſels and Doctrine be comprehended. Thomas in the ſecond part of the ſecond queſt. 23. art. 2.

Secondly, it is to be noted that in this preſent Article our intent is only to intreat of bodily Alms, the which is. (As Thomas writeth in his ſecond Part, ſecond queſt. 32. and 1.) according unto ſome mens minds is thus defined;

What Alms is.

Alms

{KING Hic. 2.} Alms is a work whereby any thing is given unto the needy, of compaſſion, for Gods ſake. And for ſo much as this definition ſerveth as well for the ſpiritual as for the corporal Alms; therefore to the purpoſe, Alms is a work, whereby any thing is given unto the needy in body for compaſſion, and for Gods ſake. Or that is given of compaſſion or pity unto the bodily needy for Gods ſake.

Wherefore it is manifeſt that Alms, as Saint Auguſtine and other holy men ſay, is a work of mercy, as alſo to give Alms. As it appeareth by the name, for in the Greek it is derived from this word Elemonia, which is Mercy: for as in the Latin, this word Miſeratio, which ſignifieth pity, is derived of Miſericordia, which is, Mercy; ſo this word Eleemoſyna, which ſignifieth Alms, is derived of the Greek word Elemonia, which is to ſay, Mercy; and of the word Syna, which is to ſay, Commandment, as it were a commandment of mercy, or otherwiſe of this word Elemonia. By this Letter I, which is to ſay, God, and this word Syna, which is, Commandment: As if it were ſaid, The Commandment of God, as Januenſis in his Book intituled, Catholicon affirmeth.

For our Saviour doth command, in the 11th of Luke to give Alms, ſaying, Give Alms, and behold all things are clean unto you: leſt that in this point there may be any equivocation, it is ſuppoſed preſently, that the Alms given of men is a corporal Alms, given ſimply under the name of Alms. Secondly, it is to be noted, that Tythes in this effect are the tenth part of goods of Fortune, given by a man ſimply under the name of Alms for Gods ſake.

Tythes.

Theſe things being thus noted and ſuppoſed, the Article is thus proved. Every gift of Fortune, or Temporal Gift ſimply given under the name of Alms, is Alms. But ſome Tythes are the Gift of Fortune, or Temporal Gift under the name of Alms. Therefore ſome Tythes are Alms. This conſequence is manifeſt of it ſelf. The major appeareth by the firſt ſuppoſition's. And the minor by the ſecond.

Item, every Gift given by a man even of love, to relieve and help the miſerable out of his miſery, is an Alms. The tenth part of the goods of Fortune given by a man, ſimply under the name of Alms for Gods ſake, is given by the ſame man even of love, to help the miſerable out of his miſery: Therefore the tenth part of the goods of Fortune, being given by any man ſimply under the name of Alms for Gods ſake, is Alms. The conſequence is manifeſt. The major appeareth by this, that every ſuch gift is either a ſpiritual or bodily Alms. The minor ſeemeth hereby true, forſomuch as many holy men have given, and do give, even for love to relieve the miſerable out of his miſery. Neither is it to be doubted but that ſuch kind of Tythes are Alms. For Saint Auguſtine upon theſe words of the Lord in the Goſpel writeth thus, Woe be unto you Phariſees, which do tythe Mint and Aniſe: If they cannot be cleanſed without they believe in him, he which doth cleanſe his heart through faith, to what purpoſe is it that he faith, Give Alms, and behold, all things are clean unto you? Let us give ear, and peradventure he doth expound it himſelf. They did take out the tenth part of all their fruits, and gave it for Alms; the which any Chriſtian-man doth not willingly. Then they mocked him, when he ſpake theſe words to them, as unto men which would do no Alms. This the Lord foreknowing, ſaid, Woe be unto you Phariſees, which tythe Mint and Rue, and all kind of herbs, and paſs over the Judgment and Charity of God; For this it is to do Alms, if thou doſt underſtand it, begin with thy ſelf: For how canſt thou be merciful unto another, which art unmerciful unto thy ſelf? This writeth S. Auguſtine, plainly ſaying, That Tythes are Alms.

S. Auguſtine proveth Tythes to be pure Alms.

Auguſt. in Enchirid.

Alſo in his Enchiridion in the ſeventy ſixth Chapter upon theſe words of Saint Luke, in the eleventh Chapter; Notwithſtanding that which is more than ſufficient, give in Alms, and all things ſhall be clean unto you; he ſaith thus, When he had rebuked them, that they waſhed themſelves outwardly, and inwardly were full of iniquity and abomination, admoniſhing them, what, and how a man ought firſt to beſtow Alms upon himſelf, and firſt to cleanſe himſelf inwardly, he ſaith, That which doth remain give in Alms, and behold, all things are clean unto you. Afterward, that he might the better declare what he had given them warning of, and what they had neglected to do, that they ſhould not judge him ignorant of their Alms, he ſaith, Woe be unto you Phariſees; as though he ſhould ſay, I wevily gave you warning that you ſhould give ſuch Alms, whereby all things might be clean unto you; but woe be unto you which do tythe Mint, Rue, and all kind of herbs (for I do know theſe your Alms, that you ſhould not think with your ſelves that you had given me warning thereof) and neglect and paſs over the judgment and charity of God, by the which Alms ye might be cleanſed from all your inward filthineſs, and your bodies alſo which you do waſh, ſhould be clean, and all theſe things both inward, and alſo outward; as it is ſaid in another place, cleanſe that which is within, and the outward things ſhall be alſo clean.

But leſt that he ſhould ſeem to refuſe thoſe Alms which are given of the fruits of the earth, he ſaid, You ought to have done theſe things; That is to ſay, the judgment and love of God; and not to neglect the other, that is to ſay, the Alms of the fruit of the earth. This writeth Saint Auguſtine, expreſly calling the Tythes Alms.

Alſo Chryſoſtome upon the ſame words in the eleventh Chapter of S. Luke, That which remaineth give in Alms; he ſaith thus, Whereas it was ſpoken of the Jewiſh kind of cleanſing, it is wholly paſſed. But for as much as Tythes is a certain Alms, and the time was not yet expreſly come to kill the Sacrifices of the Law; for this cauſe he ſaith, Ye ought to do thoſe things, and not to omit the other. And S. Thomas alledgeth him in his gloſs upon S. Luke. And Chryſoſtome himſelf doth teach two points: Firſt, That Tythes are Alms. Secondly, That Tythes are in a manner lawful, for ſo much as the gift thereof unto the Prieſts did not ceaſe in the time of Chriſt.

Chryſoſtom. in 11. Luke.

Alſo Saint Auguſtine, in a certain Sermon of giving Alms, ſaith thus, What is to ſay, Give Alms, and behold, all things are clean unto you? Let us give ear, and peradventure he doth expound it himſelf. When he had ſpoken theſe words, without doubt they thought within themſelves, who did give Alms, and how they did give it: They tythed all that they had, and took out the tenth part of all their fruits, and gave it for Alms: the which no Chriſtian lightly doth. Mark what the Jews did, they tythed not only their Wheat, but their Wine and Oil; and not that only, but alſo vile things, at the Commandment of the Lord, as Commin, Rue, and Aniſe; of the which they took the tenth part, and gave it for Alms. I think therefore, for ſo much as they called unto their minds, and thought with themſelves, that our Lord Chriſt ſpake in vain unto them that they did no Alms, when as they knew their own works, that they tythed the ſmalleſt and worſt of all their fruits, and gave Alms thereof: they mocked him amongſt themſelves, becauſe he did ſpeak in ſuch ſort unto them, as unto men that did no Alms. The which the Lord foreſeeing, by and by added notwithſtanding: Woe be unto you Scribes, Phariſees and Hypocrites, which tythe your Mint, Commin, and Rue, and all kind of herbs, that you may know, I do underſtand your Alms. Truly, theſe are your Tythes, theſe are your Alms; you tythe out the leaſt and worſt of all your fruits, and have left the weighty matters of the Law undone. Here S. Auguſtine often expoundeth that Tythes are Alms; Alſo he writeth the like in his Book of Homilies in his ſixth Homily.

Item, for the proof of this Article, that Tythes are pure Alms, it is thus argued. For this Propoſition, Tythes are pure Alms, is indefinite; taking the truth for many of his Particularities; It is moſt certain that it is not damnable, but moſt Catholick, that God is ſomething; the which being falſe in all particulars, it is only true of that alone which doth ſurmount all kind. Ergo, by like reaſon this particular is true, tenths are pure Alms: For it is thus proved. Theſe tenths of a good Lay-man being wholly diſtributed by a faithful Miniſter unto a needy Lay-man, according to a good intent, how can they be but pure Alms, yea, and more pure than any Alms given by any of the Clergy being a Fornicator? The whole antecedent I ſuppoſe as poſſible, and doubtful unto the Condemners, if it be true.

Item, It is alſo thus proved; Theſe Tythes, and all other goods of Fortune, are pure Alms in reſpect of God. For ſo much as every man, Emperor and King is a beggar of God. As S. Auguſtine doth oftentimes affirm, and conſequently if he do receive fruitfully any ſuch goodneſs at the hand of God, the ſame is pure Alms in reſpect of God: neither is there any faithful man that will deny the ſame, but that it ſimply followeth that the ſame is pure Alms before God, Ergo it is pure Alms.

It

It is alſo thus argued; All Tythes are by themſelves, and every part of them Alms; neither is there any reaſon contrary unto this, that they are Alms. Ergo, they are pure Alms. For they are by no other means or reaſon than Alms, if they be altogether themſelves Alms: For ſo much as it followeth, if they be by any other means or otherwiſe than Alms, then they are otherwiſe than ſome Alms, and for ſo much as they themſelves are ſome Alms, it followeth, that they are otherwiſe than they are indeed; the which is falſe.

Suſtenance and clothing, given to the Apoſtles, was Alms, Ergo alſo Tythes.

But now to paſs beyond the bounds of Logick, it is to be demanded, whether before the Church was endowed, or that ſuſtenance and clothing were given unto the Apoſtles, there was any pure Alms, or that they were given by any other means by bond of debt, amongſt them. And for ſo much as the reaſon is not to be fained, but that they were pure Alms, ſo afterward the cuſtom of the ſame thing according unto like reaſon doth not alter the kind of the reaſon. For ſo might Beggers challenge by cuſtom, beyond the purity of Alms, the Temporalties which they do beg. Neither doth debt utterly exclude the purity of Alms before God: for every man duly giving Alms doth as he ought to do: as every man duly receiving his Alms, ought ſo to receive it as according to Gods will. And ſimply to eſtabliſh any humane Title, upon the continuance of any ſuch Alms, it is altogether contrary unto the reaſon of Alms. Therefore they do continually obſerve, and keep the reaſon of the purity of Alms, which they had from the beginning, when as the bond conditioned doth not deſtroy the purity thereof: wherefore there is no cauſe why it ſhould be denied that Tythes are pure Alms, except that the proud ſhould be marvelouſly extolled, contrary to the humility of Chriſt. For they do challenge, by the Title of their lack or want, ſo to be pleaſed for their Tythes. For ſo might the begging-Fryer, by the continuance of his daily begging, challenge according unto the like quantity or circumſtance. But it is no argument, that if the Curate do perform his corporal Miniſtry, that he ought therefore to challenge Tythes by any civil Title; becauſe that as well on the behalf of him which giveth the Tythe, as alſo on the behalf of the Curate, every ſuch miniſtry ought freely to be given, and not by any civil exchange. Forſomuch as it is not required, but that rather the compariſon of ſuch exchanges are repugnant; for ſo much as alſo no man freely giveth any Alms, except he do look for the duty of recompence, by the law of conſcience.

Item, all temporal goods beſtowed upon the Clergy by the Lay-people under condition, as the goods of the Church, are the Alms of them which give it; it is proved thus, for ſo much as all thoſe goods are the goods of the poor, as it appeareth by many ſayings of holy men and by the Laws.

But they were not the goods of the poor, after they were meer ſecular goods, but only by the mean of the work of mercy, whereby they were beſtowed upon the poor: Ergo, they were pure Alms. The conſequence dependeth upon the definition of pure Alms.

Item, all things changed to the uſe and power of another, either by Civil exchange or Evangelical is changed. But the Church-goods are ſo changed by one of theſe Miniſteries. But the Evangelical exchange is not to be fained; becauſe it is not done either by buying or ſelling, or any other civil exchange. Therefore there doth not remain but only a pure Gift, for hope of a heavenly Reward, the which is mercy, and ſo pure Alms. And it ſeemeth to follow conſequently, that all the Clergy receiving ſuch Alms are not only in reſpect of God, as all other men, but in reſpect of men, beggers. For they would not ſo inſtantly require thoſe Alms except they had need of them: neither ought we to be aſhamed thereof, or to be proud beggers; forſomuch as Chriſt touching his humanity became a beggar for us, becauſe he declared his need unto his Father, ſaying, &c.

The Clergy beggers.

Item, when any King, Prince, Knight, Citizen, or any other man doth give unto the Clergy, or to any Prieſt for his ſtipend, he giveth the ſame unto the Church of God, and to the private party, as a perpetual Alms, that he ſhould attend to his vocation, preaching, praying, and ſtudying. But this kind of giving doth not ſuffice to ground any ſecular Dominion amongſt the Clergy; it followeth that the bare uſe remaineth in them, or the ſecular uſe without any ſecular power.

The major appeareth hereby, forſomuch as otherwiſe Alms ſhould not be a work of mercy. Whereby it may alſo appear, that tenths are pure Alms given to the Church, to the uſe of the poor. [KING Lib. 2.]

And hereupon the holy men do ſay, That tenths are the Tributes of the needy Souls. Whereupon Saint Auguſtine in a Sermon made upon the reſtoring of Tythes ſaith, The part of giving of Tythes, moſt dear Brethren, are the Tributes of the poor Souls, therefore pay your Tribute unto the poor. And by and by after he ſaith, Therefore who deſireth either to get any Reward, or to have any remiſſion of Sins by giving of his Tenths, let him ſtudy to give Alms even of the ninth part: ſo that whatſoever ſhall remain more than a competent living, and decent clothing, it be not reſerved for Riot, but that it be laid up in the heavenly treaſury, by giving it in Alms to the poor. For whatſoever God doth give unto us more than we have need of, he doth not give it us ſpecially for our ſelves; but doth ſend it us to be beſtowed upon others by our hands: if we do not give it, we invade another mans Poſſeſſions. Tythes are to be given of the ninth goods.

Thus much writeth S. Auguſtine, and is repeated in the 16. queſtion. 1. Decimæ.

Alſo S. Jerome in an Epiſtle, and it is put in the 16. queſtion, and 2. chap. Quicquid. Whatſoever the Clergy hath, it is the goods of the poor.

Alſo Saint Auguſtine in his three and thirtieth Epiſtle unto Boniface, and it is alledged in the firſt queſtion and 12.

Alſo in the twenty third, queſtion 7. If we do poſſeſs any thing privately the which doth ſuffice us, they are not ours, but the goods of the poor, whoſe Stewards we are, except we do challenge to our ſelves a property by ſome damnable Uſurpation. The Gloſs upon that part of the 23. queſtion 7. ſaith, The Prelates are but only the Stewards of the Church-goods, and not Lords thereof.

Saint Ambroſe alſo upon that ſaying of the Goſpel, Luke 16. Give account of your Bayliffſhip or Stewardſhip: Hereby then do we learn, that they are not Lords, but rather Stewards and Bayliffs of other mens Subſtance.

And Saint Jerome, writing to Nepotianus, ſaith, How can they be of the Clergy? which are commanded to contemn and deſpiſe their own Subſtance, and to take away from a friend, it is Theft; to deceive the Church it is Sacrilledge, and to take away that which ſhould be given unto the poor. The Clergy are Stewards of the Church-goods, and not Lords thereof.

And Saint Bernard in his Sermon upon theſe words (Simon Peter ſaid unto Jeſus, Chap. 17.) ſaid, Truly the goods of the Church, are the patrimony of the poor: and whatſoever thing the Miniſters and Stewards of the ſame, not Lords or Poſſeſſors, do take unto themſelves more than ſufficient for a competent living, the ſame is taken away from the poor by a ſacrilegious cruelty.

And Euſebius in his Treatiſe upon the Pilgrimage of Saint Jerome, writeth thus, If thou doſt poſſeſs a Garment, or any other thing more than extream neceſſity doth require, and doſt not help the needy, thou art a Thief and a Robber. Wherefore dearly beloved Children, let Iſidorus de ſummo bono us be Stewards of our Temporalties, and not Poſſeſſors.

And Iſidore in his Treatiſe De ſummo bono, Chap. 42. ſaith, Let the Biſhop know that he is the Servant of the people, and not Lord over them.

Alſo in the fifth Book of Decretals, extra de donationibus, ſub authoritate Alexandri tertii, Epiſcopi Pariſienſis, he ſaith, We believe that it is not unknown unto your Brotherhood, that a Biſhop, and every other Prelate is but a Steward of the Church-goods, and not Lord thereof. By theſe ſayings of theſe holy men it is evidently declared, that not only Tythes, but alſo all other ſubſtance which the Clergy hath by gift or work of mercy, are pure Alms; which after the neceſſity of the Clergy once ſatisfied, ought to be tranſported unto the poor.

Secondly, It is declared how that the Clergy are not Lords and Poſſeſſors of thoſe goods, but Miniſters and Stewards thereof.

Thirdly, It is ſhewed, that if the Clergy do abuſe the ſame, they are Thieves, Robbers, and ſacrilegious Perſons, and except they do repent, by the juſt judgment of God they are to be condemned.

And

[KING Lib. 2.]

AND thus hitherto I may peradventure ſeem to have made ſufficient long recital out of John Hus, but ſo notwithſtanding that the commodity of thoſe things may abundantly recompence the prolixity thereof. Wherefore if I ſhall ſeem unto any man in the rehearſal of this diſputation to have paſſed very far the bounds of the Hiſtory, let him think thus of me, that at what time I took in hand to write of theſe Eccleſiaſtical matters, I could not omit theſe things which were ſo ſtraitly joyned with the cauſe of the Church.

Neither that I did make more account of the Hiſtory which I had taken in hand, than of the common utility whereunto I had chief reſpect. There were beſides theſe certain other Articles; whereupon the ſaid John Hus had very wiſely and learnedly diſputed; but theſe ſhall ſuffice us for this preſent. And for the reſidue we will paſs them over, to the intent we may the more ſpeedily return whereas our ſtory left; declaring what cruelty they uſed not only againſt the Books and Articles of John Wickliff, but alſo in burning his Body and Bones, commanding them to be taken up forty one years after he was buried, as appeareth by the Decree of the ſaid Synod, the form whereof we thought hereunto to annex, as followeth:

The order and manner of taking up of body of John Wickliff, and Burning his bones 41. years after his death.

The Decree of the Synod of Conſtance, touching the taking up of the Body and Bones of John Wickliff, to be burned forty one years after he was buried in his own Pariſh at Lutterworth.

The Decree of the Councel for the taking of Wickliffs dead bones.

FOrſomuch as by the authority of the Sentence and Decree of the Councel of Rome, and by the Commandment of the Church, and the Apoſtolical See, after due delays being given, they proceeded unto the condemnation of the ſaid John Wickliff, and his memory having firſt made Proclamation, and given commandment to call forth whoſoever would defend the ſaid Wickliff, or his memory, if there were any ſuch (but there did none appear, which would either defend him or his memory.) And moreover witneſſes being examined, by Commiſſioners appointed by Pope John and his Councel, upon the impenitency and final obſtinacy and ſtubbornneſs of the ſaid John Wickliff (reſerving that which is to be reſerved, as in ſuch buſineſs the order of the Law requireth) and his impenitency and obſtinacy even unto his end, being ſufficiently proved by evident ſigns and tokens, and alſo by lawful witneſſes, and credit lawfully given thereunto. Wherefore at the inſtance of the Steward of the Treaſury, Proclamation being made to hear and underſtand the ſentence againſt this day, the ſacred Synod declareth, determineth, and giveth ſentence, that the ſaid John Wickliff was a notorious obſtinate Heretick, and that he died in his hereſie, curſing and condemning both him and his memory.

In actis Concilii Conſtan.

This Synod alſo decreeth and ordaineth, That the Body and Bones of the ſaid John Wickliff, if it might be diſcerned and known from the bodies of other faithful people, ſhould be taken out of the ground, and thrown away far from the burial of any Church, according unto the Canon-Laws and Decrees. Which determination and ſentence definitive being read and pronounced, the Lord Preſident, and the foreſaid Preſidents of the four Nations, being demanded and asked whether it did pleaſe them or no? They all anſwered (and firſt Hoſtienſis the Preſident, and after him the other Preſidents of the Nations) that it pleaſed them very well, and ſo they allowed and confirmed all the premiſes, &c.

¶ What Heraclites would not laugh, or what Democritus would not weep, to ſee theſe ſo ſage and reverend Catoes to occupy their heads to take up a poor mans body, ſo long dead and buried before, by the ſpace of forty one years? and yet peradventure were not able to find his right bones, but took up ſome other body, and ſo of a Catholick made an Heretick. Albeit herein Wickliff had ſome cauſe to give them thanks, that they would at leaſt ſpare him ſo long till he was dead, and alſo to give him ſo long reſpite after his death, forty one years to reſt in his ſepulcher before they ungraved him, and turned him from earth to aſhes; which aſhes they alſo took and threw into the river. And ſo was he reſolved into three Elements, earth, fire, and water, thinking thereby utterly to extinguiſh and aboliſh both the name and Doctrine of Wickliff for ever. Not much unlike to the example the old Phariſees and Sepulcher-Knights, which when they had brought the Lord unto the grave, thought to make him ſure never to riſe again. But theſe and all other muſt know, that as there is no counſel againſt the Lord; ſo there is no keeping down of verity, but it will ſpring and come out of duſt and aſhes, as appeared right well in this man. For though they digged up his Body, burnt his Bones, and drowned his aſhes; yet the Word of God, and truth of his Doctrine, with the fruit and ſucceſs thereof, they could not burn; which yet to this day, for the moſt part of his Articles, do remain; notwithſtanding the tranſitory Body and Bones of the man was thus conſumed and diſperſed, dispersed, as by this picture here above set forth to thine eyes (gentle Reader) may appear.

These things thus finished and accomplished, which pertain to the story and time of Wickliff; let us now (by the supportation of the Lord proceed to intreat and write of the rest, which either in his time or after his time, springing out of the same University, and raised up (as ye would say) out of his ashes were partakers of the same Perfecution.

Ex Th. Wal. den. lib. de Sacramen. Of whom speaketh Thomas Walden in his Book, De Sacramento & Sacramentalibus, Cap. 53. where he saith, that after Wickliff many suffered most cruel death, and many mo did forsake the Realm.

In the number of whom was William Swinderby, Walter Brute, John Purvey, Richard White, William Thorpe, Raynold Pecock Bishop of Saint Asaph, and afterward of Chichester.

Laurence Redman, David Sautre, John Aschwarby Aschwarby, W. Jones, T. Brightwell, Philip Hanslam, Rafe Grenhurst, John Scut, and Philip Norice.

To this Catalogue also pertaineth (mentioned in ancient writers) Laurence Redman Master of Art, David Sautre, Divine, John Aschwarby Vicar, as they call him, of St. Mary Church at Oxford, Will. James an excellent young man, well learned, Thomas Brightwell, and William Hanslam a Civilian, Rafe Grenhurst, John Scut, and Philip Norice; which being Excommunicated by Pope Eugenius the Fourth, in the year of our Lord 1446, appealed unto a General or Oecumenical Council.

Peter Paine. Peter Paine also, who flying from Oxford unto Bohemia, did stoutly contend against the Sophisters, as touching both kinds of the Sacrament of the last Supper; who afterward among the rest of the Orators was one of the fourteen that was sent unto the Council of Basil: where by the space of three days he disputed upon the fourth Article, which was touching the Civil Dominion of the Clergy,

Lord Cobham. Anno 1438. Also the Lord Cobham, &c. with divers others besides, whose names are mentioned in the Kings Writ, sent to the Sheriff of Northampton, which Writ of the King followeth in this tenor: Rex Vicecomiti Northamptoniæ salutem, &c. Forsomuch as John Attyate of Chepingwarden, John Warryner, Ro. Brewood, &c. being receivers and fautors of Hereticks, and especially of John Woodward Priest, publickly defamed and condemned of Heresie, will not be justified by the censures of the Church, as the reverend Father John Bishop of Lincoln hath certified us: We therefore willing to withstand all defenders and fautors of such Heresies, do will and command as well the forenamed, as namely the foresaid John Woodward to be apprehended, straitly charging the same to be imprisoned by their bodies, or otherwise punished as shall seem good to the Justices, until they and every of them shall submit themselves to the obedience of the foresaid Bishop in that behalf accordingly. Whereof fail you not under pain of an hundred pound. Witnes our selves: Yeaven at our Manor of Langley the eighth day of March, the twelfth year of our reign.

To these above rehearsed, and other favourers of Wickliff, within this our Country of England, we may add also the Bohemians; forsomuch as the propagation of the said Doctrine of Wickliff in that Country also took root, coming from England to Boheme by this occasion, as in story here followeth.

The occasion how the Doctrine of Wickliff came to Bohemia. There chanced at that time a certain Student of the Country of Bohemia to be at Oxford, one of a wealthy house, and also of a noble stock; who returning home from the University of Oxford to the Universitie of Prague, carried with him certain Books of Wickliff, De Realibus Universalibus. De Civils Jure, & Divino. De Ecclesia. De quæstionibus variis contra Clerum, &c. It chanced the same time a certain Nobleman in the City of Prague had founded and builded a great Church of Mathiæs and Matthews, which Church was called Bethelem, giving to it great Lands, and finding in it two Preachers every day, to preach both Holy-day and working-day to the people. Of the which two Preachers this John Hus was one, a man of great knowledg, of a pregnant wit, and excellently favoured for his worthy life amongst them. Thus John Hus having familiarity with this young man, in reading and perusing these Books of Wickliff, took such pleasure and fruit in reading thereof, that not only he began to defend this Author openly in the Schools, but also in his Sermons commending him for a good man, an holy man, and heavenly man, wishing himself, when he should die, to be there placed, whereas the soul of Wickliff should be.

Wickleum vir bonus, sanctus, cale dignus.

The great affection of John Hus to John Wickliff.

And thus for the spreading of Wickliffs Doctrine enough. {KING 8. Richd.

And thus much briefly concerning the favourers and adherents of John Wickliff in general. Now particularly and in order let us (by Christs grace) prosecute the stories and persecutions of the said parties aforenamed, as the course of their times shall require, first beginning with the valiant Champions William Swinderby, and Walter Brute.

The History of William Swinderby.

IN the year 1389, William Swinderby Priest, within the Diocess of Lincoln, being accused and detected upon certain opinions, was presented before John Bishop of Lincoln, and examined upon certain Articles in the Church of Lincoln, after the form and order of the Popes law, according to their usual rite observed; his denouncers were these, Frier Frisby Observant, Frier Hincely, Augustine, and of Thomas Blaxton, Dominican. The Articles wherewith they charged him, although in form of words as they put them up, they might seem something strange here to be recited; yet to the intent that all men may see the spiteful malice of these Spider-Friers, in sticking all things to poyson, and in forging that which is not true, as in proces (Christ willing) hereafter shall better appear by his answers, I thought good to notifie the same.

{Anno 1389. 12 Kalend. Augusti. W. Swinderby accused. Denounced of Wm. Swinderby, Frisby, Hincely, Blaxton.

That men may ask their debts by charity, but in no manner for debt to imprison any man; and that he so imprisoning is accursed.

That if Parishioners do know their Curate to be a lecher, inconvinent, and an evil man, they ought to withdraw from him their Tythes, or else they be fautors of his sins.

That Tythes purely be alms, and in case that Curates be evil men, the same may lawfully be conferred to other men.

That for an evil Curate to curse his Suget for withholding of Tythes, is nothing else, but to take with extortion wickedly, and unduly from them their money.

That no Prelate may curse a man, except he know before that he is cursed of God.

That every Priest may absolve any sinner being contrite; and is bound (notwithstanding the inhibition of the Bishop) to preach the Gospel unto the people.

That a Priest taking any Annual pension upon Covenant, is in so doing a Simoniack, and accursed.

That any Priest being in deadly sin, if he give himself to contemplate the body of the Lord, committeth Idolatry rather than doth consecrate.

That no Priest entreth into any house, but to evil intreat the wife, the daughter, or maid: and therefore he admonished the good man of the house to take heed what Priest he let into his house.

Another Conclusion falsly to him objected, That a child is not truly baptized, if the Priest that baptizeth, or the Godfather or Godmother be in deadly sin.

Item, That no man living against the Law of God is a Priest, however he were ordained Priest of any Bishop.

These Articles or Conclusions untruly collected, were as cruelly exhibited against him by the Friers in the Bishop of Lincolns Court. The which Articles although he never preached, taught, or at any time defended, as appeareth more in the Proces following: Yet the Friers with their witnesses standing forth against him, declared him to be convict; bringing also dry wood with them to the Town to burn him, and would not leave him, before they made him promise and swear for fear of death, never to hold them, teach them, nor preach them privily, nor apertly under pain of relapse; and that he should go to certain Churches to revoke the foresaid Conclusions, which he never affirmed. As first in the Church of Lincoln, then in St. Margarets Church of Leicester; also in St. Martins Church in Leicester, and in our Ladies Churches at Newark, and in other Parish-Churches also of Melton-Mowbray, of Halongton, Haverburgh, and Lenisburgh. Which penance being to him enjoyned, he did obediently accomplish, with this form of revocation, which they bound him unto, under these words.

W. Swinderby by compulsion of the Friers is forced to make Articles which he never taught.

The

The Revocation of William Swinderby, whereunto he was forced by the Friers.

The forced Abjuration of W. Swinderby.

I William Swinderby Priest, although unworthy, of the Diocess of Lincoln, acknowledging one true Catholick and Apostolick Faith of the Holy Church of Rome, do abjure all hereste and error repugning to the determination of the Holy Mother Church, whereof I have been hitherto defamed, namely, the Conclusions and Articles above prefixed, and every one of them to me judicially objected, by the Commissary of the reverend Father in Christ and Lord, Lord John by the Grace of God Bishop of Lincoln; and do revoke the same, and every one of them, some as heretical, some as erroneous and false, and do affirm and believe them to be so, and hereafter will never teach, preach, or affirm publickly or privily the same. Neither will I make any Sermon within the Diocess of Lincoln, but asking first and obtaining the license of the foresaid reverend Father and Lord, the Bishop of Lincoln. Contrary to the which if I shall presume hereafter to say or do, to hold or preach, I shall be content to abide the severity of the Canon, as I have judicially by the necessity of the Law, sworn and do swear, &c.

Thus have you the Conclusions and Articles of this good man, falsly objected to him by the malicious and lying Friers; and also the retractation whereunto they by force compelled him; whereby it may likewise be conjectured, what credit is to be given to the Articles and Conclusions which these cavilling Friers, wrelting all things to the worst, have objected and imputed both to Wickliff and all other of that sort, whom they so falsly do defame, so slanderously do belye, and so maliciously do persecute. After these thing thus done and wrought in the Diocess of Lincoln, it so befell that the said W. Swinderby removed to the Diocess and Country of Herford; where he was as much or more molested by the Friers again, and by John Trefnant Bishop of Hereford, as by the proces and story here ensuing, set out at large out of their own Registers, may appear.

Here followeth the Proces of John Trefnant, Bishop of Hereford, had against the aforsaid William Swinderby in the cause of Heretical pravity, as the Popish Hereticks call it.

The proces of the B. of Hereford against W. Swinderby.

THE Glorious name of the Prince of Peace, and his counsel (whose counsellor no man is, and whose providence in his disposition is never deceived) being invocated, To all and singular believers of Christ, which shall see or hear this our proces under-written, John by the sufferance of God Bishop of Hereford, greeting, and peaceable charity in the Lord. Forasmuch as God the Creator of all things, the keeper of justice, the lover of right, and the hater of malice, beholding from the high Throne of his Providence the sons of men, now through the fall of their first father prone and declining to dishonest and filthy, and detestable mischiefs, and to keep under their malice (which wicked transgression did first gender) hath appointed divers presidents of the world stablished in sundry degrees, by whom and their circumspect providence mans audacity should be restrained, innocency should be nourished amongst the good, and terror should be stricken into the wicked not to deceive; also that their power to hurt, and their insolency should be bridled in all places. And whereas amongst many kinds of cares which come to our thoughts, by the duty of the office committed unto us, we are specially bound to extend our strength, chiefly that the Catholick faith may prosper in our times, and heretical pravity may be rooted from out of the borders of the faithful; we therefore being excited through the information of many credible and faithful Christians of our Diocess, to root out pestiferous plants, as sheep diseased with an incurable sickness, going about to infect the whole and found flock, are by the care of the shepherd to be removed from the flock, that is to say, Preachers, or more truly execrable offenders of the new Sect, vulgarly called Lollards; which under a certain cloked shew of holiness, running abroad through divers places of our Diocess, and endeavouring to cut asunder the Lords unsowed coat, that is to say, to rent the unity of the holy Church, and of the Catholick Faith, and also to tear in pieces with their tempestuous blasts the power of Saint Peter, that is to say, to weaken the strength of the Ecclesiastical states and degrees, and the determination of the same holy Church, have wickedly presumed and do presume from day to day to speak, to teach, to maintain, (and that which is more horrible to be uttered) to preach openly many things heretical, blasphemies, schisms, and slanderous defamings, even quite contrary to the Sacred Canons and Decrees of the holy Fathers, so that they know not to direct their paths in the ways of righteousness and truth, in that they expound to the people the Holy Scripture as the letter soundeth, after a judicial sort, otherwise than the Holy Ghost will have it, whereas the words wander from their proper significations, and appear to bring in by ghessing new meanings, whereas the words must not be judged by the sense that they make, but by the sense whereby they be made, wherefore the construction is not bound to the Decretes rules; whereas faith is far placed from the capacity of the person: But they labour by their pernicious Doctrines and teachings publick and privy, to boyl out the poyson of schisms between the Clergy and the people: We to encounter against such kind of Preachers, nay rather deceivers, and horrible seducers amongst the people, advancing and rousing up our selves in Gods behalf, and holy Mother Church, with the spiritual sword, which may strike them wisely, and wound them medicinably, for their health and welfare; and namely William Swinderby Priest (so pretending himself to be) as a teacher of such kind of pernicious Doctrine, and an horrible seducer amongst the people; to whom personally appearing before us on the Wednesday, to wit, the fourteenth of the month of June in the Parish-Church of Kington of our Diocess, in the year of our Lord 1391, he being vehemently defamed to us of heresie, schism, and his perverse Doctrines both manifest and privy; we therefore have caused many Cases and Articles concerning the Catholick Faith to be minuted unto him, that he should answer to the same at a day and place for him meet and convenient, of his own choice and free will; that is to say, on the Friday, being the last of the same month of June next following; assigned to him, at the Church of Bodenhame of the same our Diocess. Of which Cases and Articles exhibited unto us by many of Christs faithful people, * zealous followers of the Catholick Faith, to make information to our office (which Cases and Articles also were given to him minuted, as is before said, to the same William Swinderby,) the tenour thereof followeth, and is thus:

Lollards by the Popes interpretation, is a word derived of Lollium.

Lord, Lord; Lucus illite of their own imaginings.

The denumeration of the Premises to the Bishop of Hereford.

¶ Reverend Father and high Lord, Lord John, by God sufferance Bishop of Hereford: It is lamentably declared unto your reverend Fatherhood on the behalf of Christs faithful people, your devout children of your Diocess of Hereford, that notwithstanding the misbelief of very many Lollards, which have too long a time sprung up here in your Dioces, there is newly come a certain child of wickedness, named William Swinderby; who by his horrible perswasions, and mischievous endeavours, and also by his open preachings and private teachings, doth pervert as much as in him is the whole Ecclesiastical state, and stirreth up, with all his posible power, schism between the Clergy and the people. And that your reverend Fatherhood may be the more fully informed, who and what manner of man the same William Swinderby is; there be proposed and exhibited hereafter to the same your Fatherhood, on the behalf of the same faithful people of Christ, against the same William Swinderby, Cases and Articles. Which if the same William shall deny, then shall the same Cases and Articles most evidently be proved against him by credible witness worthy of belief, and by other lawful proof and evidences, to the end that those being proved, the same Fatherhood of yours may do and ordain therein, as to your Pastoral office belongeth.

Matters articulated againſt W. Swinderby.

Inprimis, the ſame William Swinderby, pretending himſelf Prieſt, was openly and publickly convicted of certain Articles and Concluſions being erroneous, ſchiſmatical, and heretical, preached by him at divers places and times, before a multitude of faithful Chriſtian people. And the ſame Articles and Concluſions did he by force of Law revoke and abjure, ſome as heretical, and ſome as erroneous and falſe, avouching and believing them for ſuch, as that from thenceforth he would never preach, teach, or affirm openly or privily any of the ſame Concluſions: And if by preaching or avouching he ſhould preſume to do the contrary; that then he ſhould be ſubject to the ſeverity of the Canons, accordingly as he did take a corporal oath, judicially upon the Holy Goſpels.

2. Alſo the Concluſions, which by the ſame William were ſtil openly taught and preached, and afterward abjured and revoked, as is aforeſaid, are contained before in the proceſs of the Biſhop of Lincoln, even as they be there written word by word. And for the Caſes and Articles, they were conſequently exhibited by the forenamed faithful Chriſtian people againſt the ſaid William Swinderby, together with the Concluſions before ſaid, and hereafter written: of which Caſes and Articles the tenor here enſueth.

3. Item, The ſaid William contrary to the former revocation and abjuration, not converting to repentance, but perverted from ill to worſe, and given up to a reprobate ſenſe, came into your Dioceſs, where he running about in ſundry places, hath preſumed to preach, or rather to pervert and to teach of his own raſhneſs many heretical, erroneous, blaſphemous, and other ſlanderous things contrary and repugnant to ſacred Canons, and the determination of the Holy Catholick Church. What thoſe things were, at what place and what time, it ſhall hereafter more particularly be declared.

Item, The ſame William notwithſtanding your Commandments and admonitions ſealed with your Seal, and to all the Curates of your Dioceſs directed, containing amongſt other things that no perſon of what ſtate, degree, or condition ſoever he were, ſhould preſume to preach or to teach, or elſe expound the Holy Scripture to the people, either in hallowed or prophane places within your Dioceſs, without ſufficient authority, by any manner of pretence that could be fought, as in the ſame your Letters Monitory and of inhibition (the tenour whereof hereafter enſueth) is more largely contained; which Letters the ſame William did receive into his hands, and did read them word by word in the Town of Adonemouth of your Dioceſs, in the year of our Lord 1390, ſo that theſe your Letters, and the Contents thereof came to the true and undoubted knowledg of the ſame William; yet notwithſtanding hath the ſame William preſumed in divers places and times to preach within the ſame your Dioceſs, after and againſt your Commandment aforeſaid. The tenor of the ſame Letters before mentioned followeth, and is this.

The Letter Monitory of the B. of Hereford inhibiting to preach without his licenſe.

JOHN by the ſufferance of God Biſhop of Hereford, to the Dean and Chapter of our Church of Hereford, and to all and ſingular Abbots, Priors, Provoſts, Deans rural, Parſons and Vicars of Monaſteries, Priories, Churches, Colledges, and Pariſhes, and to other loving Cure of Souls within the City and Dioceſs of Hereford, and to all and every other being within the ſame City and Dioceſs, greeting, Grace and bleſſing. Foraſmuch as the golden lawrel of teaching Doctoral is not from above indifferently every mans gift; neither is the office of preaching granted ſave to ſuch as are called, and eſpecially by the Church admitted thereunto: We do admoniſh and require you all and ſingular Clerks aforeſaid, and do ſtraitly enjoyn you all in the vertue of holy obedience, that you nor any of you do admit any man to preach or to teach the Catholick faith, ſaving ſuch as the ſame office of preaching ſhall by the Authority Apoſtolical, or elſe your Biſhop, be ſpecially committed unto; but that as much as in you ſhall lie, you do by word and deed labour to let thoſe that would attempt the contrary. And you Lords, Ladies, Knights, Barons, Eſquires, and all ſingular perſons, of what eſtate, degree, preheminence, or condition ſoever ye be, remaining within the City and Dioceſs of Hereford, we do beſeech and exhort in our Lord, that following the words of our Saviour, you beware of the leven of the Phariſees.

Would God both they and all men did beware of that leven.

Item, According to the ſaying of the Apoſtle, Be not ye carried away with divers and ſtrange Doctrines; and that in the mean while (as ſaith the Apoſtle) you be not removed from the ſenſe of the holy ancient Fathers. Leſt that any man by any means ſhould ſeduce you; but you agreeing together in one mind, ſee that you honour God with one mouth. But if any man to whom that thing is not ſpecially (as is aforeſaid) committed, ſhall attempt to inſtruct, or in this your life to direct you into the Catholick Faith, do ye deny to give them audience, and refuſe you to be preſent at their aſſemblies, and ſhun ye their teachings, becauſe they be wicked and perverſe. And as for us, we will not omit to proceed, according to the ſacred Canons and Precepts of the holy Fathers, againſt ſuch as do the contrary.

Dated at London in the houſe of our habitation, under our Seal, the laſt day ſave one of December, in the year of our Lord 1389, and of our Conſecration the firſt.

{KING Rich. 2.}

5. Item, The ſame William in his preaching to the people, on Monday being the firſt of Auguſt, in the year of our Lord 1390, in the Pariſh of Whitney of your Dioceſs, did hold and affirm, That no Prelate of the world, of what eſtate, preheminence or degree ſoever he were of, having cure and charge of ſouls, he being in deadly ſin, and bearing the confeſſion of any under his hand, in giving him abſolution, doth nothing: As who neither doth looſe him from his ſin, nor in correcting or excommunicating him for his demerits, doth bind him by his ſentence, except the Prelate ſhall be free himſelf from deadly ſin, as St. Peter was, to whom our Lord gave power to bind and looſe.

What it was of Whitney blaſphemous.

6. Item, The ſame William in many places ſaid and affirmed, in the preſence of many faithful Chriſtian people, that after the Sacramental words uttered by the Prieſt having the purpoſe to conſecrate, there is not made the very Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Bread is not with in Sacrament.

7. Item, That accidents cannot be in the Sacrament of the Altar without a ſubject; and that there remaineth material bread there to ſuch as be partakers Communicant with the Body of Chriſt, in the ſame Sacrament.

8. Item, That a Prieſt being in deadly ſin, cannot be able by the ſtrength of the Sacramental words to make the Body of Chriſt, or bring to perfection any other Sacrament of the Church, neither yet to miniſter it to the members of the Church.

9. Item, That all Prieſts are of like power in all things, notwithſtanding that ſome of them in this world are of higher and greater honour, degree, or preheminence.

10. Item, That only contrition patteth away ſin, if ſo be that a man ſhall be duly contrite; and that all auricular and outward confeſſion is ſuperfluous, and not requiſite of neceſſity to ſalvation.

11. Item, Inferiour Curates have not their power of binding and looſing immediately from the Pope or Biſhop, but immediately from Chriſt: And therefore neither can the Pope nor Biſhop revoke to themſelves ſuch kind of power, when they ſee time and place at their luſt and pleaſure.

12. Item, That the Pope cannot grant ſuch kind of Annual and yearly pardons; becauſe there ſhall not be ſo many years to the day of judgment, as are in the Popes Bulls or pardons contained. Whereby it followeth that the pardons are not of ſuch like value as they ſpeak of, and are praiſed to be.

13. Item, It is not in the Popes power to grant unto any perſon penitent forgiveneſs of the puniſhment of the fault.

14. Item, That perſon that giveth his alms to any, which in his judgment is not in neceſſity, doth ſin in ſo giving it.

1 Oblig.

15. Item, That it ſtands not in the power of any Prelate, of what Religion ſoever he be of, privately to give Letters for the benefit of his Order, neither doth ſuch benefit granted, profit them, to the ſalvation of their ſoul, to whom they be granted.

16. Item, That the ſame William, unmindful of his own ſalvation, hath many and oftentimes come into a certain deſart Wood, called Dervallwood, of your Dioceſs, and there in a certain Chappel not hallowed, or rather in a prophane cottage, hath in contempt of the Keys preſumed of his own raſhneſs to celebrate, nay rather to prophanate.

17. Item, The ſame William hath alſo preſumed to do ſuch things in a certain prophane Chappel, being ſituate in the Park of Newton nigh to the Town of Leintwardon, of the ſame your Dioceſs.

Upon

{KING Rich. 2.}

UPON Friday being the laſt of the Month of June, in the year above ſaid, about ſix of the Clock, in the ſaid Pariſh Church of Bodenhouſe, hath the ſaid William Swinderby perſonally appeared before us. And he willing to ſatisfie the term to him aſſigned, as before ſpecified, hath read out word by word before all the multitude of faithful Chriſtian people, many anſwers made and placed by the ſame William (in a certain Paper-book of the ſheet folded into four parts) to the ſaid Articles, and the ſame anſwers for ſufficient hath he already to us exhibited, avouching them to be agreeable to the Law of Chriſt. Which thing being done, the ſame William (without any moe with him) did depart from our preſence, becauſe that we at the inſtance of certain noble perſonages, had promiſed to the ſame William free acceſs, that as to us, on that day for the exhibiting of thoſe anſwers, and alſo free departing without preſixing of any term, or without citation, or elſe any other offence or harm in body or in goods.

As for the tenour of the ſame anſwers, exhibited unto them by the ſame William, as is before ſpecified; we have here under annexed it word for word, and in the ſame old language uſed at that time, when it was exhibited. And it followeth in theſe words.

The Proteſtation of William Swinderby, with his Anſwers to the Articles by the Promoters laid againſt him to the Biſhop of Hereford, taken out of the Regiſters in the ſame old Engliſh wherein he wrote it.

The proteſtation of William Swinderby with his anſwers.

IN the name of God, Amen. I William Swinderby Prieſt unworthy, Covenanting and purpoſing wholly with all my heart to be a true Chriſtian man, with open confeſſion knowledging mine own defaults, and unwiſe deeds, making openly this Proteſtation, cleping God to record here before our worſhipful Biſhop John, through the ſufferance of God Biſhop of Hereford, with witneſs of all this people; that it is not mine intent any thing to ſay or affirm, to maintain or to defend that is contrary to holy writ, againſt the belief of holy Church, or that ſhould offend the holy determination of Chriſts Church, or the true ſentences of holy Doctors. And if I have here before through mine uncunning been unordered, or by evil counſel been deceived, or any thing ſaid, preached, holden, maintained or taught contrary to the Law of God; wholly and fully for that time, for now and ever with full will I revoke it and withdraw it, as everich Chriſten man ſhould; Praying and beſeeching ech Chriſten man, to whom this writing ſhall come to, that gif I ought err (as God forbid that I do) or ever erred in any point contrary to holy writ, that it be had and holden of them, as for thing nought ſaid, And all the troths that I have ſaid according with the Law of God, that may maintain them, and ſtand by them for life or death to Gods worſhip, as a true Chriſten man ſhould, ſubmitting me meekly to the correction of our Biſhop, that here is, or of any other Chriſten man, after Chriſts laws and holy writ; in will ever ready to be amended; and with this proteſtation I ſay and anſwer to theſe Concluſions and Articles that here followen after, the which been put to me to anſwer to.

1 Concluſio.

The firſt is this, That I William of Swinderby, pretending (he ſaith) my ſelf a Prieſt was judicially convented of certain articles and concluſions of error, falſe, ſchiſmatick, and hereſie, by me in divers places and times preached (he ſaith) before multitudes of true Chriſten men; and the ſame articles and concluſions by need of law revoked and forſworn, ſome as hereſies, and ſome as errors and falſe; and ſuch I affirmed and believed them to be; and that none of them from that time forth I ſhould preach, teach, or affirm, openly or privily, ne that I ſhould make no Sermon to the people, ne preach, but by lawful leave asked and gotten; and if I would preſume in doing or affirming the contrary, then to the ſeverity of the Law I ſhould be buxom, as by need of the Law I ſwore.

To this I ſay, witneſſing that God is in heaven, to my wit and underſtanding, that I never preached, held, ne taught theſe concluſions and articles, the which falſly of Friers and of leacherous Prieſts were put upon me to the Biſhop of Lincoln. For I was ordained by proceſs * yerſaid of their law, by the Biſhop and his Commiſſaries, ſo as I granted them to bring my Purgation of thirteen Prieſts of good fame. And ſo I did with a Letter and twelve Seals thereby, from the Mayor of Leiceſter, and from true Burgeſſes and thirty men to witneſs with me, as the Duke of Lancaſter knew and heard, the Earl of Darby, and other many great men that were that time in the Town, that I never laid them, taught them, ne preached them. But when I ſhould have made my Purgation, there ſtooden forth five Friers or moe, that ſome of them never ſaw me before, ne heard me, and three lecherous Prieſts openly known, ſome living in their lechery twenty year (men ſayden) or more, as by their childer was openly known. Some of theſe they clepin den denunciations, and ſome weren cleped comprobations, that weren there falſly foreſworn, they ſaing buſily and crying with many another Frier, with great inſtance to give the dome upon me, to burn me, and boughten dry wood before as men tolden in that Town: and theſe fleights, and ſwearing, and money giving, as men ſayden, with favour of the Biſhop (by what law I wot not, but ſoothly not by Gods law) they ſayden they held me as convicted, and right not have forth my Purgation. So as I fully forſook them, and never granted that I ſaid them. Over this they made me ſwear, never to hold them, teach them, ne preach them, privily ne apertly; and that I would go to certain Churches to revoke the concluſions that I never ſaid, in ſlander of my ſelf, by great inſtance of the Friers. And ſo for dread of death, and for fleſhly counſel that I had, I aſſented, and ſo I did. And alſo they maden me to ſwear, that I ſhould not preach (by inſtance of the Friers) within that Dioceſs, without license asked and granted; and never ſithen I did. And now the ſame concluſions bene rehearſed to me again; whether by Friers counſel I will not deme, God wot, but in ſlander of me it is; and therefore I will anſwer now (with Gods help) to the concluſion. Of the which the firſt is this.

* Yerſaid, that is, beforeſaid. Witneſſe with William Swinderby, 13 Prieſts and 30 other with the Letter of the Mayor of Leiceſter, and Burgeſſes, with 12 Seals.

Theeaſkability of Votaries to be noted.

1. Concluſio.

That men mowen aſken their debts by charity, but in no manner for debt to priſon any man; and that he ſo impriſoning is accurſed.

Anſwer: How debt is to be purſued.

So I ſaid not: but thus I have ſaid, and yet ſay with proteſtation put before; that whoſo purſues his brother with malice, priſoneth him cruelly for debt without mercy, that ſain would pay it if he might, he ſinneth againſt Chriſts teaching, Eſtote miſericordes ſicut pater veſter miſericors eſt.

2. Concluſio.

The ſecond Concluſion, that falſe Friers and lecherous Prieſts putten upon me was this: That if the Parochiani know her Curate to bene a lechour, incontinent, and an evil man, they owen to withdraw from him tithe, and alſe they bene fautors of his ſins.

Anſwer;

Thus I ſaid not, but on this wiſe, and yet I ſay with proteſtation put before: That if it be known openly to the people, that Parſons or Curates come to her Benefice by limony, and liven in notorie fornication and done not their office and her duties to her Parochians by good enſample of holy life, in true preaching, living and reſidence, wending away from his Cure, occupied in ſecular office; he owes nought to have of the Parochians, tithes, ne offerings, ne hemowes, not to hold him for her Curate, ny hemowes, not to geven him tithes, leſt they bin guilty to God of conſent and maintaining of her open ſin. Nemo militans Deo implicat ſe negotiis ſecularibus. 1. q. 1. ca. Quiſquis per pecuniam, & diſt. 80. cap. Siquis.

3. Concluſio.

The third Concluſion was this, That Friers and Prieſts putten upon me, that tithes purely bene almeſſes: And in caſe that Curates bene evil men, they mowen leefully be given to other men, by temporal Lords, and other temporalities bene done away from men of the Church, actually and openly treſpaſſing.

Anſwer.

Thus I ſaid not in theſe terms: but thus I ſay with proteſtation made before, That it was medeful and leefthful to ſecular Lords by way of charity, and power given to him of God, in default of Prelates that amend not by Gods law, curſed Curates that openly miſuſen the goods of Holy Church, that beene poor mens goods, and cuſtomably againſt the Law of God; the which poor men Lords ben holden to maintain and defend, to take away and withdraw from ſuch Curates poor mens goods, the which they wrongfully holden in help of the poor, and their own wilful offerings, and their bodily alms-deeds, and give them to ſuch that duly serve God in the Church, and been needy in upbearing of the charge that Prelates shoulden do, and do it not. Alter alterius onera portate, & sic adimplebitis legem Christi. And as anenst taking away of Temporalities, I say, thus with protestation made before; that it is leeful to Kings, Princes, Dukes and Lords of the World, to take away fro Popes, Cardinals, fro Bishops and Prelates, possessions in the Church, their Temporalities, and their Alms that they have given them, upon condition they shoulden serve God the better, when they verily seene that their giving and their taking bene contrary to the law of God, to Christs living and his Apostles; and namely in that, that they taken upon them (that shoulden be next followers of Christ and his Apostles in poomesse and meekneſs) to be secular Lords, against the teaching of Christ and S. Peter, Luke 22. Reges gentium, &c. 1 Pet. 5. Neque dominantes in clero. And namely, when such Temporalties maken them the more proud, both in heart and in aray, then they shoulden been elle, more in strife and debate against peace and charity, and in evil ensample to the world more to be occupied in worldly businesse; Omnem solicitudinem projicientes in eum; and draws them from the service of God, from edifying of Christs Church, in impoverishing and making lesse the state and the power of Kings, Princes, Dukes and Lords that God hath set them in; in wrongful oppreision of Commons for unmightfulneſs of Realms. For Paul saith to Men of the Church (whose lore Prelates shoulden sovereignly followen) Habentes victum & vestitum, his contenti simus.

4th. Conclusion. The fourth Conclusion is this, that Friers and Priests putten upon me fallly, That an evil Curate cursing his Soget for withholding of Tithes is naught elſe, but to take with extortion wickedly and unduly money from them.

Answer. Here may you see the falſhood of the Papists, gathering Articles against good men, which they never did nor meant. Thus said I not, but thus I said, and yet do with protestation made before; that an evil Curate curſing his Parishians, unmighty to pay their tithing, with vengeance without pity, for his singular worldly winning against charity, and not for heed of their souls, there he is hold by his power reasonably to help his needy Parochians, and doth nought of the Goods of the Church; wickedly and unduly he withholds from them that which is due to them by the law of God, Dimittite, & dimittetur vobis: date, & dabitur vobis; verum mihi vindictam, & ego retribuam, dicit Dominus.

5th. Conclusion. The fifth Conclusion is this, that Friers and Priests fallsly putten upon me; That no man may curse any man, but if he were wete him cursed of God, ne the commers with him rennen not into sentence of cursing in any manner.

Answer. Thus said I not, but thus I said, and say with protestation put before; that no man ought to curse any man but for charity and with charity, Omnia vestra cum charitate fiant. And likerly I say, that no wrongful curſing of Pope, or any Prelate in earth binds anenst God, but when they wrongfully and wittingly curſen men, for that men will not do their lingular will, unreasonable bidding, with highneſs of heart and cruelty (standing patience and charity in them that they curſen wrongfully) he is blesſed of almighty God, and they themselſe bene curſed, Mat. 5. Beati eritis cum maledixerint homines, &c. Et in Psalmo, Maledicent illi & tu benedices. Et Augustinus 11. q. 3. cap. Illud.

Against. 6th. Conclusion. The sixth Conclusion is this, that Friers and Priests putten upon me fallly, That ech Priest may assoil him that sinneth, contrition had; and, notwithstanding forbiddings of the Bishop, * is holden to preach to the people the Gospel.

* Holden, that is, bound. Thus I said not, but thus I said, and yet say, with protestation made before; That ech true Priest may counsel sinful men, that sneewen to him her sins, after the wit and cunning that God had given him, to turn fro sin to vertuous life. And as touching preaching of the Gospel, I say, that no Bishop ows to let a true Priest, that God had given grace, wit and cunning to do that office; for both Priests and Deacons, that God had ordained Deacons and Priests, ben holden by power given him of God to preach to the People the Gospel, and namely and somely Popes, Bishops, Prelates and Curates; For this is due to the people and Parochians, for to have and ask of hem, and they duly and freely owen to done it, Mat. 5. Luke 5. Ite, ecce ego mitto vos. Et Marc. 16. Euntes in mundum universum. Et Mat. 5. Euntes autem prædicate. Et dist. 21. cap. In novo testamento. Et Isider. de summo bono. 44. Et Chrysost. distinct. 34. ca. Nolite. Et Aug. distinct. 34. ca. Quisquis. Et Greg. in suo pastorali, ca. 36. Et Tolitano. ca. Ignorantia. Et Jerom. distinct. 95. ca. Ecce ego.

7th. Conclusion. The seventh Conclusion is this, that Friers and Priests fallsly putten upon me; That a Priest taking for annuel, through Covenant, in that, he is schismatick and cursed.

Answer. This said I, never in these terms; but thus I said, and yet say with protestation put before; that no Priests owe to sell by bargaining and covenant his ghostly travel, ne his masses, ne his prayers, ne Gods word, ne hallowings, baptism, ne confirming, order giving, for weddings, for strife, for houſel, or for enmointing; any worldly mens reward to ask or take for theie, or for any of theſe, or for any ghostly thing, he ers and doth simony. Ut patet 1. q. 2. ca. Nullus. Et ex concilio Triburentis. cap. Dictum est. Et Christus evangelio vendentes & ementes ejecit de templo, Mat. 22.

8th. Conclusion. The eighth Conclusion is this, that Friers and Priests putten unto me fallly, saying, that I believe fadly as my fell lays, That yche Priest being in deadly sin, yet he put him to make Christs body, rather he does idolatry than makes it.

Answer. Thus said I not; but thus I said, and yet say with protestation put before; that what Priest that puts himself presumptuously and unworthily in deadly sin, wittingly to minister and to receive that holy Sacrament, and so records hit curſedly and damnably, he receives his doom. Qui manducat & bibit indigne, judicium sibi manducat & bibit: 1 Cor. 11.

9th. Conclusion. The ninth Conclusion is this, that Friers and Priests fallsly putten upon me; That no Priests enters into any houſe, but evil scr to treat the wife, the daughter or the wench; and therefore they sayden that I prayed the people, that their husbands should beware that they suffer no Priest to enter into her houſe.

Answer. And if I had said thus, then I had prayed against my self, for I come oft into mens houses; but thus I said, and yet I do, praying Christian men to beware that they nourish nor maintain no lecherous Priest in their sins; for there be where as men well known) they ben maintained in many places, continuing homely with her Women. And iche man there saine they paine therefore a certain to the Bishops alms. Et ideo ait Isido, 11. q. 4. qui consentit peccantibus & defendit alium delinquentem, maledictus erit apud Deum & homines.

10th. Conclusion. The tenth Conclusion is this, that Friers and Priests putten upon me fallly, That a child is not verily baptised, if the Priest that baptiseth, the Godfather or the Godmother, been in deadly sin.

Answer. God wot in Heaven they said full false; but thus I said, and yet I say, that the prayers that an evil Priest prays (living in lechery or other deadly sin) over the child when it shall be hallowed, ben not acceptable to God as ben the prayers of a good Priest. And though better and cleaner the Priest is, the Godfather, and the Godmother; the more graciously God will hear him, if all they ben not greateſt nor moſt rich in the World. Unde gg. 13. q. 7. cap. in gravibus. Cum est qui displicit ad intercedendum peccator admittitur, irati animus procul dubio ad deteriora provocatur.

11th. Conclusion. The eleventh Conclusion is this, that Friers and Priests putten upon me fallly, That no man living against the law of God is a Priest, however he were ordained Priest of any Bishop.

Answer. Certes this is false, for I said never thus in these terms; but thus I said, and thus I say with a protestation put before, that what ever Pope, or Cardinal, Bishop or Priest, or any Prelate of the Church comes to his state or dignity by Simony, and in Simony occupies that office, and holy Churches Goods; I say, that he is a thief, and that by the doom of God, and comes but to steal and kill, Joh. 10. Fur non venit nisi ut furetur, & mactet, & perdat. And furthermore I say, that what Pope, Cardinal, Bishop, Prelate or Priest, in manner of living, or teaching, or laws making contrary to Christs living and his laws, or any other ground put in ruling of the Church or Christi, but by {KING. Ric. 2.} by Christ and his laws, is very Antichrist, adversary to Jesus Christ and his Apostles. Aliud fundamentum nemo potest ponere, præter id quod positum est, quod est Christus. Et patet 1. q. 3. c. Si quis. Et 1. q. 6. c. Ego autem. Quicunque.

The true detestation unto Antichrists. But this worshipful Father Bishop of Hereford, that here is, says thus in his writing; That I William of Swinderby, notwithstanding the forefaid revocation and abjuration (not setting at heart, but from evil to worse, he says, perverted his Diocese) he says, I come running about by divers places; and by mine own folly he says, that I have presumed to preach many herefies, errors, blaſphemies, ſchiſms, and other diffames, and to holy Canons and determination of holy Church contrary and repugnant. Which, where, and when within forth more ſpecially it ſhall be ſhewed, that ye be falſe enformed, that I have presumed in divers places of your Dioceſs to preach herefies, errors, blaſphemies, ſchiſms and other diffames. And ſir, all the Country knows whether this be ſooth or not; for ſir, I presume not, ſithen it is the office of a Priest, by the law of Christ, to preach the Gospel; ne nought I did it for presumption, but for the charge that I have of God by Priesthood (if all I be unworthy) and to the worſhip of God, and help of Christen ſouls, freely without gathering of her goods for my preaching, if I erred in this, I will be amended. And ſir, touching your mandement that ye ſenden to me, there was ſent none. And ſir, I made never yet diſobedience unto you, ne to your Miniſters; and yef all I had, me ows more to obeyche to God than to you, in that ye bidden contrary to Christs bidding. And ſir, as ye ſaine, that I had no mind of my hele, it is too lightly demet; for God forbid, but yef there be hele more than in your bidding; for God wot, for hele I did it, of mine and of the people, and that was in my mind. But ſir, it ſeems me, that ye charge not by evidence of the puniſhing ſo greatly the breaking of Gods heſts, as ye done of your own. And ſir, if it be your will, in default that the people wanted you to teach him (and her Curates did not) by the deſire of them the people that were hungry and thirſty after Gods word, ichone to bear upothers charge as Gods law bids: I preached not for diſobedience to you, but ſir, in fulfilling of the obedience that Gods law bids me do, in excuſing of my ſelf to you of that ye blame me of, in open ſhewing to holy Church, with the proteſtation that I hirſt made, I anſwer thus to the Articles that ye have put to me.

1st Article. {Anno 1390.} Note here how the Papists ſain fal-ſly to revive good men, ſayings and Articles. The firſt is this, that I William of Swinderby the Monday the firſt of Auguſt, the year of our Lord 1390. preaching to the people in the Church of Whitney of your Dioceſs, held and affirmed (as ye ſain) That no Prelate of the world, of what ſtate or degree that he be, having cure of ſouls, being in deadly ſin, and bearing confeſſion of his ſuger, does nought in abſoiling him, ne he abſoiled him not of his ſin; and alſo in amending his ſuget openly ſinning, and him for his deſerts curſing; his ſentence binds not; but if that Prelate be as clean out of deadly ſin as was S. Peter, to whom our Lord gave power of binding and unbinding.

Answer. The Popes binding, how far it extendeth. I never thought this, ne ſpake this, ne heard it, to the time that I ſaw it written in our Book; and that will witneſs, the Lord of the Town that has the ſame Sermon written, and many Gentiles and other that harden me that day. But thus I ſaid, and thus I ſay with proteſtation put before, that there is no man, Pope ne Biſhop, Prelate ne Curate, that binds foothly verily and ghoſtly, but inaſmuch as his binding or unbinding, accords with the Keies of Heaven that God gave to Peter. And as S. Gregory ſays, that power han they only, that hold together the enſample of the Apoſtles with her teaching. Illi ſoli in hac carne poſiti ligandi atque ſolvendi poteſtatem habent, ſicut ſancti Apoſtoli, qui eorum exempla ſimul cum doctrina tenent: gg. li. quarto ſententiarum.

Greg. lib. 4. dem.

2d Article. And what if he had ſaid it? The ſecond Article that is put upon me, is this, that I have ſaid, preached and affirmed in many places before many true men of Christ, That after the Sacramental words ſaid of the Prieſt, having intention of conſecration; That in the Sacrament of Gods Body, is not very Gods Body.

Answer. This ſaid I never God wot, and true men that have heard me.

3d Article. The third Article is this, that our Biſhop puts upon me, that I ſhould have ſaid in many places, and affirmed, That accidents mow not be in the Sacrament of the Altar, without ſubject, and that material bread leaves not therewith Gods body in the Sacrament.

Answer. This Concluſion I have not holden, ne taught, ne preached, for I have not medled me of that matter. my wit ſufficeth not thereto. But here I tell my belief with proteſtation put before, That the Sacrament of the Altar made by vertue of heavenly words, that Chriſt himſelf ſaid in the Cene, when he made this Sacrament, that it is bread and Chriſts body, ſo as Chriſt himſelf ſays in the Goſpel, and S. Paul ſays, and all Doctors in the common law have determined to this ſentence. Mat. 26. Mark 14. Luke 22. Pa. 1 Cor. 10. & 11. de con. diſt. 2. panis: & de conſecr. diſt. 2. Corpus. Io. 6. verus panis.

Bread is Chriſts body, ſo ſays Auſtin. Auſtin. Ep. ad Bonifac.

4th Article. The fourth Article is this, that our Biſhop accuſeth me of, that I ſhould have preached about and ſaid, That a Prieſt being in deadly ſin may not by the ſtrength of the Sacramental words make Gods body, or vote either Sacrament of the Church, either performs to miniſter them to the members of the ſame.

Answer. The wickedneſs of the Prieſt impairs no Sacrament. This I never ſaid, thought it, preached it, ne taught it; for well I wot, the wickedneſs of a Prieſt may appaire no very Sacrament; but the wickedneſs of the Prieſts appaires himſelf, and all that boldneſs and example of his ſin cauſen the people to liven the worſe againſt Gods law. Unde Greg. Et ſi ſacerdos in peccatis fuerit, totus populus ad peccandum convertitur.

5th Article. The fifth Article is this, that our Biſhop puts unto me; That all Prieſts ben of even power in all things, notwithſtanding that ſome of this world bene of higher dignity, or more paſſing in bigneſs of degree.

Answer. Equality of Prieſts. Certes, no man would ſay thus as I ſuppoſe, no more did I, ne never heard it that I wot of; but this I ſay, with proteſtation made before; that what Prieſt lives moſt holily, next following the law of God, he is moſt lover of God, and moſt profitable to the Church. If men ſpeaken of worldly power and lordſhips and worſhips, with other vices that reign therein; what Priest that deſires and has moſt hereof (in what degree ſo he be) he is moſt Antichriſt of all the Prieſts that ben in earth. Unde Auguſtinus ad Valerium ſcribens ait; Nihil eſt in hac vita, & maxime hoc tempore facilius & levius, & hominibus acceptabilius, Epiſcopi, Presbiteri, aut Decani officia: ſed ſi perfunctio-rie aut adulatorie, nihil apud Deum miſerabilius, aut triſtius & damnabilius. Aug. ad Valerium.

6th Article. The ſixth Article is this, That only contrition does away ſin, if a man be duly contrite; and all outward confeſſion by word is ſuperfluous, and not required of need of health.

Answer. Confeſſion. This concluſion ſaid I never that I know of. But thus I ſay with proteſtation put before; that very contrition of heart, that is never without charity and grace, does away all ſins before done of that man that is verily contrite. And all true confeſſion made by mouth outward to a wiſe Prieſt, and a good, profiteth much to man, and it is needful and helping, that men ſhew their life to ſuch, truſting full to Gods mercy, and that he forgives thy ſin. Unde Auguſt. de conſe. diſt. 4. Nemo tollit peccata mundi niſi ſolus Chriſtus, qui eſt agnus tollens peccata mundi.

God forgives eth ſin. Aug. de conſecr. diſt.

7th Article. The ſeventh Article is this, that I ſhould ſay That lower Curates have not here power of binding and aſſoiling by mean of Pope and Biſhop, but of Chriſt without mony. And therefore neither Pope ne Biſhop may revoke ſuch manner power for time and place at her will.

Answer. † Not for thy, that is not withſtanding. Thus ſaid I not, but † not for thy it ſeems me thus, that no man ſhould grant any thing after his own will, ghoſtly ne bodily. But everich man ſhould be well adviſed, that he ſo grant nothing, but if it be the will of God that he grant it. And it is no doubt that ne God grants * by mean perſons, as does Antichriſt to torment Chriſts people. Unde & Joh. 19. ait Pilatus, Neſcis quia poteſtatem habeo dimittere te? Et Chriſtus; Non haberes poteſtatem adverſum me ullam, niſi eſſet tibi datum de ſuper.

* Something here lacketh in the copy.

8th Article. The eighth Article that our Biſhop puts me to, is this, that I ſhould ſay, That the Pope may not grant ſuch manner indulgence of years, for there ſhall not be ſo many years unto the day of doom, as bene contained in his Bulls, or in the Popes indulgences, whereof it follows that Indulgences bene not ſo much worth as they ſemen, and bene preached.

This

Answer. This Article I said not thus; but I say, that the Pope may grant Indulgences written in his Letter of years, all so far forth, that he may grant him in Gods law so far to grant, and further not; years may he grant no mo than God hath set. If indulgence ben forgivenesse of sin, I wot well all only God forgives sin. If it be releasing of pains in purgatory ordainet of God, if God have bidden him releasse so many, or ordained that he should releasse so many, he may then releasse him. If it be in his own disposing to releasse whom him likes, and how much, then he may destroy Purgatory, and let none come there, and releasse his own pain, as charities woos. So it seems he may be liker to be saved, if himself lift. If any go to purgatory, then it seems he full fails charity. If Bulls ben the indulgence that men bringen from the Court, then ben they not so much worth, as they soften there; for lightly they might be loft, drenched or brend, or a Rat might eaten them; his indulgence then were loft. Therefore, sir, have me excuset, I know not these terms; teach me these terms by Gods law, and truly I will learn them.

Against pardons.

9th. Article. The ninth Article is this, that I should have said, That it is not in the Popes power to grant to any man (desing penance) remission from pain, ne from blame.

The Pope proved a blasphemer. I wod I am, but this Article said I not thus lewdly; but thus I say, that fithen it is only due to God to give and to grant plenary remission from pains and from blame; that whatever he be, Pope or other, that presumptuously misfakes upon him that power that is only due to God: in that (in as much as in him is) he makes himself Christ, and blasphemeth God, as Lucifer did, when he said, Ascendam, & ero similis Altissimo. Farther I say, if the Pope hold men of arms, in maintaining his temporalties and lordship to venge him on hem that silten and offenden him, and geves remission to fight and to slay hem that contrarien hem, as men sayden he did by the Bishop of Norwich, not putting his Sword into his sheath, as God commanded Peter, Mitte, &c. he is Anticbristus; for he does contrary to the commandments of Jesus, that bade Peter forgive to his brother seventy sithe seven tithe, Si peccaverit in me frater meus, quotiens dimittam ei? Septies? &c. Et Christus: non dico vibi septies, sed septuagesies septies.

Of this Bp. Spencer Bishop of Norwich, see pag. 488.

10th Article The tenth Article is this, that our Bishop puts to me, that I should have said, That a man giving his alms to any man after his dome (not having need) sins in so giving.

Answer. This Article soothly I said not in these terms; but of this matter I have spoken, and will with protestation made before on this wife; that it is needful to give alms to ich man that asketh it bodily or ghostly, but not to give it to ich shamelesse begger, strong and mighty of body, to get his lifeloode leveful and will not, and in what degree so he be, men owen not to give it to such a one, that he unreasonably asketh, for if he give it to him wittingly, he sins as fautor of his idleneſs. Unde Sap.12. Si benefeceris, scito cui benefeceris. & erit gloria in bonis tuis multa.

He meaneth of begging Friers.

Eleventh Article. The eleventh Article is this, that is put to me, that I should have said, That it is not in the power of any Prelate of what ever private Religion, to grant Letters of the good deeds of her order, ne such Benefices graunted profits not to hele of soules, to hem that they ben graunted to.

Answer. I said never this in these terms; but thus I say with protestation, That Prelates of private Religion mowen graunt Letters of the good deeds of her order; but the ghostly mede that comes of good deeds they mow not graunt, for that is only propriet to God. And if they blind the people in misbelief for her worldly winning, wittingly belsetting hem of her own graunt ghostly medes in heaven by her Letters and her Seal (uncertain, who shall be damned) but make the people bolder to sin by trust of her prayers; bit is none heal to the souls, but harms to that one and to that other. For God shall yeld to ech one after her werks. Ipse reddet unicuique secundum opera sua.

Good deeds of the order profit nothing.

Twelfth Article. The twelfth Article is this, that our Bishop puts to me, That I many times and oft have come (he says) to a desart wood, cleped, Detwalswode of his Diocesse, and there in a Chapel not hallowed, but accurset * shepherds bulk, by mine own folly, he says, have presumed to sing (but rather to curse) in contempt of the Keys.

* Or sheep Coat.

Hereto I say, that this is falsly put upon me of hem that told you this. For it is a Chappel where a Priest sings certain days in the year with great solemnity; and certes, I never song therein seth I was born into this world.

Thirteenth Article. The thirteenth Article is this, That I should also presume to sing in an unhallowed Chappel, that stonds in the Park of Newton, besides the Town of Leyutwardy of this same Diocesse.

Truly I wot not where the place stonds.

Another lie. Fourteenth Article. The fourteenth Article is this, That I should say, that no man owes to swear for any thing, but simply without Oath to affirm or to deny, and if he swear, he sins.

Answer. This Article said I not that I have mind of, in this manner; but oft have I said, and yet will, that men should not swear by any creature by the law of God; and that no man should swear in idel, as wellnigh all the people useth, and therefore methinks it is no need to comfort the people in swearing. For from the old unto the young, and namely men of holy Church breken his heft, and few Bishops purluen hem therefore.

To swear by no creature. Fifteenth Article. The fifteenth Article is this, that I should have taught to true men of Christ, That on no manner they should worship the Image of him that was done on the Crosse, or the Image of the blessed Maid his Mother, or of other Saints into honour and worship of the same ordeinet in the mind of them. And oft sithes the worship of such image he was reprovet, saying and strongly affirming, that Churchmen sinnen and done idolatry.

Answer. This conclusion have I not said in these terms; but this I say with protestation, that God commands in his law in divers places, *Exod.*20. *Levit.*19. *& 26. Deut.*5. & 7. Tobiæ 1. *Baruc.*6. 2. *ad Corin.*10. Esay 45. *Jer.*2.6.8. *& 10.22. & ultimo Sapient.*13. & 14. & 15. *Mac.*2. & Threnorum 4. & postremo; that men should not worshippen graven images that ben werks of mens hands; and also he bids, that men should not make to hem graven images in likeneſs of the things that ben in Heaven, to that end to worshippen hem; sethen neither God ne Christ by his Manhood, gave never commandement to make these images, ne expreſs counsel, ne his Apostles in all his law, ne to worship such that bene made. But well I wot, that by mens own relation, that have misbelevet in hem, that many men sinnen in maumetry, worshipping such dead images: † Not for thy, to tho men ben Images good to whom they have ben but Kalenders, and through the sight of them they knowen the better and worshippen oft God and his Saints. And to such men they done harm that setten her hope and trust in hem, or done any worship to hem against Gods law and his heft. Unde ait Gregorius in regisbro, libro 10. in Epistola ad serenum Episcopum; Si quis imagines facere voluerit, minime prohibe; adorare omnino prohibe. Sed hoc solicite fraternitas tua admoneat, ut ex visione rei gesta ædificationem compunctionis percipiant, ut in adoratione totius trinitatis proſternantur.

Images not to be worshipped.

† Not for thy, that is notwithstanding.

Greg. Regist. lib. 10.

These Conclusions, Points and Articles that I have under protestation, in this Book affirmed, I will stand by hem, and maintain hem (with the grace of almighty God) to the time that the contrary be provet duly by Gods law: And this protestation I make for my faith and my belief as I did at the beginning; that whensoever this worshipful or any other Christian man shews me verily by Gods law the contrary of this, I will wholly forsake hem, and take me to the veray trouth and better understanding of wiser men, ready to be amended by the law of Jesus Christ, and be a true Christen man, and faithful Son of holy Church; and of these I beseech you all bear witness where ye commen.

The firſt ſitting against Wil. Swinderby.

On Thursday the 20th of July, in the year of the Lord aforesaid, We in the Parish Church of North Lidebury aforesaid, about six of the Clock sitting in judgment, after that it was reported unto us, how the foresaid William was personally taken and lawfully cited; caused the same W. then and there openly in judgment to be called out, to do, hear and receive such things, whereto he was afore cited, and to do otherwise that which Justice should perſwade. And the said William appeared neither by himſelf, nor by Proctor; but only by a servant (whose name we know not) he sent a certain Schedule of Paper, made like an Indenture unto us, to excuſe him. After which Schedule, seen, read, and with right deliberation weighed, and in any wise notwithstanding, we adjudged the said William (after he was often called, and long, even to the due hour tarried for, and by no means appearing) worthily obstinate; and for his obstinacy, and for his stubbornesse, we assigned unto him the 29th day of July, in the Church of Ponsley, to appear before us with the foresaid safeguard, to answer more fully to such Articles, and otherwise to hear, receive and do, as before is noted.

The second days Act.

The second sitting against Wil. Swinderby. Upon Saturday being the 29th of July, and in the year of the Lord aforesaid, We John by Gods permiſſion the fore remembred Bishop in the Church of Pontesbury, of our Dioceſs, at six of the clock, or thereabout, sitting in judgment; made the said William of Swinderby to be openly called, that (as was to him appointed and assigned) he should appear before us, to answer to the foresaid Articles more fully, and to declare the said Articles as the darkneſs of his answers did worthily require. And because the said William being called, and for a due time looked for, did make no means to appear, we pronounced him to be obstinate, and for his obstinateneſs (to overcome his malice, and of our exceeding favour) thought good to appoint, and did appoint the 8th. of August, then next following, at Cleobury Mortemere of the same our Dioceſs, unto the said William for the same thing.

The third days Act.

The third sitting against Wil. Swinderby. Upon Tuesday the 8th of August, the year aforesaid, I John by Gods permiſſion Bishop of Hereford aforesaid, in the Church of Cleobury Mortemer, about six of the clock, sitting in judgment, caused the foresaid William Swinderby to be called many times openly, to do and receive about the premiſes, according to the appointment of the same day that Justice should adviſe, which William did not appear at all. Whereupon, we after that the said William was called, and often proclaimed, and long looked for, but appeared not at all, did judge him worthily (as of right appertained) obstinate; and for his obstinateneſs, assigned him the sixteenth day of the same Month of August next following, in the Parish Church of Whitborne of the same our Dioceſs, to bring forth, or to see brought forth, all laws, muniments, and other kinds of proofs, and to see all witneſſes brought forth, admitted and sworn, by whom and which things we intend to prove the foresaid Articles, or at leaſtwise some of the same.

The fourth days Act.

The fourth sitting against Wil. Swinderby. Upon Wednesday the 16th. day of the Month of August the year aforesaid, We John the Bishop in the Parish Church of Whitborn aforesaid of our Dioceſs, sitting in Judgment, caused the said William Swinderby oftentimes to be called, who (as is aforesaid) appeared not at all; whom, after that he was so called, proclaimed, and long looked for, and yet by no means appeared, we pronounced to be obstinate. We received also by certain faithful Christians, and zealous Men for the Catholick Faith of this proceſs mentioned is made before. pag. 532. our Dioceſs, a certain proceſs made, and had at another time against the same William, before the reverend Father in God and Lord, Lord John by the grace of God, Bishop of Lincoln, confirmed by the hanging on of the Seal of the same reverend Father, the Lord Bishop of Lincoln. The tenor whereof word for word is contained before. And these faithful Christians moreover against the obstinateneſs of the said William Swinderby brought forth diſcreet men, Mr. William Leviet, Parson of the Parish Church of Keyserſly, and also Edmund Waterdon, Parish Chaplain of the Chappel of N. and Roger Newton, and Hugh Sheppert, Lay men of the Dioceſs of Lincoln, asking instantly that they might be received for witneſſes, to prove some of the foresaid Articles, whom against the obstinateneſs of the said William Swinderby, we thought good to receive and did receive, and their Oaths on the holy Gospels of God, being laid hands on corporally in our hand: And did diligently examine them in proper perſon severally in form of law; whose sayings and depoſitions are afterward brought in, and at the inſtance of the same faithful Christians, we assigned the second day of September then next following, to the said William Swinderby, to say and alledge against the said Proceſs, Witneſſes, and their sayings, in the said Church of Whitborn; decreeing that a Copy should be made for him of these things that were brought forth, and of the depoſitions of the Witneſſes. Here we fail in our Copy, till the Regiſter come to our hands again.

2d. Conclusion. * To the second Conclusion that he faien is error or herefie, that toucheth taking away of the temporalties and of lordships of Priests that been evil livers.

Declaration I say,the seemeth that the Conclusion is true, and is this, that it were needful and leeful to secular Lords by way of charity, and by power given to them of God, in default of Prelates that amend nought by Gods Law ; curfed Curates that openly misuse the goods of the holy Church, that ben poor mens goods ; and customably ayens the Law of God, (the which poor men Lords ben holden to maintain and defend) to take away, and to draw from such Curates, poor mens goods in help of the poor, and their own wilful offerings, and their bodily alms deeds of worldly goods, and give them to such as duly serven God in the Church, and ben ready in upbearing of the charge that Prelates shoulden do, and done it not. And as anencles taking away of temporalties, I say thus, that it is leeful to Kings, to Princes, to Dukes, and to Lords of the world, to take away from Popes, from Cardinals, from Bishops, Prelates, and possessioners in the Church, their temporalties and their alms that they have given them upon condition, that they shoulden serve God the better ; when they verily seen that their giving and taking ben contrary to the law of God, contrary to Christs living, and his Apostles ; and namely, in that they taken upon them that they shoulden be next followers of Christ and his Apostles in poorneſs and meekneſs, to be secular Lords against the teaching of Christ and of Saint Peter. Truly me seemeth that all christen men, and namely Priests shoulden take keep, that their doing were according with the law of God, either the old law, either the new. The Priests of the old law were forbidden to have lordships among their brethren ; for God said, that he would be their part and their heritage. And Christ that was the highest Priest of the New Testament forsook worldly lordship, and was here in form of a servant, and forbad his Priests such Lordships, and said, Reges gentium dominantur eorum, &c. vos autem non sic ; that is, The Kings of the Heathen bear dominion and rule, &c. but you shall not do so. And as St. Peter saith, Neque dominantes in clero, &c. Not bearing rule and dominion of the Clergy, &c. So it seemeth me, that it is against both laws of God, that they have such Lordships, and that their title to such Lordships is not full good. And so it seemeth me, that if they have been thereto of evil living, it is no great peril to take away from them such Lordships, but rather needful, if the taking away were in charity, and not for singular covetouſneſs, ne wrath. And I suppose, that if Friers that been bounden to their founders to live in poverty, would break their rule and take worldly Lordships ; might not men lawfully take from them such Lordships, and make them to live in poverty as their rule would ? And forsooth, it seemeth me, that Priests oughten also well to keep Christs rule, as Friers owen to keep the rule of their founder. Jeremy witneſseth, how God commended Rechab's children, for that they would not break their faders bidding in drinking of wine ; and yet Jeremy proffered them Wine to drink. And so I trow, that God would commend his Priests if they woulden forsake worldly Lordships, and holden them apayed with lifelot, and with clothing, and bene them fait about their heritage of Heaven. And God saith Numer. 18. In terra eorum nihil poſſidebitis, nec tenebitis partem inter eos : Ego pars & hæreditas veſtra in medio filiorum Iſrael, &c. Et Deut. 18. Non habebitis Sacerdotes & Levitæ, & omnes qui de eadem tribu eſtis, partem & hæreditatem cum reliquo Iſrael ; quia ſacrificia Domini & oblationes ejus comedunt, & nihil accipiunt de poſſeſſione fratrum ſuorum. Dominus enim ipſe hæreditas ipſorum, ſicut locutus eſt illis. Et Lucæ 14. Sic ergo omnis ex vobis, qui non renunciaverit omnibus quæ poſſidet, non poteſt meus eſſe diſcipulus. The Lord himſelf is their poſſeſſions, as he ſpake unto them. And the 14th. Chapter of Luke, Even ſo every one of you, which forſaketh not all that he poſſeſſeth, cannot be my Diſciple. And Jerome in his 14th. Epiſtle hath the like words. And Bernard in his 20th. Chryſoſtome* upon the Goſpel of S. Matth. &c.

{KING} Lib. 2.

3d. Conclusion.

* The third Concluſion toucheth the matter of preaching of Prieſts, withouten leave of Biſhops, and is this, That ſuch Prieſts may counſel ſinful men, that leaven to them their ſins, after the wit and cunning that God hath given, to turn hem from ſin to vertuous life.

Declaration As touching preaching of the Goſpel, I ſay that no Biſhop oweth to let a true Prieſt, that God hath giften grace, wit and cunning to do that office. For both Prieſts and Deacons that God hath ordained Deacons or Prieſts bene holden, by power given to them of God, to preach to the people the Goſpel, and namely and ſoverenly, Popes, Biſhops, Prelates and Curates ; for this is due to the people and the Pariſhioners, to have it and ask it. And hereto ſeemeth me, that Chriſt ſaid generally to his Diſciples ; Ite & prædicate Evangelium cmni creaturæ, Go and preach the Goſpel to all creatures, as well as he ſaid, Ite & baptizate omnes gentes, Go and baptiſe all Nations ; and alſo as well longeth preaching to Prieſts without leave of a Biſhop, as doth baptiſing ; and then why may he not preach Gods Word withouten a Biſhops leave ? And ſithen Chriſt bod his Prieſts preach, who ſhould forbidden them preach ? The Apoſtles were forbidden of a Biſhop at Jeruſalem, to ſpeak more of the name of Jeſus, but Peter ſaid, Si juſtum eſt in conſpectu Dei, vos potius audire quam Dominum, judicate ; that is, Whether it be juſt in the ſight of God to hear and obey you before the Lord, be ycur ſelves Judges. A Biſhop may not lett a Prieſt of giving bodily alms in his Dioceſs ; much more may he not lett the doing of ſpiritual alms in his Dioceſs by Gods law. A Prieſt may ſay his Mattens withouten the Biſhops leave ; for the Pope, that is above the Biſhop, hath charged Prieſts therewith : And me thinketh, that Chriſts bidding ſhould be all ſo much of charge as the Popes, Mat. 10. Euntes autem prædicate. Ite, ecce ego mitto vos. Et Mar. 16. Euntes in mundum univerſum, &c. Lucæ 10. Et Anacletus Pap. Diſt. 21. *cap. In Novo Teſtamento. Et Beda ſuper illud ; Meſſis quidem multa. {KING} Lib. 2. 4th. Conclusion.

* The fourth Concluſion toucheth the Sacrament of the Altar, and is this.

Declaration That wholly I believe that the Sacrament of the Altar, made by vertue of heavenly words, is bread and Chriſts body ; ſo as Chriſt himſelf ſaith in the Goſpel, and as S. Paul ſaith, and as Doctors in the common law have determined ; to this ſentence John 6. Moſes hath not given you bread from Heaven, but my father will give you bread from Heaven. He is the true bread that came down from Heaven, and giveth life unto the World. My father giveth unto you bread indeed ; the very true bread of God is that, which came down from Heaven, and giveth life unto the World. I am the bread of life ; The bread which I will give is my fleſh. And in the Canon of the Maſs, Panem ſanctum vitæ æternæ, the holy bread of life. And Corinthians the tenth Chapter and firſt Epiſtle, The bread which we break, is it not the communicating of the body of the Lord ? Let a man prove himſelf, and ſo eat of that bread, &c. And Canon De conſecratione. diſtinct. 2. under the authority of Hilarius the Pope, Corpus Chriſti quod ſumitur de altari, &c. And Auguſtine in the foreſaid diſt. That which is ſeen is bread. &c. That which faith requireth, is bread and is the body of Chriſt. And in the foreſaid diſtinction, cap. Omnia quæcunque, &c. By theſe two ſentences it is manifeſtly declared, that that bread and this be not two, but one bread and one fleſh. Note the words, for that he faith the bread and fleſh. And the Author, De divinis officiis, and alſo Auguſtine in his Book De remeditis pœnitentiæ ; Why preparelt thou thy teeth, &c? And Ambroſe, De Sacramentis, de conſecratione, diſt. 2. Revera mirabile eſt, &c. This meat which you receive, and this bread of one which deſcended from Heaven, doth miniſter the ſubſtance of eternal life, and whoſoever ſhall eat the ſame ſhall not die everlaſtingly, and is the body of Chriſt. Note how he ſaith, and is the body of Chriſt.

5th. Conclusion. * The fifth Article telleth of forgiveneſs of ſins, and is this : That very contrition withouten charity and grace, do away all ſins before done of that man that is verily contrite ; and all true confeſſion made by mouth outwardly to a wiſe Prieſt and a good, profiteth much to a man, and it is needful and helping, that men ſhew their life to ſuch, trulting fully to Gods mercy, that he forgiveth the ſin.

Declaration

Remiſſion double. And hereto I ſay, that there been two remiſſions of ſin ; one that belongeth only to God, and that remiſſion is the cleanſing of the ſoul from ſin : and the other remiſſion, a certifying that one man certifieth another, that his ſins been forgiven of God, if he be ſorry with all his heart for them, and is in full will to leave them for ever ; and this manner of forgiveneſs longeth to Prieſts. Of the firſt manner of forgiveneſs David ſaith, And I ſaid, I will confeſs my unrighteouſneſs unto the Lord, and thou forgaveſt me my miſdeed. And Zechary ſaith, And thou, O child, ſhalt be called the Prophet of the higheſt, &c. To give knowledge of ſalvation unto his people for the remiſſion of their ſins, by the bowels of Gods mercy. And John Baptiſt, Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the ſins of the world. And Saint John the Evangeliſt ſaith in his Epiſtle, If we confeſs our ſins, he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, and cleanſe us from all our iniquity. And it followeth, If any man ſin, we have an Advocate with the Father, even Jeſus Chriſt, and he is that is the propitiation for our ſins. And of the other remiſſion of ſins, Chriſt ſpeaketh in the Goſpel, and ſaith, Whoſe ſins ye forgive they ſhall be forgiven. And mans forgiveneſs availeth little, but if God forgive our ſins through his grace.

6th. Conclusion. * The ſixth Concluſion toucheth indulgences and pardons that the Pope granteth in his Bulls ; and men callen it an Abſolution A pœna & culpa.

Declaration Either there is no Purgatory, or elſe the Pope is cruel & unchariable.

Of this manner of ſpeech I cannot find in the Goſpel, ne in no place of holy Writ, ne I have not read that Chriſt uſed this manner of remiſſion, ne none of his Apoſtles. But as me ſeemeth, if the Pope had ſuch a power, ſithen the pains after a mans death been much greater than any bodily pains of the world ; me thinketh he ſhould of charity keep men out of ſuch pains, and then men needed not to find ſo many vicious Priests, after their life, to bring their ſouls out of Purgatory. Another thing me thinketh, that ſith the Popes power ne may not keep us in this world from bodily pains, as from cold, from hunger, from dread, from ſorrow and other ſuch pains, how ſhould his power help us from ſpiritual pains, when we been dead ? But for that no man cometh after his death to tell us the ſooth of what pain they been, men mow tell thereof what him luſt. Saint John ſaith in his Apocalyps, that he ſaw under the Altar the ſouls of them which were ſlain for the Word of God, and for the teſtimony which they had. And they did cry with a loud voice, ſaying, How long Lord holy and true, doſt not thou revenge our blood of them which dwell on the earth ? And white ſtoles were given to every of them to reſt a while, till the number of their fellow ſervants and brethren ſhould be fulfilled, which alſo remained to be ſlain as they were, &c. Here ſeemeth it, that theſe ſouls were not aſſoiled a pœna, that is, from pain ; for their deſire is not fulfilled. And they were bidden abide awhile, and that is a pain. And if Martyrs were not aſſoiled from pain, it is hard for any man to ſay, that he aſſoileth other men a pœna. Alſo good mens ſouls have not but ſpiritual bliſs, and they want bodily bliſs, until their Reſurrection in the day of doom. And after they deſired to have that bliſs, and abiden it, and that is pain to them. And I cannot ſee that the Pope hath power to bring him from this pain. But if any man can ſhew me, that he hath ſuch a power granted in the ſooth of holy Writ, I will gladly leeſen it.

If the Martyrs being dead, be not aſſured from their pains of Purgatory, much leſs can they aſſoile others from pains of Purgatory.

The Pope hath no power ground d upon Scripture, to bring from pain of purgatory.

7th Conclusion. * The ſeventh point ſpeaketh of the Pope, and is this ; Sith it is only due to God, as I have ſaid before, to geve and to grant plenar remiſſion from pain, and from blame ; that whatſoever he be, Pope or other, that preſumptuouſly miſtaketh upon him the power that is only due to God, in that, inaſmuch as in him is, he maketh himſelf even with Chriſt, and blaſpheneth God, as Lucifer did, when he ſaid, Aſcendam, & ero ſimilis altiſſimo ; that is, I will aſcend, and be like the higheſt, &c.

The Pope maketh himſelf even with Chriſt.

For that I ſay, if the Pope hold men of arms in maintaining of his temporal Lordſhip, to venge him on them that gilten and offenden him, and geveth remiſſion to fight and to ſley them, that contrarieu him, as been ſayden he did by the Biſhop of Norwich, not putting his ſword in his ſheath, as God commanded to Peter, he is Antichriſt. For he doth the contrary of the commandment of Jeſus Chriſt, that bad Peter forgiven to his brother ſeventy ſithe ſeven ſithe. Well I find in the Goſpel, that when Chriſt ſent his Diſciples to Samaria, the Samaritans would not receive them. And ſome of them bidden Chriſt, that he ſhould make fire come down from Heaven, to deſtroy the City. And he blamed them and ſaid, Neſcitis cujus ſpiritus eſtis, Filius hominis non venit animan perdere, ſed ſalvare. That is, ye know not of what ſpirit ye are ; The Son of Man is not come down to deſtroy, but to ſave the lives and ſouls of men, &c. If Chriſt then come to ſave men, and not to ſlay them ; who that doth the reverſe hereof, is againſt Chriſt, and then he is Antichriſt. Chriſt bad Peter put his ſword into his ſheath and ſaid, Omnes qui gladium acceperunt gladio peribunt : That is, all which take the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword. And I cannot find that Peter drew out his ſword after that time, but ſuffered as Chriſt ſaid, Cum ſenueris, alius cinget te, & ducet te quo tu non vis : That is, When thou ſhalt wax old, another ſhall gird thee, and lead thee whether thou wilt not. And therefore, ſaid Peter, Chriſt ſuffered for us, leaving us example that we ſhould follow his ſteps. And Paul ſaith, Not defending your ſelves, but give place to anger, leave revienging to me and I ſhall reward them, &c. And therefore it ſeemeth to me, that it is much againſt Chriſts lore, that his Vicar ſhould be a fighter ; ſithen that he mote be a Shepherd, that ſhould go before his ſheep, and let them come after him, and not with ſwords to drive them away from him. For as Chriſt ſaith, A good ſhepherd ſhall put his life for his ſheep. And ziſ all that Chriſt had two ſwords, when that he was taken of the Jews, he ſaid himſelf it was for that the Scriptures moten zif be fulfilled, Quoniam cum iniquis deputatus eſt ; that is, He was reputed among the wicked ; and not to figure two ſwords that men ſayen the Pope hath to govern with the Church. And when I ſee ſuch doings of the Pope, and many other that accorden not with Chriſts lore, ne his living ; and when I read divers Scriptures of holy Writ, I am ſoul aſtonied whether they ſhoulden be underſtood of him, or of any other. And I pray you for Gods love tell me the ſooth. Chriſt ſaith, Many ſhall come in my name, ſaying,

The Popes power can keep none from bodily pain. Every man muſt live from ſickneſs.

Two Swords given to the Pope.

ing, I am Christ, and shall seduce many, &c. Christ (I wot well) is as much to say, as he that is anointed, and two anointings there were in the law, one of Kings, another of Priests. And Christ was both King and Priest, and so the Pope saith that he is. And if all that have been Emperours of Rome, and other Heathen Kings have been Antichrists, they come not in Christs name. But whoso cometh in Christs name, and feigneth himself Christs friend, and he be privily his enemy, he may lightly beguile many. Saint Paul saith, before there cometh a defection first and the son of perdition shall be revealed, which is the adversary, and is extolled above all that is named God, or which is worthipped; so that he shall sit in the Temple of God, shewing himself as God. And it followeth in the same place; and now ye know what holdeth till he bereveiled in his time, for he worketh already the mystery of iniquity. Only he that holdeth, let him hold till he come abroad, and then that wicked one shall be revealed, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the spirit of his mouth, &c. And St. John saith in the Apocalyps, I saw another Beast ascending out of the earth, and two horns like to the Lamb. He spake like the Dragon, and had the power of the first Beast. Many such authorities attonied me oft sithes; and therefore I pray you, for the love of God, to tell me what they mean.

Two sorts of anointings in Scripture.

A defection in Antichrists time.

The Sentence.

Mention was made of this Schedule before in the first days Ad, Pag. 537.

THe which Schedule aforementioned, with the contents thereof, diligently of us perused, we considering that Diseases, which be not easily cured with gentle remedy, must have harder plasters; considering moreover, these his Articles, with his answers to the same, and to other Articles also lastly against him produced; first mature deliberation had before upon the whole matter, with the foresaid Masters and Doctors, as well seculär as regular, to a great number, observing in the same all things to be observed in this behalf, have given sentence against the said William in form as followeth.

The sentence given against him.

The name of Christ being invocated, We John by the permission of God, Bishop of Hereford, sitting in Tribunal Seat, having God before our eyes, weighing and considering the Articles by the foresaid faithful Christians put up against the said Swinderby, pretending himself to be Priest, with his answers upon the same, Actis & Actitatis before us in the cause of Heretical perversity, with mature deliberation had before in this behalf, with Masters and Doctors of Divinity, and also of other faculties, with their counsel and consent; Do pronounce, decree and declare the said William to have been and to be an Heretick, Schismatick, and a false informer of the people, and such as is to be avoided of faithful Christians. Wherefore we admonish, under the pain of the law, all and singular Christians, of what sex, state, condition or preheminence soever, that neither they nor any of them within our Diocese, or any other, do believe, receive, defend, or favour the said William, till he shall deserve fully to be reconciled to the bosom again of holy Church.

The Appeal of William Swinderby, from this sentence of the Bishop prefixed, unto the King and his Conneil.

The Appeal of William Swinderby from the Bishop to the King and his Council.

IN nomine Patris, & Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, Amen. I William Swinderby, Priest, knowledge openly to all Men, that I was before the Bishop of Hereford the third day of October, and before many other good Clerks, to answer to certain Conclusions of the Faith that I was accused of. And mine Answer was this, that if the Bishop or any man couthe shew me by Gods law, that my Conclusions or my Answers were error or heresie, I would be amended, and openly revoke them before all the people.

4 Something there lacketh in the Copy.

* Knowes in any of my Conclusions, but sayden singly with sword, that there was errors in them, and bidden me subject me to the Bishop, and put me into his grace, and revoke mine error, and shewed me nought by Gods law ne reason, ne proved which they weren. And for I would not knowledge me guilty, so as I knew no error in them, of which I should be guilty, therefore the Bishops sate in doom in mine absence, and deemed me an Heretick, a Schismatick, and a teacher of errors, and denounced me accursed, that I come not to correction of the Church, and therefore for this unrighteful Judgment, I appeal to the Kings Justices for many other causes.

{KING Ric. 2.}

The Kings Court above the Bishops Court.

One cause is, for the Kings Court in such matter is above the Bishops Court; for after that the Bishop has accursed, he may no fear by his law, but then more be fech succour of the Kings law and by a Writ of Significavit put a man in Prison.

The second cause is, for in cause of Heresie there liggeth judgment of death, and that dome may not be given without the Kings Justices. For the Bishop will say, Nobis non licet interficere quemquam: That is, It is not lawful for us to kill any man, as they saiden to Pilate when Christ should be doomed. And for I think that no Justice will give sodainly an untrue doom, as the Bishop did, and therefore openly I appeal to hem, and send my Conclusions to the Knights of the Parliament, to be shewed to the Lords, and to be taken to the Justices, to be well avisèt or that they geven doom.

What is an Heretick.

The third cause is, for it was a false doom; for no man is an Heretick, but he that masterfully defendeth his error or heresie, and stifly maintains it. And mine answer has been alway conditional, as the people openly knows, for even I say, and yet say, and alway will; That if they cannen shew me by Gods law that I have erret, I will gladly have amended, and revoke mine errors, and so I am no Heretick, ne nevermore in Gods grace will bon en no wise.

The Bishops law of condemnation filled between and 10 years.

The fourth cause is, for the Bishops saw, that they doom men by, is full of errors and heresies, contrary to the truth of Christs law of the Gospel.

For there, as Christs law bids us love our enemies, the Popes law gives us leave to hate them, and to sley them, and grants men pardon to werren against Heathen Men, and sley hem. And there as Christs law teaches us to be merciful, the Bishops law teaches to be wretchful. For death is the greatest wreth that men mowen done to him that guilty is.

Whereas Christs law teaches us, to blessen him that diseazen us, and to pray for him; the Popes law teacheth us to curse them, and in their great sentence that they usen, they presume to damn hem to Hell that they cursen. And this is a foul heresie of blasphemy; thereas Christs law bids us be patient, the Popes laws justifies two swords, wherewith he smiteth the sheep of the Church. And he has made Lords and Knights to swear to defend him and his Church.

The contrary between the Pope and Christ.

There as Christs law forbiddeth us lechery, the Popes law justifies the abominable whoredom of common women, and the Bishops in some place have a great Tribute or Rent of Whoredom.

There as Christs law bids to minister spiritual things freely to the people; the Pope with his law sells for money, after the quantity of the gift, Pardons, Orders, Blessings and Sacraments, and Prayers, and Benefices, and preaching to the people, as it is known amongst them.

There as Christs law teaches peace; the Pope with his law assoiles men for money to gader the People, Priests, and other to fight for his cause.

There as Christs law forbids swearing; the Popes law justifieth swearing, and compels men thereto.

Whereas Christs law teacheth his Priest to be poor; the Pope with his law justifies and maintains Priests to be Lords.

The curse wrongfully given forth from the Pope.

And yet the fifth cause is, for the Popes law, that Bishops demen men by, is the same unrighteful law that Christ was demert by of the Bishops, with the Scribes and with the Phariseos. For right as at that time they gaven more credens to the two false witnesses that witnessed against Christ, than they deden to all the people that witnessfeden to his true preaching and his Miracles; so the Bishops of the Popes law geven more leven by their law to two Hereticks and Apostates, or two comen women that woulden witnessfeden againes a man in the cause of heresie, than two thousands of people that were true and good. And for the Pope is this Antichrist, and his law contrary to Christ his law, fully I forsake this law, and so I reed all Christen men. For thus by another point of this law they mighten conquer much of this world; For what they can, by this law present a man an Heretick, his goods shulen be forfeit from him {KING Ric. 2.} him and from his Heirs, and so might they lightly have two or three false witnesses to record an heretie again what true man so hem liked. Herefore me thinks, that whatsoever that I am a Christen man, I may lawfully appeal from a false doom of the Law, to be righteously demeet by the trouth of Gods Law. And if this appeal will not serve, I appeal openly to my Lord Jesus Christ that shall deme all the world, for he, I wot well, will not spare for no man to deeme a trouth. And therefore I pray God Almighty with David in the Sauter Book, Deus judicium tuum regi da, & justitiam tuam filio regis; judicare populum tuum in justitia & pauperes tuos in judicio. That is, O God, give thy judgment to the King, and thy justice to the Kings Sons, to judge thy people in justice, and thy poor ones in judgment, &c.

A faithful Letter to the Lords and Burgesses of the Parliament.

A Letter sent to the Nobles and Burgesses of the Parliament, by Master William Swinderby.

JEsus that art both God and Man, help thy people that loven thy Law, and make known through thy grace thy teaching to all Christen men. Dear Sirs, so as we seen by many tokens that this world draws to an end, and all that ever have been brought forth of Adams kind into this world shulen come togeder at Domesday, rich and poor, schone to geve accompt and receive after his deeds, joy or paynen for evermore: Therefore make we our werkes good, ye while that God of mercy abides, and be ye stable and true to God, and ye shulen see his help about you. Constantes eftote & videbitis auxilium Domini super vos. This Land is full of Ghostly Cowards; mighotly battel few dare stand. But Christ that comforter of all that falleth (to that his Heart brast for our love) against the fiend the doughty Duke comforteth us thus; Eftote fortes in bello, &c. Be ye strong in battel, he sayes, and Fight ye with the old Adder. State in fide, viriliter agite, &c. Wake ye and pray ye, stond ye in believe, do ye manly and be ye comfortet, and let all your things be done with charity. For Saint Paul that saw the privities of God in Heaven, bids thus in the Epistle; Evigilate juste, &c. Awake ye that been righteous men, be ye stable and unmoveable: Awake ye quickly and sleep nought, and stond now strongly for Gods Law. For Saint John in the Apocalyps sayes, Blessed he he that awakes; for nought to sleepers but to wakers God has behite the Crown of Life. For the hour is now, as S. Paul saith to us, from sleep for to rise, for he that early awakes to me, he shall find me, saith Christ himself. This awaking Ghostly is good living out of sin: This sleep betokens that which Cowardesh a mans heart from Ghostly comfort, and to stand in the same through a deceiveable sleep is this that lets a Man of the bliss of Heaven: The fiend makes men bold in sin, and ferd to do worship to God: death is a likening to a Thiefe that privily steals upon a man that now is rich, and full of wele, anon he makes him a needy wretche Therefore said God by Saint John in the Apocalyps in this wise, Be thou waking, for if thou wake nought, I shall come to thee as a Thiefe, and thou shalt not wit what hour. And if the Husbandman (sayes Christ) wist what hour the Thiefe should come, he would wake and suffer him not to undermine his house. Saint Peter therefore warneth and saith; Wake and be ye ware, suffer ye no man (he sayes) as a Thiefe, but willingly for Gods love; for it is time. as Peters sayes, that doome begin from the House of God. Te been the Body of Christ, sayes Paul, that needs must suffer with the head, or else your bodies been but dead and departed from Christ that is the head. And therefore curset be he, sayes Paul, that loves not Jesus Christ. And who it is that loves him, Christ himself tels in the Gospel; he that has my hests, and keepes them, he it is that loves me. Cursed be he therefore, sayes Paul, that doth Christs works deceiveably. Be ye not therefore, sayes Paul, ashamed of the true witnes of Jesus Christ; for Christ our God says in the Gospel, He that shames me and my words, him shall mans Son ashame, when he shall come for to set in the siege of his Majesty. And each man, he says, that knows me and my words before men in this sinful Generation, and whorish, Mans son shall knowledge him before my Father, says Christ himself, when he shall come with his Angels in the Glory of his Father. Sith ye therefore been Christen men, that is to say, Christs men, shew in deed that ye been such as ye daren shew you the Kings men; for his had been, as Peter says, better not to have known the way of truth, then after the knowing thereof to be converted backward therefrom. We knowen Christ, that is trought; we sain all through our belief, if we turn from him for dred, truly we deny the troth. And therefore sith our time is short, how short no man knows but God, do we the good that we may to Gods worship, when we have time. Be true, says God, to the death, and you shall have the Crown of life. And think on Judas Maccabaeus, that was Gods true Knight, that comforted heartily Gods true people, to be the followers of his Law. And geve ye, he said, your lives for the Testament of your Fathers. And ye shulen win, he said, great joy, and a name for evermore. Was not Abraham, he said, in temptation founden true, and *Reckoned was * areëset unto him evermore to righteousness? Joseph in time of his anguish he kept truly Gods best, he was made by Gods providence Lord of* Egypt, for his troth. Phinees our fadure loving, he saith, the zeal of God, took the Testament of everlasting Priesthood. Josua, for he fulfillet the Word of God, was doomes man in Israel. Caleph, that witnessed in the Church, he took therefore the Heritage, he saith: David in his mercy he gat the Siege of the Kingdom in Worlds: Hell, for that he loved the zeal of Gods Law, was taken up into heaven. Ananny, Azary, and Misael, he says, weren delivered thoore through true belief out of the hoat flame of fire. True Daniel in his simplenes was deliverest from the Lions mouth. Betlink ye therefore, he says, by Generation and Generation, and thou shalt never find that he failed that man that truly trusted in him. And therefore dread you nought, he says of the words of a sinful man; his glory is, he says but worms and tords: he is to day, he saith, ymade by, to morrow, he says, he is not founden; for he is turned, he says, into his Earth again, and the mind of him is perisbet. Sons therefore, he says, by ya comfortet, and dy manly in the Law: For when ye han done that that God commands you to do, ye shulen be glorious in him. And King David says also on this wise in the Psalter Book: Blesset be they (Lord) that keepen thy Law, in Worlds of Worlds they shall praise thee. And in Levit. says God thus, Gif that ye wenden in mine bests, and keepen my commandements, and done hem, Psal. 119. Levit. 26. shall bring forth their Fruit, and Trees shall be fulfilled with Apples. And ye shall eat your Bread in fulnes, ye shulen dwell in your Land without dred; I shall give peace in your coasts, ye shall sleep and no man shall fear you. Evil beasts I shall done away from you, and sword shall not pass your terms, ye shulen pursue your Enemies, and they shall fall before you; fifty of yours shulne pursue an hundreth of beren, an hundret of yours, a thousand of theirs: your Enemies, he saith, shulen fall through sword, and your sute: I shall, he says, behold you and make you to wax, and ye shall be multiplier: And I shall strength with you my covenant, ye shall eat the aldest, and the new shall come in thereon. And ye shulne cast forth the old: I shall dwell in the midst of you. And I shall wend among you, and I shall be your God, and ye shulne be my people. If that ye hear me not, ne done nought all my bests, but despisen my law and my doomes, and that ye done not tho things that of me been ordenet, and breaken my commandments and my convenants; I shall do these things to you. I shall visit you surely in neue and brenning, which shall dimme your eghenen, and shall waste your lives about nought. Ye shulne sow your seed, for bit shall be devoures of Enemies, I shall put put my face against you, and ye shall fall before your Enemies. And ye shullen be underlings to them that han hatet you, ye shall flee, no man pursuing. And if ye will not be buxome to me, I shall add thereunto thrinne and sevenfold blame. And I shall all to brast the hardnes of you, I shall geve the Heaven above you as Iron, and the Earth as Brass. About nought shall your labour be, for the Earth shall bring you forth no Fruit, no Tree shall geve none Apples unto you. If that ye wenden against me, and will not hear me, I shall add hereto sevenfold wounds for your sins. I shall send amongst you Beasts of the field that shall devoure you and your Beasts, I shall bring you into a field, and ways shulne be desart. And if that ye will not receive lore, but wenden against me, I will also wenden against you, and I shall smite you seven sithes for your sins. I shall lead in upon you sword, venger of my covenant: and upon the fleen into Cities I shall send Pestilence in the midest of you. So that tenne women shall bake their Bread in one furnace, and yield them again by weight, and ye shall eat, and be not fillet. If that ye hear me not by these things, but wenden against me, I shall wend in against you in a contrary woodnesse, and blame you with seven plagues for your sins, so that they soulene eat the flesh of your Sons and of your Daughters. And insomuch my soul shall loth you, that I shall bring your Cities into wildernesse, and your Sanctuaries I shall make desart, no I shall not ever that receive sweet odor of your Mouth. And I shall disperkle your Land, and Enemies shullen marvel thereon, when they shulen inhabit it, I shall sperkle you among heathen, and draw my sword after you. These vengeances and many moe God said should fall on them that break his bidding, and despiseth his laws, and his doomes. Then saith Christ become man, and bought us with his heavt bleod, and has shewed us so great love, and given us an easie law, of the best that ever might be made, and to bring us to the joy of Heaven, and we despise it and loven it nought: what vengeance will be taken hereon, so long as he has suffered us, and so mercifully abidden, when he shall come that righteous judge in the clouds to deme this world? Therefore turn we us to him, and leave sin that he hates, and over all things maintain his law that he confirmed with his death. For other laws, that men had made, should be demed at that day by the just Law of Christ, and the maker that them made: and then we won that long life and that joy that Paul speaketh of, that eye ne see nas, ne ear heard not, ne into mans heart ascended not, the bliss and joy that God hath ordained to them that loven him and his laws.

Dear worshipful Sirs in this World, I beseech you for Christs love, as ye that I trow loven Gods law and truth (that in these days is greatly born aback) that they wollen worchipe these things that I send you written to Gods worship, to let them be shewed in the Parliament, as your wits con best conceive, to most worship to our God, and to shewing of the trouth and amending of holy Church. My conclusion, and mine appeal, and other true matters of Gods law (gif any man can find therein error, falsenesse, or defalt, prover by the Law of Christ clearly to Christen mens knowledge) I shall revoke my wrong conceit, and by Gods law be amended: ever ready to hold with Gods law openly and privily with Gods grace, and nothing to hold, teach, or maintain that is contrary to his law.

The faithfull request of William Swinderby.

¶ Of this proces, answers, and condemnation of this worthy Priest, and true servant of Christ, William Swinderby, you have heard. What afterward became upon him I have not certainly to say or affirm; whether he in prison died, or whether he escaped their hands, or whether he was burned, there is no certain relation made. This remaineth out of doubt, that during the life of King Richard the Second no great harm was done unto him. Which was to the year 1401. at what time King Richard being wrongfully depoled, Henry the Fourth invaded the Kingdom of England. About the beginning of whose reign we read of a certain Parliament holden at London, mentioned also of Thomas Walden (as is above specified) in which Parliament it was decreed; That whosoever shewed themselves to be favourers of Wickliff, who at that time were called Lollards, they should be apprehended, and if so be they did obstinately persevere in that Doctrine, they should be delivered over unto the Bishop of the Diocese, and from him should be committed unto the secular Magistrate. This law (saith the Story) brought a certain Priest unto punishment the same year, who was burned in Smithfield in the presence of a great number. This have we drawn out of a piece of an old Story: and it is moft certain that there such a Priest was burned for the affirmation of the true faith; but it doth not appear by the Story what the Priests name was. Notwithstanding by divers conjectures it appeareth unto me that his name was Swinderby, that was forced to recant before the Bishop of Lincoln. Whereby what is to be conjectured by the premisses, let other men judge what they think, I have nothing hereof expreslly to affirm. This is plain for all men to judge (which have here seen and read his Story) that if he were burned, then the Bishops, Friers, and Priests, which were the causes thereof, have a great thing to answer to the Lord, when he shall come to judge the quick and the dead, & seculum per ignem.

The story and proces against Walter Brute.

The Story of Walter Brute a Britain.

After the story of William Swinderby, I thought good and convenient next to adjoyn the acts and doings of Walter Brute his joynt fellow and companion, being a Lay-man, and learned; brought up as it feemeth in the Univerlity of Oxford, being there also graduate. The tractation of wose discourse, as it is something long: So therein may appear divers things worthy to be read and confidered.

First, the mighty operation of Gods Spirit in him, his ripe knowledge, modeft fimplicity, his valiant conftancy, his learned tractations and manifold conflicts fuftained againft Gods Enemies. On the contrary part in his adverfaries may appear Might againft Right, mans authority againft plain verity; againft which they, having nothing directly to anfwer, proceed in condemnation againft whom they are able to bring forth no confutation. The chiefeft occafion, that feemed to ftir up the heart and zeal of this Walter againft the Pope, was the impudent pardons and indulgences of Pope Urban, granted to Henry Spencer Bifhop of Norwich, to fight againft Pope Clement, mentioned before Pag. 508. Secondly, the wrongful condemnation of the Articles and conclufions of William Swinderby; the whole Order whereof, in the proces here following, more plainly may appear.

Ex regiſtro Epiſc. Lincol.

The proces had by John Bifhop of Hereford againft Walter Brute a Lay-man and learned, of the Diocefs of Hereford, touching the cauſe of Herefie, as they called it, fet forward by the way of the Bifhops Office, &c. At the inſtruction of certain faithfull Chriſtians, as he termed them, but indeed cruel and falſe promoters.

Murdering hearts lurking under loving words.

IN the name of God, Amen: To all manner of faithful Chriftian people, that fhall fee and hear this our prefent proces, John by the fufferance of God Bifhop of Hereford fendeth greeting and continual charity, in the Lord. We would that you all fhould know, that of late by many faithful Chriftian people, and fpecially zealous followers of the Catholick Faith, it was lamentably done us to underftand by way of complaint; that a certain Son of ours going out of kind, named Walter Brute, a Lay perfon, learned, of our Diocefs, hath under a cloked fhew of holinefs damnably feduced the people; and, fetting behind him the fear of God, doth feduce them as much as he can, from day to day, informing and teaching openly and privily as well the Nobles as the Commons, in certain conclufions heretical, fchifmatical and erroneous, and alfo heretofore condemned. And they have alfo probably exhibited againft the fame Walter, Articles under-written, in manner and form as followeth.

Articles exhibited and denounced to the Bifhop, againft Walter Brute.

Articles denounced againſt Walter Brute by Prieſts and Patrons.

REverend Father and Lord, we the faithful people of Chriſt, and zealous lovers of the Catholick Faith, and alſo your humble and devout Children, do Miniſter and exhibite to your Reverend Fatherhood the Articles under-written, touching the Catholich Faith, contrary and againſt malicious perſons, and detractors of the ſame faith, and the determinations of Holy mother Church, and namely againſt the child of Belial, one Walter Brute, a falſe teacher and ſeducer amongſt the people: Humbly beſeeching, that you would vouchſafe to have regard to the correction of the Enormities under-written, according unto the Canonical cal conſtitutions, even as to your office paſtoral doth lie and belong.

The firſt Article.

Imprimis, We do give and exhibit and intend to prove that the ſame Walter Brute, being unmindful of his Salvation, hath been by many and divers faithful Chriſtian people fundry times accuſed of the Curſednes of Hereſie; As by the fwift report, ſlander, and rumour of the people, proceeding before the moft Reverend Father and Lord, Lord William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and alſo before the the Reverend Father and Lord, Lord John late Biſhop of Hereford your Predeceſſor, and now Biſhop of S. Aſaph, hath been teſtified, and alſo hath been many and divers times cited to anſwer unto Articles by him againſt the Catholick Faith avouched, and openly and publickly taught. But he in this matter of heretical Curſednes (ſo grievouſly and ſhamefully ſpoken of) hath never regarded to purge his innocency; but lurkingly, and running into corners, hath many and fundry years laboured to advance things erroneous, and ſchiſmatical, and alſo Hereſies, and to imprint them in the hearts of faithful people.

The ſecond Article.

Item, The foreſaid Walter Brute hath openly, publickly, and notoriouſly avouched; and commonly ſaid and taught, and ſtubbornly affirmed; that every Chriſtian man (yea and woman) being without ſin, may make the body of Chriſt ſo well as the Prieſt.

The third Article.

Item, The ſame Walter hath notoriouſly, openly and publickly avouched and taught, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not the very body, but a ſign and a memorial only.

The fourth Article.

Item, The foreſaid Walter hath ſaid commonly, and avouched, and alſo hath laboured to inform men and companies, that no man is bound to give Tithes, nor Oblations; and if any man will needs give, he may give his Tithes, and Oblations to whom he will, excluding thereby their Curates.

The fifth Article.

Item, That ſuch as do preach and prefer croſſed matters, and pardons (granted by the high Biſhop to them that helped the purpoſe of the Reverend Father Lord Henry by the grace of God Biſhop of Norwich, when as he took his journey upon him to fight for the holy Father the Pope) are ſchiſmaticks and hereticks, and that the Pope cannot grant ſuch manner of pardons.

The ſixth Article.

Item, The ſaid Walter hath oftentimes ſaid, and commonly avouched, that the Pope is Antichriſt, and a feducer of the people, and utterly againſt the Law and life of Chriſt.

The ſeventh Article.

Item, Whereas of late your Reverence did (at the inſtance of faithful Chriſtian people) proceed in form of law againſt William Swinderby; and that the ſaid William Swinderby had unto the ſaid Articles objected againſt him given up his anſwers in writing, containing in them errors, ſchiſms and hereſies, even as you with the mature counſel of Maſters and Doctors in Divinity, and other faculties have determined and given ſentence, and have pronounced the ſame William Swinderby to be an Heretick and a ſchiſmatick, and an erroneous Teacher of the people: Nevertheleſs the foreſamed Walter hath openly, publickly, and notoriouſly ſaid, avouched and ſtubbornly affirmed, that the ſaid Williams anſwers (whereof notice hath been given before) are good, righteous and not able to be convinced, in that they contain none error, and that your ſentence beforeſaid, given againſt the ſaid William, is evil, falſe and unjuſt; and that your affiſtance have wickedly, naughtily, perverſly, and unjuſtly condemned the anſwers aforeſaid.

Otherwiſe bloody perſecutors. Their concluſions and Articles of William Swinderby here repeated, and wickedly to Walter Brute to be found before, pag. 510. and 511.

Now thereupon immediately thoſe ſame faithful Chriſtian people have inſtantly required, that we would vouchſafe that other Articles given by the ſame faithful Chriſtians againſt the ſaid William Swinderby, together with the writings and anſwers of the ſame William thereunto, ſhould be admitted againſt Walter Brute, mentioned if in this matter of curſed Hereſie: of which Articles and anſwers, the Tenors do follow in theſe words.

Imprimis, That one William Swinderby, pretending himſelf Prieſt, was of certain Articles and concluſions erroneous, falſe, ſchiſmatical, and heretical by him preached, at divers places and times, before a great multitude of faithful Chriſtians judicially convinced; and the ſame Articles and concluſions did he (inforced by neceſſity of law) revoke and abjure, ſome as heretical, and other as erroneous and falſe; and for ſuch did he avouch them ever afterward, promiſing ſo to take and believe them, and that from thenceforth he would openly or privily preach, teach, or affirm none of them; nor that he ſhould make Sermon or Preach within your Dioceſs without licence demanded and obtained. And in caſe he ſhould to the contrary preſume, by preaching or avouching; that then he ſhould be ſubject to the ſeverity of the Canons, even as he judicially ſwear accordingly as the law inforced. Alſo the concluſions abjured by the ſaid William, do follow, and are ſuch.

1. Imprimis, That men by the rule of charity may mand debts, but by no means impriſon any man for debts: and that the party ſo impriſoning a body, is excommunicated, before pag. 530. {Concluſion.}

2. Item, That if the Pariſhioners ſhall know their Curate to be incontinent and naughty, they ought to withdraw from their Tithes, &c. ibid.

3. Item, That Tithes are meer Alms; and in caſe that the Curates ſhall be ill, that they may be lawfully bellowed upon others by the temporal owners, &c. ibid.

4. Item, That an evil Curate to excommuicate any under his juriſdiction, for withholding of Tithes, is nought elſe, &c. ibid.

5. Item, That no man may excommunicate any body, except that firſt he know him excommunicate of God: Neither do thoſe that excommunicate with ſuch a one, incur the ſentence of excommunication by any manner of means. ibid.

6. Item, That every Prieſt may abſolve every ſinner being contrite, and is bound to Preach the Goſpel unto the people, notwithſtanding the prohibition of the Biſhops. ibid.

7. Item, That a Prieſt, receiving by bargain any thing of yearly annuity, is in ſo doing a ſchiſmatick, and excommuicate. ibid.

8. Item, He doth affiuredly believe (as he avoucheth) that every Prieſt being in deadly ſin, if he diſpoſe himſelf to make the body of Chriſt, doth rather commit idolatry, than make Chriſts body: ibid.

9. Item, That no Prieſt doth enter into any houſe, but to handle ill the Wife, the Daughter, or the Maid, and therefore, &c. ibid.

10. Item, That the Child is not rightly Baptized, if the Prieſt, &c. ibid.

11. Item, That no manner of perſon if he live againſt Gods law, &c. ibid.

12. Item, The ſame William againſt the things premiſed, and his revocation and abjuration (not to his heart converting, but from evil to worſe perverting) did turn aſide into our Dioceſs; where running to and fro in divers places, he hath of his own raſh head preſumed to Preach, or rather to pervert, &c. pag. 532.

13. Item, After that we had heard divers rumors, and ſlanders of very many, we directed divers monitions and commandments comminatory, to be ſent abroad by our commiſſaries to ſundry places of our Dioceſs; that no perſon, of what eſtate, degree, or condition ſoever he were, ſhould preſume to Preach or to Teach the facred Scripture to the people in places holy or prophane, within our Dioceſs, &c. ibidem.

14. Item, That the ſame ſort of monitions, inhibitions and precepts confirmed by our Seal, came to the true and undoubted knowledge of the ſaid William.

15. Item, The ſame William, unmindful of his own ſalvation, hath tithence and againſt thoſe monitions, inhibitions, and precepts, and (that which is more abominable to be ſpoken) in contempt of the high Biſhops Dignity, and to the ſlander and offence of many people, preſumed in divers places of our ſaid Dioceſs to Preach or rather to pervert and to teach the foremention ed, and other hereticl, erroneous and ſchiſmatical devices: pag. 532. Infandum facinus fuiſſet.

16. Item, The ſame William in Preaching to the people, on Monday, to wit, the firſt of Auguſt, in the year of our Lord 1390. in the Church of Whitney in our Dioceſs, held and affirmed; that no Prelate of the World, of what ſtate, preheminence or degree ſoever he were, having cure of ſouls and being in deadly ſin, &c. ibid.

17. Item, The ſame William in many places ſaid and affirmed in the preſence of many faithful Chriſtian people, after the ſacramental words uttered by the A perilous doore to open.

Priest, having the intent to consecrate, there is not made the very body of Christ in the Sacrament of the Eucharist. ibid.

18. Item, That accidents cannot be in the Sacrament of the Altar without their subject; and that there remaineth material Bread Concomitanter, with the body of Christ in the Sacrament. Vide supra, pag. 532.

19. Item, That a Priest being in deadly sin cannot by the power of the Sacrament words, make the body of Christ. ibid.

20. Item, That all Priests are of like power in all points, notwithstanding that some of them are in this world of higher Dignity, degree, or preheminence. ibid.

21. Item, That contrition only putteth away sin, if a man shall be duly contrite; and that all vocal confession and exercise is superfluous, and not requisite of necessity to salvation. ibid.

22. Item, That inferiour Curates have not their power of binding and loosing immediately from the Pope or Bishop, but immediately of Christ &c. ibid.

23. Item, That the Pope cannot grant such a kind of annual pardons, because there shall not be so many years to the day of judgment as are contained in the Popes bulls or pardons. Whereby it followeth, that pardons are not so much worth as they are noised and praised to be. ibid.

24. Item, That it is not in the Popes power to grant to any penitent body forgiveness of the pain, or of the trespass. ibid.

25. Item, That one giving his Alms to any body, which as he judgeth hath no need thereof, doth sin in so giving, &c. ibid.

26. Item, That it stands not in the power of any Prelate, of what private Religion soever he be, to give by letters Benefits of their Order; Neither do such kind of Benefits given, profit them to whom they be given for the salvation of souls. Vide supra, pag. ibid.

A foul fault forsooth.

27. Item, That the same William, unmindful of his own salvation, hath many times and often reforted to a certain desart Wood called Derwalswood of our Diocese, and there in a certain unhallowed Chappel (nay a prophane Cottage) hath presumed of his own proper rashness, to celebrate, &c. ibid.

28. Item, The same William hath also presumed to do the like things in a certain prophane Chappel, situate in the Park of Newton, nigh to the Town of Leyntwardyn, in the same our Diocese, pag. ibid.

Walter Pride promoter, or rather a ground promoter.

¶ Which things being done, the same faithful Christian people, and especially Sir Walter Pride the penitentiary of our Cathedral Church of Hereford, personally appearing before us, sitting in our judgment Seat in the Parish Church of Whiteborne of our Diocese, brought forth and exhibited two publick Instruments against the same Walter Brute, in the case of cursed Heresie aforesaid, of which Instruments here followeth the Tenors and Articles in this sort.

The first Instrument exhibited by certain Canons of Hereford against Walter Brute.

IN the name of God, Amen. Be it evidently known to all persons by this present publick Instrument, that in the year from the Incarnation, after the course and computation of the Church of England 1391. the Indiction xv. of the pontifical Office of our most holy Father and Lord in Christ, Lord Boniface the Ninth, by Gods wisdom Pope, the second year, the xv. day of the Month of October, in the dwelling House of the worshipful man, M. John Godemoston, Canon of the Cathedral Church of Hereford, in the presence of me the publick Notary under-written, and of witnesses subscribed; Walter Brute a Lay-man, learned, of Hereford Diocese, personally appearing, said, avouched, and stiffly maintained; that the said Bishop of Hereford, and affirmants which were with him the third day of the foresaid Month of October, the year of our Lord aforesaid, in the Church of Hereford, did naughtily, wickedly, perversly, and unjustly condemn the answers of Sir William Swinderby Chaplain, given by the same Sir William to the same Lord Bishop in writing, and also the Articles minisired by the same Sir William,

Bishop of Hereford unjustly condemned the Articles of Sir Wil. Swinderby.

And furthermore he said, held, and avouched, that the same conclusions given by the same Sir William, even as they were given, are true and Catholick.

Item, As touching the matters objected against him by them that stood by, concerning the Sacrament of the Altar; he said, that after the Sacramental words there doth remain very Bread, and the substance thereof after the consecration of the body of Christ, and that there do not remain accidents without substance or subject after the consecration of the body of Christ. And as touching this matter, the Doctors hold divers opinions.

KING. 1 Ric. 2. Matters objected against Walter Brute.

The Pope Antichrist.

Furthermore, as concerning the Pope, he said, held, and avouched; that he is the very Antichrist, because that in life and manners he is contrary to the Laws, Doctrines, and Deeds of Christ our Lord.

All and every of these things were done, even as they be above-written and rehearsed in the year of our Lord, pontifical Office, month, day, and place aforesaid, at Suppertime of the day, aforenamed, then and there being present the worshipful and discreet men, Sir Walter Ramsbury, chief Chaunter of the said Cathedral Church of Hereford, Roger Hoore Canon of the same Church, Walter Wall, Chaplain of the said Church of Hereford, being a Vicar of the Choral, and certain other worthy witnesses of credit, that were specially called and desired to the premisses. Ex Regist. Hereford.

Witnesses against Walter Brute.

And I Richard Lee Wheeler, Clerk of Worcester, being a publick Notary, by the authority Apostolick, was personally present at all and singular the premisses, whilst that (as is before rehearsed) they were done and doing in the year of our Lord 1391. Pontifical Office, month, day, place, and the hour aforesaid: and I did see, write, and hear all and singular those things thus to be done, and have reduced them into this publick manner and form; and, being desired truly to testifie the premisses, have sealed the said Instrument, made hereupon, with mine accustomed Seal and name.

Richard Lee Notary publick and writer hereof.

The form of the second Instrument.

In the name of God, Amen. Be it plainly known to all persons, by this present publick Instrument, that in the year from the Incarnation of the Lord, after the course and computation of the Church of England, 1391. the indiction fifteen, in the third year of the Pontifical Office of the most holy Father in Christ, and our Lord, Lord Boniface Pope by the providence of God the ninth, and in the nineteenth day of the Month of January; Walter Brute Lay-man, of Hereford Diocese, personally appearing before the Reverend Father in Christ and Lord, Lord John by Gods grace Bishop of Hereford, in the presence of me being a publick Notary, and one of the witnesses underwritten, did say, hold, publish, and affirm, the Conclusions hereafter written, that is to say, that Christian people are not bound to pay Tithes neither by the Law of Moses, nor by the Law of Christ.

Matters and Conclusions minisired against Walter Brute. With Conclusion referred to be fully collected, as were before the Articles of William Swinderby. This conclusion also is not rightly gathered.

Item, That it is not lawful for Christians, for any cause in any case, to swear by the Creator, neither by the Creature.

Item, He confessieth openly and of his own accord, that within the same Month of January, he did eat, drink, and communicate with William Swinderby, not being ignorant of the sentence of the said Reverend Father, whereby the same William Swinderby was pronounced an Heretick, schismatick, and a false seducer of the Common people. Which conclusions the same Reverend Father caused to be written, and in writing to be delivered to the same Walter. Which when he had seen and read, he said also that he did maintain and justifie them according to the Laws aforesaid. These things were done in the Chamber of the said Bishop of Hereford, at his Manner of Whiteborne of the said Diocese of Hereford: there being then present the same Bishop aboveisaid, Master Reynold of Welston Canon of Hereford, Sir Philip Diltesk Parson of the Parish Church of Blamurin, Thomas Guildefeld Parson of the Church of Englishknore, John Cresset Parson of the Church of Whiteborne, and Thomas Wallewain houshold servant, for witnesses especially called and desired to the premisses, of the Diocese of Hereford and Saint Asaph.

Witnesses against Walter Brute.

Benedict Come registrer, witness and writer of this Instrument against Walter Brute.

And I Benedict Come Clerk, of the Diocese of S. Asaph, publick Notary by the Apostolick Authority of the Diocese of S. Asaph, was personally present together with the witnesses before named, at all and singular these and other things here premised, whilst they were so done and a doing, and did see, hear, and write those things so to be done, as is before mentioned; and did write the same, and reduce them into this publick form, and with my wonted and accustomed seal and name have sealed it, being desired and required truly to testifie the premisses.

At the last, the foresaid Walter Brute did present and cause to be presented to us (at divers places and times assigned by us to the same Walter to answer to the former Conclusions and Articles) divers Scrouls of paper, written with his own proper hand, for his answers to the same Articles and Conclusions above written; he partly appearing by his own self, before us sitting in our judgment Seat, and partly by his Messengers, specially appointed to that purpose: of which Scrouls, the Tenors do follow in order word by word, and be on this matter.

Certain exhibits of Walter Brute in writing presented to the Bishop for his defence. Walter Brute a Britain born.

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and the Holy Ghost, Amen. I Walter Brute, Sinner, Lay-man, Husbandman, and a Christian (having my Off-spring of the Britains, both by my Fathers and Mothers side) of the Britains, have been accused to the Bishop of Hereford, that I did erre in many matters concerning the Catholick Christian Faith; by whom I am required that I should write an answer in Latin to all those matters. Whose desire I will satisfie to my power, protesting first of all, before God and before all the World; that like as it is not my mind through Gods grace, to refuse the known truth, for any reward greater or smaller, yea, be it never so big, nor yet for the fear of any temporal punishment; even so it is not my mind to maintain any erroneous Doctrine for any Commodities sake. And if any man, of what state, sect, or condition soever he be, will shew me that I erre in my writings or sayings, by the Authority of the sacred Scripture, or by probable reason grounded on the sacred Scripture, I will humbly and gladly receive his information. But as for the bare words of any teacher (Christ only excepted) I will not simply believe, except he shall be able to stablish them by the truth of experience, or of the Scripture: because that, in the holy Apostles elected by Christ, there hath been found error by the Testimony of the holy Scripture, because that Paul himself doth confess that he rebuked Peter, for that he was worthy to be rebuked, Galath. the 2*d* Chapter. There have been errors found in the holy Doctors, that have been before us, as they themselves confess of themselves. And oftentimes it falleth out, that there is error found in the Teachers in our age: who are of contrary opinions among themselves, and some of them do sometimes determine one thing for truth, and others do condemn the self same thing to be Heresie and error. Which protestation premised, I will hear place two suppositions or cases for a ground and a foundation of all things that I shall say, out of which I would gather two probable conclusions stablished upon the same, and upon the Sacred Scripture. By which conclusions, when as they shall be declared after my manner and fashion, it shall plainly appear what my opinion and judgment is concerning all matters that I am accused of. But because I am ignorant and unlearned, I will get me under the mighty defences of the Lord: O Lord, I will remember thine only righteousnes.

Protestation made.

No writer or Doctor without his error, the Scripture only excepted.

Error in the Doctors, Errors and contradictions among the Popish writers.

Brute readily excuseth his learning.

God the Father Almighty uncreate, the Maker of Heaven and Earth, hath sent his Son (that was everlastingly begotten) into this World, that he should be incarnated for the salvation and redemption of mankind, who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, everlastingly proceeding from the Father and the Son, and was born of Mary the Virgin, to the end that we might be born anew. He suffered passion under Pontius Pilate for our sins, laying down his life for us, that we should lay down our life for our Brethren. He was Crucified, that we should be Crucified to the World, and the World to us. He was dead, that he might redeem us from death, by purchasing for us forgiveness of sins. He was buried, that we being buried together with him into death by Baptism, and that we being dead to sins should live to righteousnes. He descended into Hell, thereby delivering man from Thraldom, and from the Bondage of the Devil, and restoring him to his inheritance which he lost by sin. The third day he rose from the dead, through the glory of the Father, that we also should walk in newnes of life. He ascended up to the Heavens, to which no body hath ascended, saving he that descended from Heaven, even the Son of Man which is in Heaven. He sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty, until his enemies be made his footstool. He being in very deed so much better than the Angels, as he hath obtained by inheritance a more excellent name than they. From whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead, according to their works, because the Father hath given all Judgment to the Son. In whose terrible Judgment we shall rise again, and shall all of us stand before this judgment Seat, and receive joy as well bodily as spiritually, for ever to endure, if we be of the Sheep placed at the right hand; or else punishment both of body and soul, if we shall be found amongst Goats, placed on the left hand, &c.

The second cafe or assertion.

Jesus Christ the Son of God, very God and very Man, a King for ever, by establishing an everlasting Kingdom (breaking to powder all the Kingdoms, of the World,) Daniel 2. A Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedech, whereby also he is able evermore to save such as by him come unto God, and always liveth to intreat for us, Heb. 7. He offering one sacrifice for our sins, hath made perfect for ever by one oblation those that be sanctified, Heb. 10. Being the wisdom that cannot be deceived and the truth that cannot be uttered, he hath in this world taught the Will of God his Father, which Will he hath in work fulfilled, to the intent that he might faithfully instruct us, and hath given the Law of Charity to be of his faithful people observed; which he hath written in the hearts and minds of the faithful with the finger of God, where is the Spirit of God, searching the inward secrets of the Godhead. Wherefore his doctrine must be observed above all other Doctrines, whether they be of Angels or of men, because that he could not nor would not erre in his teaching. But in mens Doctrine there chanceth oftentimes to be error; and therefore we must forsake their Doctrines, if clekedly or expressly they be repugnant to the Doctrine of Christ. Mens Doctrines being made for the peoples profit, must be allowed and observed, so that they be grounded upon Christs Doctrine, or at least be not repugnant to his words.

The first Conclusion.

If the high Bishop of Rome calling himself the Servant of the Servants of God, and the chief Vicar of Christ in this World, do make and maintain many laws contrary to the Gospel of Jesus Christ; then is he of those that have come in Christs name, saying, I am Christ, and have seduced many a one, by the Testimony of our Saviour in Matth. Chap. 24. And the Idol of desolation sitting in the Temple of God and taking away from him the continual sacrifice for a time, times, and half a time, which Idol must be revealed to the Christian people by the Testimony of Daniel. Whereof Christ speaketh in the Gospel; When ye shall see the abomination of desolation that was told of by Daniel the Prophet, standing in the holy place; let him that readeth understand, he is the pestiferous mountain infecting the whole Earth, Jerem. 51. Jerem. Chapter 51. The Pope the sinful Captain of Israel, spoken of Ezechiel 21.

In the multitude of thine iniquities, and of the iniquities of thy Merchandize, thou hast defiled thy sanctification. For every Kingdom divided in it self shall be brought to desolation.* He is also betides, The Beast ascending up out of the earth, having two horns like unto a Lamb, but he speaketh like a Dragon, and as the cruel Beast ascending up out of the Sea, whose Power shall continue 42 months. He worketh the things that he hath given to the Image of the Beast. And he compelled Small and Great, Rich and Poor, Free-men and Bond-slaves, to worship the Beast, and to take his mark in their Forehead or their Hands, Apoc. Chap. 13. And thus by the testimony of all these places is he the chief Antichrist upon the Earth, and must be slain with the Sword of Gods word, and cast with the Dragon, the cruel Beast and the false Prophet that hath seduced the Earth, into the lake of fire and brimstone to be tormented world without end.

Terrible Scriptures against the Pope. Apoc. 13.

If the City of Rome do allow his Traditions, and do disallow Christs holy Commandments, and Christs Doctrine, that it may confirm his Traditions; then is the Babylon the Great, or the Daughter of Babylon, and the Great Whore sitting upon many waters, with whom the Kings of the Earth have committed Fornication, and the Inhabitants of the Earth are become drunken with the Wine of her Harlotry lying open to Bawdry. With whose spiritual Whoredom, Enchantments, Witchcrafts, and Simon Magus Merchandises, the whole round world is infected and seduced; saying in her heart, I sit as Queen, and Widow I am not, neither shall I see Sorrow and Mourning. Yet is the ignorant that within a little while shall come the day of her destruction and ruine by the Testimony of the Apoc. Chap. 17. Because that from the time of the continual Sacrifice was taken away, and the abomination of Desolation placed, there be passed 1290 days by the Testimony of Daniel, and the Chronicles added do agree to the same. And the holy City also hath been trodden under foot of the Heathen, for forty two months, and the Woman was nourished up in the Wilderness (unto which she fled for fear of the face of the Serpent) during 1260 days, or else for a time, times, and half a time, which is all one. All these things be manifest by the Testimony of the Apocalyps, and the Chronicles thereto agreeing. And as concerning the fall of Babylon aforesaid, it is manifest in the Apocalyps, where it is said, In one day shall her Plagues come, Death, Lamentation, and Famine, and she shall be burned with fire. For strong is the Lord, which shall judge her. And again, Babylon that great City is fallen, which hath made all Nations to drink of the Wine of her Whoredom. And thirdly, One mighty Angel took up a mill-stone, that was a very great one, and did cast it into the Sea, saying, With such a violence as this is, shall that great City Babylon be overthrown, and shall no more be found. For her Merchants were the Princes of the Earth, and with her Witchcraft all Nations have gone astray, and in her is there found the blood of the Saints and Prophets. And of her destruction speaketh Esay in the thirteenth Chapter, And Babylon that glorious City, being so noble amongst Kingdoms in the pride of the Caldeans, it shall be that like as the Lord did overturn Sodom and Gomorra upside down, it shall never more be inhabited, nor have the foundation laid in no age, from Generation to Generation. Jeremy saith, Your Mother that hath born you is brought to very great confusion, and made even with the ground. And again, The Lord hath devised and done as he hath spoken against the Inhabiters of Babylon; which dwell richly in their Treasures upon many waters, thine end is come. And thirdly, Drought shall fall upon her waters, and they shall begin to be dry: for it is a Land of graven Images, and boasteth in her prodigious Wonders: it shall never more be inhabited, neither be builded up in no age nor Generation. Verily even as God hath subverted Sodom and Gomorra with her Calves.

Pardon me (I beseech you) though I be not plentiful in pleasant words. For if I should run after the course of this wicked world, and should please men, I should not be Christs Servant. And because I am a poor man, and neither have nor can have Notaries hired to testifie of theie my writings; I call upon Christ to be my Witness, which knoweth the inward secrets of my heart, that I am ready to declare the things that I have written after my fashion, to the profit of all Christian people, and to the hurt of no man living, and am ready to be reformed if any man will shew me where I have erred; being ready also (miserable Sinner though I be) to suffer for the Confession of the Name of Christ, and of his Doctrine, as much as shall please him by his Grace and Love to assist me a miserable Sinner. In witness of all these things I have to this writing set the Seal of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ: which I beseech him to imprint upon my Forehead, and to take from me all manner of mark of Antichrist. Amen.

¶ These two Suppositions (as they are termed in the Schools) written by Walter Brute, and exhibited unto the Bishop, although they contained matter sufficient either to satisfie the Bishop if he had been disposed to learn, or else to have provoked him to reply again, if his knowledge therein had been better than his: yet could they work neither of them effect in him. But he receiving and perusing the same, when he neither could confute that which was said, neither would reply or answer by learning to that which was truth, finding other by Cavillations, said, That this his writing was too short and obscure, and therefore required him to write upon the same again more plainly and more at large. Whereupon the said Master Walter satisfying the Bishops request (and ready to give to every one an account of his Faith) in a more ample Tractation reneweth his matter again before declared, writing to the Bishop in words and form as followeth:

Another declaration of the same matter before, after a more ample Tractation exhibited to the Bishop.

Reverend Father, forsomuch as it seemeth to you that my motion in my two Suppositions or Cases, and in my two Conclusions, is too short and somewhat dark: I will gladly now satisfie your desire, according to my small Learning, by declaring the same Conclusions. In opening whereof, it shall plainly appear, what I do judge in all matters that I am accused of to your reverence; desiring you first of all that your diseretion would not believe that I do enterprize of any presumption to handle the secrets of the Scriptures, which the holy and just, and wise Doctors have left unexpounded. It is not unknown to many, that I am in all points far inferiour to them, whose holiness of life and profoundness in knowledge is manifolds always allowed. But as for mine ignorance, and multitude of sins, they are to my self and others sufficiently known: wherefore I judge not my self worthy to unloose or to carry their shooes after them. Do you therefore no otherwise deem of me, than I do of mine own self. But if you shall find any goodness in my writings, ascribe it to God only: who according to the multitude of his mercy doth sometimes reveal those things to Idiots and Sinners, which are hidden from the holy and wise, according to this saying, I will praise and confess thee, O Father, for that thou hast hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and hast disclosed them to the little ones: Even so, O Father, because it hath thus pleased thee. And in another place, I am come to Judgment into this world, that they which see not, may see; and that they which see, may be made blind. And Paul saith, That God hath chosen the weak things of the world, to confound the mighty; that no man shall boast in himself, but that all men should give the honour to God.

They that be humble judge of themselves and do not curiously examine, are of God

It was commanded to Esay, bearing the Type of CHRIST; Go, and say to this people: Hear ye with your hearing; and do not understand? Behold ye the Vision, and yet know ye not the thing that ye see? Make blind the heart of this people, and make dull their ears, and shut their eyes, lest perchance with their eyes they should see, and with their ears they should hear, and with their hearts they should understand, and be converted, and I should heal them. And I said, How long Lord? And he said, until that the Cities be made desolate without Inhabitants, and the House without any person within. Also in Esay thus it is written, And the multitude of all Nations, which shall fight against Ariel, *and all persons that have warred, and besieged and prevailed against it, shall be as a dream that appeareth in the night, and as the hungry person dreameth that he eateth, but when he shall awake out of sleep, his Soul is empty. the hungry person dreameth that he eateth, and yet after that he shall awake he is still weary and thirsty, and his Soul void of nourishment: even so shall it be with the multitude of all Nations that have fought against the Mount Sion. Be you amazed, and have great wonder; reel ye too and fro, and staggerye: be ye drunken, and not with Wine: stagger, but not through drunkemess: for the Lord hath mingled for you the spirit of drowsiness. He shall shut your eyes, he shall cover your Prophets and Princes that see Visions. And a Vision shall be to you, altogether, like the words of a sealed Book, which when he shall give to one that is learned, he shall say, Read here, and he shall answer, I cannot, for it is sealed. And the Book shall be given to one that is unlearned, and knoweth not his letters, and it shall be said unto him, Read; And he shall answer, I know not the letters, I am unlearned. Wherefore the Lord saith, For asmuch as this people draweth nigh me with their mouths, and glorifie me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me, and they have rather feered the commandments of men, and have cleaved to their Doctrines: Behold therefore I will add besides, and bring such a muse and marvel upon this people which shall make men amazed with marveling. For Wisdom shall perish from their wise men, and the Understanding of the prudent persons shall be hidden. And soon after it followeth in the same place; yet a little while and Libanus shall be turned into Charmell, and Charmell counted for a Corn or Grove, and in the same day shall the deaf Folks hear the word of this Book, and the eyes of the blind (changed from darkness and blindness) shall see.

Nabuchodonosor enquiring of Daniel, said, Thinkest thou that thou canst truly declare me the dream that I have seen, and the meaning thereof? And Daniel said, As for the mystery whereof the King doth ask, neither the Wise-men, Magicians, Soothsayers, nor Enchanters can declare to the King: But there is a God in Heaven, that discloseth mysteries, who will declare to thee (O King Nabuchodonosor) what things shall come to pass in the last times of all. To me also is this Sacrament or Mystery disclosed (not for any wisdom that is in me more than in all men living) but to the end that the interpretation might be made manifest to the King, and that thou shouldst know the cogitations of thy mind.

Dan. 12.

It was also said to Daniel, And thou Daniel, shut up the words, seal up the Book, until the time appointed. Verily many people shall pass over, and manifold knowledge shall there be. And Daniel said to the man that was clothed with linnen Garments, who stood upon the waters of the flood; How long will it be before the end shall come of these marvelous things? And I heard the man that was clothed in linnen apparel, who stood upon the waters of the floods; when he had lift up his right hand and his left hand unto Heaven, and had sworn by him that liveth for evermore, that for a time, times, and half a time. And when the scattering abroad of the hand of the people shall be accomplished; then shall all these things be finished. And I heard and understood not, and I said, O my Lord, what shall be after these things? And he said, Go thy way Daniel, for this talk is shut and sealed up until the time that is before appointed.

All these things have I written, to shew that he that hath the Key of David, Who openeth and no man shutteth, shutteth and no man openeth, doth (when and how long it pleaseth him) hide the mysteries, and hide secrets of the Scriptures from the Wise, Prudent, and Righteous: and otherwhiles at his pleasure revealeth the same to Sinners, and Lay-persons, and simple Souls, that he may have the honour and glory in all things. Wherefore as I have before said, if you shall find any good thing in my writings, ascribe the same to God alone: If you shall find otherwise, think ye the same to be written of ignorance, and not of malice. And if any doubt of error be shewed me in all my writings, I will humbly allow your information and fatherly correction.

But why that such manner of matters are moved touching the disclosing of Antichrist in this Kingdom, more than in other Kingdoms, and in this time alo more than in time past: the answer as concerning the time of the motion, is, that it is the last Conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter in the sign of the Twins, which is the house of Mercury, being the signifier of the Christian people: which Conjunction seemeth to me to betoken the second coming of Christ to reform his Church, and to call men again, by the disclosing of Antichrist, to the perfection of the Gospel, from their Heathenish Rites, and ways of the Gentiles. By whom the holy City was trampled under foot, for 42 months, even as the Conjunction of the said two Planets being inclosed in the side of the Virgin, which is also the house of Mercury, did betoken the first coming of Christ, for the salvation of all people that were perished of the house of Israel, whereby to call them, through the same coming, to the full perfection of the Gospel. As touching this calling of the Heathen, speaketh Christ in the Gospel, I have also other sheep that are not of this fold, and those must I bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one Sheepfold, and one Shepherd. For although the Gentiles be converted from the infidelity of their Idolatry to the Faith of Christ: yet are they not converted to the perfection of the Law of Christ. And therefore did the Apostles in the Primitive-Church, lay no burthen upon the Gentiles, but that they should abstain from haineous things, as from things offered to Idols, and from blood, and strangled, and Fornication. As touching this second coming speaketh Esay, On that day the root of Jesse which standeth for a sign or mark to the people, to him shall the Heathen make their homage and supplication, and his Sepulchre shall be glorious: and in that day shall it come to pass, that the Lord shall the second time put to his hand, to possess the remnant of his people, &c. And he shall lift up a token toward the Nations, and he shall assemble the runnagate people of Israel that were fled, and those that were dispersed of Juda shall be gather together from the four quarters of the Earth. And the zealous emulation of Ephraim shall be broken to pieces, and the enemies of Juda shall come to nought. Paul to the Thessalonians saith, We beseech you Brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together before him, that you be not soon removed from your understanding, neither that you be put in fear, as though the day of the Lord were at hand, neither, as it were, by Letter sent by us, neither by Spirit, nor yet by talk. Let not any body by any means bring you out of the way, or seduce you. For except there shall first come a departing, and that the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition, shall be disclosed, which maketh resistance, and is advanced above all things that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he doth sit in the Temple of God, shewing himself as if he were God. Do you not remember, that whilst I was as yet with you, I told you of this? And now ye know what keepeth him back, that he may be uttered in his due time. For even now doth he work the mystery of Iniquity; only that he which holdeth, may hold still until he be come to light: and then shall that wicked One be disclosed, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth, and shall destroy with brightness of his coming, even him, whose coming is, according to the working of Satan, in all power, with signs and lying wonders, and in all deceitful leading out of the truth towards those that do perish, because that they receive not heartily the love of Truth, that they might be saved.

Schisse between the two Popes which lasted 39 years: by the which Conjunction, this meaning is, that God would have Antichrist to be disclosed, and his Church to be reformed.

By this perfecution (if I suppose) he meaneth the reformation of the Church being out of the way.

The revealing of Antichrist.

Christ being demanded of the Apostles what should be the token of his coming, and of the end of the world, said unto them, There shall come many in my Name, saying, I am Christ, and they shall seduce many: Also he telleth them of many other signs, of Battels, Famine, Pestilence, and Earthquakes. But the greatest sign of all he teacheth to be this, When you shall see (saith he) the abomination of desolation standing in the holy place, he that readeth let him understand. But Luke 21. in his Gospel speaketh more plainly hereof, When you therefore shall see Jerusalem to be compassed about with an Army, then know ye that the desolation thereof shall draw nigh. And afterward it followeth, And they shall fall by the face of the Sword, and shall be led away Captive to all Nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden under foot of the Heathen, until the times of the Nations be fulfilled. Now in Daniel thus it is written of this matter, And after 72 weeks shall Christ be slain, neither shall that be his people, that will deny him. And as for the City and Sanctuary, a people shall (with his Captain that will come with them) destroy the said City and Sanctuary, and his end shall be to be wasted utterly, till it be brought to nought, and and after the end of the War, shall come the Desolation appointed. In one week shall he confirm the Covenant to many, and within half a week shall the Offering and Sacrifice cease. And in the Temple shall there be the abomination of Desolation, and even unto the end shall the Desolation continue. And elsewhere in Daniel thus it is written, From the time that the continual Sacrifice shall be offered, and that the abomination shall be placed in Desolation, there shall be one thousand, two hundred, and ninety days.

1290 days, in Daniel 12. compared.

Now if any man will behold the Chronicles, he shall find, that after the destruction of Jerusalem was accomplished, and after the strong hand of the holy people was fully dispersed, and after the placing of the abomination: that is to say, the Idol of Desolation of Jerusalem, within the Holy place, where the Temple of God was before, there had passed 1290 days, taking a day for a year, as commonly it is taken in the Prophets. And the times of the Heathen people are fulfilled, after whose Rites and Customs God suffered the holy City to be trampled under foot for forty and two months. For although the Christian Church, which is the holy City, continued in the Faith from the Ascension of Christ, even till this time: yet hath it not observed and kept the perfection of the Faith all this whole season. For soon after the departure of the Apostles, the Faith was kept with the Observation of the Rites of the Gentiles, and not of the Rites of Moses Law, nor of the Law of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Wherefore seeing that this time of the Error of the Gentiles is fulfilled: it is likely that Christ shall call the Gentiles from the Rites of their gentility to the perfection of the Gospel, as he called the Jews from the Law of Moses to the same perfection in his holy coming: that there may be one Sheepfold of the Jews and Gentiles under one Shepherd, being therefore that Antichrist is known, which hath seduced the Nations, then shall the Elect, after that they have forsaken the errors of their gentility, come through the light of Gods Word to the perfection of the Gospel, and that same Seducer shall be slain with the Sword of Gods word. So that by these things it doth partly appear unto me, why at this time rather than at any other time this matter of Antichrist is moved.

For these 42 months look page 458.

Why rather at this time, than any other, the matter of Antichrist is moved, and why rather in this Kingdom than in another?

And why that this motion is come to pass in this Kingdom rather than in other Kingdoms, me thinks there is good reason; because that no Nation of the Gentiles was so soon converted unto Christ as were the Britains, the Inhabitants of this Kingdom. For to other places of the world there were sent Preachers of the Faith, who by the working of Miracles, and continual preaching of the word of God, and by grievous passion and death of the body, did convert the people of those places: but in this Kingdom, in the time of Lucius the King of the Britains and of Eleutherius Bishop of the Romans, that were Infidels (by the way of rumors and tales) of the Christian Faith, which was preached at Rome. Who believed straightways, and sent to Rome, to Eleutherius for men skilful to inform him more fully in the very Faith it self: at whose coming he was joyful, and was baptized with his whole Kingdom. And after the receiving of the Faith, they never forsook it, neither for any manner of false preaching of other, neither for any manner of Torments, or yet affaults of the Painims, as in other Kingdoms it hath come to pass. And thus it seemeth to me the Britains amongst all Nations, have been, as it were by the special Election of God, called and converted to the Faith of Christ.

The first receiving the Faith in this Realm by the Britains

Britains by the special Election of God called to Faith. The calling of the Gentiles to faith

Of them as me seemeth did Esay prophesie, saying, For they did see to whom there was nothing told of him, and they did behold, that had not heard of him. And again, Behold, thou shalt call a Nation which thou knewest not; and Nations that have not known thee, shall run unto thee, for the Lord thy God, and the holy One of Israel, shall glorifie thee.

Of this Kingdom, did Saint John in the Apocalyps Prophesie (as me seemeth) where he said, The Dragon stood before the Woman, which was about to be delivered of child, to the intent that when she had brought it forth into the World, he might devour up her Son: And she brought forth her Child, which was a Manchild, who should govern all Nations with an iron Rod. And the same Son was taken up to God, and to his Throne. And the Woman fled into the Wilderness, whereas she had a place prepared of God, that they may feed her 1260 days. And again in the same Chapter, After that the Dragon saw that he was cast out upon the earth, he did persecute the Woman, which brought forth the Manchild. And there were given to the Woman two Wings of a great Eagle, that she might flee into the Wilderness into her place, whereas she is fostered up for a time, times, and half a time, from the face of the Serpent. And the Serpent did cast as it were a flood of Water after the Woman, to the intent that he might cause her to be drowned by the flood: and the earth opening her mouth did help the Woman, and did swallow up the flood which the Dragon did cast out of his mouth. Let us see how these sayings may be applied unto this Kingdom rather than to other Kingdoms. It is well known that this Kingdom is a wilderness or a desert place, because that the Philosophers and wise men did not pass upon it, but did leave it for a Wilderness and Desert, because it is placed without the Climates.

KING Rev. 2.

Apoc. 12.

The woman fed in the Desert 1260 days.

This place of the Desert in the Scripture seemeth here some thing hardly expounded.

Unto this place fled the Woman; that is to say, the Church (which by Faith did spiritually bring forth Christ into the world) whereas she was fed with the heavenly Bread, the Flesh and Blood of Jesus Christ, for one thousand, two hundred and sixty days, seeing that for so many days, taking a day for a year, the Britains continued in the Faith of Christ: which thing cannot be found so of any Christian Kingdom, but of this Desert: and well it is said, That she flew to this place. For from the East came the Faith into Britain, not by walking in journey, nor yet by sailing: for then should it have come by Rome, Italy, Almaine, France, which cannot be found: and therefore she flew over those places, and rested not in them, even as a Bird, flying over a place resteth not in the same: but rested in this Wilderness for a time, times, and half a time; that is, one thousand two hundred and sixty years, from the first coming of the Faith into Britain until this present.

Faith came into Britain from the East, not from Italy, or Rome.

A time, times, and half a time expounded.

In saying for a time, times, and half a time, there is a going forward from the greater to the less. The greatest time that we name, is a 1000 years, there is a time: and the next time that is less in the singular number, is 100 years. In the plural number, times signifie that there be more hundreds than one, at least two hundred years. Wherefore, if they be put under a certain number, it must needs be that they be two, but the same two cannot fitly be called some times, except they be hundreds. For in that, that there is a going down from the greater to the less, when as it is said a time, times, and half a time, and that the number of a 1000 is likely affigned for a time: It must needs follow that times must be taken for hundreds, and half a time for fixty, because it is the greater half of a hundred years, though that fifty be the even half.

Persecution in Diocles. an time shadowed why, look page 85.

And when that the Serpent sent the water of the Persecution after the Woman to cause her to be drowned of the flood: then did the earth, that is to say, the stableness of Faith help the Woman, by supping up the water of Tribulation. For in the moft cruel Persecution of Diocletian and Maximian against the Christians, when as Christianity was almoft every where rooted out; yet did they in this Kingdom ftand continually in the Faith unmoveable. And fo, conftidering that the Britains were converted to the Faith of Chrift, as you would fay, by an election, and picking out amongft all the Nations of the Heathen, and that after they had received the Faith, they did never ftart back from the Faith for no manner of Tribulation; it is not to be marvelled if in their place the calling of the Gentiles be made manifeft, to the profiting of the Gofpel of Jefus Chrift, by the revealing of Antichrift.

But befides this, me feemeth that Ezekiel doth fpecially fpeak of them, whereas he fpeaketh of the fall of the Prince of Tyre, faying, Forafmuch as thy heart is lifted up, as if it were the heart of God, therefore behold, I will bring upon thee ſome of the ſtrongeſt of the Heathen, and they ſhall draw their naked Swords upon the beauty of thy Wiſdom, and they ſhall defile thy comelineſs, and they ſhall ſlay thee, and pull thee out, and thou ſhalt die in the ſlaughter of the ſlain perſons, in the heart of the Sea.

Becauſe that amongſt the other Gentiles there have been none more ſtrong than the Britans, either in their body or their faith, and in their bodily Wars there have been none more mighty than they. For never in Wars have they been vanquiſhed, but by their own Sedition or Treaſon. But how many Kingdoms have they conquered? Yea, and neither by the moſt mighty City of Rome could they be driven out of their Kingdom, until that God ſent upon them Peſtilence and Famine; whereby they being waited were compelled to leave their Country, which thing I have not heard of any other people. Now, in the faith, have they been amongſt all the people the ſtrongeſt, as is before ſaid, becauſe that by no Tribulation could they be compelled to forſake the Faith.

The ſtrong faith of the Britains.

Wherefore of them this ſeemeth to me to be underſtood: Then I will bring upon thee ſome of the ſtrongeſt people, and they ſhall draw their naked Swords, &c. But foraſmuch as many Tales and Fables are told of Antichriſt and his coming, and many things, which do rather ſeduce than inſtruct the Hearers, are applied to him out of the Scriptures of the Prophets; we will briefly write thoſe things which are ſpoken of him, and we will ſhew that the ſame Fable ſpringeth from the error of people imagining, and from no truth of the Scriptures prophefying. Now then they do ſay, that Antichriſt ſhall be born in Babylon of the Tribe of Dan, and conceived of the mixture of man and woman in ſin, becauſe that Chriſt was born of a Virgin, and conceived of the Holy Ghoſt. They ſay, that he ſhall be an ill favoured Perſonage, becauſe that it is written of Chriſt; Comely and beautiful is he, beyond the Sons of men. They ſay, that he ſhall preach three years and half where Chriſt preached, and that he ſhall circumciſe himſelf, and ſay that he is Chriſt, and the Meſſias ſent for the Salvation of the Jews. And they ſay, that he ſhall three manner of ways ſeduce the people, by falſe Miracles, Gifts, and Torments. To whom he ſhall not be able to overcome with Miracles nor with Gifts, thoſe ſhall he go about to overcome with divers kinds of Torments. And thoſe that he ſhall ſeduce, will he mark with his tokens in their forehead or hands. He ſhall ſit in the Temple of God, and cauſe himſelf to be worſhipped as God. He ſhall fight (as they ſay) with the two Witneſſes of Chriſt, Enoch and Heli, and ſhall kill them, and he himſelf ſhall finally be ſlain with lightning. To this imagined man of their own imagination, but of none of the Prophets forethewed (at leaſt in no ſuch wiſe as this is) do they apply the Prophets, as this of Daniel. When that continual Sacrifice ſhall be taken away, and abomination ſhall be placed to deſolation: That is (ſay they) when the worſhipping of God ſhall be taken away, and deſolation (to wit, Antichriſt) ſhall abominably ſhew forth himſelf to be worſhipped, then ſhall there be 1290 days: that is to ſay, three years and an half. And this time do they ſay is the time, times, and half a time. And when it is ſaid in Daniel, Bleſſed is he that looketh for, and cometh to 1335 days: This do they ſay is thus to be underſtood, 45 days of Repentance to ſuch as have worſhipped Antichriſt: which 45 days added to the 1290 make 1335 days. Which days they that ſhall reach unto ſhall be called Bleſſed.

A falſe imagination of Antichriſt.

The Scriptures and Prophets not richly underſtood touching Antichriſt.

Troubling theſe 42 months, ſee there pag. 482.

They apply alſo to this Antichriſt, this ſaying of the Apocalyps, I ſaw a Beaſt riſing up out of the Sea, having ſeven heads and ten horns, unto whom power given him to make 42 months. Which months (as they ſay) do make three years and an half, in which Antichriſt ſhall Reign. And many other things there are told, and applied unfitly to this imagined Antichriſt, that are not truly grounded upon the Scriptures.

The old imagination touching Antichriſt confuted.

Now let us ſhew the Errors of this Fable: Firſt of all, if there ſhall come ſuch a one (ſaying expreſly that he is Chriſt) what Chriſtian would be ſeduced by him, though he ſhould do never ſo many Miracles? neither ſhall he come after the manner of a Seducer, which ſhall ſhew himſelf an expreſs Adverſary. Neither is it likely that the Jews can be reduced by ſuch a one, ſeeing that Chriſt is not promiſed unto them of the Stock of Dan by any of the Prophets, but of the Stock of Juda: nor yet is he promiſed to them to be a King Warlike, but peaceable, taking war away, and not making war. For of Chriſt ſaith Eſay, And in the laſt days, ſhall there be prepared the Mountain of the Houſe of the Lord, in the top of the Mountains, and it ſhall be exalted above the Hills: and to it ſhall all the Nations have great recourſe, and many people ſhall go and ſay; Come, let us go up to the Mountain of the Lord, and to the Houſe of the God of Jacob, and he ſhall teach us his ways, and we ſhall walk in his paths. For out of Sion ſhall there go a Law, and the word of the Lord from Jeruſalem, and he ſhall judge the Nations, and reprove much people. And they ſhall turn their Swords into Plow-ſhares, and their Spears into Sythes. There ſhall not a Nation lift up it ſelf againſt another Nation, nor yet ſhall they be any more exerciſed to war. And again, A little Babe is born to us, and a Son is given to us, and his Imperial Kingdom upon his ſhoulder, and his Name ſhall be called, The great Counſellor, The mighty God, The Father of the World to come, The Prince of Peace. His Empire ſhall be, multiplied, and there ſhall be no end of his peace. He ſhall ſit upon the Seat of David, and upon his Kingdom: that he may make it ſtedfaſt and ſtrong in Judgment, and in Juſtice, from henceforth and for evermore. Zechary doth ſay of CHRIST, Rejoyce thou greatly, O thou Daughter Sion, be thou exceeding merry, O Daughter Jeruſalem; Behold thy King ſhall come a righteous Perſon and a Saviour unto thee, and yet he a poor man, and getting up upon an Aſs, even upon a young Colt of the ſhe-Aſs. And I will ſcatter abroad the Chariot of Ephraim, and the Horſe of Jeruſalem: And the Bow of war ſhall be diſperſed, and he ſhall ſpeak peace to the Nations, and his Power ſhall be from the Sea to the Sea, and from the Flood unto the borders of the Earth.

Antichriſt cometh no ſo godly as the Papiſts imagine.

Zech. 9.

By which things it is manifeſt, that the wiſe Jews knew well enough, Chriſt to be promiſed to them of the Stock of Juda; and not of the Stock of Dan; and that he was given all to peace, and not to war: Therefore it is not likely that they can be ſeduced by ſuch a one. But if there ſhould have been in time to come ſome falſe Chriſt Antichriſt, then would Chriſt (ſeeing he loved his) have ſaid fomewhat unto them of him. Now, of one ſingularly doth he not ſpeak, but of many, ſaying, Many ſhall come in my Name, and ſay, I am Chriſt, and they ſhall ſeduce many perſons. But now let us ſee, how the Prophelies in Daniel, and in the Apocalyps (aforeſaid) be falſly and erroneouſly applied to the ſame imagined Antichriſt. For in Daniel the ninth Chapter, thus it is written, And after 72 weeks ſhall Chriſt be ſlain, and they which will deny him ſhall not be his people. And the City and Sanctuary ſhall be a people, with their Captain that ſhall come with them, deſtroy, whoſe end ſhall be utter deſolation, and after the end of the war a determined deſtruction. Now he ſhall in one week confirm his Covenant towards many, and in the half week ſhall the Offering and Sacrifice ceaſe, and in the Temple ſhall there be an abomination of deſolation, and even to the fulfilling up of all, and to the end ſhall the deſolation continue. It is plain and manifeſt that this Prophetie is now fulfilled. For the people of Rome with their Captain deſtroyed Jeruſalem even to the ground, and the people of the Jews was ſlain and ſcattered. And the abomination, that is, the Idol of Deſolation was placed of Adrian, in the laſt deſtruction, in Jeruſalem, in the holy place; that is to ſay, in a place of the Temple. And from that time hitherto have paſſed near about 1290 days, taking a day for a year, as Daniel takes it in his Prophelies, and other Prophets likewiſe. For Daniel ſpeaking of 62 weeks, doth not ſpeak of the weeks of days but of years. So therefore when he ſaith, From the time that the continual Sacrifice was taken away, &c. 1290 days muſt be taken for to many years, from the time of the Deſolation of Jeruſalem, even unto the revealing of Antichriſt: and not for three years and an half; which they ſay, Antichriſt ſhall Reign. And again, whereas Daniel ſaid, How long till the end of theſe marvelous matters? It was anſwered him, For a time, and times, and half a time. Behold alſo, how unfitly they did affign this time, by three years and a half,

The abomination or Idol of deſolation ſtanding in the holy place.

Antichriſt to Reign only three years and a half, in Bible.

a half, which they say, Antichrist shall Reign. For when as it is said a time, times, and half a time; there is a going downward from the greater to the less, from the whole to the part, because it is from a time to half a time. If therefore there be a going downward from the whole to the part, by the midst (which is greater than the whole it self) the going downward is not meet nor agreeing. And this is done when as it is said, that a time, times, and half a time, is a year, two years, and half a year. Wherefore more fitly it is said, that a time, times, and half a time doth signifie 1290 years, as is before said in the Chapter preceeding. Thus therefore is the Prophesie of Daniel fatly applied to that imagined Antichrist.

Look before in the story of the ten first Persecutions.

Likewise is the procps of the Apocalyps applied to the same imagined Antichrist too much erroneously. Because that the same cruel Beast which came up out of the Sea, having seven Heads, and ten Horns, to whom there was power given over every Tribe, People, and Tongue, and the power given for the space of 42 months: This Beast doth note the Roman Emperors, which most cruelly did persecute the people of God, as well Christians as Jews. For when as the condemnation of the great Whore, sitting upon the many waters was shewed to John: he saw the same Woman sitting upon the purple coloured Beast full of the names of blasphemy, having seven Heads and ten Horns: and he saw a Woman being drunk with the blood of the Saints and Martyrs of Jesus. And the Angel expounding and telling him the mystery of the Woman, and the Beast that carried her faid, That seven heads are seven hills, and are seven Kings: Five are fallen, one is, the other is not yet come: and when he shall come, he must Reign a short time. And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten Kings, who have not yet taken their Kingdom, shall receive their Power as it were in one hour under the Beast. And finally he saith, The Woman whom thou sawest is the great City, which hath the Kingdom over the Kings of the Earth. And it is manifest that the City of Rome at the time of this Prophetie, had the Kingdom over the Kings of the Earth. And this City was born up and upholden by her cruel and beastly Emperors; who by their cruelty and beastliness did subdue unto themselves in a manner all the Kingdoms of the World, of zeal to have Lordship over others, and not vertuously to govern the people that were their Subjects, seeing that they themselves did lack all vertue, and drew back others from the faith and from vertue.

Apoc. 13.

The Beast in the 13th of the Apocalyps expounded.

The purple Beast in the Apocalyps meaneth Rome.

Wherefore that cruel Beast coming up out of the Sea, doth rightly note the Roman Emperors, who had power over every Language, People, and Country. And the power of the Beast was for 42 months, because that from the first Emperor of Rome, that is to say, Julius Cæsar, unto the end of Frederick the last Emperor of Rome, there were 42 months, taking a month for 30 days, as the months of the Hebrews and Grecians are, and taking a day always for a year, as commonly it is taken in the Prophets. By which things it may plainly appear how unfitly this Prophetie is applied to that imagined Antichrist, and the 42 months taken for three years and a half, which (they say) he shall Reign in, against the saying of the Prophets, because that days are taken for years. As in the second of the Apocal. They shall be troubled ten days. Which do note the most cruel Persecution of Diocletian against the Christians that endured ten years. And in another place of the Apocalyps it is writen of the smoke coming up out of the bottomless Pit: Out of which Pit there came forth Grashoppers into the Earth, and to them was power given, as Scorpions have power, to vex and trouble men five months. Now it is manifest, that from the beginning of the Fryers Minors and Preachers, to the time that Armachanus began to disclose and uncover their Hypocrisie, and their false Foundation of valiant begging under the Poverty of Christ, were five months, taking a month for thirty days, and a day for a year. And to Ezekiel were days given for years. Wherefore it is an unfit thing to assign the 42 months, being appointed to the power of the Beast, unto three years and a half, for the Reign of that phantastical and imagined Antichrist; specially feeing that they do apply to his Reign the 1290 days in Daniel, which make 42 months, and in the Apocalyps they assign him 42 months. It is plain that the Psaltery and the Harp agree not. And therefore seeing that it is sufficiently shewed that the same fabling Tale of that imagined Antichrist to come, is a Fable and erroneous; let us go forward to declare whether Antichrist be already come, and yet is he hid from many, and shall be opened and disclosed within a little while according to the truth of the holy Scripture, for the Salvation of the Faithful.

KING 3 Kin. 2.1 Whether Antichrist be already come.

And because that in the first conclusion of mine answer I have conditionally put it, who is that Antichrist lying privy in the hid Scriptures of the Prophets: I will pass on the Declaration of that conclusion, bringing to light those things which lay hid in darkness, because nothing is hid which shall not be disclosed, and nothing covered which shall not be known. And therefore the thing which was said in the darkness, let us fay in the light; and the thing that we have heard in the ear, let us preach upon the house tops. I therefore, as I have before said, so fay, that if the high Bishop of Rome, calling himself the Servant of God, and the chief Vicar of Christ in this world, do make and justifie many Laws contrary to the Gospel of Jesus Christ: then is he the chief of many, which coming in the name of Christ have said I am Christ, who have seduced many. Which is the first part of the first conclusion, and is manifest. For Christ is called of the Hebrews the very time that was call anointed. And amongst them there was a double fort of legal anointing by the Law, the one of Kings, and the other of Priests. And as well were the Kings, as the Priests, called in the Law Christs. The Kings, as in the Psalm, The Kings of the Earth stood up together, and the Princes assembled themselves in one against the Lord, and against his Christ or anointed. And in the Books of the Kings very often are the Kings called Christs. And our Saviour was Christ, or anointed King, because he was a King for evermore upon the Throne of David, as the Scripture doth very oftentimes witness. The Priests also were called anointed, as where it is written, Do not ye touch my Christs; that is, mine anointed Ones, and be not ye spitefull against my Prophets. And so was our Saviour Christ, a Priest for ever, according to the Order of Melchisedec.

The Pope proved destroyer.

Anointing double in Scripture.

Kings and Priests anointed.

Seeing then that the Bishops of Rome do fay that they are the High Priests; they fay also therein that they are Kings, because they say that they have the Spiritual Sword pertaining to their Priesthood, and the corporal Sword which agreeth for a Kings State. So is it plain that really and in very deed, they say, That they are Christs, albeit that expressly they be not called Christs. Now that they come in the name of Christ it is manifest, because they say that they are his principal Vicars in this World, ordained of Christ specially for the Government of the Christian Church. Therefore, seeing they say, that really and in very deed they are Christs, and the chief friends of Christ: If they make and justifie many Laws contrary to the Gospel of Jesus Christ, then is it plain that they themselves in earth are the principal Antichrists, because there is no worse plague and pestilence, than a familiar enemy. And if in secret they be against Christ, and yet in open appearance they say that they are his friends, they are so much the more meet to seduce and deceive the Christian people, because that a manifest enemy shall have much ado to deceive a man, because men truft him not: but a privy enemy, pretending outward friendship, may easily seduce, yea thole that be wise.

The Pope make themselves Gods and Kings.

The Pope maketh himself Christ.

The Pope cometh in the name of Christ.

Popes pontifical Law.

The Pope an outward friend and a privy enemy to Christ

But that this matter may the more fully be known, let us see what is the Law and Doctrine of Christ, that ought to be observed of all faithful people, which being known, and it shall be an easie thing to see, if the Bishop of Rome do make or maintain any Laws contrary to the Law of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Whether the Pope doth maintain any Laws against the Laws of Christ.

I say then, that the Law of Christ is Charity, which is the perfect love of God and of Christ. This thing is plain and manifest. For Christ being demanded of a certain Doctor of the Law, What is the greatest commandment in the Law? answered: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind: That is the principal and greatest commandment. And as for the second it is like unto this: Thou shalt love thy Neighbour as thine own self. In these two commandments, doth the Law and whole Prophets depend. And in another place Christ saith: All manner of things therefore that you would that men should do to you

KING 3 Kin. 2.3 you, the same also do ye unto them; For this is the Law and the Prophets. And in John the thirteenth Chapter, Christ saith, And now do I say unto you, I give you a new Commandment, that you should love each other; as I loved you, in like manner that you also should love one another. In this shall all men know that you are my Disciples, if you shall have love one towards another. And John fifteenth Chapter, This is my Commandment, that you love together as I have loved you. Greater love than this hath no body, that a man should give his life for his Friends. The Apostle Peter saith in his first Epistle fourth Chapter. Above all things having continually Charity one towards another; for Charity covereth the multitude of sins. Be ye Harborers, and entertain ye one another without grudging; every one as he hath received Grace, so let him bestow it upon another man, as the good Stewards of the manifold Graces of God. If any man speak, let him speak as the Word of God. If any man do ought for another, let it be done with singleness and unfained verity, ministred of God to us-ward, that in all things God may be honoured through Jesus Christ our Lord. James in his Epistle the second Chapter, If ye perform the Royal Law accordingly to the Scriptures (thou shalt love thy Neighbour) ye do well: But if ye be partial in receiving and preferring mens Personages, ye work wickedness, being blamed of the Law as Transgressors. And again, So speak ye, and so do ye, as ye should now begin to be judged by the Law of Liberty. What shall it avail (my Brethren) if a man say he have Faith, and have no Works? never shall the Faith be able to save him. For if a Brother or Sister be naked, and have need of daily food, and some of you say to them, go ye in peace, be ye made warm and satisfied: and if ye shall not give those things that are necessary for the body, what shall it avail? Even so Faith, if it have not Works, is dead in it self.

James 2.

1 Joh. 3. John in his first Epistle the third Chapter, This is the tydings which you have heard from the beginning, that you should love one another. And again, we know that we are translated from death to life, if we love the Brethren: He that loveth not, abideth in death. And again herein we know the love of God, because that he hath laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the Brethren. He that shall have the substance of this world, and shall see his Brother have need, and shall shut up his bowels from him, how abideth the love of God in him? My little Children, let us not love in word nor tongue, but in deed and truth. And again, Chap. 4. Most dearly Beloved, let us love together. For love is of God; he that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love. In this thing hath the love of God appeared in us, that God hath sent his only begotten Son into the World, that we should live by him. Herein is love; not that we have loved God, but that he hath first loved us, and hath sent his his Son an attonement for our sins. Most dearly Beloved, if God have loved us, we so ought to love together. No man hath seen God at any time; if we love together, God abideth in us, and his love is perfect in us. And again, Let us love God, for he hath first loved us. If a man shall say, I love God, and do hate his Brother, he is a lyar. For he that loveth not his Brother whom he seeth, how can he love God whom he seeth not? And this Commandment have we of God, that who so loveth God, should love his Brother also. Paul in his Epistle to the Romans the thirteenth Chapter, Owe ye nothing to no body, saving that you should love together: for he that loveth his Brother hath fulfilled the Law. For thou shalt not commit Adultery, thou shalt not Murther, thou shalt not Steal, thou shalt not bear false Witness, thou shalt not covet thy Neighbours goods; and if there be any other Commandment, it is plenifully fulfilled in this word, Thou shalt love thy Neighbour as thy self. Wherefore the fulfilling of the Law is love.

1 Joh. 4.

Rom. 13.

1 Cor. 13. Paul to the Corinths the thirteenth Chapter saith, If I should speak with the Tongues of men and Angels, and yet have not Charity, I am become as it were a piece of sounding metal or tinkling Cymbal. And if I have all Prophecy, and know all Mysteries and all Knowledg, and shall have all Faith, so that I might remove Mountains, and yet shall not have Charity, I am nothing. And if I shall give abroad all my Goods to feed the Poor, and shall give up my Body to be burned, and yet have not Charity, it profits me nothing. To the Galathians 5. faith Paul, For you my Brethren are called unto liberty; do ye not give your liberty for an occasion of the flesh, but by Charity of the Spirit serve ye one another. For all the Law is fulfilled in one saying; Thou shalt love thy Neighbour as thine own self. To the Ephesians the fourth Chapter, he saith, I therefore that suffer bonds in the Lord do beseech you, that you would walk worthy of the calling wherewith ye are called, with all humbleness and mildness, with patience, forbearing one another in love, being careful to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of Peace: that you be one body and one Spirit, even as you be called in one Hope of your calling. And again in the fifth Chapter, Be ye followers of me as most dear Children, and walk ye in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath delivered up himself for us, an Offering and Sacrifice to God of a sweet savour. To the Philippians, thus he speaketh in the first Chapter, Only let your Conversation be worthy of the Gospel of Christ, that either when I shall come and see you, or else in mine absence I may hear of you, that you stand stedfast in one Spirit, labouring together with one accord for the Faith of the Gospel. And in nothing be ye afraid of the Adversaries, which is to them a cause of damnation, but to you of salvation, and that of God. For to you it is given, not only that you should believe in him, but also that you should suffer with him, you having the like fight and battel that both you have seen in me, and also now do hear of me. If therefore there be any Consolation in Christ, if any comfort of Charity, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels of compassion fulfil you my joy, that you may be of one judgment, having one and the self same Charity, being of one accord, of one manner of judgment, doing nothing of contention nor of vain glory, but in humbleness accounting other amongst you, every one better than your selves; not every body looking upon the things that be his own, but those that belong unto others. And to Col. 3. thus he writeth, You therefore as the Elect of God, holy, and beloved, put upon you the bowels of mercy, gentleness, humbleness, lowliness, modesty, patience, bearing one with another, and giving place to your selves (if any have a quarrel against any body) even as the Lord forgave you, so do you also. Above all things have ye Charity, which as the bond of Perfection, and let the peace of Christ triumph in your hearts, in which peace you also are called in one body. And be ye kind and thankful. And to the Thessalonians, thus Paul writeth in the fourth Chapter, As concerning brotherly Charity we have no need to write unto you; for you your selves have learned of God, that you should love one another. And the same thing ye do towards all the Brethren throughout all Macedony.

Col. 3.

1 Thess. 4.

Out of all these any many other places of the holy Scripture it fufficiently appeareth, that the Law of Christ is Charity; neither is there any vertue commanded of Christ, or any of his Apostles, to be observed of the faithful people, but that it cometh out of Charity, or else doth nourish Charity.

The Law is given by Moses, and the Truth by Christ. Christ came not to unloose the Law and the Prophets, but to fulfil them. But yet many things were lawful and might have been observed in the time of the Law, which in the time of Grace must not be observed. And many things were unlawful to them that were under the Law, which in the time of Grace are lawful enough. After what fort then he did not loose the Law, but did fulfil it, it is necessary to declare, for those things which hereafter must be said. For amongst Christians many things are judged to be lawful, because in the former Testament in the Law they were lawful: and yet they be expressly contrary to Christs Gospel. But the Authors of such things do argue and reason thus, Christ came not to loose the Law or the Prophets. Now after what fort he did not unloose them it is manifest by the holy Scripture: that the Law given by Moses, was written in Tables of stone, to declare the hardnels of the peoples heart towards the love of God, or of Christ. But Christ hath written his Law in the hearts and in the minds of his; that is to say, the Law of perfect love of God, and of Christ. Which Law whoseever observeth, he doth observe the Law of Moses, and doth much greater works of Perfection, than were the works of the Law. Thus therefore were the morals of the old Law fulfilled in the Law of Charity of Christ, and not unloosed; because they are much more perfectly observed, than of the Jews: This I say, if the Christians do observe the Commandments of Christ in such sort, as he commanded the same to be observed. Christ hath fulfilled the Laws moral of the Old Testament, because that the morals and judicials were ordained, that one person should not do injury to another, and that every man should have paid him that is his. Now they that are in charity, will do no injury to others, neither do they take other mens goods away from them. Nay, it seeketh not her own things. For charity seeketh not the things that be her own. Wherefore much less by a stronger reason it ought not to seek for other mens goods. And when as the judicials and morals were ordained, Christ did not by the works of the Law justifie the Believers in him, but by Grace justified them from their sins. And so did Christ fulfil that by Grace that the Law could not by Justice.

Free justification, By Faith only. Grace, that is, free favour, mercy and goodness of God.

Paul to the Romans declareth in a godly discourse, and to the Galathians likewise, That none shall be justified by the works of the Law, but by Grace in the Faith of Jesus Christ. As for the morals and ceremonies of the Law, as Circumcision, Sacrifices for Offences, and for sins, Firft-fruits, Tenths, Vows, divers sorts of Washings, the sprinkling of blood, the sprinkling of ashes, abstaining from unclean Meats, which are ordained for the sanctifying and cleansing of the people from sin, no nor yet the prayers of the Priests, neither the preachings of the Prophets could cleanse a man from his sin. For death reigned even from Adam to Moses, and sin from Moses to Christ,

Rom. 5. as Paul declareth to the Romans in the fifth Chapter. But Christ willing to have Mercy and not Sacrifice, being a Priest for ever after the Order of Melchisedec, and an High

Heb. 9. Priest of good things to come, did neither by the blood of Goats, or Calves, but by his own blood enter in once into the holy places, when as everlasting Redemption was found: neither did Jesus enter into the holy places that were made with hands, which are the examples of true things, but unto the very Heaven, that now he may appear before the countenance of God for us. Nor yet he did so, that he should offer up himself oftentimes, as the high Bishop entred into the holy place every year with strange blood (for otherwise he must needs have suffered oftentimes sithence the beginning of the world) but now in the later end of the world hath he once appeared by his own Sacrifice, for the destruction of sin. And like as it is decreed for men once to die, and after that cometh judgment: even so was Christ once offered up to consume away the sins of many. The second time shall he appear without sin to the salvation of such as look for him. For the Law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image or substance it self of the things, can never by those Sacrifices which they offer (of one self same sort continually year by year) make them perfect that come unto her. Otherwise men would leave off offering, because that those Worshippers being once cleansed should

Heb. 10. have no more prick of conscience for sin afterwards. But in them is there remembrance made of sins every year. For it is impossible, that by the blood of Goats and Bulls sins should be taken away. Wherefore he entring into the world doth say, As for Sacrifice and Offering thou wouldst not have, but a Body hast thou framed unto me. And Sacrifices for sin have not pleased thee: then said I, behold, I come; In the head, or principal part of the Book it is written of me, that I should do thy will, O God. Wherefore he said before, that Sacrifices, Oblations, and Burnt-Offerings, and that for sin thou wouldst not have: neither were those things pleasant to thee which are offered according to the Law: then said I, behold, I come, that I may do thy will, O God: He taketh away the first, that he may establish that that followed. In which Will we are sanctified and made holy by the offering up of the Body of Jesus Christ once. And verily every Priest is ready every day ministring, and oftentimes offering the self same Sacrifices, which never can take away sins. But this man, offering one Sacrifice for sins, doth for ever and ever sit at Gods right hand, looking for the rest to come, till that his Enemies be placed to be his Footstool. For with one Offering hath he for ever made perfect those that be sanctified. By which things it plainly appeareth, that Christ by once offering hath cleansed his from their sins; who could not be cleansed from the same by all the Ceremonies of the Law, and so did fulfil that which the Priesthood of the Law could not. Wherefore only the morals and judicials he fulfilled by the Law of Charity, and by Grace; and the Ceremonials, by one offering up of his Body on the Altar of the Cross. And so it is plain that Christ fulfilled the whole Law.

Wherefore sithence that the holy things of the Law were a shadow of those things that were to come in the time of Grace, it were meet that all those things should utterly cease amongst Christians, which should either be against Charity or the Grace of Christ. Although in the time of the Law they were lawful, and not utterly contrary to it, but were figures of Perfections in Christs Faith: yet it were meet that they should cease at the coming of the Perfection which they did prefigurate; as Circumcision, the eating of the Paschal-Lamb, and other ceremonial points of the Law. Whereupon also Paul to the Hebrews the seventh Chapter, saith thus, If therefore the making up of the perfection of all was by the Levitical Priesthood (for the people received the Law under him) why was it necessary besides, that another Priest should rise up after the Order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the Order of Aaron? For when the Priesthood is removed, it must needs be that the Law also be removed. For he in whom these things are spoken is of another Tribe, of which none stood present at the Altar: because it is manifest that our Lord had his Off-spring of Juda, in which Tribe Moses spake nothing of the Priests. And besides this it is manifest; If according to the Order of Melchisedec there do arise up another Priest, which was not made according to the law of the carnal commandment, but according to the power of the life that cannot be losed. For thus he beareth witness, That thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec: so that the commandment that went before, is disallowed for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof. For the Law hath brought no body to perfection. By which things it appeareth that Christ making an end of the Priesthood of Aaron, doth also make up a full end of the Law belonging to that Priesthood. Whereupon I marvel that your learned men do say, That Christian folks are bound to this small Ceremony of the payment of Tythes, and care nothing at all for other, as well the great as the small Ceremonies of the Law.

Where the Priesthood is removed, there also the Law is removed. Bound, as a matter of Religion, or by the necessity of Gods Law and not man; but now Tythes are found by mans Law, and not by the old Law.

It is plain, that the Tythes were given to the Sons of Levi, for their serving in the Tabernacle and in the Temple of the Lord, as the Firft-fruits were given to the Priests, and also part of the Sacrifices, and so were the Vows of their Ministery, as it appeareth in the Book of Numbers the 22th Chapter. But forasmuch as the labour of those Sacrifices did cease at the coming of Christ, how should those things be demanded, which were ordained for that labour? And seeing that the Firft-fruits were not demanded of Christians, which Firft-fruits were then rather and sooner demanded than the Tythes: why must the Tythes be demanded except it be therefore perad-verture, because that the Tythes be more worth in value than be the Firft-fruits.

The cause ceasing, the effect also ceaseth. He meaneth that ceremony of tythes, which standeth by the necessity of the old Law, to cease.

Secondly, why are the Lay-people bound to the payment of Tythes, more than the Levites and the Priests were to the not having of Possessions of Realties and Lordships amongst their Brethren, seeing that the self same Law in the self same place (where he saith, That the Tythes ought to be given to Levites) saith also to the Levites, You shall have none other thing amongst your Brethren. Wherefore seeing that the Priests be bound, to the not having of Temporal Lordships, how are the Lay-people bound by that Law (of God he meaneth, and not of man) to the payment of Tythes?

If Tythes be claimed by force of the old law, by the same law Priests are bound to have no Temporalities. He proveth not contrary, but that Tythes by Gods law are prefigurate by the law of man. Although not by the ceremonial law of Moses. Circumcision ceaseth, the Ceremonies do cease.

Thirdly, as touching Circumcision, which is one of the greater Ceremonies of the Law, and was given before the Law, and was an universal Ceremony concerning the Covenant between God and his people, and was so much regarded in the Law, that thereof it was said, The Soul, whose flesh shall not be circumcised in the foreskin, shall perish from among his people: Yet did this Ceremony utterly cease at the coming of Christ, although that certain of the Jews did say in the Primitive-Church, that the

the Christians must needs keep the commandment of circumcision with the Faith; whom Paul reproveth, writing thus to the Galatians, the fourth Chapter, where he speaketh of the children of the bondwoman and of the freewoman, which do signifie the two Testaments. But we (O Brethren) are the children of the promise after Isaac; but like as at that time he that was born after the flesh, did persecute him which was after the spirit, even so it is now also. But what saith the Scriptures? Throw out the bondwoman and her son. The son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman. Wherefore brethren, we are not the sons of the bondwoman, but of the free. Stand ye stedfast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath delivered you, and be not ye holden again under the yoke of slavery. Behold, I Paul say unto you, if you be circumcised, Christ shall nothing profit you. For I testifie again, to every man that circumciseth himself, that he is bound to keep all the whole Law. Ye are utterly void of Christ: whosoever will be justified in the law, are fallen from grace.

Bound in one thing (in reason) bound in all: either bound to all, or to none. * Here he expresseth his meaning plainly.

In like manner we may reason, if we be bound to tithing, we are debtors and bound to keep all the whole law. For to say, that Men are bound to one ceremony of the law, and not to the others, is no reasonable saying. Either therefore we are bound to them all, or to none. Also, that by the same * old law Men are not bound to pay Tithes, it may be shewed by many reasons, which we need not any more to multiply and increase, because the things that be said are sufficient. Whereupon some do say, that by the Gospel we are bound to pay Tithes, because Christ said to the Pharisees, Matth. 23d Chap. Wo be to you Scribes and Pharisees, which pay your Tithe of Mint, of Anise-seed, and of Cummin, and leave judgment, mercy and truth undone, being the weightier things of the law; both should ye have done these things, and also not have left the other undone. O ye blind guids, that strain at a Gnat, and swallow up a Camel. This word foundeth not as a commandment, or manner of bidding, whereby Christ did command Tithes to be given; but it is a word of disallowing the hypocrifie of the Pharisees, who of covetousness did weigh and esteem Tithes because of their own singular commodity, rather than other great and weighty commandments of the law. And me seemeth that our Men are in the same predicament of the Pharisees which do leave off all the ceremonies of the old law, keeping only the commandment of tithing. It is manifest and plain enough by the premises, and by other places of the Scripture, that Christ was a Priest after the order of Melchisedek, of the Tribe of Judah, not of the Tribe of Levi, who gave no new commandment of tithing of any thing to him and to his Priests, whom he would place after him; but when his Apostles said to him, Behold we leave all things and have followed thee, what then shall we have? he did not answer them thus, Tithes shall be paid you; neither did he promise them a temporal, but an everlasting reward in Heaven. For he both for food, and also apparel taught his Disciples not to be careful; Be ye not careful for your life what ye shall eat, or for your body what ye shall put on: Is not the life of Man more worth than the meat, and the body more worth than apparel? Behold ye, the Birds of Heaven, which do not sow, nor reap, neither yet lay up in Barns, and yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. And as for apparel, why should you be careful? Consider the Lilies of the field, how they grow, they labour not, neither do they spin, &c. In conclusion he saith, Be not ye careful, saying, what shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or wherewithal shall we be covered? For all these things do the Gentiles seek after; for your Father knoweth that you have need of all these things. First, therefore seek ye for the Kingdom of God and the righteousness thereof, and all these things shall be cast unto you. And Paul right well remembring this Doctrine, instructeth Timothy, and saith thus, But we having food, and wherewithal to be covered, let us therewith be contented. And as the Acts of the Apostles do declare in the first conversion of the Jews at Jerusalem, they had all things common, and to every one was division made, as need required. Neither did the Priests make the Tithes their own proper goods. For like as it was not meet that the lay people being converted, should have propriety of goods; even so neither that Priests should have propriety of Tythes not expresly commanded anew by Christ in his Gospel. Mat. 6.

Tithes. So that if the Priests started back from fervent charity in challenging to themselves the propriety of Tithes; it is no marvel of departing backward (as do the Priests from the perfection of charity) also of the laity, to be willing to appropriate to themselves the nine parts remaining after Tithes. Wherefore seeing that neither Christ, nor any of the Apostles, commanded to pay Tithes; it is manifest and plain, neither by the law of Moses, nor by Christs law, Christian people are bound to pay Tithes; but by the Tradition of men they are bound.

Tithes due to be paid by the positive Law of Men.

By the premises now it is plain, that Christ did not undo the law, but by grace did fulfil it. Notwithstanding, in the law many things were lawful, which in the time of grace are forbidden; and many things were then unlawful, which now are lawful enough. For nothing that is contrary to charity, is lawful to a Christian.

Let us now hear what manner of commandments Christ hath given us in the Gospel, without the observation of which commandments, charity shall not perfectly be kept. By which commandments Christ did not undo the old law, but did fulfil it. By the observation also of which commandments, he teacheth us to pass and go beyond the righteousnesses of the Scribes and Pharisees, who most perfectly thought themselves to keep the law. This absolute and perfect righteousness, which we are bound to have beyond the righteousnesses of the Pharisees and the Scribes, he teacheth in Matthew 5, 6, and 7 Chapters, which being heard and compared to the Traditions made and commanded by the Roman Prelates, it shall plainly appear, whether they be contrary or no. Christ therefore saith, You have heard, that it was said to them of the old time, Thou shalt not kill. For he that killeth shall be guilty of judgment. But I say unto you, that every one that is angry with his brother shall be in danger of judgment. In this he doth teach that we ought not to be angry with our brethren; not that he would undo this old commandment (Thou shalt not kill) but that the same should be the more perfectly observed. Again he saith, You have heard that it was said, thou shalt love thy friend, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies, do well to them that hate you, pray for them that persecute and slander you, that you may be the children of your Father which is in Heaven: Which maketh his Sun to arise upon the good and the evil people, and raineth upon the just and unjust. For if you love them which love you, what reward shall you have? Do not the Publicans thus? And if you shall salute your brethren only, what great thing do ye? Do not the Heathen thus also? Be you therefore perfect, as also your heavenly Father is perfect.

The Doctrine of Christ, whether it be contrary to the traditions of the Pope or not.

Mat. 5.

Again Christ saith, You you have heard that it is said, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. But I say unto you, see that you resist not evil. But if any man shall strike you upon the right cheek, give him the other too. And to him that will strive with thee for thy Coat in judgment, let him have thy Cloak also. And whosoever shall constrain thee one Mile, go with him also two other. He that asketh of thee, give him; and he that will borrow of thee, turn not thy self from him.

The Doctrine of Christ and of the Pope compared.

By these things it may plainly appear how that Christ the King of peace, the Saviour of Mankind, who came to save, and not to destroy; who gave a law of charity to be observed of his faithful people; hath taught us not to be angry, not to hate our enemies, nor to render evil for evil, nor to resist evil. For all these things do foster and nourish peace and charity, and do proceed and come forth of charity, and when they be not kept, charity is loosed, and peace is broken. But the Bishop of Rome approveth and alloweth Wars, and slaughters of men in War, as well against our enemies, that is, the Infidels, as also against the Christians for temporal goods. Now, these things are quite contrary to Christs Doctrine, and to Charity, and to Peace.

In the Decrees 23. q. 1. cap. Paratus, it is taught, that the precepts of patience must always be retained in purpose of the heart, so that patience with benevolence must be kept in the mind secret. But apparently and manifestly that thing should be done which seemeth to do good to those, whom we ought to with well unto. Wherein they give to understand, that a Christian may freely defend himself. And for confirmation of this saying they do say, That Christ, when he was stricken on the face of the High Bishops servant, did not fulfil (if we look upon the words) his own commandment; because he gave not to the smiter the other part, but rather did forbid him, that he should not do it, to double his injury. For he said, if I have spoken evil, beare witnesse of the evil; but if well, why doest thou strike me? I do marvel of this saying; for first, if those commandments of patience must be kept in secret in the mind; and seeing the body doth work at the motion of the mind, and is and ought to be moved and ruled by the same; it must then needs be, that if patience be in the mind, it must appear also outwardly in the body.

Secondly, I marvel that it is said, that Christ did not fulfil his own precept of patience. For it is manifest, that albeit he teaching always as a good Schoolmaster, those things which were fit for the salvation of souls, speaking the wholesome word of instruction to the High Bishops servant, smiting him unjustly, did neither by word forbid another stroke to be given on the other cheek, neither did he defend himself bodily from striking on the same cheek; but speaking to him, it is likely that he gave him the other cheek; he meaneth, that he turned not the other cheek away. For a man turneth not away from him whom he speaketh to, or whom he informeth, but layeth open before him all his face; even so do I believe that Christ did, that he might fulfil in very deed that which before he had taught in word. Neither yet did Christ by his word or by his deed shew any thing of defence, or of bodily resistance.

The cause how far again of Christ was private, and this Doctrine is to be understood in private cases. War in case allowed of W. Brute.

Thirdly, I marvel why wise men leaving the plain and manifest Doctrine of Christ, whereby he teacheth patience, do seek corners of their own imagining, to the intent they may approve fightings and wars. Why mark they not after what manner Christ spake to Peter, striking the High Bishops servant, saying, Put up thy Sword into the Sheath, for every one that shall take the Sword, shall perish with the Sword? But in another case we must make resistance; which case may be so righteous, as it is for a Mans Lord and Master being a most righteous Man, and yet suffering injury of mischievous persons.

He meaneth resistance for private causes, or for worldly goods.

Patience commended in private causes amongst Christian brethren.

Fourthly, I marvel, seeing that we are bound of charity, and by the law of Christ, to give our lives for our Brethren, how they can allow such manner of dissentions and resisting. For when thy Brother shall maliciously strike thee, thou mayst be sure, that he is manifestly fallen from charity, into the snare of the Devil. If thou shalt keep patience, he shall be ashamed of his doing, and thou mayst bow and bend him to repentance, and take him out from the snare of the Devil, and call him back again to charity. If thou resist, and perchance by resistance dost strike again, his fury shall be the more kindled, and he being stirred up to greater wrath, peradventure shall either slay thee, or thou him. Touching thy self thou art uncertain if thou go about to make resistance, whether thou shalt fall from charity, and then shalt thou go backward from the perfection of Christs commandment: Neither dost thou know but that it may happen thee so greatly to be moved, as that by the heat and violence of wrath, thou shalt slay him.

The inconvenience of private resistance among Christian brethren.

Whereas if thou wouldst dispose thy self to patience (as Christ teacheth) thou shouldst easily avoid all these mischiefs, as well on the behalf of thy Brother, as also of thine own part. Wherefore the observing of charity, as the precept of patience, is to be observed.

Paul being stricken did not break the rule of christian patience, neither made any bodily resistance.

Fifthly, I do marvel, why that for the allowing of this corporal resistance, he doth say in the same Chapter, that Paul did not fulfil the precept of the patience of Christ, when as he being fruitful in the place of Judgment by the commandment of the High Priest, did say, God strike thee, O how painted Wall: Dost thou sit to judge me according to the Law, and dost thou command me to be stricken against the law? It is manifest that Paul made resistance in nothing, though he spake a word of instruction to the Priest, who against the law commanded him to be stricken. And it Paul had overpassed the bounds of patience, through the grief of the stroke, what of that? Must the deed of Paul's impatience for this cause be justified, and the commandment of patience taught by Christ be left undone for Paul's deed, and corporal resistance be allowed? God forbid. For both Paul and Peter might err. But in the Doctrine of Christ there may be found no error. Wherefore we must give more credence and belief to Christs sayings, than to any living mans doings. Wherefore although Paul had resisted, which I do not perceive in that Scripture, it followeth not thereof, that corporal resistance must be approved, which is of Christ expressly forbidden. I much marvel that always they seek corners and shadows to justifie their deeds. Why do they not mark what great things Paul reciteth himself to have suffered for Christ? And where I pray you, have they found that he, after his conversion strook any man that did hurt him? Or where do they find that he in expresse word doth teach such a kind of corporal resistance? But as touching patience, he faith in plain words to the Romans, Be not wise in your own conceits: Render ill for ill to no body: providing good things not only before God, but also before all men, if it be possible: Be at peace with all folkes, as much as in you lieth; not revenging your selves, my most dearly beloved, but give you place unto anger. For it is written, Vengeance is mine, and I will recompence them, saith the Lord. But if thine enemy shall be an hungred, give him meat; if he be athirst, give him drink. For thus doing, thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome thou evil with good.

Rules of Christian patience.

To the Corinthians the 5th. as touching judgment and contention, which are matters of less weight than are fightings, thus he writeth, Now verily there is great fault in you, that ye be at law among st your selves. Why rather take ye not wrong? Why rather suffer ye not deceit? And generally in all his Epistles, he teacheth that patience should be kept, and not corporal resistance by fighting, because charity is patient, it is courteous, it sustereth all things. I marvel how they justifie and make good the wars by Christians, saving only the wars against the Devil and sin. For seeing that it is plain, that those things which were in the Old Testament, were figures of things to be done in the New Testament; Therefore we must needs say, that the corporal wars being then done, were figures of the Christian wars against sin, and the Devil, for the heavenly Country which is our inheritance. It is plain that it was written thus of Christ: The mighty Lord, and of great power in battel hath girded himself in force and manliness to the War; and he came not to send peace into the earth, but War. In this war ought Christian people to be soldiers, according to that manner which Paul teacheth to the Ephesians the last, Put upon you the armour of God, that you may be able to stand against the deceits of the Devil. For we have not to wrastle against flesh and blood, but against Princes and Potestates, against the rulers of the darkness of the World, against spiritual wickednesse in heavenly things, which are in the high places. Wherefore take ye the armour of God, that ye may be able to resist in the evil day, and to stand perfectly in all things. Stand ye therefore girded about in truth upon your loyns, having put upon you the breast-plate of righteousnesse, and your feet shod in a readinesse to the Gospel of peace; in all things taking the shield of faith, wherewith you may quench all the fery darts of that wicked one. And take unto you the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.

They that be lesst in the Kingdom of heaven greater than he.

Corporal Wars under the Old Testament be figures of the spiritual wars in the New Testament to fight with the Devil.

Ephes. 6.

By these things it is plain, what are the wars of Christians, and what are the weapons of their warfare. And because it is manifest, that this Testament is of greater perfection than the former, we must now fight more perfectly than at that time. For now spiritually, then corporally; now for an heavenly everlasting inheritance, then for an earthly and temporal; now by patience, then by resistance. For Christ saith, Blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousnesse, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. He saith not, blessed are they that fight for righteousnesse. How can a man say that they may lawfully make war and kill their Brethren for the temporal goods, which peradventure they unjustly occupy, or unjustly intend to occupy? For he that killeth another to get those goods which another body unjustly occupieth, doth love more the very goods than his own Brother. And then he falling from charity, doth kill himself spiritually. If he go forward without * charity to make war, then doth he evil, and to his own damnation. Wherefore he doth not lawfully nor justly in proceeding to the damnation of his own self and his Brother; whom, though he see unjustly to occupy occupy his goods, yet he doth intend to kill. And what if such kind of Wars were lawful to the Jews? this argueth not, that now they are lawful to Christians; because that their deeds were in a shadow of imperfection, but the deeds of Christians in the light of perfection. It was not said unto them, All people that shall take the sword, shall perish with the sword. What if John the Baptist disallowed corporal fightings, and corporal warfare, at such time as the Soldiers asked him saying, And what shall we do? who saith to them, See that you strike no man, neither pick yo quarrels against any, and be you contented with your wage. This saying of John alloweth not corporal warfare amongst Christian. For John was of the Priests of the Old Testament, and under the Law, neither to him it appertained not to follow the law, but to warn the people to the perfect observation of the law; for he, being likewise demanded of the Publicans what they should do, said unto them, Do no other thing than is appointed unto you. But Christ the Author of the New Testament, and of greater perfection than was the perfection of the old law, gave new things, as it plainly appeareth by the Gospel. So that Christians ought to receive information of Christ, not of John. For of John also doth Christ speak, Verily I say unto you, there hath not risen amongst the children of Men, a greater than John Baptist, but he that is least in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he. In which saying, Christ sheweth, that those that be least in the Kingdom of Heaven in the time of grace, are placed in greater perfection than was John, which was one of them that were the Elders, and he lived also in the time of the law in greater perfection. And when as certain of John's Disciples said unto him, Master, he that was beyond Jordan, to whom thou gavest witnesse, behold he baptiseth, and all people come unto him; John answered and said, A man cannot take upon him, unless it shall be given him from above. You your selves do bear me record, that I said I am not Christ, but that I was sent before him. He that hath the bride, is the bridegroom; as for the bridegrooms friend, who standeth and heareth him, he rejoiceth with great joy to hear the voice of the bridegroom. This therefore my joy is fulfilled; he must increase and I must be diminished. He that cometh from on high, is above all. He that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth: He that cometh from Heaven, is above all folks; that which he hath seen and heard, the same doth he witnesse, and yet his witnessing doth no body receive. But he that receiveth his witnessing, hath put to his Seal, that God is true. For he whom God hath sent, speaketh the Words of God.

Matth. 11

Luke 7

By which things it plainly appeareth, that credence is to be given neither to John, nor yet to Angel, if he teach any thing that is not agreeable to Christs Doctrine. For Christ is above the Angels, because that God infinitely passeth them in wisdom. Now if Moses the servant of God, a Minister of the Old Testament, was so much to be believed, that nothing could be added, nor yet any thing diminished from the Commandments that were given by him, (for so Moses had said, The thing that I command thee, that do thou only to the Lord, neither add thou any thing, nor diminish;) How much more ought we not to add nor to take away from the Commandments given by God himself, and also the Son of God? In the primitive Church because the Christians had fervent love and charity, they observed these precepts as they were given; but the fervent charity afterward waxing lukewarm, they invented Glosses by drawing the commandments of God back to their own deeds, which they purposed to justifie and maintain; that is to say, wars against the infidels. But that these by wars should be converted to the faith, as a fact faithless enough: because that by violence or unwillingly, no body can believe in Christ, nor be made a Christian, neither they did he come to destroy them by battel, that believed not in him; for he said to his Disciples, You know not what spirit you are of. The son of man came not to destroy mens lives, but to save them. Then to grant pardons and forgivenesse of sins to those that kill the infidels, is too much an infidels fact, seducing many people. For what greater seducing can there be, than to promise to a man forgivenesse of sins, and afterward the joy of Heaven, for setting himself against Christs commandments in the killing of infidels, that would not be converted to the faith? whereas Christ doth say, Not every one that saith to me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but he that doth the will of my Father which is in Heaven, this person shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Now the will of the Father is, that we should believe in his only Son Jesus Christ, and that we should obey him by observing of those things which he himself hath commanded. Wherefore Christs precepts of patience must be fulfilled, wars, fightings and contentions must be left, because they are contrary to charity.

But peradventure some man will thus reason against Christ, The Saints by whom God hath wrought Miracles, do allow wars against the faithful people, as also against the Infidels. And the holy Kings were Warriors, for whole fakes Miracles also have been shewed, as well in their death, as also in their life, yea in the very time wherein they were a warfare. Wherefore it seemeth that their facts were good and lawful. For otherwise God would not have done Miracles for them.

Objection.

To this again I say, That we for no Miracles must do no error; to this in Miracles there oftentimes chanceth error, as it is plain as well by the Old as by the New Testament, God forbid then that a Christian should for deceivable Miracles depart from the infallible Doctrine of Christ. In Exod. the 7th Chap. it is manifest, how that the wicked wise men of the Egyptians, through the inchantments of Egypt, and certain secret workings, threw their Wands upon the earth, which were turned into Dragons, even as Aaron before time in the presence of Pharaoh threw his Wand upon the earth, which by the power of God was turned into a Serpent. In the 3d of the Kings the 22d Chap. Micheus did see the Lord sitting upon his Throne, and all the Host of Heaven standing about him on the right hand and on the left. And the Lord said, who shall deceive Achab the King of Israel, that he may go up and be slain in Ramoth Gilead? And one said this way, and another otherwise; now, there went forth a Spirit, and stood before the Lord and said, I will deceive him. To whom the Lord spake, by what means? And he said, I will go forth, and be a lying Spirit in the mouth of all his Prophets. And the Lord said, thou shalt deceive him and prevail, go thy ways forth, and do even so. Thus also it is written in Deut. If there shall arise a Prophet amongst you, or one that shall say, he hath seen a dream, and shall foretel a sign and a wonder; and if that shall come to pass that he hath spoken, and he shall say unto thee, let us go and follow strange Gods (whom thou knowest not) and let us serve them; thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that Prophet or Dreamer; for the Lord your God tempteth you, to make it known whether you love him or no, with all your heart, and with all your soul.

In the Apocalyps the 13th Chap. John saw a Beast ascending up out of the earth, and it had two horns like a Lamb, but he spake like the Dragon, and he did all that the first beast could do before him; and he caused the earth and the inhabitants thereof to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed, and did great wonders. So that he made fire come down from Heaven on the earth, in the sight of men, and deceived them that dwelt on the earth, by means of the signs which were permitted him to do in the sight of the beast.

Apoc. 13

By these things it is most manifest and plain, that in Miracles this manifold error oftentimes happeneth, through the working of the Devil, to deceive the people withal. Wherefore we ought not for the working of Miracles to depart from the Commandments of God. I would to God that they which put confidence in Miracles, would give heed unto the word of Christ, in the 7th Chap. of Mat. thus speaking, Many shall say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not in thy name prophesied? and in thy name cast out Devils, and in thy name done many great works? &c. I will profess unto them, I never knew you, depart from me all ye which work iniquity.

Miracles are to be tried.

Mat. 7.

The servants of Christ disserned by working not of Miracles, but of vertues.

By this saying it is moft manifeft that the servants of Christ are not discerned by working of Miracles, but by the working of vertues, departing from iniquity, and obeying the commandments of God. Wherefore it is wonderful, that any in this life dare presume to prevent the day of the Judgment of God, to judge by means of Miracles, that some are Saints, whom Men ought to worship, whom peradventure, God will in the last Judgment condemn, saying, Depart from me all ye which work iniquity. If any Man could here on earth judge sinners to be condemned; then if this judgment were certain, Christ should not judge the second time; and whatsoever such Judges bind in earth, the same ought to be bound in Heaven. But if such a judgment be uncertain, then it is perilous and full of deceit, when as by it men on earth, may instead of Saints, worship such as are damned with the fellowship of the Devils, and in prayer require their aid, who even like as the Devils their companions, are more ready, and more of might to evil than to good, more to hurt than to profit. I wonder they mark not what Christ said, when his Kinswoman came unto him, desiring and requiring something of him, and saying, Command that these my two sons may sit one upon thy right hand, and the other upon thy left hand in thy Kingdom. But Jesus answering, said, Te know not what ye ask, can ye drink of the cup which I shall drink of? they said unto him, we can. He said unto them, of my cup indeed ye shall drink, but to sit at my right hand or at my left, is not mine to give, but unto whom it is prepared of my Father. Christ being equal unto the Father according to his Godhead, and exceeding all manner of men, according to his manhood, namely in Goodnesś and Wisdom, said, to sit at my right hand, or at my left, is not mine to give, but unto whom it is prepared of my Father. If it were none of his to give to sit at the right hand, or at the left, &c. how then is it in the power of any sinful man to give unto any Man a seat either on the right hand or on the left in the Kingdom of God, which sinful Man knoweth not whether such have any seat prepared for them of the Father in his Kingdom? They much extol themselves which exercise this judicial power in giving judgment, that there are some Saints which ought to be honored of Men, by reason of the evidences of Dreams, or of deceitful Miracles; of which men they are ignorant, whether God in his judgment will condemn them or not, together with the Devils for ever to be tormented. Let them beware, for the infallible truth saith, that every one that exalteth himself shall be brought low.

Men or women are not rashly to be judged Saints.

This proposition of W. Brute, concerning the War of Christians not to be lawfull, is not to be taken universally, but in particular cafe as he meaneth, which is this, That such Wars allowed of the Pope, not for the necessary defence of publick peace, liberty and safeguard of our Countries, or agaiuft publick Injuries, offered; but only to go and kill the Infidels, because they believe not, having no other caufe, thofe Wars of the Pope he likeith not.

By these things is gathered that the Wars of Christians are not lawful; for that by the Doctrine and Life of Christ they are prohibited, and by reason of the evidence of the deceitful Miracles of these which have made Wars amongst the Christians, as well against the Christians, as also against the Infidels. Because Christ could not err in his Doctrine, forasmuch as he was God: And forasmuch as Heaven and Earth shall pass away, but the Words of Christ shall not pass away; He therefore which establisheth his laws, allowing wars and the slaughter of men in wars, as well of Christians as of Infidels, doth he not justifie those things which are contrary unto the Gospel and Law of Christ? Therefore in this he is against Christ, and therefore Antichrist; seducing the people, making men believe that to be lawful and meritorious unto them, which is expreffly prohibited by Christ.

¶ And thus much concerning the first part, touching peace and war, wherein he declareth Christ and the Pope to be contrary, that is, the one to be given all to peace, the other all to war, and so to prove in conclusion, the Pope to be Antichrist. Where in the mean time thou muft understand (gentle Reader) his meaning rightly; not that he so thinketh no kind of wars among the Christians in any cafe to be lawful, for he himself before hath openly protelled the contrary; but that his purpoſe is, to prove the Pope in all his doings and teachings more to be addicted to war than to peace; yea, in such cafes where is no necessity of war. And therein proveth he the Pope to be contrary to Christ, that is, to be Antichrist. Now he proceedeth further to the second part, which is of mercy.

{KING. Elic. 2.}

In which part he sheweth how Christ teacheth us to be merciful, becauſe mercy (as he saith) proceedeth from charity, and nourisheth it. In which Doctrine of mercy, he breaketh not the law of righteouſneſs, for he himſelf by mercy hath cleanſed us from our ſins, from which we could not by the righteouſneſs of the law be cleanſed. But whom he hath made clean by mercy, undoubtedly it behooveth thoſe ſame to be alſo merciful. For in the fifth Chapter of Matthew he ſaith, Bleſſed are the merciful, for they ſhall obtain mercy. And again in the ſixth of Matthew he ſaith, If ye forgive unto men their ſins, your father will forgive unto you your ſins. And again in the ſeventh Chapter of Matthew. Judge not and ye ſhall not be judged, condemn not, and ye ſhall not be condemned, and with what meaſure ye meaſure, with the ſame ſhall it be meaſured unto you again. In the 18th. Chapter of Matth. Peter asked the Lord, ſaying, Lord, how often ſhall my Brother ſin againſt me, and I ſhall forgive him, ſeven times? Jeſus ſaid unto him, I ſay not unto thee ſeven times, but ſeventy times ſeven. Therefore, is the Kingdom of Heaven likened unto a certain King, which would take account of his ſervants. And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him which oweth him ten thouſand Talents; And becauſe he had nothing wherewithal to pay, his maſter commanded him to be ſold, and his wife and his children, and all that he had, and the debt to be paid. The ſervant therefore fell down, and beſought him, ſaying, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. And the Lord had pity on that ſervant, and looſed him, and forgave him the debt. But when that ſervant was departed, he found one of his fellow ſervants, which ought him an hundred pence, and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, ſaying, pay me that thou oweſt; and his fellow fell down, and beſought him, ſaying, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. But he would not, but went and caſt him into priſon, till he ſhould pay the debt. And when his other fellows ſaw the things that were done, they were very ſorry, and came and declared unto their maſter all that was done: Then his maſter called him, and ſaid unto him, O thou ungracious ſervant, I forgave thee all that debt when thou deſireſt me, oughteſt thou not then alſo to have ſhewed pity on thy fellow, even as I had pity on thee? And his Lord was wroth, and delivered him unto the Taylors, till he ſhould pay all that was due unto him. So likewiſe ſhall my Heavenly Father do unto you, except ye forgive from your hearts each one to his brother their treſpaſſes.

Doctrine of Chriſtian mercy declared.

Mat. 5.

Mat. 6.

Mat. 7.

Mat. 18.

Mercy and pity commended as moſt like unto God.

By this Doctrine it is moſt plain and manifeſt, that every Chriſtian ought to be merciful unto his brother, how often ſoever he offendeth againſt him. Becauſe we, ſo often as we offend, do ask mercy of God. Wherefore forasmuch as our offence againſt God is far more grievous than any offence of our brother againſt us; it is plain that it behoveth us to be merciful unto our brethren, if we will have mercy at Gods hand. But contrary to this Doctrine of Mercy, the Romiſh Biſhop maketh and confirmeth many laws, which puniſh offenders, even unto the death; as it is plain by the proceſs of the Decrees, Diſt. 2. 5. queſt. 5. It is declared and determined, that to kill men ex officio, that is, having authority and power ſo to do, is no ſin. And again, the ſoldier which is obedient unto the higher power, and ſo killeth a man, is not guilty of murder. And again, he is the Miniſter of the Lord, which puniſheth the evil in that they are evil, and killeth them. And many other ſuch like things are throughout the whole proceſs of that queſtion determined; That for certain kinds of ſins men ought by the rigour of the law to be puniſhed even unto death. But the foundation of their ſaying they took out of the old law, in which for divers tranſgreſſions were appointed divers puniſhments. It is very much wonderful unto me, why that wiſe men, being the authors and makers of laws, do always for the foundation of their ſayings look upon the ſhadow of the law, and not the light of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, for they give not heed unto the figure of perfection, nor yet unto the perfection figured. Is it not written in the 3d of John, God ſent not his Son into the World, to judge the World, but to ſave the world by him? in John the 8th. Chap. The Scribes and Phariſees bring in a Woman taken in adultery, and ſet her in the midſt, and ſaid unto Chriſt, Maſter, even now this woman was taken in adultery. But in the law Moſes hath commanded us to ſtone ſuch, what ſayſt thou therefore? Thus they ſaid to tempt him, that they might accuſe him. But Jeſus ſtooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground. And while they continued asking him, he lift himſelf up, and ſaid unto them, let him that is among you without ſin, caſt the firſt ſtone at her. And again he ſtooped and wrote on the ground. And when they heard it, they went out one by one, beginning at the eldeſt; ſo Jeſus was left alone, and the woman ſtanding in the midſt. When Jeſus had lift up himſelf again, he ſaid unto her, where be they which accuſed thee, hath no man condemned thee? She ſaid, no man Lord. And Jeſus ſaid unto her, neither do I condemn thee. Go thy way, and ſin now no more.

{KING. Elic. 2.}

Mercy and compaſſion neceſſary to all Chriſtians.

It is manifeſt by the Scriptures, that Chriſt was promiſed he ſhould be King of the Jews, and unto the Kings pertained the judgments of the law; but becauſe he came not to judge ſinners according to the rigour of the law, but came according to grace, to ſave that which was loſt, in calling the ſinner to repentance; it is moſt plain, that in the coming of the law of grace, he would have the judgment of the law of righteouſneſs to ceaſe; for otherwiſe he had dealt unjuſtly with the foreſaid woman, forasmuch as the witneſſes of her adultery, bare witneſs againſt her. Wherefore ſeeing the ſame King Chriſt was a Judge, if it had been his will that the righteouſneſs of the Law ſhould be obſerved, he ought to have adjudged the woman to death, according as the law commanded; which thing, forasmuch as he did not, it is moſt evident that the judgements of he righteouſneſs of the law are finiſhed in the coming of the King, being King of the law of grace; even as the Sacrifices of the Prieſthood of Aaron, are finiſhed in the coming of the Prieſt, according to the order of Melchiſedek, who hath offered himſelf up for our ſins; becauſe, as it is before ſaid, neither the righteouſneſs of the law, nor Sacrifices for ſin, brought any man to perfection. Wherefore it was neceſſary that the ſame, by reaſon of their imperfection ſhould ceaſe. And ſeeing among all the laws of the world, the law of Moſes was moſt juſt, forasmuch as the author thereof was God, who is the moſt juſt Judge; and by that law always look, what manner of injury one had done unto another, contrary to the commandment of the law, the like injury he ſhould receive for his tranſgreſſion, according to the upright judgment of the law; as death for death, a blow for a blow, burning for burning, wound for wound, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, and moſt juſt puniſhments were ordained according to the quantity of the ſins. But if this law of righteouſneſs be clean taken away in the coming of the law of grace, how then ſhall the law of the Gentiles remain among Chriſtians, which was never ſo juſt? Is not this true, that in them which are converted unto the faith, there is no diſtinction between the Jew and the Grecian? For both are under ſin, and are juſtified by grace in the faith of Chriſt, being called unto faith, and unto the perfection of the Goſpel.

The Pope contrary to Chriſt in ſheving mercy. 23. 5. 5.

The foundation of the foreſaid 5. queſt. conſ. 23. In the Popes Decretalls conſiſteth only out of the old Teſtament, and nothing out of the new.

The makers of the Pope have follow not the perfect rule. John 3.

If therefore the Gentiles converted, are not bound to obſerve the Jews, to follow the law of the Jews; why ſhould the Jews converted, follow the laws of the Gentiles which are not ſo good? Wherefore, it is to be wondred at, why Thieves are among Chriſtians, for theft put to death, where after the law of Moſes they were not put to death. Chriſtians ſuffer Adulterers to live, Sodomites, and they which curſe Father and Mother, and many other horrible ſinners; and they which according to the moſt juſt law of God were condemned to death, are not put to death. So we neither keep the law of righteouſneſs given of God, nor the law of mercy taught by Chriſt.

Wherefore the Law-makers and Judges do not give heed unto the foreſaid ſentence of Chriſt unto the Scribes and Phariſees, who ſaid, * He which amongſt you is without ſin, let him caſt the firſt ſtone at her. What is he that dareth be ſo bold as to ſay, he is without ſin? Yea, and without a grievous ſin, when as the tranſgreſſion of the commandment of God is a grievous ſin? And who can ſay that he never tranſgreſſed this commandment of God, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf? Or the other commandment which is of greater force, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, &c. Wherefore thou, whatſoever thou art, that judgeſt thy brother unto death, thinkeſt thou that thou ſhalt eſcape the judgment of God, which peradventure haſt offended more grievously than he hath whom thou judgeſt? How ſeeſt thou a mote in thy brothers eye, and ſeeſt not a beam in thine own eye? Knoweſt thou not that with what meaſure thou meaſureſt, that ſame ſhall be meaſured to you again? Doth not the Scripture ſay, Unto me belongeth vengeance, and I will render again ſaith the Lord? How can any man ſay that theſe men can with charity keep theſe judgments of death? Who is it that offendeth God, and deſireth of God juſt judgment for his offence? He deſireth not judgment but mercy. If he deſire mercy for himſelf, why deſireth he vengeance for his brother offending? How therefore loveth he his brother as himſelf? Or how doth thou ſhew mercy unto thy brother (as thou art bound by the commandment of Chriſt) which ſeeketh the greateſt vengeance upon him that thou canſt infer unto him? for death is the moſt terrible thing of all, and a more grievous vengeance than death, can no man infer.

Wherefore, they which will keep charity ought to obſerve the commandments of Chriſt touching mercy; and * they which live in the law of charity, ought to leave the law of vengeance and judgments. Ought we to believe that Chriſt in his coming, by grace abrogated the moſt juſt law which he himſelf gave unto the children of Iſrael by Moſes his ſervant, and eſtabliſhed the laws of the Gentiles, being not ſo juſt, to be obſerved of his faithful? Doth not Daniel expound the Dream of Nabuchodonozer the King, concerning the image, whoſe head was of gold, the breaſt and arms of ſilver, the belly and thighs of braſs, the legs of iron, one part of the feet was of iron, and the other part of clay. Nabuchodonoſor ſaw that a ſtone was cut out of a mountain without hands, and ſtrake the image in his feet of iron and of clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the braſs, the ſilver and gold broken all together, and became like the chaff of the Sumiher flower, which is carried away by the wind, and there was no place found for them; and the ſtone that ſmote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. He applieth therefore four Kingdoms unto the four parts of the image, namely, the Kingdom of the Babylonians unto the head of gold; the Kingdom of the Medes and Perſians, unto the breaſt and arms of ſilver; the Kingdom of the Grecians unto the belly and thighs of braſs; but the fourth Kingdom which is of the Romans, he applieth unto the feet and legs of iron. And Daniel addeth, in the days of their Kingdoms ſhall God raiſe up a Kingdom which ſhall never be deſtroyed, and his Kingdom ſhall not be delivered unto another; but it ſhall break and deſtroy thoſe Kingdoms; and it ſhall ſtand for ever, according as thou ſaweſt, that the ſtone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and brake in pieces the clay, and iron, braſs, ſilver and gold. Seeing therefore it is certain, that this ſtone ſignifieth Chriſt, whoſe Kingdom is for ever; it is alſo a thing moſt aſſured, that he ought to reign every where, and to break in pieces the other Kingdoms of the world. Wherefore if terreſtrial Kings, and the terreſtrial Kingdom of the Jews, and their laws and judgments have ceaſed by the Chriſtian King, calling the Jews unto the perfection of his Goſpel, namely, unto Faith and Charity; it is not to be doubted, but that the Kingdom of the Gentiles, which is more unperfect, and their laws, ought to ceaſe among the Gentiles, departing from their Gentility unto the perfection of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt. For there is no diſtinction between the Jews and Gentiles being converted unto the faith of Chriſt, but all of them abiding in that eternal Kingdom, ought to be under one law of charity and of vertue. Therefore they ought to have mercy, and to leave the judgments of death, and the deſire of vengeance. Wherefore they which do make laws mark not the parable of Chriſt, ſaying, The kingdom of Heaven is like unto a man which ſowed good ſeed in his field; but when men were on ſleep, the enemy came and ſowed tares in the midſt of the Wheat, and went his way. But when the herb was grown and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares. And the ſervants came unto the good man of the houſe,

There is present, and to be collected, not what Catholick Magiſtrates may do, in caſes of right-ordered, but that ecclesiaſtical perſons are not to the edire of their profeſſion ſhould do, in not revenging by death, as they do by offices. Whether the Judicial law of Moſes be fully gone after the coming of Chriſt? ſhadeth in force, or not. The law of Moſes of all the moſt juſt.

His marvel is not ſo much, why Thieves are put to death, but why the like juſtice law of Moſes is not obſerved in other points in ſtrictly kept. Mark the meaning.

* Take his meaning, gentle Reader, left his mind be not ſo, that no Magiſtrate, being not without ſin, may puniſh a Tranſgreſſor, but he ſpeaketh ſo.

gainſt ſuch Churchmen, who profeſs the rule of mercy, ſhew no mercy at all, but all rigour by their laws, or office.

The dream of Nabuchodonozer concerning the image explounded by Daniel.

house, and said unto him, Lord, diddst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence then come these tares? And he said unto them, the enemy hath done this. And the servants said unto him, wilt thou that we go and gather them up? And he said no, lest peradventure gathering up the tares ye pluck up the wheat by the roots; suffer them both to grow until the harvest, and in the time of the harvest, I will say unto the harvest men, gather first the tares and bind them in bundles, that they may be burnt, but gather the wheat into my barn. Christ himself only expoundeth this Parable in the self same Chapter, saying, He which soweth the good seed is the son of man, but the field is the world, and the good seed, those are the children of the Kingdom. But the tares are the naughty children. And the enemy which soweth them is the Devil. And the Harvest is the end of the World, and the Harvestmen are the Angels. Even as therefore the tares are gathered and burnt with fire, so shall it be in the end of the World. The son of man shall send his Angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all offenders, and those which commit iniquity, and shall put them into a furnace of fire, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

By which plain Doctrine it is manifest, that Christ will have mercy favored unto sinners, even unto the end of the world, and will have them to remain mingled with the good; lest peradventure, when a man thinketh that he doth right well to take away the tares, he taketh away the wheat. For how great a sinner soever a man be, we know not whether his end shall be good, and whether in the end he shall obtain mercy of God: neither are we certain of the time, wherein God will by grace judge him whom we abhor as a sinner. And peradventure such a one shall more profit after his conversion in the Church, than he whom we think to be just, as it came to pass in Paul. And if God justifieth a man by grace (although at his end) why dareth thou be so bold to be his judge, and to condemn him? Yea rather, although a man seem to be obstinate and hardned in his evil, so that he is not corrected by a secret correction (correct him before one alone;) if he do not receive open correction being done before two or three witnesses; neither passeth upon a manifest correction when his sin is made known unto the Church; Christ doth not teach to punish such a one with the punishment of death. Yea, rather he saith, If he hearken not unto the Church, let him be unto thee as an Ethnick and Publican. And Paul following this Doctrine in the 1 Corinth. 5th Chapter, saith, There goeth a common saying, that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not once named among the Gentiles, that one should have his fathers wife. And ye are puffed up, and have not rather sorrowed, that he which hath done this deed might be put from among you. For I verily as absent in body, but present in Spirit, have already determined, as though I were present, that he which hath done this thing, when ye are gathered together, and my Spirit, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that such a one by the power of our Lord Jesus Christ, be delivered unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the Spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Paul teacheth not to kill this man (as some gather by this Text) but to separate him from the other faithful, and so from Christ, which is the head of the Church of the faithful, and so is he delivered unto Satan, which is separated from Christ, that the flesh may be killed, that is, that the carnal concupiscence, whereby he luxuriously lusted after the wife of his father, may be destroyed in him by such a separation, that the Spirit may be saved: and not that his body should be killed, as some say, as it is manifest in the same Chap. where he saith, I wrote unto you an Epistle, that you should not keep company with fornicators, and I meant not of all the fornicators of this World, either of the covetous, or extortioners, or idolaters, for then must ye needs have gone out of the World. But now I have written unto you, that ye keep not company together; if any that is called a brother be a fornicator or covetous person, or a worshipper of images, either a cursed speaker, or drunkard, or an extortioner; with him that is such, see that ye eat not.

His purpose is not that no evil doer should be punished in a Common-wealth, but his relation is to the 23. q. 5. afore-said, noting causes of reformation, which the Pope and his Prelates are wont to punish with death, taking many times for tares, that which indeed is pure Wheat.

1 Cor. 5.

By which it is manifest, that Paul would have the foresaid fornicator separated from the fellowship of the faithful; that his carnal concupiscence might be mortified, for the health of the spirit, and not that the body should be killed. Wherefore they do ill understand Paul, which by this saying do confirm the killing of men. And forsomuch as Heresie is one of the most grievous sins (for an Heretick leadeth men in errors, whereby they are made to stray from faith, without which they cannot be saved) it doth most great hurt in the Church.

Further, as concerning such a wicked man, Paul thus speaketh, flee from the man that is an Heretick after the first and second correction, knowing that such a one is subverted and sinneth, forsomuch as he is by his own judgment condemned. Behold, Paul teacheth not to kill this man, but with Christ to separate him from the fellowship of the faithful. But some say, that Peter in the Primitive Church slew Ananias and Saphira for their sins, where-fore they say it is lawful for them to condemn wicked men to death. We will declare in shewing the whole processe how falsly they speak in alledging of Peter, to justifie their error.

By this it appeareth, that all the relation in this matter, touches only the cause of heresy and opinion in Religion.

In the fourth Chap. of the Acts it is written, That as many as were possessors of lands or houses, they sold them, and offered the prices of that which they sold, and laid it before the feet of the Apostles; and it was divided unto every one as he had need thereof. But a certain man called Ananias with Saphira his wife, sold a piece of Land, and kept back a part of the price of the field, his wife being privy unto it, and bringing a certain part thereof, he laid it at the feet of the Apostles. But Peter said unto Ananias, Ananias, why hath Satan tempted thy heart, that thou shouldst lie unto the Holy Ghost, to keep back a part of the price of the land? Did it not whilst it remained, remain unto thee: and being sold, was it not in thine own power? why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God. And when Ananias heard these words, he fell down and gave up the Ghost, and great fear came on all them that heard these things. And the young men rose up and took him up, and carried him out, and buried him. And it came to pass, about the space of three hours after, that his wife came in, being ignorant of that which was done. And Peter said unto her, Tell me Woman, sold ye the land for so much? And she said, yea for so much. But Peter said unto her, why have ye agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? Behold the feet of them which buried thy Husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out. And straightway she fell down before his feet, and gave up the ghost, and the young men entring in, found her dead, and they carried her out, and buried her by her husband. And great fear came on all the Church, and all those which heard these things. It is marvel that any man that is wife, will fay that by this proceſs Peter flew Ananias or his wife. For it was not his act, but the act of God, who made a wedding to his son, and sent his servants to call them that were bidden unto the wedding, and they would not come. The King then sent forth his servants to the outcorners of the High ways, to gather all that they could find, both good and evil, and so they did. And the Marriage was full furnished with guests; Then came in also the King to view and see them sitting; among whom he perceived there one sitting, having not a wedding garment, and saith unto him, friend, how camest thou hither? And he being dumb, had not a word to speak. Then said the King to the servitors, take and bind him hand and foot, and cast him into the outward darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Many there be called, but few chosen, &c.

The example of Two slaying Ananias and Saphira falsly vaunted of the Papists.

Peter not the cause of the death of Ananias and Saphira

It is manifest, that this wedding garment is charity, without which because Ananias entred into the Marriage of Christ, he was given to death, that by one many might be informed to learn and understand, that they which have faith and not charity, although they appear to men to have, yet it cannot be privy to the Spirit of God, that they do feign. Such there are no doubt, but they shall be excluded from the Marriage of Christ, as we see this here exemplified in the death of Ananias and his Wife by the hand of God, and not by the hand of Peter. And how should Peter then have judged Ananias (albeit he had judged him) worthy of death by the rigour of the old law? for why? by the law he had not been guilty of death, for that part which they did fraudulently and dissemblingly reserve to themselves; yea, and if they had stolen as much from another man, which was greater; neither yet for

The Wedding garment what it is.

The death of Ananias and his Wife, what information it giveth to the Church.

{KING} {Etc. 2.} for his life committed, he had therefore by that law of justice been found guilty of death. Wherefore, if he did not condemn him by the law of justice, it appeareth that he condemned him by the law of grace and mercy, which he learned of Christ. And so consequently, it followeth much more apparent, that Peter could not put him to death. Furthermore, to say that Peter put him to death by the meer motion of his own will, and not by the authority of the old law, nor by the new, it were derogatory and slanderous to the good fame and name of Peter. But if Peter did kill him, why then doth the Bishop of Rome which pretendeth to be succeſſor of Peter, excuse himself and his Priests from the judgment of death against Hereticks and other offenders, although they themselves be consenting to such Judgments done by lay men? For, that which was done of Peter without offence, may reasonably excuse him and his fellow Priests from the spot of crime, Acts 5. It is manifest that there was another which did more grievously offend than Ananias, and that Peter rebuked him with more sharp words; but yet he commanded him not so to be put to death. For Simon Magus also remaining at Samaria, after that he believed and was baptised, he joyned himself with Philip; and when he saw that the holy Spirit was given by the Apostles (laying their hands upon men) he offered them mony, saying; Give unto me this power, that upon whomsoever I shall lay my hand, he shall receive the Holy Ghost. To whom Peter answered, Destroyed be thou and thy mony together; And for that thou supposest the gift of God to be bought with money, thou shalt have neither part nor fellowship in this Doctrine. Thy heart is not pure before God, therefore repent thee of thy wickedness, and pray unto God that thou wicked thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee; for I perceive thou art even in the bitter gall of wickedness, and band of iniquity. Behold here the grievous offence of Simon; Peter's hard and sharp rebuking of him, and yet thereupon he was not put to death. Whereby it appereth that the death of Ananias aforesaid, proceeded of God and not of Peter. Of all these things it is to be gathered, seeing the judgments of death are not grounded upon the expreſs and plain Scriptures, but only under the shadow of the old law, that they are not to be observed of Christians because they are contrary to charity. Ergo, The Bishop of Rome approving such Judgments, alloweth those that are contrary to the Law and Doctrine of Christ, as before is said of Wars, where he approveth and justifieth that which is contrary to charity. The order of Priesthood, albeit it doth justifie the Judgments to death of the Laity, whereby offenders are condemned to die, yet are they themselves forbidden to put in execution the same Judgments. The Priests of the old law being unperfect, when Pilate said unto them concerning Christ (whom they had accused worthy death) take him unto you, and according to your law judge him, answered, That it was not lawful for them John 18. to put to death any man.

Peter not the cause of the death of Ananias and Saphira

Whereby it appeareth, that our Priests, being much more perfect, may not lawfully give judgment of death against any offenders; yet notwithstanding, they claim unto them the power judicial upon offenders: Because, say they, it belongeth unto them to know the offences by the auricular confeſſion of the offenders, and to judge upon the same being known, and to enjoyn divers penances unto the parties offending, according to the quantity of their offences committed, so that the sinner may make satisfaction, say they, unto God for the offences which he never committed. And to confirm unto them this judicial power, they alledge the Scriptures in many places, wresting it to serve their purpose.

First, They say that the Bishop of Rome (who is the chief Priest and Judge among them) hath full power and authority to remit sins. Whereupon they say, that he is able fully and wholly, to absolve a man a pœna & culpa, so that if a man at the time of his death, had this remission, he should straightways fly unto Heaven without any pain of Purgatory. The other Bishops (as they say) have not so great authority. The Priests constituted under every Bishop, have power, say they, to absolve the sins of them that are confeſſed, but not all kind of sins: because they are some grievous sins reserved to the Absolutions of the Bishops; and some again, to the Absolution only of the chief and high Bishop. They say also, that it behoveth the offenders, for the necessity of their souls health, to call to remembrance their offences, and to manifeſt the same with all the circumstances thereof, unto the Priest in auricular confeſſion, supplying the place of God, after the manner of a Judge; and afterward humbly to fulfil the penance enjoyned unto him by the Priest for his sins, except the said penance so enjoyned, or any part thereof, be released by the superiour power. All these things (say they) are manifestly determined, as well in the Decrees as Decretals. And although these things have not expreſly their foundation in the plain and manifeſt Doctrine of Christ, nor any of the Authors of the Decrees and Decretals concerning this matter, have grounded the same upon divers places of the Scriptures, as in the proceſs of Christ in the Gospel of Saint Matthew the 16th Chapter, Whereupon they ground the Popes power judicial to surmount the powers of other Priests, as where Christ said unto his Disciples, Whom do men say that I am? And they answered, some say that thou art John Baptist, some Elias, and some Jeremy, or one of the Prophets. To whom he said, but who say you that I am? Simon Peter, making answer, said, Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou Simon the Son of Jonas; for flesh and blood hath not opened this unto thee; but my Father which is in Heaven. And I say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church, and Hell gates shall not prevail against it. And I will give thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. And whatsoever thou shalt bind upon earth, shall be bound in Heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose upon earth, shall be loosed also in Heaven. Mat. 16. The Popes usurped power falsly founded upon Scripture.

Like a pallat him.

Out of this Text of Christ, divers Expositions have drawn divers errors. For when Christ said, And I say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church; Some thereupon affirm, that Christ meant he would build his Church upon Peter by authority of that Text, as it is written in the first part of the Decrees, Dist. 19. cap. Ita Dominus noster. The Expolition hereof is ascribed to Pope Leo; the error whereof is manifestly known. For the Church of Christ is not builded upon Peter, but upon the Rock of Peter's confeſſion, for that he said, Thou art Christ the Son of the living God. And for that Christ said singularly unto Peter, I will give unto thee the keys of the kindom of Heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind, &c. By this saying they affirm, that Christ gave unto Peter specially, as chief of the reſt of the Apoſtles, a larger power to bind and to loose, than he did unto the reſt of the Apoſtles and Disciples. And becauſe Peter answered for himself and all the Apoſtles, not only confeſſing the faith which he had chiefly above the reſt, but also the faith which the reſt of the Apoſtles had even as himself, by the revelation of the heavenly Father: it appeareth that as the Faith of all the Apoſtles was declared by the answer of one; so by this that Christ said unto Peter, whatsoever thou shalt bind, &c. is given unto the reſt of the Apoſtles, the same power and equality to bind and to looſe, as unto Peter. Which Christ declareth in the Gospel of Saint Matthew, the 18th Chapter in these words, Verily I say unto you, what things soever you shall bind upon earth, shall be bound in Heaven; and whatsoever you shall loose upon earth, shall be also loosed in Heaven. And further he addeth, And again I say unto you, that if two of you shall consent upon earth, and request, whatsoever it be, it shall be granted unto you of my Father which is in Heaven, For when two or three be gathered together in my name, I am there in the midst of them. And in John the 20th Chap. he saith generally unto them, Receive ye my Spirit. Whose sins ye shall remit, shall be remitted unto them; and whose sins you shall retain, shall be retained. Dist. 9. c. Ita Dominus noster. The place of Christ giving the keys to Peter, Mat. 16. Mat. 18. John 20; Christ only the head of the Church.

By this it appeareth, that the power to bind and to loose is not specially granted to Peter, as chief and head of the reſt; and that by him the reſt had their power to bind and to loose; for that the head of the body of the Church is one, which is Christ, and the head of Christ is God. Peter and the reſt of the Apoſtles are the good members of the body of Christ; receiving power and vertue of Christ, whereby they do confirm and glew together the other members (as well the strong and noble, as the weak and unable) to a perfect compoſition and seemlineſs of the body of Christ: that that all honour from all parts and members may be given unto Christ as Head and Chief, by whom as Head all the members are governed. And therefore Paul, 1 Cor. 3. When one man saith, I hold of Paul, and another saith, I hold of Apollo, are ye not carnal men? For what is Apollo? What is Paul? The Minister of him in whom ye have believed, and he as God giveth unto every man. I have planted, Apollo hath watered, but God hath given the increase. Therefore neither he that planted is any thing, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase.

1 Cor. 3.

Gal. 2. And Paul to the Gal. 2. God hath no respect of persons. Those that seemed to be great and do much, availed or profited me nothing at all: But contrariwise, when they saw that the Gospel of the Uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the Circumcision unto Peter; for he that wrought with Peter in the Apostleship of the Circumcision, wrought with me also among the Gentiles) and when they knew the grace which was given me, Peter, James and John, straightways joyned themselves with me and Barnabas: that we among the Gentiles, and they in Circumcision only might be mindful of the poor, the which to do, I was very careful. Hereby it appeareth that Paul had not his authority of Peter to convert the Gentiles, to baptize them, and to remit their sins, but of him which said unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the prick. Here is Paul of the head of the Church, and not of Peter: By which head they say, that all the members are sustained and made lively.

Act. 9.

The third Error. The third Error which the Authors of the Canons conceive in the said Text of Christ, which was said to Peter, Unto thee will I give the Keys, &c. is this, They say that in this sentence which was said to Peter of the authority to bind and loose, was meant, that as Christ gave unto Peter above all the rest of the Apostles a special, and as it were an excellent power above all the Apostles; even so, say they, he gave power unto the Bishops of Rome (whom they call Peters chief Successors) the same special power and authority, exceeding the power of all other Bishops of the world.

Other Apostles had like power to bind and to loose as Peter had.

The first part of this similitude and comparison, doth appear manifestly by the premisses to be erroneous; wherein is plainly shewed that the other Apostles had equal power with Peter to bind and loose. Wherefore consequently it followeth the second part of the similitude, grounded upon the same Text, to be also erroneous. But and if the first part of the said similitude were truth, as it is not, yet the second part must needs be an error, wherein is said, that the Bishops of Rome are Peters chief Successors. For although there be but one Catholick Christian Church, of all the faithful sort converted; yet the first part thereof, and first converted, was of the Jews, the second of the Greeks, and the third part was of the Romans or Latins. Wherefor the first part was most perfectly converted unto the Faith, for that they faithfully observed the perfection of charity, as appeareth in the Acts of the Apostles, by the multitude of the believers. They were of one heart, and one soul, neither called they any thing that they possessed their own, but all was common amongst them.

Act. 2.

Rom. 1. Hereupon Paul to the Romans: Salutation to every believer, first to the Jew, and to the Greeks after the Jews. The Greeks were the second, and after the Jews next converted, and after them the Romans, taking their information of the Greeks, as appeareth by the Chronicles, although indeed some Romans were converted unto the faith by Peter and Paul. And as Christ said thrice unto Peter, Feed my sheep, so Peter ruled these three Churches, as witnesseth the Chronicles. But first he reformed the Church of the Jews in Jerusalem and Judea, as appeareth by the testimony of the Acts of the Apostles. For Act. 1. it is manifest how Peter standing up amongst his Brethren, spake unto them concerning the election of an Apostle in the place of Judas the Traytor, alledging places unto them out of the Scripture, that another should take upon him his Apostleship. And so by lot was Matthias constituted in the twelfth place of Judas, Act. 2. After that the Holy Ghost was come upon the Apostles, and that they spake with the Tongues of all men, the hearers were astonied at the miracle. And some mocked them, saying, These men are full of new wine: But Peter stood up and spake unto them, saying, That it was fulfilled in them that was prophesied by Joel the Prophet, And he preached unto the people Christ, whom they of ignorance had put to death. To whom was a Saviour promised by the testimony of the Prophets. And when they heard the words of Peter, they were pricked at the heart, saying unto him and the rest of the Apostles, What shall we then do? And Peter said unto them, Repent, and let every one of you be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of your sins and ye shall receive the Holy Ghost. And there were joyned unto them the same day about three thousand souls. And Act. 3. 4, 5. it appeareth that Peter above the rest did those things which belonged to the Ministry of the Apostleship, as well in preaching as in answering. Whereupon some Chronicles say, that Peter governed the Church of the Jews at Jerusalem, four years before he governed Antioch. And by the testimony of Paul to the Galathians, as before is said, the Gospel of the Uncircumcision is committed to Paul, even as the Circumcision to Peter. And he that wrought with Peter in the Apostleship of Circumcision, wrought with Paul amongst the Gentiles. Whereby it appeareth that the Church of the Jews was committed to the Government of Peter. And in the process of the Acts of the Apostles it appeareth, that Peter believed that the Faith of Christ was not to be preached unto those Gentiles, which always lived in uncleanness of Idolatry. But when Peter was at Joppe, Cornelius a Gentile sent unto him that he would come and shew him the way of life: But Peter (a little before the coming of the messengers of Cornelius) being in his chamber, after he had prayed, fell in a trance, and saw heaven open, and a certain vessel descending even as a great sheet, letten down by four corners from heaven to earth. In the which were all manner of four-footed beasts, serpents of the earth, and fowls of the air. And a voice spake unto him, saying, Arise Peter, kill and eat: and Peter said, Not so Lord, because I have never eaten any common or unclean thing. This was done thrice. And Peter descended (not knowing what the vision did signifie) and found the messengers of Cornelius.

Gal. 3.

As concerning the authority judicial of the Clergy, many things are written thereof in the Canons of Decrees, greatly to be marvelled at, and far from the truth of the Scripture. The Authors of the Canons say, That Christ gave unto the Priests power judicial over sinners that confessed their sins unto them. And this they ground upon the Text of Christ: I will give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and whatsoever thou loosest, &c. And these Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, they call the knowledg to discern, and the power to judg, which they say only belongeth to the Priests, except in case of necessity; then they say a lay-man may absolve a man from sin. And as touching absolution, they say there are three things to be required on the sinners part: First, hearty contrition, whereby the sinners ought to bewail their offending of God through sin: The second is, Auricular confession, whereby the sinner ought to shew unto the Priest his sins, and the circumstances of them: The third is satisfaction through penance injoyned unto him by the Priest for his sins committed. And of his part that giveth absolution there are two things (say they) to be required: that is to say, knowledg to discern one sin from another, whereby he ought to make a difference of sins, and appoint a convenient penance, according to the quantity of the sins. The second is, authority to judg, whereby he ought to injoyn penance to the offender. And further they say, that he that is confessed, ought with all humility to submit himself to this authority, and wholly and voluntarily to do those penances which are commanded him by the Priest, except the said penance be released by a superior power: for all Priests (as they say) have not equal authority to absolve sins. The chief Priest whom they call Peters Successor, hath power fully and wholly to absolve. But the inferior Priests have power, some more, some less. The more as they are near him in dignity, the less as they are farther from the degree of his dignity. All this is declared by process in the Decrees, but not by the express Doctrine of Christ, or any of his Apostles. For although Christ absolved men from their sins, I do not find that he did it after the manner of a Judg, but of a Saviour. For Christ saith, God sent not his Son into the world to judg sinners, but that the world should be saved by him, Joh. 3. Whereupon he spake unto him whom he healed of the palsie, Behold thou art made whole, go thy ways

Joh. 5.

By which words and deeds of Christ, and many other places of the Scripture it appeareth he was not as a Judg at his first coming, to punish sinners according to the quantity of their offences; but that day shall come hereafter, wherein he shall judg all men according to their works, as in Mat. 25. where he saith, When the Son of man shall come in his Majesty, and all his Angels with him; then shall he sit upon the seat of his Majesty, and all Nations shall be gathered together before him, and he shall separate them from another, as a shepherd separateth the sheep from the goats, &c. Neither shall he judg alone, but his Saints also with him. For he saith, You that have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the seat of his Majesty, shall sit also upon twelve seats, and judg the twelve Tribes of Israel. If then Christ came not as a Judg, why do the Priests say that they supply the room of Christ on earth, to judg sinners according to the quantity of their offences? And yet not only this, but it is more to be marvelled at, how the Bishop of Rome dareth to take upon him to be a Judg before the day of Judgment, and to prevent the time, judging some to be Saints in Heaven, and to be honoured of men, and some again to be tormented in Hell eternally with the Divels? Would God there men would weigh the saying of St. Paul, 1 Cor. 4. Judg ye not before the time until the coming of the Lord, who shall make light the dark and secret places, and disclose the secrets of hearts, and then every one shall have his praise. Let the Bishop of Rome take heed, lest that in Ezekiel be spoken by him, Because thy heart is elevate, and thou saidst unto thy self, I am God, I have sitten in the seat of God, and in the heart of the Sea, when thou art but man, and not God. It is manifest that the remission of sins principally belongeth to God, who through grace washeth away our sins. For it is said, The Lamb of God taketh away the sins of the world. And unto Christians it belongeth as the Ministers of God. For in the 20th of John, Christ saith, Receive unto you the Holy Ghost: whose sins you shall remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose sins you shall retain, they are retained. Seeing therefore that all Christians that are baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, receive the Holy Ghost; it appeareth that they have power given to them of Christ, to remit sins Ministerially. Hath not every Christian authority to baptize? and in the Baptism all the sins of the baptized are remitted. Ergo, they that do baptize do remit sins. And thus Ministerially all such have power to remit sins. Therefore to say that one man hath more authority to remit sins than all other Christians have, is too much to extoll him, and to place him even in Gods seat. I pray you how are the sins remitted him that is baptized of the Priest (yea although he were of the Pope himself baptized) more than if he were baptized of another Christian? Surely I think no more. For seeing that before Baptism he remaineth a sinner, and of the Kingdom of the Devil by sin, after Baptism he entreth into the Kingdom of Heaven; it appeareth that he that doth baptize, openeth the Gate of the Kingdom of Heaven to him that is baptized; the which he cannot do without the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. Therefore every one that doth baptize hath the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven; as well the inferior Priest as the Pope. But these Keys are not the knowledg to discern, and power to judg, because these do nothing avail in Baptism: Ergo, There are other Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven than these. Wherefore it seemeth that the Authors of the Canons erred in mistaking the Keys, whereupon they ground the Authority Judicial of the Clergy.

Mat. 25.

The Saints shall judg with Christ.

Joh. 20.

The unlawful power in temporal matters, belonging unto as well to any Priest as to another.

The Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven.

The Keys with them in the Popes Canons.

Now a little error in the beginning granted, groweth to great inconvenience in the end. Wherefore in my judgment it seemeth that the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven are Faith and Hope. For by faith in Jesus Christ, and hope in him for the remission of sins, we enter the Kingdom of Heaven. This faith is a spiritual water, springing from Jesus Christ the fountain of wisdom, wherein the soul of the sinner is washed from sin. With this water were the faithful Patriarchs baptized before the Law, and the faithful people of the Hebrews, and the faithful Christians after the Law. Wherefore I greatly marvel of that saying in the Decrees, which is ascribed unto Augustine, That little children that are not baptized shall be tormented with eternal fire, although they were born of faithful Parents that wished them with all their hearts to have been baptized; as though the Sacrament of Baptism in water were simply necessary to Salvation, when nevertheless many Christians are saved without this kind of Baptism, as Martyrs. If that kind of Sacrament be not necessary to one of elder years, how then is it necessary to an Infant born of the faithful? Are not all baptized with the Holy Ghost, and with fire? But yet not with material fire: no more is the lotion of water corporally necessary to wash away sins, but only spiritual quick baptized for them that are dead? as witnesseth Paul, 1 Cor. 15. If the dead rise not at all, why are the living then baptized for them? If the living be baptized for the dead, why then is not the Infant saved by the Baptism of his Parents; seeing the Infant it self is impotent at the time of death, and not able to require Baptism? Christ saith, He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. He saith not, He that is not baptized, but he that believeth not shall be damned. Wherefore in the 12th Chapter of John, Christ saith, I am the resurrection and life, he that believeth in me, yea, although he were dead, shall live. The faith therefore is necessary which the Infant hath in his faithful parents, although he be not washed with corporal water. How then is the Infant damned and tormented with eternal fire? Were not they that were before the coming of Christ, and dead before his death by a thousand years, saved also by his death and passion? All that believed in him, were baptized in his blood, and so were saved and redeemed from sin, and the bondage of the Devil, and made partakers of the Kingdom of Heaven. How then in the time of Grace shall the Infant be damned that is born of faithful parents, that do not despise, but rather desire to have their children baptized? I dare not consent to so hard a sentence of the Decrees; but rather believe that he is saved by vertue of the Passion of Christ, in faith of his faithful parents, and the hope which they have in Christ. Which faith and hope are the Keys of the Heavenly Kingdom. God were not just and merciful, if he would condemn a man that believeth not in him, except he shewed unto him the faith which he ought to believe. And therefore Christ saith, If I had not come and spoken unto them, sin could not have been laid unto their charge, but now they have no excuse of sin. Therefore seeing the faith of Christ is not manifest unto the Infant departing before Baptism, neither hath he denied it; how then shall he be damned for the same? But if God speaketh inwardly by way of illumination of the intelligence of the Infant, as he speaketh unto Angels; who then knoweth (save God alone) whether the Infant receiveth or not receiveth the Faith of Christ?

1 Cor. 15

Joh. 12,

Children departing before Baptism not condemned.

What is he therefore that so rashly doth take upon him to judg the Infants begotten of faithful parents, dying without Baptism, to be tormented with eternal fire? Now let us consider the three things which the Canons of Decrees affirm to be requisite for the remission of the sins of those that sin after Baptism: that is to say, contrition of heart, Auricular confession, and satisfaction of the deed through penance enjoyned by the Priest for the sins committed. I cannot find in any place in the Gospel, where Christ commanded that this kind of confession should be done unto the Priest; nor can I find that Christ affigned any penance unto sinners for their sins, but that he willed them to sin no more. If a sinner confess that he hath offended God through sin, and sorroweth heartily for his offences, minding hereafter no more to sin; then is he truly repentant for his sin, and then he is converted unto the Lord. If he shall then humbly and with good hope crave mercy at God and remission of his sins: what is he that can let God to absolve that sinner from his sin? And as God absolveth a sinner from his sin, so hath Christ absolved many, although they confessed not their sins unto the Priests, and although they received not due penance for their sins. And if Christ could after that manner once absolve sinners; how is he become now not able to absolve? Except some man will say that he is above Christ, and that his power is minished by the ordinances of his own Laws. How were sinners absolved of God in the time of the Apostles, and always heretofore,

Auricular confession.

Faith and Hope be the Keys of Heaven.

tofore, unto the time that these Canons were made? I speak not these things as though confession to Priests were wicked, but that it is not of necessity requisite unto Salvation. I believe verily that the confession of sins unto good Priests, and likewise to other faithful Christians, is good, as witnesseth St. James the Apostle, Confess ye your selves one to another, and pray ye one for another, that ye may be saved; for the continual prayer of the just availeth much. Elias was a man that suffered many things like unto you, and he prayed that it should not rain upon the earth, and it rained not in three years and six months. And again he prayed, and it rained from heaven, and the earth yielded forth her fruit. This kind of confession is good, profitable and expedient; for if God peradventure heareth not a mans own prayer, he is helped with the intercession of others. Yet nevertheless the prayers of the Priests seem too much to be extolled in the Decrees, where it treateth of Penitence, and that saying is ascribed unto Pope Leo, Cap. multiplex misericordia Dei, &c. And it followeth, So is it ordained by the Providence of Gods Divine Will, that the mercy of God cannot be obtained but by the prayer of the Priests, &c. The prayer of a good Priest doth much avail a sinner, confessing his faults unto him. The counsel of a discreet Priest is very profitable for a sinner, to give the sinner counsel to beware hereafter to sin, and to instruct him how he shall punish his body by fasting, by watching, and such like acts of repentance, that hereafter he may be better preferred from sin.

Ex Jurist. Dist. Cap. Multiplex misericordia Dei.

After this manner I esteem confession to Priests very expedient and profitable to a sinner. But to confess sins unto the Priest as unto a Judg, and to receive of him corporal penance for a satisfaction unto God for his sins committed; I see not how this can be found upon the truth of the Scripture. For before the coming of Christ, no man was sufficient or able to make satisfaction unto God for his sins, although he suffered never so much penance for his sins. And therefore it was needful that he that was without sin, should be punished for sins, as witnesseth Esay, Chapter fifty three, where he saith, He took our griefs upon him, and our sorrows he bare. And again, He was wounded for our iniquities, and vexed for our wickedness. And again, The Lord put upon him our iniquity. And again, For the wickedness of my people have I stricken him. If therefore Christ through his Passion hath made satisfaction for our sins, whereas we our selves were unable to do it; then through him have we grace and remission of sins. How can we say now that we are sufficient to make satisfaction unto God by any penance injoyned unto us by mans authority, seeing that our sins are more grievous after Baptism, than they were before the coming of Christ? Therefore as in Baptism the pain of Christ in his passion was a full satisfaction for our sins; even so after Baptism, if we confess that we have offended, and be heartily sorry for our sins, and mind not to sin again afterwards.

1 Joh. 1. Hereupon John writeth in his first Epistle, *Ch.*1. If we say we have no sin, we deceive our selves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, God is faithful and just, he will remit them, and cleanse us from all our iniquities. If we say we have not sinned we make him a lyer, and his word is not in us. My welbeloved children, thus I write unto you that ye sin not; but if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins, and not for our sins only, but for the sins of the whole world. Therefore we ought to confess our selves chiefly unto God even from the heart, for that he chiefly doth remit sins, without whose absolution little availeth the absolution of man. This kind of confession is profitable and good. The Authors of the Canons say, that although Auricular confession made unto the Priest, be not expreslly taught by Christ, yet say they it is taught in that saying which Christ said unto the diseased of Luk. 17. the leprosie, whom he commanded, Go your ways and shew your selves unto the Priests: because as they say, the law of cleansing Lepers, which was given by Moses, signified the confessions of sins unto the Priest. And whereas Christ commanded the Lepers to shew themselves unto the Priests, they say, that Christ meant that those that were unclean with the leprosie of sin, should shew their sins unto the Priests by Auricular confession. I marvel much at the Authors of the Canons; for even from the beginning of their Decrees unto the end, they ground their sayings upon the old Law, which was the Law of sin, and death, and not (as witnesseth Paul) upon the words of Christ, which are Spirit and life. Christ saith, The words which I speak unto you, are the Spirit and Life. They ground their sayings in the shadow of the Law, and not in the light of Christ; for every evil doer hateth the light, and cometh not unto it, that his deeds be not reproved; but he that doth the truth cometh into the light, that his works may be openly seen, because they are done in God, Joh. 3. Joh. 3.

KING's Bl.

Now let us pass to the words that Christ spake to the Leper, Lord if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean. And Luk. 5. Jesus stretching forth his hand touched him, saying, I will be thou clean; and straightways he was cleansed of his lepry. And Jesus said unto him, See thou tell no man, but go and shew thy self to the Priests, and offer the gifts that Moses commanded for a witness of these things. This Gospel witnesseth plainly, that the diseased of the Lepers were cleansed only by Christ, and not by the Priests, neither did Christ command the Leper to shew himself unto the Priests, for any help of cleansing that he should receive of the Priests; but to fulfill the Law of Moses, in offering a sacrifice for his cleansing, and for a testimony unto the Priests, who always of envy accused Christ as a transgresser of the Law. For if Christ after he had cleansed the Leper, had licensed him to communicate with others that were clean, before he had shewed himself cleansed unto the Priests, then might the Priests have accused Christ as a transgresser of the Law; because it was a precept of the Law, that the Leper after he was cleansed, should shew himself unto the Priests. And they had signs in the Book of the Law, whereby they might judg whether he were truly cleansed or no. And if he were cleansed, then would the Priests offer a gift for his cleansing: and if he were not cleansed, then would they segregate him from the company of others that were clean. Seeing every figure ought to be assimulated unto the thing that is figured; I pray you then what agreement is there between the cleansing of Lepers by the Law, and the confession of sins? By that Law the Priest knew better whether he were leprous than he himself that had the lepry. In confession the Priest knew not the sins of him that was confessed, but by his own confession. In that Law the Priest did not cleanse the leprous. How now therefore ought the Priests to cleanse sinners from their sin, and that without them they cannot be cleansed? In this Law the Priest had certain signs, by the which he could certainly know whether a man were cleansed from his lepry or not. In confession the Priest is not certain of the cleansing of sins, because he is ignorant of his contrition. He knoweth not also whether he will not sin any more; without the which contrition and granting to sin no more, God hath not absolved any sinner. And if God hath not absolved a man, without doubt there is he not made clean. And how then is confession figured under that Law? Doubtless so it seemeth to me (under the correction of them that can judg better in the matter) that this Law beareth rather a figure of Excommunication, and reconciliation of him that hath been obstinate in his sin, and is reconciled again. For so it appeareth by the process of the Gospel, that when as the sinner doth not amend for the private correction of his Brother, nor for the correction of two or three, neither yet for the publick correction of the whole Church; then is he to be counted as an Ethnick and a Publican, and as a certain Leper to be avoided out of the company of all men. Which sinner notwithstanding, if he shall yet repent, is then to be reconciled, because he is then cleansed from his obstinacy.

The story of the Lepers expounded, to make nothing for Auricular confession.

But he which pretendeth himself to be the chief Vicar of Christ, and the high Priest, faith that he hath power to absolve a pœna & culpa. Which I do not find how it is founded in the Scripture, but that of his own authority he injoyneth to sinners penance for their sins. And grant that from their sins he may well absolve them, yet from the pain (which they call a pœna) he doth not simply absolve, as in his Indulgences he promiseth. But if he were in charity, and had such power as he pretendeth, he would suffer none to lie in Purgatory for sin, forsomuch as that pain doth far exceed all other pain which here we suffer. What

The Pope and Cleargy, and the cleansing of the Priest is Auricular confession unlawful.

The Pope is to blame in setting so low a price upon the Commandment of God. Absolution to be sought at the hands of God only.

KING's Bl.

What man is there being in charity, but if he see his brother to be tormented in this world, if he may, he will help him and deliver him? Much more ought the Pope then to deliver out of pains of Purgatory, indifferently as well rich as poor. And if he fell to the rich his Indulgences, doublewise, yea triplewise he seduceth them. First, in promising them to deliver them out of the pain from whence he doth not, neither is able to deliver them; and so maketh them fallly to believe that which they ought not to believe. Secondly, he deceiveth them of their money, which he taketh for his Indulgences. Thirdly, he seduceth them in this, that he promising to deliver them from pain, doth induce them into grievous punishment indeed, for the hereſie of simony, which both of them do commit, and therefore are worthy both of great pain to fall upon them; for so we read that Jesus cast out buyers and sellers out of his Temple. Also Peter said unto Simon the first Author of this Hereſie, Thy money, said he, with thee be destroyed, for that thou hast thought the gift of God to be possessed for money. Moreover, whereas Christ saith, Freely you have received, freely give. And whereas contrary the Pope doth sell that thing which he hath taken; what doubt is there, but that he doth grievously deserve to be punished, both he that selleth, and he that buyeth, for the crime of simony which they commit? Over and besides, by many reasons and authorities of the Scripture it may be proved, that he doth not absolve a man contrite for his sins, although he do absolve him from the guilt.

The Pope in his Pardons deceiveth men three manner of ways.

The Pope promising pardons for sin, Indicteth men to sin in sinning.

Deadly sin and debt. The Pope saith he can remit the debt to God: and yet cannot remit the debt to man.

But this marvelleth me, that he in his Indulgences promiseth to absolve men from all manner of deadly sins, and yet cannot absolve a man from debt; forasmuch as the debt which we owe to God, is of much more greater importance than is the debt of our Brother. Wherefore if he be able to remit the debt due to God, much more it should seem that he is able to forgive the debt of our Brother.

The Pope harder to pardon a Priest loving his Mistress unchaſt, than for breaking the Commandment of God.

Another thing there is that I marvel at, for that the Pope sheweth himself more strait in absolving a Priest for not saying, or negligently saying his Mattens, than for transgressing the Commandment of God; considering that the transgression of the Commandment of God, is much more grievous than the breach of mans Commandment.

Absolution to one.

For these and many other errors concurring in this matter of the Popes absolutions; blessed be God, and honour be unto him for the remission of our sins. And let us firmly believe and know, that he doth and will absolve us from our sins, if we be sorry from the bottom of our hearts that we have offended him, having a good purpose and Will to offend him no more. And let us be bold to resort unto good and discreet Priests, who with wholesome discretion and found counsel can instruct us, how to avoid the corruption of sin hereafter. And which, because they are better than we, may pray to God for us; whereby we may both obtain more sooner the remission of our sins, and also may learn better how to avoid the danger of sin to come. *Ex Registro Latino Episc. Nota.

And thus much concerning the judgement and doctrine of this Walter for Christian patience, charity and mercy; which as they be true and infallible notes and marks of true Christianity; so the said Walter Brute, making comparison herein between Christ and the Pope, goeth about purposely to declare and manifest; whereby all men may see what contrariety there is between the rule of Christs teaching, and the proceedings of the Pope, between the examples and life of the one, and the examples of the other. Of which two, as one is altogether given to peace; so is the other on the contrary side as much disposed to wars, murther, and bloodshed, as is easie to be seen; whoso looketh not upon the outward shews and pretended words of these Romish Popes, but advisedly and considerately the inward practices and secret works of them, shall easily espie under the vizour of peace, what discord and debate they work; who bearing outwardly the meek horns of the Lamb mentioned in the Apocalyps, within do bear the bowels of a Wolf, full of cruelty, murther, and bloodshed. Which if any do think to be spoken of me contumeliously, would God that man could prove as well the same to be spoken of me not truly. But truth it is, I speak it sincerely, without affection of blind partiality, according to the truth of Histories both old and new. Thus under in Dei nomine, Amen, how unmercifully doth the Pope condemn his brother! And while he pretended not to be lawful for him to kill any man, what thousands hath he killed of men? And likewise in this sentence, pretending in visceribus Jesu Christi, as though he would be a Mediator to the Magistrate for the party; yet indeed will he be sure to Excommunicate the Magistrate, if he execute not the sentence given. Who be true Hereticks the Lord when he cometh shall judg. But give them to be Hereticks whom he condemneth for Heretics, yet what bowels of mercy is here, where is nothing but burning, fagoting, drowning, prisoning, chaining, famishing, racking, banging, tormenting, threatning, vexiling, curſing, and oppreſſing, and no instructing, nor yet indifferent hearing of them, what they can say? The like cruelty also may in their Wars appear, if we conſider how Pope Urban the Fifth, besides the racking and murdering of seven or eight Cardinals, set up Henry Spencer Bishop of Norwich, to fight against the French Pope. Innocentius the Fourth was in war himself against the Apulians. Likewise Alexander the Fourth, his Successor stirred up the Son of King Henry the Third to fight against the Son of Frederick the Second, Emperor, for Apulia. Boniface the Eighth moved Albertus (which stood to be Emperor) to drive Philip the French King out of his Realm. Gregorius the Nimth excited Ludovick the French King three ſundry times to mortal war against the Earl Raimundus and City of Tholouſe, and Avinion, where Lewes the ſaid French King died. Honorius the Third, by ſtrength of War many ways reſiſted Frederick the Second, and ſet out thirty ſive Gallies against the coaſts of the Emperors Dominions. The ſame Pope alſo beſieged Ferraria. To paſs over the War at Ticinum, with many other battels and conflicts of Popes againſt the Romans, Venetians, and divers other Nations. Innocentius the Third ſet up Philip the French King to War againſt King John. What ſtir Pope Gregorius the Seventh, otherwiſe named Hildebrand, kept againſt the Emperor Henricus the Fourth, it is not unknown. And who is able to recite all the Wars, Battels, and Fields fought by the ſtirring up of the Pope? Theſe with many other like examples conſidered, did cauſe this Walter Brute to write in this matter ſo as he did, making yet thereof no univerſal propoſition, but that Chriſtian Magiſtrates in caſe of neceſſity might make reſiſtance in defence of publick right. Now he proceedeth further to other matter of the Sacrament.

Examples declaring what Wars have been ſtirred up by Popes.

Touching the matter (ſaith he) of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, divers men have divers opinions, as the learned do know. As concerning my judgment upon the ſame, I firmly believe whatſoever the Lord Jeſus taught implicitely or expreſly to his Diſciples, and faithful people to be believed. For he is (as I believe and know) the true Bread of God which deſcended from Heaven, and giveth life to the world. Of which Bread whoſoever eateth, ſhall live for ever; as it is in the ſixth of John declared. Before the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, although men did live in body, yet in ſpirit they did not live; becauſe all men were then under ſin, whoſe ſouls thereby were dead; from the which death no man by the Law, nor with the Law was juſtified: For by the works of the law ſhall no fleſh be juſtified, Gal. 2. And again in the ſame Epiſtle, Chap. 3. That by the law no man is juſtified before God it is manifeſt: for the juſt man ſhall live by his faith: the law is not of faith; but whoſoever hath the works thereof, ſhall live in them. And again in the ſame Chapter, If the law had been given, which might have juſtified, then our righteouſneſs had come by the law. But the Scripture hath concluded all under ſin, that the promiſe might be ſure by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt to all believers. Moreover, before that faith came, they were kept and concluded all under the law, until the coming of that faith which was to be revealed. For the law was our Schoolmaſter in Chriſt Jeſus, that we ſhould be juſtified by faith. Alſo the ſaid Paul, Rom. 5. ſaith, That the law entred in the mean time, whereby that ſin might more abound. Where then ſin hath more abounded, there hath alſo grace ſuperabounded; that like as ſin hath reigned unto death, ſo that grace might alſo reign by righteouſneſs unto eternal life, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Whereby it is manifeſt that by the faith which we have in Chriſt, believing him to be the true Son of God which came down down from Heaven to redeem us from sin, we are justified from sin; and so do live by him which is the true bread and meat of the soul. And the bread which Christ gave is

Joh. 6. his flesh given for the life of the world, Joh. 6. For he being God, came down from Heaven, and being truly carnal man, did suffer in the flesh for our sins, which in True eating of Christ is true believing in him. his Divinity he could not suffer. Wherefore like as we believe by our Faith that he is true God: so must we also believe that he is a true man. And then do we eat the bread of Heaven, and the flesh of Christ. And if we believe that he did voluntarily shed his blood for our redemption, then do we drink his blood.

Eating of the flesh of Christ, what it is. And thus except we eat the flesh of the Son of man, and shall drink his blood, we have not eternal life in us; because the flesh of Christ verily is meat, and his blood is drink indeed; and whosoever eateth the flesh of Christ, and drinketh his blood, abideth in Christ, and Christ in him, Joh. 6. And as in this world the souls of the faithful live, and are refreshed spiritually with this Heavenly bread, and with the flesh and blood of Christ; so in the world to come, the same shall live eternally in Heaven, refreshed with the Deity of Jesus Christ, as touching the most principal part thereof, that is to wit, Intellectum; forasmuch as this bread of Heaven in that it is God, hath in it self all delectable pleasantness. And as touching the intelligible powers of the same (as well exterior as interior) they are refreshed with the flesh (that is to say) with the humanity of Jesus Christ; which is as a Queen standing on the right hand of God, decked with a Golden robe of divers colours; for this Queen of Heaven alone by the Word of God is exalted above the company of all the Angels; that by her all our corporal power intellective, may fully be refreshed, as is our spiritual intelligence, with the beholding of the Deity of Jesus Christ, and even as the Angels shall we be fully satisfied. And in the memory of this double refection, preſent in this world, and in the world to come, hath Christ given unto us (for eternal bleſſedneſs) the Sacrament of his body and blood in the ſubſtance of Bread
Mat. 26. and Wine; as it appeareth in Mat. 26. As the Disciples sat at Supper, Jesus took bread and blessed it, brake it, and gave it unto his Disciples, and said, Take, eat, this is my Body: And he took the Cup, and thanked, and gave it them, saying, Drink ye all of this, this is my Blood of the New Testament which shall be shed for many for the remission of sin. And Luke in his Goſpel, Chap. 22.
Luk. 22. of this matter thus writeth, And after he had taken the bread, he gave thanks, he brake it, and gave it unto them, saying, This is my body which shall be given for you, do you this in my remembrance. In like manner he took the Cup after Supper, saying, This is the Cup of the New Testament in my Blood, which shall be shed for you. That Chriſt ſaid, this is my body, in ſhewing to them the
This is my body, expounded. bread, I ſtrictly believe, and know that it is true; That Chriſt (forſomuch as he is God) is the very truth it ſelf, and by conſequence all that he ſaith is true. And I believe that the very ſame was his body, in ſuch wiſe as he willed it to be, his body: for in that he is Almighty, he hath done whatſoever pleaſed him: And as in Cana of Galilee
Note well gentle Reader. he changed the water into wine really, ſo that after the Tranſubſtantiation, it was wine and not water: So when he ſaid, This is my Body, if he would have had the bread really to be tranſubſtantiated into his very body, ſo that after this changing it ſhould have been his natural body, and not bread as it was before, I know that it muſt needs have been ſo. But I find not in the Scripture, that his will was to have any ſuch real Tranſubſtantiation or Mutation.

And as the Lord God Omnipotent, in his perfection Eſſential being the Son of God, doth exceed the moſt pure Creature, and yet when it pleaſed him he took upon him our nature, remaining really God as he was before, and was really made man; ſo that after this aſſuming of our ſubſtance, he was really very God, and very man; even ſo, if he would when he ſaid, This is my body, he could make this to be his body really, the bread ſtill really remaining as it was before. For leſs is the difference of the eſſence between bread and the body of a man, than between the Deity and Humanity, becauſe that of the bread is naturally made the body of a man. Of the bread is made blood; of the blood, natural ſeed; and of natural ſeed the natural ſubſtance of man is ingendred. But in that that God became man, this is an action ſupernatural. Where- {KING Lect. 2.} fore he that could make one man to be very God, and very man, could if he would, make one thing to be really very bread, and his very body. But I do not find it expreſly Bread by ſimilitude. in the Scripture, that he would any ſuch Identitie or conjunction to be made. And as Chriſt ſaid, I am very bread, not changing his eſſence or being into the eſſence or ſub- Bread ſub-ſtantially, and the ſtance of bread, but was the ſaid Chriſt which he was be- Sacra-mentally. fore really, and yet bread by a ſimilitude or figurative ſpeech; ſo if he would, it might be, when he ſaid, This is my body, that this ſhould really have been the bread as it was before, and Sacramentally or memorially to be his body. And this ſeemeth unto me moſt nearly to agree to the meaning of Chriſt, forſomuch as he ſaid, Do this in remembrance of me. Then foraſmuch as in the Supper it is manifeſt that Chriſt gave unto his Diſciples the bread of his body which he brake, to that intent to eat with their mouths: in which bread he gave himſelf alſo unto them, as one in whom they ſhould believe (as to be the food of the ſoul) and by that faith they ſhould believe him to be their Saviour which took his body, wherein alſo he would it to be manifeſt, that he would redeem them from death; ſo was the bread eaten with the Diſciples mouths, that he, being the true bread of the ſoul, might be in ſpirit received and eaten ſpiritually by their faith which believed in him.

The bread which in the Diſciples mouths was chewed, The bread which the Lord gave from the mouth paſſed to the ſtomach. For as Chriſt ſaith, Whatsoever cometh to the mouth, goeth into the belly, and entereth not into the bodies, but the body yeilds to from thence into the privy, Mat. 15. But that true and very bread of the ſoul was eaten of the ſpirit of the Diſciples, and by faith entred their minds, and abode in their intrails through love. And ſo the bread broken, ſeemeth unto me to be really the meat of the body, and the bread which it was before; but Sacramentally to be the body of Chriſt, as Paul, 1 Cor. 10. The bread which we break, is it not the participation of the body of the Lord? So the bread which we break is the participation of the Lords body. And it is manifeſt that the Heavenly bread is not broken, neither yet is ſubject to ſuch breaking. Therefore Paul calleth the material bread which is broken, the body of Chriſt which was faithful are partakers of. The bread therefore changeth not his eſſence, but is bread really, and is the body of Chriſt Sacramentally. Even as Chriſt is the very Vine, abiding really and figuratively the Vine: ſo the Temple of Jeruſalem was really the material Temple, and figuratively it was the body of Chriſt; becauſe he ſaid, Deſtroy you this Temple, and in three days I will repair the ſame again. And this ſpake he of the Temple of his body; whereas others underſtood it to be the material Temple, as appeared by their anſwer. For, ſaid they, forty ſeven years hath this Temple been in building, and wilt thou build it up in three days?

Even ſo may the conſecrated bread be really bread, as it was before, and yet figuratively the body of Chriſt. And if therefore Chriſt would this bread to be only Sacramentally his body, and would not have the ſame bread really to be tranſubſtantiated into his body, and ſo ordained his Prieſts to make this Sacrament as a memorial of his paſſions then do the Prieſts grievouſly offend, which beſeech Chriſt in the holy Maſs, that the bread which lyeth upon the Altar may be made really the body of Chriſt, if he would not have the ſame to be but a Sacrament of his body. And then both be they greatly deceived themſelves, and alſo do greatly deceive others. But whether the bread be really Tranſubſtantiated into the body of Chriſt, or is only the body of Chriſt Sacramentally; no doubt but that the people are marvelloufly deceived. For the people believe that The people greatly deceived in the Sacra-ment. they ſee the body of Chriſt, nay rather Chriſt himſelf between the hands of the Prieſts (for ſo is the common Oath they ſwear) By him whom I ſaw this day between the Prieſts hands. And the people believe that they eat not the body of Chriſt but at Eaſter, or elſe when they lie upon their death-bed, and receive with their bodily mouth the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt. But the body of Chriſt (admit the bread be Tranſubſtantiated really into the body) as in the Sacrament indiviſibiliter, that is, not able to be divided; and ſo immenſurabiliter, that is, not able to be meaſured: Erge, inviſibiliter, that is not able to be ſeen. To believe therefore that he may be ſeen corporally in the Sacrament is erroneous. And foraſmuch as the body of Chriſt {KING Lect. 2.} Chriſt is the ſouls food, and not the food of the body in this world; for that whoſoever believeth, doth eat ſpiritually and really, at any time when he ſo believeth, it is manifeſt, that they do greatly erre which believe that they eat not the body of Chriſt, but when they eat with their Teeth the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt.

The Prieſts ſeek their own honour in their multiplications. And although it ſhould be to the great honor of Prieſts, that the Bread really were changed into the Body of Chriſt, by the vertue of the ſacramental words pronounced; yet if Chriſt would not have it to be ſo; then they deſiring to do this contrary to the will of Chriſt, and informing the people that is to be done, ſo contrary to the will of Chriſt, are in great peril, moſt dangerouſly ſeducing both themſelves and the people. And then although that thereby they get a little worldly and tranſitory honour for a ſhort time; it is to be feared left perpetual ſhame, finally ſhall follow and enſue upon the ſame. For Chriſt ſaith; every one that exalteth himſelf ſhall be brought low. Let them therefore take heed, leſt they extolling themſelves for this Sacrament above the company of Angels which never ſinned, for the error which they be in, for evermore be placed with the ſinful Angels under the Earth.

Mark here ye good Prieſts.

Let every man therefore think lowly of himſelf in what ſtate or degree ſoever he be; neither let him preſume to do that which he is not able to do; neither deſire to have that thing done, which God would not have done.

The makers of the Canon Law contrary to themſelves. I greatly marvel at thoſe which were the makers of the Canons, how variably and contrary one to another they write of this Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt. In the laſt part of the Decrees where this matter is touched, not only in the text, but alſo in the proceſs of the matter, divers do diverſly write, and one contrary to another. For in the Chapter that thus beginneth, Prima inquit hereſis, it is thus written, You ſhall not eat this Body which you ſee, nor ſhall drink this Blood which they ſhall ſhed which ſhall crucifie me: I will commend unto you a certain Sacrament ſpiritually underſtood that quickneth you; for the fleſh profiteth you nothing at all. And in the end of the ſame Chapter it is thus written, Till the world ſhall have an end, the Lords place is in Heaven: Yet notwithſtanding the verity of the Lord is here abiding with us. For the Body wherewith he roſe ought to be in one place, but his verity is in every place diffuſed and ſpread abroad. And in the Chapter following, which thus beginneth; Omnia quæcunque volnit, &c. It is written; Although the figure of the Bread and Wine ſeem to be nothing; Yet notwithſtanding they muſt after the words of conſecration be believed, to be none other thing than the very fleſh of Chriſt, and his blood. Whereupon the verity himſelf ſaid unto his Diſciples; This is (ſaith he) my fleſh, which is given for the life of the World: and to ſpeak yet more marvelloufly, this is none other fleſh, than that which was born of the Virgin Mary, and ſuffered upon the Croſs, and roſe out of the Sepulcher.

De conſec. diſt. 2. cap. Prima inquit hereſis. De conſec. diſt. 2. cap. Omnia quæcunque volnit, &c. Contrariety in the Popes Canons.

So how far this Chapter differeth from the firſt. And in the Chapter which beginneth, Ego Berengarius, &c. This is the confeſſion which Berengarius himſelf confeſſed touching this Sacrament, and his confeſſion is of the Church allowed: I confeſs (ſaith Berengarius) that the Bread and Wine which is laid upon the Altar after the conſecration, is not only a Sacrament, but alſo that it is the very Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: and the ſame not only ſenſually to be a Sacrament, but alſo verily to be handled with the Prieſts hands and to be broken, and chewed with the Teeth of faithful men. This confeſſion doubtleſs is hereticall: For why? If the body of Chriſt be in the Sacrament, as of the Church it is ſo determined, it is there then Multiplicative, and ſo indiviſibiliter wherefore not ſenſualiter. And if it be there indiviſibiliter, that is, in ſuch ſort as it cannot be divided or ſeparated, then can it not be touched, felt, broken, nor with the Teeth of men chewed.

De conſec. diſt. 2. cap. Ego Berengarius. The recantation of Berengarius is notorious. The Sacrament left by the Prieſts negligence to be eaten of a Mouſe, returneth again into Chriſts body to Bread.

The Writers of this time and age do affirm, that if by the negligence of the Prieſt, the Sacrament be ſo negligently left, that a Mouſe, or any other Beaſt or Vermine eat the ſame; then they ſay, that the Sacrament returneth again into the nature and ſubſtance of Bread. Whereby they muſt needs confeſs, that a miracle is as well wrought by the negligence of the Prieſt, as firſt there was made by the conſecration of the Prieſt in making the Sacrament. For either by the eating of the Mouſe the Body of Chriſt is tranſubſtantiated into the nature of Bread, which is a tranſubſtantiation ſupernatural; or elſe of nothing by creation is this Bread produced; and therefore either of theſe operations is miraculous and to be marvelled at. Now conſidering the diſagreeing opinions of the Doctors, and for the abſurdities which follow, I believe with Paul, that the Bread which we break, is the participation of the Body of Chriſt: and as Chriſt ſaith, that the Bread is made the Body of Chriſt for a memorial and remembrance of him. And in ſuch ſort as Chriſt willed the ſame to be his Body, in the ſame manner and ſort do I believe it to be his Body.

Whether external ſigns be a Prieſt be the ſigns of Antichriſt or elſe grounded upon Chriſt.

But whether we men may make the Body of Chriſt, and Miniſter it unto the people: or whether that Prieſts be divided form the Lay people for their knowledge, preeminence, and ſanctity of life, or elſe by external ſigns only: Alſo whether the ſign of tonſure and other external ſigns of Holineſs in Prieſts, be ſigns of Antichriſt and his Characters, or elſe introduced and taught by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; conſequently it remaineth next to ſpeak thereof unto the faithful ſort (according to the proceſs of the holy Scripture) and firſt of the three kinds of the Prieſts. I remember that I have read, the firſt of them to be Aaronical, Legal, and Temporal; The ſecond to be Eternal and regal according to the Order of Melchiſedech: The third to be Chriſtian. The firſt of theſe ceaſed at the coming of Chriſt; for that as Saint Paul to the Hebrews ſaith, The Prieſthood of Aaron was tranſlated to the Prieſthood of the Order of Melchiſedech. The Legal ſort of Prieſts of Aaron, were ſeparated from the reſt of the people by Kindred, Office, and Inheritance. By Kindred, for that the children of Aaron only were Prieſts. By Office, for that it only pertained to them to offer Sacrifice for the ſins of the people, and to inſtruct the people in the precepts and ceremonies of the law. By Inheritance, becauſe the Lord was their portion of inheritance; neither had they any other inheritance amongſt their Brethren, but thoſe things which were offered unto the Lord, as the Firſt-fruits, parts of the Sacrifices, and Vows; except places for their Manſion-Houſes for them and theirs, as appeareth by the proceſs of Moſes law. The Prieſthood of Chriſt did much differ from this Prieſthood, as Paul doth witneſs to the Hebrews, Chapter, 1, 8, 9, 10.

Three Orders or ſorts of Prieſts. 1. Aaronical. 2. Eternal. 3. Chriſtian.

Leviticall Prieſts divided from the people by kindred Office and Inheritance.

First in kindred, becauſe that our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, came of the Stock and Tribe of Juda: of which Tribe none had to do with the Altar, and in which Tribe nothing at all was ſpoken of the Prieſts of Moſes.

The Prieſthood of Chriſt differeth from the Leviticall Prieſthood, how and wherein. 1. In kindred. 2. In Oath taking.

The ſecond, for that other were made Prieſts without their Oath taken: But he by an Oath, by him which ſaid, The Lord ſwore and it ſhall not repent him, Thou art a Prieſt for ever according to the Order of Melchiſedech.

3. In durability.

Thirdly, by durability, for that many of them were made Prieſts but during the term of their lives: But he for that he remaineth for ever, hath an eternal Prieſthood. Wherefore he is able to ſave us for ever, having by himſelf acceſs unto God, which ever liveth to make interceſſion for us.

4. The matter of Sacrifice.

The Law made alſo ſuch men Prieſts as had infirmities; but Sermo (that is the word, which according to the law is the eternal Son and perfect) by an Oath.

5. In place of Sacrificing.

The Prieſthood of Chriſt alſo did differ from the Prieſthood of Aaron and the Law in the matter of the Sacrifice, and in the place of Sacrificing. In the matter of their Sacrifices, becauſe they did uſe in their Sacrifices ſtrange bodies, of the matter of their Sacrifices, and did ſhed ſtrange blood for the expiation of ſins: But he offering himſelf unto God his Father for us, ſhed his own Blood for the remiſſion of our ſins. In the place of Sacrificing, becauſe that they did offer their Sacrifice in the Tabernacle or Temple: But Chriſt ſuffering death without the Gates of the City, offered himſelf upon the Altar of the Croſs to God his Father, and there ſhed his precious Blood. In his ſapping Chamber alſo he bleſſed the Bread and conſecrated the ſame for his Body, and the Wine which was in the Cup he alſo conſecrated for his Blood; delivering the ſame to his Apostles to be done for a commemoration and remembrance of his incarnation and passion. Neither did Jesus enter into the Sanctuary made with mans hands, which be examples and figures of true things, but he entred into Heaven it self, that he might appear before the Majesty of God for us. Neither doth he offer himself oftentimes, as the chief Priest in the Sanctuary did every year with strange blood (for then should he oftentimes have suffered from the beginning) but now once for all, in the latter end of the World to destroy sin by his peace-offering hath he entred. And even as it is decreed, that man once shall die and then cometh the judgment; so Christ hath been once offered, to take away the sins of many. The second time he shall appear without sin to them that look for him, to their salvation. For the Law having a shadow of good things to come, can never by the Image it self of things (which every year without ceasing they offer by such Sacrifices) make those perfect that come thereunto; for otherwise that Offering should have ceased: Because that such worshippers, being once cleansed from their sins, should have no more conscience of sin. But in these, commemoration is made every year of sin: For it is impossible that by the blood of Goats and Calves, sins should be purged and taken away. Therefore coming into the World he said; Sacrifice and Oblation thou wouldst not have, but a body hast thou given me, peace-offerings for sins have not pleased thee: Then said I, behold I come: In the Volume of the Book it is written of me, that I should do thy will O God: Saying as above; because thou wouldest have no Sacrifices nor burnt Offerings for sin, neither dost thou take pleasure in those things that are offered according to the law. Then said I, Behold I come, that I may do thy will O God. He taketh away the first to stablish that which followeth. In which Will we are sanctified by the oblation of the Body of Jesus Christ once for all. And every Priest is ready daily ministring, and oftentimes offering like Sacrifices, which can never take away sins. But this Jesus, offering one Sacrifice for sin, sitteth for evermore on the right hand of God, expecting the time till his Enemies be made his foot-stool. For by his own only oblation, hath he consummated for evermore those that are sanctified. All these places have I recited which Paul writeth, for the better understanding and declaration of those things I mean to speak. By all which it appeareth manifestly, how the Priesthood of Christ differeth from the legal Priesthood of Aaron: And by the same also appeareth, how the same differeth from all other Priesthood Christian, that imitateth Christ. For the properties of the Priesthood of Christ, above recited, are found in no other Priest, but in Christ alone. Of the third Priesthood, that is, the Christian Priesthood, Christ by his express words speaketh but little, to make any difference between the Priests and the rest of the people, neither yet doth use this name of Sacerdos or Presbyter, in the Gospel. But some he calleth Disciples, some Apostles, whom he sent to Baptise and to Preach, and in his name to do miracles. He calleth them the Salt of the Earth, in which name wisdom is meant: and he calleth them the light of the World, by which good living is signified. For he saith, Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorifie your Father which is in Heaven. And Paul speaking of the Priests to Timothy, and Titus, seemeth not to me to make any diverfity, betwixt the Priests and the other people, but in that he would have them to surmount other in knowledge and perfection of life. But the fourth Priesthood is the Roman Priesthood, brought in by the Church of Rome; which Church maketh a distinction between the Clergy and the Lay-people: and after that the Clergy is divided into sundry degrees, as appeareth in the Decretals.

The Law bringeth none to perfection.

The Priesthood of Christ differeth from all other Priesthoods.

The third Priesthood. The name of Sacerdos or Priest not used in the New Testament of Christ.

The fourth Priesthood which is the Romish Priesthood.

This distinction of the Clergy from the Laity, with the tonsure of Clerks, began in the time of Anacletus, as it doth appear in the Chronicles. The degrees of the Clergy were afterward invented and distinguished by their Offices, and there was no ascension to the degree of the Priesthood, but by inferior Orders and degrees. But in the Primitive Church it was not so: For immediately after the conversion of some of them to Faith and Baptism received; they were made Priests and Bishops; as appeareth by Ananias, whom Marcus made of a Taylor or Shoomaker to be a Bishop. And of many other it was in like case done, according to the Traditions of the Church of Rome. Priests are ordained to offer Sacrifices, to make supplication and prayers, and to bless and sanctifie. The oblation of the Priesthood only to Priests (as they say) is congruent: whose duties are upon the Altar to offer for the sins of the people of the Lords Body, which is consecrated of Bread. Of which saying I have great marvel, considering S. Paul his words to the Hebrews before recited. If Christ, offering for our sins one Oblation for evermore, sitteth at the right hand of God, and with that one Oblation hath consummated for evermore, those that are sanctified: If Christ evermore sitteth at the right hand of God, to make intercession for us: what need he to leave here any Sacrifice for our sins of the Priests to be dayly offered? I do not find in the Scriptures of God, nor of his Apostles, that the body of Christ ought to be made a Sacrifice for sin: but only as a Sacrament and Commemoration of the Sacrifice passed, which Christ offered upon the Altar of the Cross for our sins. For it is an absurdity to say that Christ is now every day really offered as a Sacrifice upon the Altar by the Priests; for then the Priests should really Crucifie him upon the Altar, which is a thing of no Christian to be believed. But even as in his Supper his Body and his Blood he delivered to his Disciples, in memorial of his Body that should be Crucified on the morrow for our sins: So after this ascension, did his Apostles use the same (when they brake Bread in every House) for a Sacrament, and not for a Sacrifice, of the Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. And by this means were they put in remembrance of the great love of Christ, who so entirely loved us, that willingly he suffered the death for us, and for the remission of our sins. And this did they offer themselves to God by love, being ready to suffer death for the confession of his name, and for the saving health of his Brethren, fulfilling the new commandment of Christ, which said unto them; A new commandment do I give unto you, that you love one another, as I have loved you. But when love began to wax cold, or rather to be frozen for cold, through the anguish and anxiety of persecution for the name of Christ; then Priests did use the flesh and blood of Christ, instead of a Sacrifice. And because many of them feared death, some of them fled into solitary places, not daring to give themselves a Sacrifice by death unto God through the confession of his name, and saving health of their Brethren: some other worshipped Idols, fearing death; as did also the chief Bishop of Rome, and many other more in divers places of the World. And thus came to pass, that that which was ordained and constituted for a memorial of the one and only Sacrifice, was altered (for want of love) into the reality of the Sacrifice it self.

{KING Hist. 2.} The Office of Priests after the Popes order.

The body of Christ not left to be a Sacrifice for sin, but only for a Sacrament.

After these things thus discussed, he inferreth consequently upon the same, an other brief tractation of Women and Lay-men; whether in defect of the other, they may exercise the action of prayer, and Administration of Sacraments belonging to Priests, where he declareth the use received in the Popes Church for Women to Baptise, which, saith he, cannot be without remission of sins; wherefore seeing that Women have power by the Pope to remit sin, and to Baptise, why may not they as well be admitted to minister the Lords Supper, in like case of necessity? Wherein also he maketh relation of Pope Joan the Eighth, a woman Pope, moving certain Questions of her. All which for brevity I pretermit, proceeding to the Ministration of prayer, and blessing of Sanctification, appropriate to the Office of Priests, as followeth.

Furthermore, as touching the function and office of praying and blessing, whereunto Priests seem to be ordained (to omit here the question whether Women may pray in Churches, in lack of other meet persons) it remaineth now also to prosecute. Christ, being desired of his Disciples to teach them to pray, gave them the Common-Prayer both to men and women, to the which Prayer in my Estimation no other is to be compared. For in that, first, the whole honour due unto the Deity is comprehended. Secondly, whatsoever is necessary for us, both for the time present, or past, or for time to come, is there desired and prayed for. He informeth us besides to pray secretly, and also briefly: secretly to enter into our close Chamber,

The Order and Office of prayer. The Lords Prayer.

Mat. 6.

{KING Hist. 2.} Chamber, and there in secrecy he willeth us to pray unto his Father. And saith moreover, when ye pray, use not much babling, or many words, as do the Heathen. For they think in their long and prolix praying to be heard. Therefore be you not like to them. By the which Doctrine he calleth us away from the errors of the Heathen Gentiles; from whom proceed these superstitious manner of Arts (or rather of ignorances) as Necromancy, the Art of Divination, and other spices of conjuration, not unknown to them that be learned: For these Necromancers believe one place to be of greater vertue than another; there to be heard sooner, than in another. Like as Balaam being hired to Curse the people of God by his Art of soothsaying or charming, when he could not accomplish his purpose in one place, he removed to another; but he in the end was deceived of his desire. For he, intending first to Curse them, was not able to accurse them whom the Lord blessed, so that his Curse could not hurt any of all that people. After like fort the Necromancers turn their face to the East, as to a place more apt for their prayers. Also the Necromancers believe that the vertue of the words of the prayer, and the curiosity thereof, causeth them to bring to effect that which they seek after; which is also another point of infidelity, used much of charmers, sorcerers; inchanters, soothsayers and such like. Out of the same Art (I fear) proceedeth the practice of exorciling, whereby Divels and Spirits be conjured to do that, whereunto they are inforced by the exorcist. Also whereby other Creatures likewise are exorcised or conjured, so that by the vertue of their exorcism they may have their power and strength exceeding all natural operation.

The Art of Necromancy, Soothsaying and Witchcrafts, how and from whom they came.

Against exorcesting of Priests.

In the Church of Rome many such exorcisms and conjurations be practised, and are called of them benedictions, or hallowings. But here I ask of these exorcisers, whether they believe the things and creatures so exorcised and hallowed, have that operation and efficacy given them, which they pretend? If they so believe, every child may see that they are far beguiled. For holy Water being, of them exorcised or conjured, hath no such power in it, neither can have, which they in their exorcism do command. For there they injoyn and command, that wheresoever that Water is sprinkled, all vexation or infestation of the unclean Spirit should avoid, and not that no pestilence Spirit there should abide, &c. But mark plain it is, that no Water, be it never so Holy, can have any such power so to do, as it is commanded, to wit, to be an universal remedy to expel all diseases.

Conjuring or hallowing begin the Popish Church.

Holy water conjured.

Exorcisms.

This I would ask of these Exorcists; whether in their commanding, they do conjure or adjure the things conjured to be of an higher vertue and operation, than their own nature doth give: Or else whether they in their prayers desire of God, that he will infuse into them that vertue, which they require? If they in their commanding do so believe, then do they believe that they have that power in them to the which the inferior power of the thing exorcised must obey, in receiving that which is commanded. And so doing they are much more deceived, forasmuch as they see themselves, that they which are so Authorised to the Office of exorcising, say to the Devil being conjured, Go, and he goeth not; and to another, come, and he cometh not; and many things else they command the inferior spirit their subject to do, and he hath not. So in like case, when they pray to God to make the Water to be of such vertue, that it may be to them health of mind and body, and that it may be able to expulse every unclean Spirit, and to chase away all manner of distemperature, and pestilence of the Air (being an unreasonable petition asked, and fore displeasing to God) it is to be feared left their Benediction, their hallowing and blessing is changed into Cursing, according to that saying that followeth: And now, O you Priests, I have a message to say unto you; If you will not hear and bear well away in your minds, to give the glory unto my name, saith the Lord God of Hosts, I will send scarcity among you, and I will curse your blessings. What things and how many are blessed, or hallowed in the Church, that in hallowing thereof displease God, and are accursed? And therefore according to the saying of S. James, they ask and are not heard, because they ask not as they should, that they in their own desires may perish. Let a man behold, the blessing or hallowing of their Fire, Water, Incense, Wax, Bread, Wine,

Wine, the Church, the Altar, the Churchyard, Ashes, Bells, Copes, Palmes, Oil, Candles, Salt, the hallowing of the Ring, the Bed, the Staffe, and of many such like things; and I believe that a man shall find out many errors of the heathen Magicians, Witches, Soothsayers and Charmers. And notwithstanding the ancient and old Magicians in their Books command those that be conjurers, that they in any wise live devoutly (for otherwise, as they say, the Spirits will not obey their commandments, and conjurations) yet the Roman conjurers do impute it to the vertue of the holy Words, because they be they which work, and not the holiness of the conjurers: How cometh it to pass that they say, the things confecrated of a Cursed and vicious Javel should have so great vertue in pronouncing (as they say) the holy and mystical words, as if they were pronounced of a Priest never so holy? But I marvel that they say so, reading this saying in the Acts of the Apostles: because the Charmers pronouncing the name of Jesus (that is above all names) would have healed those that were possessed with Devils, and said; In the name of Jesus, whom Paul preacheth, go ye out of the men. And the possessed with Devils answered, Jesus we know, and Paul we know, but what are ye? And they all to be beat the Conjurers.

Romish conjurers.

The good life of a Priest, a great mistress to deal in Gods matters.

And now considering this and many such like things, I marvel wherefore the vicious Priests do sell their prayers and blessings dearer (as also their Masses and Trentals of Masses) than those that be devout Lay-men, and holy Women: which with all their heart desire to flee from vices, and take hold of vertue. Forasmuch as God in divers places of the Scripture doth promise that he will not hear sinners and wicked persons. Neither should he seem to be just, if he should sooner hear the prayers of his Enemies, than of his faithful Friend. How I pray you shall a sinful Priest deliver another man from sin by his prayers, or else from the punishment of sin, when he is not able to deliver himself by his prayer from sin? What then doth God so much accept in the Mass of a vicious Priest, that for his Mass, his prayer or Oblation, he might deliver any man either from sin, or from the pain due for sin? No, but for that that Christ once offered himself for our sins, and now sitteth on the right hand of God the Father, always shewing unto him what and how great things he hath suffered for us. And every Priest always maketh mention in his Mass of this Oblation. Neither do we this that we might bring the same Oblation into the remembrance of God, because that he always in his presence seeth the same; but that we should have in remembrance this so great love of God, that he would give his own Son to death for our sins, that he might cleanse and purifie us from all our sins. What, doth it please God, that the remembrance of so great love is made by a Priest, which more loveth sin than God? Or how can any prayer of such a Priest please God, in what holy place soever he be, or what holy Vestiments soever he put on, or what holy prayers soever he maketh? And whereas Christ and his Apostles do command the Preaching of the Word of God; the Priests be now more bound to celebrate the Mass, and more straitly bound to say the Canonical hours; whereat I cannot but greatly marvel. For why? To obey the precepts of men more than the Commandments of God, is in effect to honour man as God, and to beflow the Sacrifice upon man which is due unto God, and this is also spiritual fornication. How therefore are Priests bound at the commandment of man to leave the Preaching of the Word of God, at whose commandment they are not bound to leave the celebration of the Mass, or singing of Matines? Therefore, as it seemeth, Priests ought not at the commandment of any man to leave the Preaching of the Word of God, unto the which they are bound both by Divine and Apostolical precepts. With whom agreeth the writing of Hierome upon the Decretals, saying in this wise; Let none of the Bishops swell with the envy of divelish tentation; let none be angry, if the Priest do sometimes exhort the people, if they Preach in the Church, &c. For to him that forbiddeth me these things I will say, that he is unwilling that Priests should do those things which he commanded of God. What thing is there above Christ? Or what may be preferred before his Body and his Blood, &c.

The Prayers of a vicious Priest little availeth before God.

Remembrance of Christs passion needeth not to God, but to Man.

Priests more bound to say Mass commanded by Man, than to Preaching commanded of God. Spiritual fornication.

Hieronimus.

Do Priests therefore sin or not, which bargain for Money to pray for the Soul of any dead Man? It is well known that Jesus did whip those that were Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple, saying; My house shall be called the house of prayer, but you have made the same a den of thieves: Truly he cast not out such Merchants from out of the Church, but because of their sins. Whereupon Hierome upon this Text saith; Let the Priests be diligent and take good heed in this Church, that they turn not the House of God into a Den of Thieves. He doubtless is a Thief which seeketh gain by Religion, and by a shew of Holiness studieth to find occasion of Merchandise. Hereupon, the holy Canons do make accursed Simoniacal Heresie, and do command that those should be deprived of the Priesthood, which or the passing or marvelous spiritual grace do seek gain or Money. Peter the Apostle said to Simon Magus, Let thy Money and thou go both to the Devil, which thinkest that the gifts of God may be bought for Money. Therefore the spiritual gifts of God ought not to be sold.

Whether Priests may bargain to, sing for Souls departed.

Hieronimus.

Verily prayer is the spiritual gift of God, as is also the Preaching of the Word of God, or the laying on of hands, or the Administration of other the Sacraments. Christ, sending forth his Disciples to Preach, said unto them; Heal ye the sick, cast out devils, raise the dead, freely ye have received, freely give ye again. If the Priests have power by his prayers to deliver souls being in Purgatory form grievous pains, without doubt he hath received that power freely from God. How therefore can he sell his Act, unless he resist the Commandments of God, of whom he hath received that authority? This truly cannot be done without sin, which is against the Commandment of God. How plainly spake Christ to the Pharisees and Priests, saying; Woe be unto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hypocrites, because ye have eaten the whole houses of such as be widows by making long prayers, and therefore have you received greater damnation. Wherein I pray you do our Pharisees and Priests differ from them? Do not our Priests devour Widows houses and possessions, that by their long prayers they might deliver the souls of their Husbands from the grievous pains of Purgatory? How many Lordships I pray you have been bestowed upon the Religious Men and Women to pray for the dead, that they by their prayer might deliver those dead men from the pain (as they said) that they suffer in Purgatory, grievously tormented and vexed? If their prayers and speaking of Holy words shall not be able to deliver themselves from pain, unless they have good works; how shall other men be delivered from pain by their prayers, which whilest they lived here, gave over themselves to sin? Yea, peradventure those Lordships or Lands, which they gave unto the Priests to pray for them, they themselves have gotten by might from other faithful men, unjustly, and violently: And the Canons do say, that sin is not forgiven, till the thing taken away wrongfully be restored: How then shall they be able (which do unjustly possess such Lordships or Lands) to deliver them by their prayers from pain, which have given to them these Lordships or Lands, seeing God from the beginning hath hated all extortion in his burnt Sacrifices? Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven: But he which doth the will of my Father which is in Heaven. And again, Not the hearers of the Law, but the doers of the Law shall be justified.

Selling of prayer abominable.

Religious men and women devourers of widows houses. Praying for souls in Purgatory. Evil gotten Lands, as evil bestowed, for praying for souls in Purgatory.

If therefore the words of him that prayeth do not deliver himself from sin, nor from the pain of sin, how do they deliver other men from sin or from the pain of sin, when no man prayeth more earnestly for another man, than for himself? Therefore many are deceived in buying or selling of prayers, as in the buying of pardons, that they might be divered from pain; when as commonly they pay dearer for the prayers of the proud and vicious Prelates, than for the prayers of devout Women and devout Men of the lay people. But out of doubt, God doth not regard the person of him that prayeth, neither the place in which he prayeth, nor his apparel, nor the curiousness of his prayer, but the humility and godly affection of him that prayeth. Did not the Pharisee and the Publican go up into the Temple to pray? The Publicans prayer for his humility and godly affection is heard. But the Pharisees prayer for his pride and arrogancy is contemned. Consider that neither the person, nor the place, nor the state, nor the curiousness of his prayer doth help the Pharisee: Because the Publican not thinking himself worthy to lift up his eyes unto Heaven, for the multitude of his sins (saying, O God, be merciful unto me a sinner) is justified by his humility, and his prayer is heard. But the Pharisee boasting in his righteousness is despised, because God thrusteth down the proud, and exalteth the humble and those that be meek. The rich Glutton also that was clothed with Purple and Silk, and fared every day daintily, prayed unto Abraham, and is not heard, but is buried in pains and torments of Hell fire. But Lazarus, who lay begging at his Gate, (being full of Sores) is placed in the Bosom of Abraham. Behold that neither the riches of his Apparel, nor the deliciousness of his Banquets, nor the gorgeousness of his Estate, neither the abundance of his Riches, doth help any thing to prefer the prayers or petitions of the rich Glutton, nor yet diminish his Torments, because that mighty men in their mightiness shall suffer torments mightily. How dare any man by composition demand or receive any thing of another man for his prayers? If he believe that he can by his prayer deliver his Brother from grievous pain, he is bound by Charity to relieve his Brother with his prayers although he be not hired thereunto: But if he will not pray unless he be hired, then hath he no love at all. What therefore helpeth his prayer, which abideth not in Charity? Therefore let him first take compassion of himself by prayer, that he may come into Charity, and then he shall be the better able to help others. If he believe not, or if he standeth in doubt whether he shall be able to deliver his Brother by his prayer, wherefore doth he make with him an assured bargain, and taketh his Money, and yet knoweth not whether he shall relieve him ever a whit the more, or not, from his pain? I fear left the Words of the Prophet are fulfilled, saying; From the least to the most all men apply themselves to covetousness, and from the Prophet to the Priest all work deceitfully. For the poor Priests excuse themselves of such bargaining and selling of their prayers, saying; The young Cock learneth to Crow of the old Cock. For, saith he, thou mayst see that the Pope himself, in stalling of Bishops and Abbats, taketh the First-fruits: In the placing or bestowing of Benefices he always taketh somewhat, and specially if the Benefices be great. And he selleth pardons or bulls, and to speak more plain, he taketh Money for them. Bishops in giving Orders, in hallowing Churches and Church-yards, do take Money: In Ecclesiastical correction they take Money for the mitigation of penance: In the grievous offences of convict persons Money is required, and caused to be payed. Abbots, Monks, and other religious men that have possession, will receive no man into their fraternity, or make them partakers of their spiritual Suffrages, unless he bestow somewhat upon them, or promise them somewhat. Curates and Vicars having sufficient livings by the Tithes of their Parishioners, yet in Dirges and years minds, in hearing confessions, in Weddings and Buryings, do require and have Money. The Friers also of the four Orders of beggers, which think themselves to be the most perfect men of the Church, do take Money for their prayers, confessions, and buryings of the dead: and when they Preach, they believe that they shall have either Money or some other thing worthy Money. Wherefore then be the poor Priests blamed? ought not they to be held excused, although they take Money for their prayers by composition? Truly (me thinketh) that this excuse by other mens sins doth not excuse them, forasmuch as to heap one mischief upon anothers head, is no sufficient discharge. I would to God that all the buyers and sellers of spiritual Suffrages would with the eyes of their heart behold the ruine of the great City, and the fall of Babylon, and that which they shall say after that fall. Doth not the Prophet say; And the Merchants of the Earth shall weep and mourn for her, because no man shall buy any more their Merchandise, that is, their Merchandise of Gold and Silver, and of precious Stone, and of Pearl, and of Silk and purple? And again, he saith; And the Merchants which were made rich by her, shall stand aloof for fear of her torments, weeping, mourning, and saying, Alas! Alas! that City Babylon, that great City, which was wont to wear purple, white silk, crimson, gold, pearl, and precious Stone, because that in one hour all those riches are come to nought. And again; And they cast dust upon their heads, and cried out, weeping, and mourning, and saying; Alas! Alas! that great and

Example to be taken by the fall of Babylon.

{KING Hist. 2.} and mighty City Babylon, by whom all such as had Ships upon the Sea, were made rich by rewards; because that in one hour she is become desolate.

This Babylon, this great City, is the City of Rome, as it appeareth by the process of the Apostle. Because the Angel which shewed unto Saint John the destruction of the mighty Harlot sitting upon many Waters, with whom the Kings of the Earth have committed fornication, and all they which dwell upon the Earth, are made drunk with the Wine of her Whoredom, said unto him; And the Woman which thou sawest, is the great City which hath Dominion above Kings, &c. And indeed in the days of Saint John the whole World was subject to the temporal Empire of the City of Rome, and afterwards it was subject to the spiritual Empire or Dominion of the same. But touching the temporal Government of the City of Rome it is fallen already: and so that other also, for the multitude of her spiritual Fornication, shall fall. The Emperors of this City gave themselves to Idolatry, and would have that men should honour them as Gods, and put all those to death that refused such Idolatry, and by the cruelty of their Torments all Infidels gat the upper hand.

The City of Rome, Babylon. Apo. 18.

The temporal Dominion of the City of Rome.

The Spiritual Dominion of the City of Rome.

Hereupon by the Image of Nabuchadonozor, the Empire of the Romans is likened to Iron, which beateth together, and hath the Mastery of all Metals. And in the vision of Daniel, wherein he saw the four Winds of Heaven to fight in the main Sea; and four very great Beasts coming out of the Sea; the Kingdom of the Romans is likened to the fourth terrible and marvellous Beast, the which had great iron Teeth; eating and destroying, and treading the rest under his Feet: And this Beast had Ten Horns, and as Daniel saith, he shall speak words against the most high, and shall rear with his Teeth the Saints of the most high: and he shall think that he may be able to change times and laws, and they shall be delivered into his power, until a time, times, and half a time. In the Apocalyps, Saint John saw a Beast coming out of the Sea, having seven Heads and ten Horns, and power was given to him to make Months 42. So long time endured the Empire of the Romans that is to say, from the beginning of Julius Cesar, which was the first Emperor of the Romans, unto the end of Fredericus, which was the last Emperor of the Romans. Under this Empire Christ suffered, and other Martyrs also suffered for his names sake. And here is fallen Rome as Babylon (which is all one) according to the manner of speaking in the Apocalyps, as touching the Temporal and Corporal power of governing. And thus shall the fall also touching the spiritual power of governing, for the multitude of Iniquities and spiritual Fornication, and Merchandise that are committed by her in the Church.

The fourth Beast in the Prophecy of Daniel signifieth Rome.

The Beast with 7. heads in the Apo. signifieth Rome.

The feet of the Image in the dream of Nabuchadonozor signifieth Rome.

The feet of the Image which Nabuchadonozor saw, did betoken the Empire of Rome, and part of them were of Iron, and part of Clay and Earth. The part that was of Iron fell, and the power thereof vanquished away, because the power thereof, was at an end after certain Months. That part of Clay and Earth yet endureth, but it shall vanish away by the Testimony of the Prophets: Whereupon Saint John in the Apocalyps; After that, he saw the part made of Iron rising out of the Sea, to which each people, Tribe, and Tongue submitted themselves. And he saw another Beast coming out of the Earth, which had two Horns like to the Horns of a Lamb, and he spake like a Dragon, and he vanquished the first Beast in his sight.

The Beast with two Horns like the Lamb, signifieth the spiritual Dominion of Rome.

This Beast as seemeth me, doth betoken the Clay and Earthen part of the feet of the Image, because he came out of the Earth. For that by tertene help he is made the High and chief Priest of the Romans in the Church of Christ, and so from below he ascended, on high. But Christ from Heaven descended, because he which was God, and Author of every Creature, became man; and he that was Lord of Lords, was made in the shape of a Servant. And although that in the Heavens the company of Angels Ministred unto him, he himself Ministred or served in Earth, that he might teach us Humility, by which a man ascendeth into Heaven, even as by pride a man goeth down into the bottomless Pit. This Beast hath two Horns most like a Lamb, because that he challengeth to himself both the Priestly and Kingly power above all other here in Earth. The Lamb, that is, Christ, is a King for ever upon the Kingly Seat of David, and he is a Priest for ever after the Order of Melchisedech; but his Kingdom is not of this World: but the Kingdom of this Beast is of this World. Because those that be under him fight for him. And as Jesus is Christ two manner of ways, because that Christus is as much to say as Unctus; he verily was anointed King, and anointed Priest: So this Beast saith, that he is chief King and Priest. Wherefore doth he call himself Christ? Because that Christ, knowing that afore, said; Many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ, and shall deceive many. And thus because that he is both King and Priest, he challengeth to himself the double Sword, that is, the corporal Sword and the spiritual Sword. The corporal Sword is in his right Hand, and his spiritual Sword is in his right Eye, by the Testimony of Zachery. But he speaketh subtilly like a Dragon, because that by the Testimony of Christ he shall deceive many, as the Apocalyps witnesseth. He did great wonders that also he might make more fire to come from Heaven into the Earth in the sight of men, that he might deceive those that dwell upon the Earth, because of the wonders, that are permitted him to do in the sight of the Beast, and he overcame the first Beast which ascended out of the Sea. For that Beast challenged unto himself Authority of Government of the whole World. He hath put to death and Tormented those that resist his Commandments, and would be honoured as a God upon the Earth. The Bishop of Rome saith that the whole World ought to be in subjection unto him; those that be disobedient unto his Commandments he putteth in prison, and to death if he can: If he cannot, he excommunicateth them, and commandeth them to be cast into the Devils Dungeon. But he that hath no power over the body, much less hath he power over the soul. And truly his excommunication, or the excommunication of any Priest under him, shall at that time little hurt him that is excommunicate, so that the person of him that is excommunicate be not first excommunicate of God through sin.

Jesus is Christ two manner of ways, as King and Priest.

The double Sword of the Pope.

And thus it seemeth a Troth unto me, that God thus turns their Blessings into Curses, because they give not due Glory unto his name. So when that they unjustly Excommunicate and Curse, he turneth their Cursings into Blessings. Also the Bishop of Rome doth make men to worship him as God, because that the special Sacrifice that God doth require of us, is to be obedient unto him in keeping of his Commandments. But now the Popes Commandments be commanded to be kept, and be kept in very Deed: but the Commandments of Christ are contemned and rejected. Thus sitteth the Bishop of Rome in the Temple of God, shewing himself as God, and extolleth himself above all that which is called God, or worshipped as God. But in his fall he shall be revealed, because that every Kingdom divided in it self shall be made desolate. He teaching a truth is the Head of the Church; but the Prophet teaching a lie is the Tail of the Dragon. He seducing the World shall be acknowledged to be the verity of the Doctrine of Christ; but after he is known, he shall be rejected and nought esteemed. He giveth to small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, Marks in their right Hands, and in their Foreheads; that no man should buy or sell, but those that shall have the Marks of the name of the Beast, or that look to have of him some recompence shall, mean, or great, or else the number of his name, which number is 300. The Pope saith, that in the Administration of every Sacrament he doth Imprint a certain Character or Mark into the soul of him that receiveth it. In Baptism he saith that he doth Imprint, into the soul of him that is Baptised, a Mark that cannot be wiped out, and so likewise in other Sacraments. And I know that in a Sacrament are two things, that is, the Sacramental Sign, and spiritual grace represented by the same Sign: the Sacramental Sign is given to Man of Man, but the spiritual grace is given of Christ.

The Bishop of Rome seeketh to be worshipped as God. The Commandments of the Pope more regarded than Christs.

In every Sacrament two things contained.

Wherefore, although a vicious or naughty Priest doth Baptise any Man, if he that is Baptised or his Parents (if he be a Child) do ask with lawful meaning Baptism, and do mean faithfully hereafter to observe the words of Baptism; he is as well Baptized, as if he were Baptized of never so vertuous a Priest. So also the sinner which with all his heart is sorry for his Sins, and doth ask faithfully mercy of God, is as well absolved of a vicious Priest, as of a vertuous. Because the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the World, wipeth away inwardly our sins by his Grace; because that he is the Bishop and Pastor of our Souls. All other Priests do outwardly work absolution, which know not for a certainty whether they have abtclved or not. So also is it in the other, because that the grace of the Sacrament is given of God, and the Sacramental sign, of man. In giving of Orders the chief Bishop doth imprint the corporal marks; but of the spiritual marks I know none; unless a man will say, that by receiving the Order he hath some belief that he may work some things pertaining to that Order, the which before the receiving of the Order he could not. But this one thing is certain, that none in the Church ought to sell spiritual Merchandize (of which things we have spoken before) unless he have the mark of the Beast. My counsel is, let the buyer beware of those marks; because that after the fall of Babylon, If any man hath worshipped the Beast and her Image, and hath received the mark upon his Forehead, and upon his Hand, he shall drink of the wine of Gods wrath, which is mixed with the wine in the Cup of his anger, and he shall be tormented in fire and brimstone in the sight of the holy Angels, and in the sight of the Lamb: and the smoke of their torments shall evermore ascend, although he look for a recompence, small, mean, great, of the Beast, or else the number of his Name. The Beast doubtless doth recompence his Friends with his small reward; that is, with great Gifts and Benefices corporal; with a mean reward, that is, with great spiritual Gifts, in authority of blessing, loosing, binding, praying, and exerciling other spiritual Works; and with his greatest reward, which after that they be dead, maketh them to be honoured in Earth among the Saints. The number of his name, according to the opinion of some men, is, Dux Cleri, the Captain of the Clergy, because by that name he is named, and maketh his name known, and that name is 666.

Covetous Emperors.

The rewards of the Beast.

The number the name of the Beast. Dux Cleri.

This is my opinion of the Beast ascending out of the Earth, and shall be, until such time as I shall be of the same Beast better instructed. And although that this Beast doth signifie the Roman Bishops; yet the other cruel Beast ascending out of the Sea, doth signifie the Roman Emperors. And although that the Dragon being a cruel Beast, and the false Prophet giving the mark, must be thrown into the lake of fire and brimstone to be tormented for ever; I would have no man to judge, but I leave such things altogether to the final Judgment of Christ to be determined. But Martin the Popes Confessor, which maketh the Chronicle of the Emperors and Popes, reciteth many Errors of the Popes, more horrible and abominable than of the Emperors. For he speaketh of the Idolatrous Popes, heretical, simoniacal, and Popes that were Murderers, that used Necromancy and Witchcraft, that were Fornicators, and defiled with all kind of Vice. But I have partly declared how that the Popes Law is contrary to Christs Law, and how that he saith, That he is the chief Vicar of Christ in Earth; and in his deeds is contrary to Christ, and doth forsake both his Doctrine and Life. I cannot see who else may be so well Antichrist, and a Seducer of the people. For there is not a greater Pestilence than a familiar enemy.

Mention pœnitentiæ. More wicked Popes than Emperors.

Matters of Idolatry.

As concerning Idols, and the worshipping of them, I think of them, as Moses, Solomon, Isaias, Jeremy, and the reſt of the Prophets did, which all ſpake againſt the making of Images, as alſo the worſhipping of Images. And faithful David, full of the Spirit of God, ſaith, Let all thoſe be confounded that worſhip Images, and that rejoyce in Idols. And again he ſaith, Let them be made like unto them that make them, and all ſuch as put their truſt in them. Wherefore I pray God that this evil come not upon me, which is the Curſe of God pronounced by David the Prophet. Nor will I be, by Gods Grace, either a maker, or elſe a worſhipper of Images.

Images. Oaths, how far they are tolerable.

As concerning Oaths, I believe and obey the Doctrine of the Almighty God, and my Maſter Jeſus Chriſt, which teacheth, That Chriſtian-men in affirmation of a truth ſhould paſs the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees of the Old Teſtament, or elſe he excludeth them from the Kingdom of Heaven. For he ſaith, Unleſs your righteouſneſs exceed the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees, ye cannot enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. And as concerning Oaths he ſaith, It hath been ſaid to them of old time, Thou ſhalt not forſwear thy ſelf, but ſhalt perform unto the Lord thoſe things which thou knoweſt. {KING Eliz. 2.} But I ſay unto you, Thou ſhalt not ſwear at all, neither by the Heaven, nor yet by the Earth, &c. But let your Communication be yea, yea, nay, nay; for whatſoever ſhall be more than this, proceedeth of evil. Therefore as the perfection of the ancient men of the Old Teſtament was, not to forſwear themſelves; ſo the perfection of Chriſtian men is, not to ſwear at all, becauſe they are ſo commanded of Chriſt, whoſe Commandment muſt in no caſe be broken, although that the City of Rome is contrary to this Doctrine of Chriſt, even as in many things ſhe is found contrary to her ſelf.

Whether Temporal goods may be taken away from Eccleſiaſtical Perſons offending.

As touching the taking away of Temporal goods, from thoſe that are Eccleſiaſtical Perſons offending habitualiter, by ſuch as are Temporal Lords, I will not affirm any thing to be lawful in this matter (as in other matters before) that is not agreeable to Charity: And that becauſe it is a hard matter for a man to take another mans goods from him without breaking of Charity; becauſe peradventure he that taketh away is the more moved to ſuch manner of taking away, by reaſon of the deſire he hath to thoſe goods, which he endeavoureth to take away: or elſe, becauſe of ſome diſpleaſure or hatred to the perſon, from whom he goeth about to take away thoſe goods, more than that he, from whom thoſe goods be taken, ſhould be amended. Therefore unleſs he that taketh away be only moved of Charity to the taking away of ſuch goods, I dare not affirm that ſuch taking is lawful. And if ſuch taking away proceed of Charity, I dare not judge it unlawful: becauſe that the Biſhop of Rome which received his Temporal Dominion of the Emperor, when the Emperor rebelled and was not obedient unto him, deprived him from his Temporal Juriſdictions: How much more then may Temporal Lords do the ſame, which have beſtowed upon them many Temporal Dominions and Lordſhips, only to the intent that they might the better intend to ſerve God, and keep his Commandments? Now if they perceive that they be againſt the Laws of God, and that they be over-buſily occupied about worldly matters: I cannot ſee but that they may well enough take from them thoſe Temporal Goods, which is to a good purpoſe they gave them. But if, in time to come after this, thoſe that be Temporal Lords ſhall take from Eccleſiaſtical perſons ſuch Temporalties: let him that deſireth to underſtand this, read the Prophet Ezekiel, in the Chapter of the Shepherds of Iſrael, which fed themſelves inſtead of their flock; and alſo let him read the Apocalyps of the fall of Babylon: Let him alſo read the Popes Decretals againſt Hereticks; and in thoſe he ſhall find, that the taking away of the Temporalties from the Clergy, ſhall come to paſs for the multitude of their ſins.

Popes take from Emperors, their Benefices, Temporal Dominion, when they offended: much more may Emperors take from Popes Temporal Dominion when they offend.

A Prophetic of Walter Brute, that Temporal goods ſhall be taken away from the Clergy for the multitude of their ſin

Thus reverend Father have I made mine Anſwer to the matter whereof I am accuſed: beſeeching you that as I have been obedient to your deſire, and that even as a Son, declaring unto you the ſecrets of my heart in plain words (although rudely) ſo I may know your opinion, and crave your fatherly Benevolence, that now your labour may be for my inſtruction and amendment, and not to accuſation and condemnation. For like as in the beginning I have promiſed you, if any man of what ſtate, ſect, or condition ſoever he be, can ſhew me any error in any of my writings by the Authority of holy Scripture, or by any probable reaſon grounded on the Scriptures; I will receive his Information willingly and humbly.

Walter Brute again commanded to appear.

After that all the foreſaid things were exhibited and given by the foreſaid Walter Brute, unto the foreſaid Biſhop of Hereford; he further appointed to the ſame Walter, the third day of the month of October, at Hereford, with the continuance of the days following to hear his opinion. Which third day now at hand, being Friday, in the year of our Lord God, 1393. the ſaid Walter Brute appeared before him, ſitting in Commiſſion in the Cathedral-Church of Hereford, at ſix a Clock, or thereabout; having for his Aſſiſtants in the ſame place, divers Prelates and Abbots, and twenty Bachelors of Divinity, whereof twelve were Monks, and two Doctors of the Law. Amongſt theſe was Nicholas Hereford accompanied with many other Prelates and worſhipful Men, and wiſe Graduates in ſundry faculties. Now was the foreſaid Walter appoſed of his Writings aforeſaid, and the Contents therein. Earneſt were they in picking out of thoſe Writings, his Hereſies, Biſhops and Abbots, with twenty Bachelors of Divinity, ten Monks, two Doctors of Law ſitting upon Walter Brute. Nicholas Hereford there alſo preſent.

{KING Eliz. 2.} ſies, and in ſhewing his Schiſms, ſundry Errors, and divers other things. Now, after that they had continued all that day, and the two days following (that is, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday) in their Informations and Examinations againſt the ſame Walter Brute; the ſame Walter Brute ſubmitted himſelf to the determination of the Church, and to the correction of the ſaid John Biſhop, as it appeareth word for word in a Scroul written in the Engliſh-Tongue: The tenour of which Scroul, is as followeth:

The writings of Walter Brute examined.

The tenour of the Submiſſion of Walter Brute

I Walter Brute ſubmit my ſelf principally to the Evangely of Jeſus Chriſt, and to the determination of holy Kirk, and to the general Councils of holy Kirk. And to the Sentence and determination of the four Doctors of holy Writ; that is, Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Jerome, and Gregory. And I meekly ſubmit me to your correction, as of ſubject ought to his Biſhop.

The ſubmiſſion of Walter Brute openly read at Hereford.

Which Scroul, as before is recited, in the Engliſh-Tongue, the foreſaid Walter Brute, read with a loud and intelligible Voice, at the Croſs in the Church-yard on Monday (that is to ſay, the ſixth of the ſaid month of October, before the Sermon made unto the people in preſence of the ſaid Biſhop of Hereford and other above written, as alſo other Barons, Knights, and Noblemen, and Clergy, and alſo a great multitude of people. After which reading of the Scroul, the foreſaid Thomas Crawley, Bachelor of Divinity, made a Sermon unto the people, and took for his Theme the words of the Apoſtle to the Romans, the eleventh Chapter, that is as followeth; Be not over-wiſe in your own conceits, but ſtand in fear, &c.

¶ Out of theſe Declarations and Writings of Walter Brute, the Biſhop with the Monks and Doctors above rehearſed, did gather and draw certain Articles, to the number of ſeven, which they ſent to the University of Cambridge to be confuted, unto two learned men, Maſter Colwill and Maſter Newton, Bachelors of Divinity. Which Maſter Colwill and Newton did both labour in the matter, to the uttermoſt of their cunning, in replying and anſwering to the ſaid 37 Articles.

Beſides them alſo, William Woodford a Frier (who wrote likewiſe againſt the Articles of Wickliff) labouring, in the ſame Cauſe made a ſolemn and a long tractation, compiling the Articles of the ſaid Brute, to the number of nine and twenty. All which Treatiſes as I with to come to the Readers hand, that the ſlendemeſs of them might be known; ſo it may happen percaſe, that the ſame being in my hand may hereafter be further publiſhed, with other like tractations more, as convenient time for the prolixity thereof may hereafter better ſerve than now.

What after this became to this Walter Brute, or what end he had, I find it not regiſtred: but like it is, that he for this time eſcaped. Certain other writings I find moreover, which albeit they bear no name of this Walter, nor of any certain Author; yet becauſe they are in the ſame Regiſter adjoyned to the Hiſtory of him, I thought therefore moſt fit here to be inſerted. Of the which one was a Letter ſent to Nicholas Hereford a little above ſpecified: who being at the firſt a great Follower of John Wickliff, as appeareth before, page 500. was now in the number of them which fate upon this Walter, as is in the Column above recorded. The Copy of this Letter bearing no name of any ſpecial Author, but only as ſent by a certain Lollard (as the Regiſter doth term him) is written in manner and form as followeth.

Here followeth the Copy of a Letter ſent to Maſter Nicholas Hereford, by a Lollard, as in the Regiſter it is ſaid.

A Letter ſent to Nicholas Hereford.

FOraſmuch as no man that putteth his hand to the Plough and looketh back is meet for the Kingdom of GOD, as our Saviour Chriſt ſaith: What marvel is it, although Maſter Nicholas Hereford, which at the firſt (by the Viſitation of the Spirit of God peradventure) put his hand; that is, gave his diligence unto the Plough; that is, to the ſturing of the Word of God and holy Scripture, as well in preaching as in doing good works, is now ſo blind and unſkilful to expound the Scripture, that he knoweth not what is underſtood by the Kingdom of Heaven? Truly it is no marvel, O thou that art Maſter of the Nicholaitans, which, like Nicholas the moſt falſe Deacon, haſt left or forſaken the infallible knowledge of the holy Scripture. For the true knowledge of the Theological verity is ſhut up as well from thee as from all the other Nicholaitans following thy conditions, foraſmuch as thou goeſt not in by the door to expound the ſame Evangelical verity. Therefore when thou diddſt receive thus other degy, firſt, the Phariſaical and hypocritical Woe (nothing at all to any purpoſe) thou ſhouldſt have ſaid juſtly in this ſort, both of thy ſelf, and other thy Followers and religious Antichrits: Woe be unto us Scribes and Phariſees, which ſhut up the Kingdom of Heaven; that is to ſay, the true Knowledge of the holy Scriptures, before men by our falſe Gloſſes and crooked Similitudes: and neither we our ſelves enter into the ſame Kingdom or Knowledge, nor ſuffer others to enter into it. Wherefore, it ſeemeth unto the faithful ſort, that wrongfully, falſly, and without any reverence, ye have expounded that Text of Gregory, 1. q. 1. that is to ſay, Quicunque ſtude, &c. For this is the true underſtanding of the ſame: Knowing firſt that there be ſome Prieſts after the living, and name only; and doth ſhew that this is true, that whoſoever ſtealeth to receive the holy Order by giving of money, he is not a Prieſt, Secundum nomen, &c nomine. But to ſay the truth, he deſireth to be called a Prieſt; that is, to be a Prieſt Secundum nomen tantum. And ſuch a Prieſt, which is a Prieſt in name only, is no Prieſt. No more than Saint Mary painted is Saint Mary: Nor a falſe Doctor a Doctor, but no Doctor: And a man painted is not a man, but no man. And thus ſuch a Prieſt in name only is not a Prieſt: Becauſe that all faithful men do firmly believe with Saint GREGORY, that no man buying the holy Orders, may then be called a Prieſt, as he ſaith, 1. q. 1. They that buy or ſell holy Orders can be no Prieſts. Wherepon is written, Anathema dandi, & Anathema accipiendi; that is, Simoniacal Hereſie. And it followeth, How therefore, if they be accurſed and not bleſſed, can they make others bleſſed? And when that they be not in the body of Chriſt, how can they either receive or deliver the Body of CHRIST? He that is accurſed, how can he bleſs? as though he would ſay, It is impoſſible. As Pope Urbanus ſaith, 1. q. 1. Siquis a Simoniacis, &c. Where he ſaith thus, They that willingly know and ſuffer themſelves to be conſecrated, may rather execrated, of thoſe that are infected with Simony; we judge that their Conſecration is altogether void. Alſo Pope Leo in 2. q. 1. ſaith in this wiſe, Grace, if it be not freely given and received, is not Grace. Spiritual Uſurers do not receive freely: Therefore, they receive not the ſpiritual Grace, which ſpecially worketh in the Eccleſiaſtical Orders. If they receive it not, they have it not: if they have it not freely, they cannot give it freely. And by that it is more clear than the light, that they which know ſo much, and receive Orders by ſpiritual Uſury of Simony, are neither Prieſts nor Deacons, neither after the manner nor character. For if ſuch character or mark were otherwiſe given in giving Orders, it were requiſite always that there ſhould be a certain Grace imprinted in the man; but there is no ſuch Grace given or imprinted, as afore is manifeſt. Therefore there is no character to be feined. Therefore ſuch character or mark abideth not in him, foraſmuch as he never had nor hath the ſame. And yet furthermore in the ſame place, What then do the ſimoniacal Prelates give? And he maketh anſwer, That even that which they have, as the ſpirit of Lying. How prove we this? Becauſe that if it be the ſpirit of verity, as the ſame verity doth teſtifie from whom it cometh, it is freely received. And it followeth for the whole purpoſe no doubt; it is convicted to be the ſpirit of lying, which is not freely received.

Nicolaitans.

Ex Leone Papa. 2. q. 1.

Brother in nature: In manners an Brother.

By this it appeareth manifeſtly to the faithful ſort, that thoſe which wittingly and ſimoniacally are made Prieſts, foraſmuch as they receive not the Character of the Lord, but only the Spirit of lying and the mark of Simon Magus, and of Judas the Traytor, they be not Prieſts neither according to the mark nor manner. Nor ſuch do no more make the Sacraments of Church, than other Lay-men may in the time of neceſſity, nor yet ſo truly, during their heretical naughtineſs. And yet indeed (Brother mine,) univoce natura, but yet æquivoce in moribus; I do not write thus ſharply unto you, through anger, or any unperfect hate, but through through the perfect hate of your horrible Hereſie, and denying the Faith of Chriſt, that I may ſay with David in the Pſalms, Perfecto odio oderam, &c. And I am very ſorry for you, that you, which in times have excellently well and fruitfully preached the Goſpel in the Pulpit, do now as well fail in the Congruity of the Latin-Tongue, as in the other Sciences naturall. For as it was heard, thrice in one Lecture you ſaid appetitis; that is to ſay, pronouncing the middle ſyllable long, which thing not only the Maſters, but alſo the young Scholars underſtood. And many other faults there were in Grammar, which for ſhame I dare not recite. I ſend unto you theſe five Concluſions.

Five Concluſions.

The firſt Concluſion, It is an infallible verity that the words of the four chief Doctors, expounding the holy Scripture according to the verity which the words do pretend, are to be holden and kept.

The ſecond, He which imporreth any equivocation out of any of the Doctors expounding, for the colouring of his Text, his equivocation is always to be left.

The third, No perverſion of any Reprobate is able to turn the Congregation of the Elect from the Faith, becauſe all things that ſhall come to paſs are eternally in God, deviſed and ordained for the beſt unto the Elect Chriſtians.

The fourth, Like as the myſtical Body of Chriſt is the Congregation of all the Elect; ſo Antichriſt myſtically is the Church of the wicked and of all the Reprobates.

The fifth, The Concluſions of Swinderby be agreeable to the Faith in every part.

* This Letter was thus ſubſcribed:
By the Spirit of God, ſometime viſiting you.

¶ Beſides this Epiſtle above prefixed, there is alſo found annexed with the ſame a device of another certain Letter counterfeited under the name of Lucifer Prince of Darkneſs; writing to the Pope and all Popiſh Prelates, perſecuting the true and right Church (with all might and main) to maintain their Pride and Domination in this earth, under a colourable pretence and viſor of the Catholick-Church and ſucceſſion Apoſtolical. Which Letter although it ſeemeth in ſome Authors to be aſcribed to Ockam, above mentioned; yet becauſe I find it in the ſame Regiſter of the Church of Hereford contained, and inſerted among the Tractations of Walter Brute, and deviſed (as the Regiſter ſaid) by the Lollards; I thought no meeter place than here to annex the ſame; the tenour whereof thus proceedeth in words as follow.

The device or counterfeit of a certain Letter fained under the name of Lucifer Prince of Darkneſs, writing to the perſecuting Prelates of the Popiſh Clergy.

The Epiſtle of Lucifer to the ground Prelates of the Popes Clergy.

LUcifer Prince of Darkneſs and profound heavineſs, Emperour of the myſteries of the Kingdom of Acheront, Captain of the Dungeon Erebus, King of Hell, and Controuler of the Infernal fire, To all our Children of Pride, and Companions of our Kingdom, and eſpecially to our Princes of the Church of this later age and time (of which our Adverſary Jeſus Chriſt, according to the Prophet, faith, I hate the Church or Congregation of the wicked) ſend greeting, and wiſh Proſperity to all that obey our Commandments; as alſo to thoſe that be obedient to the Laws of Satan already enacted, and that are diligent Obſervers of our Beheſts, and the Precepts of our Decree. Know ye that in times paſt certain Vicars or Vicegerents of Chriſt, following his ſteps in Miracles and Vertues, living and continuing in a beggerly life, converted (in a manner) the whole world from the Yoke of our Tyranny unto their Doctrine and manner of life, to the great deriſion and contempt of our Priſon-houſe and Kingdom, and alſo to the no little prejudice and hurt of our Juriſdiction and Authority, not fearing to hurt our fortified Power, and to offend the majeſty of our Eſtate. For then received we no Tributs of the world, neither did the miſerable ſort of common people ruſh at the Gates of our deep Dungeon as they were wont to do, with continual pealing and rapping, but then the eaſie, pleaſant, and broad way, which leadeth to death, lay ſtill without great noiſe of trampling Travellers, neither yet was trod with the feet of miſerable men. And when all our Courts were without Suiters, Hell then began to howl. And thus, continuing in great heavineſs and anguiſh, was robbed and ſpoiled. Which thing conſidered, the impatient rage of our ſtomach could no longer ſuffer, neither the ugly wretcheſs negligence of our great Captain-General could any longer endure. But we, ſeeking remedy for the time that ſhould come after, have provided us of a very trim ſhift. For in ſtead of theſe Apoſtles and other their Adherents which drew by the ſame line of theirs, as well in Manners as Doctrine, and are odious Enemies unto us. We have cauſed you to be their Succeſſors, and put you in their place, which be Prelates of the Church in theſe later times, by our great might and ſubtilty, as Chriſt hath ſaid of you: They have reigned, but not by me. Once we promiſed unto him all the Kingdoms of the world if he would fall down and worſhip us; but he would not, ſaying, My Kingdom is not of this world, and went his way when the multitude would have have made him a Temporal King. But to you truly which are fallen from the ſtate of Grace, and that ſerve us in the earth, is that my promiſe fulfilled: and by our means all terrene things which we have beſtowed upon you are under your Government. For he hath ſaid of us as ye know, The Prince of this world cometh, &c. and hath made us to Reign over all Children of unbelief. Therefore our Adverſaries before recited did patiently ſubmit themſelves unto the Princes of the world, and did teach that men ſhould do ſo, ſaying, Be ye ſubject to every Creature for Gods cauſe, whether it be to the King as moſt chief. And again, Obey ye them that are made Rulers over you, &c. For ſo their Maſter commanded them, ſaying, The Kings of the Heathen have Dominion over them, &c. But I think it long till we have poured our poiſon upon the earth, and therefore fill your ſelves full. And now be ye not unlike thoſe Fathers, but alſo contrary unto them in your life and conditions, and extol your ſelves above all other men. Neither do ye give to God that which belongeth to him, nor yet to Ceſar that which is his: but exerciſe you the power of both the Swords, according to our Decrees, making your ſelves doers in worldly matters, fighting in our quarrel, intangled with ſecular labours and buſineſs. And climb ye by little and little from the miſerable ſtate of Poverty unto the higheſt Seats of all Honours, and the moſt Princely places of Dignity by your deviſed practices, and falſe and deceitful wiles and ſubtilty; that is, by Hypocriſie, Flattery, Lying, Perjury, Treaſons, Deceits, Simony, and other greater wickedneſs than which our Infernal Furies may deviſe. For after that ye have by us been advanced thither where ye would be, yet that doth not ſuffice you, but, as greedy ſhavelings more hungry than ye were before, ye ſuppreſs the poor, ſcratch and rake together all that comes to hand, perverting and turning every thing topſieturvy; ſo ſwoln that ready ye are to burſt for pride, living like Lechers in all corporal delicateneſs, and by fraud directing all your doings. You challenge to your ſelves names of Honour in the earth, calling your ſelves Lords, Holy, yea and moſt holy perſons.

Thus, either by violence ye raven, or elſe by ambition, ſubtilly ye pilfer away, and wrongfully wreſt and by falſe Title poſſeſs thoſe Goods, which for the ſuſtentation of the poor Members of Chriſt (whom from our firſt fall we have hated) were beſtowed and given, conſuming them as ye your ſelves liſt, and therewith ye cheriſh and maintain an innumerable ſort of Whores, Strumpets, and Bawds, with whom ye ride pompouſly like mighty Princes, far otherwiſe going, than thoſe poor beggerly Prieſts of the Primitive-Church. For I would ye ſhould build your ſelves rich and gorgeous Palaces: ye fare like Princes, eating and drinking the moſt dainticſt meats, and pleaſanteſt wines that may be gotten; ye hoard and heap together an infinite deal of Treaſure, not like to him that ſaid, Gold and ſilver have I none; ye ſerve and fight for us according to your wages. O moſt acceptable Society or Fellowſhip, promiſed unto us by the Prophet, and of thoſe Fathers long ago reproved: Whilſt that Chriſt called thee The Synagogue of Satan, and likened thee to the mighty Whore which committed Fornication with the Kings of the Earth, the adulterous Spouſe of Chriſt, and of a chaſt perſon made a ſtrumpet.

KING Ric. 2.

a ſtrumpet. Thou haſt left thy firſt love and haſt cleaved unto us, O our beloved Babylon, O our Citizens, which from the tranſmigration of Jeruſalem come hither: we love you for your deſerts, we rejoyce over you which contemn the Laws of Simon Peter, and imbrace the Lawes of Simon Magus our Friend, and have them at your fingers ends, and exerciſe the ſame publickly, buying and ſelling ſpiritual things in the Church of God, and againſt the Commandment of God. Ye give Benefices and Honours by petition, or elſe for money; for favour, or elſe for filthy ſervice. And refuſing to admit thoſe that be worthy to Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, and preferring thoſe that are unworthy, you call unto the Inheritance of Gods Sanctuary, Bawds, Lyars, Flatterers, your Nephews, and your own Children, and to a childiſh Boy ye give many Prebends, the leaſt whereof ye deny to beſtow upon a poor good man: ye eſteem the perſon of a man, and receive gifts, ye regard money and have no regard of Souls. Ye have made the Houſe of God a Den of Thieves. All abuſe, all extortion is more exerciſed a hundred-fold in your Judgment-Seats, than with any ſecular Tyrant. Ye make Laws and keep not the ſame, and ye diſpence with your Diſpenſations as it pleaſeth you; you juſtifie the wicked for Rewards, and you take away the juſt mans deſert from him. And briefly ye perpetrate or commit all kind of miſchief, even as it is our will ye ſhould. And ye take much pain for lucres ſake in our ſervice, and eſpecially to deſtroy the Chriſtian Faith. For now the Lay-people are almoſt in doubt what they may believe, becauſe if ye preach any thing to them as ſome times (although it be but ſeldom ſeen, and that negligently enough, even as we would have it) yet notwithſtanding they believe you not, becauſe they ſee manifeſtly that ye do clean contrary to that ye ſay. Whereupon the common people, doing as ye do which have the Government of them, and ſhould be an example to them of well-doing; now many of them, leaning to your Rules, do run headlong into a whole Sea of Vices; and ſo continually a very great multitude flocketh at the ſtrong and well fenced Gates of our Dungeon. And doubtleſs ye ſend us ſo many day by day of every ſort and kind of people, that we ſhould not be able to entertain them, but that our inſatiable Chaos with her thouſand ravening jaws is ſufficient to devour an infinite number of Souls. And thus the Sovereignty of our Empire by you hath been reformed, and our intolerable loſs reſtored. Wherefore, moſt ſpecially we commend you, and give you moſt hearty thanks; exhorting you all that in any wiſe ye perſevere and continue, as hitherto ye have done: neither you ſlack henceforth your enterprize. For why? by your helps we purpoſe to bring the whole world again under our Power and Dominion. Over and beſides this, we commit unto you no ſmall Authority, to ſupply our places in the betraying of your Brethren; and we make and ordain you our Vicars, and the Miniſters of Antichriſt our Son, now hard at hand, for whom ye have made a very trim way and paſſage. Furthermore, we conſel you which occupy the higheſt Rooms of all other, that you work ſubtilly, and that ye faindedly procure Peace between the Princes of the world, and that ye cheriſh and preſerve dear Cauſes of diſcord. And like as creftily ye have deſtroyed and ſubverted the Roman Empire, ſo ſuffer ye no Kingdom to be overmuch inlarged or inriched by tranquility and peace; leſt perhaps in ſo great tranquility (all deſire of peace ſet aſide) they diſpoſe themſelves to view and conſider your moſt wicked works, ſuppreſſing on every ſide your Eſtate; and from your Treaſures take away ſuch ſubſtance, as we have cauſed to be reſerved and kept in your hands, until the coming of our welbeloved Son Antichriſt. We would ye ſhould do our Commendations to our entirely beloved Daughters, Pride, Deceit, Wrath, Avarice, Bellycheer, and Lechery, and to all other my Daughters; and ſpecially to lade. Simony which hath made you men, and inriched you, and hath given you ſuck with her own breaſts, and weaned you, and therefore in no wiſe ſee that you call her ſin. And be ye lofty and proud, becauſe that the moſt high dignity of your Eſtate doth require ſuch Magnificence. And alſo be ye covetous, for whatſoever ye get and gather into your Fardel, it is for Saint Peter, for the peace of the Church, and for the defence of your Patrimony and the Crucifix; and therefore ye may lawfully do it. Ye may promote your Cardinals to the higheſt Seat of Dignities without any let in all the world, in ſtopping the mouth of our Adverſary Jeſus Chriſt, and alledging again, that he preferred his Kinſfolks (being but of poor and baſe degree) unto the Apoſtleſhip; but do not you ſo, but rather call, as ye do, thoſe that live in Arrogancy, in haughtineſs of mind, and filthy Lechery, unto the ſtate of wealthy riches and pride; and thoſe Rewards and Promotions, which the Followers of Chriſt forſook, do ye diſtribute unto your Friends. Therefore as ye ſhall have better underſtanding, prepare ye Vices cloked under the ſimilitude of Vertues. Alledge for your ſelves the gloſſes of the holy Scripture, and wreſt them directly to ſerve for your purpoſe. And if any man preach or teach otherwiſe than ye will, oppreſs ye them violently with the Sentence of Excommunication, and by your Cenſures heaped one upon another, by the conſent of your Brethren, let him be condemned as an Heretick, and let him be kept in moſt ſtrait priſon, and there tormented till he die, for a terrible example to all ſuch as confeſs Chriſt. And ſetting all favour apart, caſt him out of your Temple, leſt peradventure the ingrafted word may ſave by your Souls, which word I do abhor as I do the Souls of other faithful men. And do your endeavour, that ye may deſerve to have the place which we have prepared for you, under the moſt wicked foundation of our dwelling-place. Fare ye well, with ſuch Felicity as we deſire and intend finally to reward and recompence you with.

Given at the center of the Earth, in that our dark place, where all the rabblement of Devils were preſent, ſpecially for this purpoſe called unto our moſt dolorous Conſiſtory, under the Character of our terrible Seal, for the confirmation of the premiſſes.

Ex Regiſtro Herefordenſi ad verbum.

Who was the true Author of this Poeſie or Epiſtle above written, it is not evidently known; neither doth it greatly skill. The matter being well conſidered on their part, which here be noted, may miniſter unto them ſufficient occaſion of wholſome Admonition, either to remember themſelves what is amiſs, or to bethink with themſelves what is to be amended. Divers other writings of like argument, both before and ſince, have been deviſed: as one bearing the Title, Luciferi ad malos Principes Eccleſiaſticos, imprinted firſt at Paris in Latin. And under the writing thereof, bearing this date, Anno a Palatii noſtri fractione, conſortiumque noſtrorum ſubtractione, 1351. Which if ye count from the Paſſion of the Lord, reacheth well to the time of Wickliff, 1385; which was above ſix years before the examination of this Walter Brute.

There is alſo another Epiſtle of Lucifer Prince of Darkneſs, ad Prælatos, mentioned in the Epiſtle of the School of Prague, to the Univerſity of Oxford, ſet forth by Hadericus Hutterus, about the year of our Lord (as is there dated) 1370. which ſeemeth to be written before this Epiſtle.

Epiſt. Lucif. ad Prælatos.

Alſo Vincentius in Speculo Hiſt. lib. 25. cap. 89. inſerteth like mention of a Letter of the Fiends Infernal unto the Clergy-men, as in a Viſion repreſented, before 400 years. In which the Devils gave thanks to the Spiritual-men, for that by their ſilence and not preaching the Goſpel, they ſent infinite Souls to Hell, &c.

Vincent. Hiſt. lib. 29. c. 89.

Divers other Letters alſo of like device have been written, and alſo recorded in Authors. Whereunto may be added, that one, Jacobus Garthuſenſis, writing to the Biſhop of Wormace, alledged out of the Prophetie of Hildegardis, in theſe words, Ideo & Diabolus in ſemetipſo de nobis Sacerdotibus ait; Eſcas epulantium, convivia & omnes voluptates in iſtis invenio; ſed & oculi, & venter meus, & venæ meæ, de ſtumis illorum plenæ ſunt, & ubera mea plena ſunt divitiis illorum, &c. i. e. Therefore, ſaith he, the Devil may ſay of you Prieſts in himſelf: The meats of banquetting-Dithes, and Feaſts of all kind of pleaſure, I find in theſe men; yea alſo mine Eyes, mine Ears, my Belly, and all my Veins be full of their frothing, and my Breaſts be full ſtuffed with their riches, &c. Furthermore, ſaith he, they labour every day to riſe up higher with Lucifer, but every day they fall with him more deeply.

Jacobus Garthuſenſis in Hildegardis.

Hereunto alſo pertaineth a ſtory written, and commonly found in many old written Books: In the year of our Lord, 1228. at Paris in a Synod of the Clergy, there

The Devil giveth thanks to Clergy-men there was one appointed to make a Sermon. Who being much careful in his mind, and solicitous what to say, the Devil came to him, and asking him, Why he was so careful for his matter what he should preach to the Clergy; say thus, quoth he, The Princes of Hell salute you, O you Princes of the Church, and gladly give you thanks, because through your default and negligence it cometh to pass, that all Souls go down to Hell. Adding moreover, That he was also enforced by the Commandment of God to declare the same, yea and that a certain Token moreover was given to the said Clerk for a sign, whereby the Synod might evidently see that he did not lye. Ex Catal. Ilyr. fol. 546.

The silence of Priests in not preaching the Gospel, damneth many a Soul.

The Bull of Pope Boniface the Ninth, against the Lollards.

The Popes Letter to the Bishop of Hereford.

BOnifacius Bishop, Servant of the Servants of God, To the reverend Brother, John Bishop of Hereford sendeth greeting and Apostolical Benediction. We mean to write unto our wellbeloved Son in Christ (Richard the renowned King of England) in form inclosed within these presents. Therefore we will and command your Brotherhood, that as much as ye may ye study and endeavour your self to exhort and induce the same King to do those things which we have written unto him, as it is said before. And notwithstanding that now many a day you ought to have done it of your self, and not to look that we should persuade you to that effect by us written; you may proceed as well by our Authority, as by your own, forasmuch as it was given you before: that hereafter we may know effectually by your diligence, what zeal your devotion beareth unto the Catholick Faith, and to the conserving of the Ecclesiastical Honour, and also to the execution of your Pastoral Office.

Given at Rome at S. Peters the 15th Kalends of October, the sixth year of our Bishop-like Dignity.

The tenour of the Bull, to the renowned Prince, Richard, by the Grace of God, King of England and of France, whereof mention is made above, as followeth, and is thus much in effect.

The Popes wilful Bull let loose against the Servants of Christ.

TO our wellbeloved Son in Christ, Richard the noble King of England, we send greeting, &c. It grieveth us from the bottom of our hearts, and our holy Mother the Church in all places through Christendom lamenteth. We understand that there be certain Heresies sprung, and do without any condign restraint range at their own liberty, to the seducing of the faithful people, and do every day with overmuch liberty enlarge their undiscreet bounds. But how much the more carefully we labour for the preservation both of you and your famous Kingdom, and also the sincerity of the Faith, and do with much more ardent desire covet that the prosperous state of the same should be preserved and inlarged; the sting of greater sorrow doth so much the more penetrate and molest us, for as much as we see (alas the while) in our time, and under the regal presidence of your most Christian Government, a certain crafty and hairbrain Sect of false Christians, in the same your Kingdom to grow and increase; which call themselves, The poor men of the treasury of Christ and his Disciples, and whom the common people by a more founder name call Lollards (as a man would say, wilberel Darrel) according as their sins require; and perceive that they may wax strong, and as it were prevail against the Dioceſans of some places, and other Governors, as they meet together, not courageously addressing themselves against them as they ought to do (whereof chiefly and not undeservedly I give them admonition) for that they take thereby the more bolder presumption and stomach among the unlearned people. And forasmuch as those whom we cannot call men, but the damnable shadows or ghosts of men, do rise up against the sound Faith, and holy universal Church of Rome; and that very many of them being indifferently learned, which (to the confusion and eternal damnation of some of them) they got sitting upon their Mothers lap the said Church of Rome, do rise up or inveigh against the determination of the holy Fathers, with too much presumptuous boldness, to the subversion of the whole Ecclesiastical Order and Estate; and have not been afraid, nor are yet afraid, publickly to preach very many erroneous, detestable, and heretical Articles, for that they are not put to silence, reproved, driven out, vouted out, or otherwise punished by any that hath authority and the fear and love of God. And also they are not afraid openly to write the same Articles, and so being written to deliver them to your Kingly Parliament, and obstinately to affirm the same. The venemous and disdainful recital of which Articles, upon good advisement, at this present we pass over, lest the sufferance of such sensuality might fortune to renew the wound that reason may heal. Yet notwithstanding, lest so great and contagious an evil should escape unpunished, and that without deserved vexation; and also that it might not get more heart, and wax more strong, We therefore (according to that our office and duty is, where is such negligence and sluggishness of our Prelates being present where this thing is) do commit and give in commandment to our reverend Brethren, Canterbury and York Archbishops, by other our Letters; that they stand up in the power of God against this pestilent and contagious Sect, and that they lively persecute the same in form of Law; root out and destroy these, that advisedly and obstinately refuse to withdraw their foot from the same stumbling-block, restraint to the contrary notwithstanding. But because the assistance, counsel, favour, and aid of your Kingly Estate and Highness are requisite to the execution of the premisses; we require, exhort, and beseech the same your Princely highness by the bowels of the mercy of Jesus Christ, by his holy Faith, by your own Salvation, by the benefit that to all men is common, and by the prosperity assured to every man and woman, that not only your Kingly severity may readily shew, and cause to be shewed unto our Archbishops and their Commissaries (in this behalf requiring the foresaid due execution) convenient aid and favour, as otherwise also to cause them to be assisted: but that also you will enjoyn your Magistrates and Justices of Assise and Peace, more straitly, that of their own good wills they execute the authority committed unto them, with all severity against such damned men, according as they are bound by the Office which they are put in trust with; against those, I mean, which have determined obstinately to defile themselves in their malice and sins, those to expel, banish, and imprison, and there so long to keep them, till condign Sentence shall pronounce them worthy to suffer punishment. For your Kingly wisdom seeth that such as they be do not only deceive poor simple Souls (or at the least do what they can to deceive them) but also bring their bodies to destruction, and further prepare confusion and ruinous fall unto their Temporal Lords. Go too therefore, my sweet Son, and endeavour your self to work so in this matter, as undoubtedly we trust you will: that as this Firebrand (burning and flaming evermore) began under your Presidence or Government: so under your severe judgment and vertuous diligence, might, favour, and aid, there may not one spark remain bid under the ashes, but that it be utterly extinguished, and speedily put out.

The Kings Commission.

RIchard by the Grace of God, King of England, and of France, and Lord of Ireland, To all those unto whom these present Letters shall come, greeting. Know ye, that whereas lately at the instance of the reverend Father, William Archbishop of Canterbury, Metropolitan of all England, and Legate of the Apostolical See, We for the redress and amendment of all those which would obstinately preach or maintain, publickly or privily, any Conclusions of the holy Scripture, repugnant to the determination of our holy Mother the Church, and notoriously redounding to the subversion of the Catholick Faith, or containing any Heresie or Error, within the Province or Bishoprick of Canterbury, have by our special Letters Patents, in the zeal of the Faith, given Authority and Licence unto the foresaid Archbishop, and to all and singular his Suffragans, to arrest all and every of them that will preach or maintain any such Conclusions,

{KING} Ric. 2.

Conclusions, wheresoever they may be found, and to commit them either to their own Prisons, or any other at their own pleasure, and to keep them in the same, until they repent them of the errors and pravities of those Heresies; or till that, of such manner of arrest, by us or by our Council it should be otherwise determined; that is to say, to every one of them and their Ministers throughout their Cities and Dioceſs. And now the reverend Father in God, John Bishop of Hereford, hath for a certainty informed us; that although the same Bishop hath according to justice convinced a certain Fellow named William Swinderby, pretending himself to be a Chaplain, and one Stephen Bell, a learned man, and hath pronounced them Hereticks, and Excommunicate, and false Informers among the common people, and hath declared the same by the definitive Sentence of the aforesaid Bishop, for that they have presumed to affirm and preach openly, in divers places within the Dioceſs of Hereford, many Conclusions or naughty Opinions notoriously redounding to the subversion of the Catholick found Faith, and tranquility of our Kingdom: The same Bishop notwithstanding, neither by the Ecclesiastical Censures, neither by the force and strength of our Commission, was able to revoke the foresaid William and Stephen, nor yet to bridle the malice and indurate contumacy of them; for that they, after that they were upon such heretical pravity convicted by the same Bishop (to the intent they might delude his judgment and justice) conveighed themselves by and by unto the borders of Wales, with such as were their Fautors and Accomplices, keeping themselves close, unto whom the force of our said Letters doth in no wise extend. Wherupon the said Bishop hath made supplication unto us, that we will vouchsafe to provide a sufficient remedy in that behalf. We therefore, which always (by the help of Almighty God) are Defenders of the Faith, willing to withstand such presumptuous and perverse Enterprizes by the most safe way and means we may, give and commit full power and authority to the foresaid Bishop and to his Ministers, by the tenour of these presents, to arrest or take, or cause to be arrested or taken, the foresaid William and Stephen, in any place within the City and Dioceſs of Hereford and our Dominion of Wales, with all the speed that may be; and to commit them either to our prison, or else to the prison of the same Bishop, or any other prison at their pleasure, if such need be, and there to keep them safe. And afterwards, unless they will obey the commandments of the Church, with diligence to bring them before us and our Council, or else cause them to be brought; that we may determine for their further punishment, as we shall think it requisite and convenient to be done by the advice of our Council, for the defence and preservation of the Catholick Faith. And that the foresaid William and Stephen, being succoured by the aid of their Fautors or Favourers, should not be able to fly or escape to their accustomed haunting holes, and that the sharpness of their pains so aggravated, may give them sufficient cause to return to the lap again of their holy Mother the Church; we straitly charge and command all and singular our Sheriffs, Bailiffs, Barons, and all other our Officers in the City and Dioceſs of Hereford, and in any other places being within our Dominion of Wales, by the tenour of these presents; that from time to time (where they think it most meet) they cause it openly to be proclaimed in our Name, that none of what state, degree, preheminence, kind, or other condition he shall be, do cherish openly or secretly the foresaid William and Stephen, until the time that they repent them of their Heresies and Errors, and shall be reconciled unto the holy Church of God: Neither that any person or persons, be Believers, Favourers, or Receivers, Defenders, or in any case wittingly Instructors of the said William or Stephen, or any other of the residue of the Hereticks that are to be convinced, upon the forfeiture of all that ever they have. And that also they giving their attendance be obedient and answerable to the foresaid Bishop and his Deputies in this behalf, for the execution of the premisses: and that they certifie us and our Council distinctly and plainly, from time to time, of the names of all and singular persons, which shall fortune to be found culpable in this behalf, under their Seals. In witness whereof, we have caused these our Letters Patents to be made.

Another Letter of the said King against Walter Brute.

Another Letter of King Richard the 2. against Walter Brute.

RIchard by the Grace of God King of England, and of France, and Lord of Ireland, to his beloved and faithful John Chaundos Knight, John Eynsore Knight, Renold de la Bere Knight, Walter Devereux Knight, Thomas de la Bare Knight, William Lucy Knight, Leonard Hakeluite Knight, and to the Mayor of the City of Hereford, to Thomas Oldcastle, Richard Nath, Roger Wygmore, Thomas Waylwayne, John Skydmore, John Up-Harry, Henry Morton, and to the Sheriff of Hereford, sendeth Salutations.

Walter Brute.

Forasmuch as it is advertised us, that one Walter Brute, and other such Children of Iniquity, have damnably holden, affirmed, and preached, certain Articles and Conclusions, being notoriously repugnant against the holy Scripture (of the which some of them are Heresies, and the rest as errors are finally by the Church condemned,) and that in divers places within the Dioceſs of Hereford, and parts near adjoyning, both privily, openly, and obstinately; which thing we perceive not only to redound to the subversion (in a manner) of the Catholick Faith, which as well we as other Catholick Princes ought of duty to maintain, but also to forewarn us of the subversion of our faithful Dioceſans; And that the said Bishop, upon the good deliberation and advisement of a great number of Doctors in Divinity, and other learned and skilful men in the Scriptures, of special devotion, according to his bounden duty, purposed to begin and make divers and sundry Processes by Law to be sent unto the foresaid Walter and his Accomplices to appear personally before him and other the Doctors aforesaid in the Cathedral-Church of Hereford, the morrow after the translation of S. Thomas of Hereford next ensuing, and to proceed in the same place against the same Walter, in the foresaid Articles and Conclusions, for the amendment of his Soul: and that they now afresh (because that the said Walter and others of their Retinue, clearing and confederating with him, might not suffer condign pains according to their demerits) endeavour themselves to make void and frustrate the said godly purpose of the same Bishop, in such correction and execution as should have been done, and with force do resist and let the same with all the power they may, to the great contempt of us and of our Crown, and to the breaking and hurting of our peace, and pernicious example of others: we do appoint you, and every of you, immediately as soon as this our Commission shall be delivered unto you, in our behalf and name, to make open Proclamation in the Dioceſs and parts aforesaid, where ye shall think it most meet and convenient: That no man be so hardy henceforth, of what state or condition soever he shall be, within the Dioceſs and parts aforesaid, upon pain of forfeiture of all that ever he hath, to make or levy any Conventicles, Assemblies, or Confederacies, by any colour; or that they presume to attempt or procure any other thing, whereby our peace may be hurt or broken, or that the same Bishops and Doctors aforesaid may be by any means molested or let in the execution of such correction as is to be done, according to the Canonical Sanctions; and to arrest all those which ye shall find, or take offending in this behalf, or that keep themselves in any such Conventicles; And that they, being committed to prison, be there kept, till you shall have other Commandment from us and from our Council for their deliverance; and that ye diligently and plainly certifie us, and our said Council, of all your doing in this behalf under your Seals, or else the Seals of some of you. And therefore we straitly charge and command you, and every of you, that ye diligently attend upon the premisses, and that in your deeds ye execute the same with all diligence and careful indeavour in the form and manner aforesaid. And further we give strait charge and commandment to all and singular Sheriffs, Majors, Bailiffs, Constables, and other our faithful Subjects, by the tenour of these presents; that they be attending upon you, counselling and aiding you and every of you, as it meet and convenient in the doing and execution of the premisses. In witness whereof, we have caused these our Letters Patents to be made.

By the same King and Council.

Thus

King Richard fet against the Gospellers by the Archbishop and the Prelates.

Thus King Richard by the setting on of W. Courtney, Archbishop of Canterbury, and his Fellows taking part with the Pope and Romish Prelates, waxed somewhat strait and hard to the poor Christians of the contrary side, of Wickliff, as by these Letters above prefixed may appear. Albeit, during all the life of the said King I find of none expreſly by name that ſuffered burning. Notwithſtanding, ſome there were which by the foreſaid Archbiſhop W. Courtney, and other Biſhops, had been condemned, and divers alſo abjured, and did Penance as well in other places, as chiefly about the Town of Leiceſter, as followeth here to be declared out of the Archbiſhops Regiſter and Records.

Ex Regiſt. W. Courtney, ſpecia. Cant.

At what time the ſaid Archbiſhop William Courtney was in his Viſitation at the Town of Leiceſter, certain there were accuſed and detected to him, by the Monks and other Priests in the ſaid Town. The names of which perſons there detected were, one Roger Dexter, Nicholas Taylor, Richard Wagſtaff, Michael Scrivener, William Smith, John Henry, William Parchmentar, and Roger Goldſmith, Inhabitants of the ſame Town of Leiceſter. Theſe with other more were denounced to the Archbiſhop for holding the opinion of the Sacrament of the Altar, of auricular Confeſſion, and other Sacraments, contrary to that which the Church of Rome doth preach and obſerve. All which parties above named, and many other more, whoſe names are not known, did hold theſe Hereſies and Errors here under-written, and are of the Romiſh-Church condemned.

Roger Dexter, Nicholas Taylor, Richard Wagſtaff, Michael Scrivener, William Smith, John Henry, William Parchmenter, Roger Goldſmith accuſed.

1. That the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Conſecration, there remaineth the Body of Chriſt with the material Bread.

2. That Images ought not to be worſhipped in any caſe, and that no man ought to ſet any Candle before them.

3. That no Croſs ought to be worſhipped.

4. The Maſſes and Mattens ought not with an high and loud voice to be ſaid in the Church.

5. Item, That no Curate or Prieſt, taken in any Crime can Conſecrate, hear Confeſſions, or miniſter any of the Sacraments of the Church.

6. That the Pope and all Prelates of the Church cannot bind any man with the Sentence of Excommunication, unleſs they know him to be firſt Excommunicated of God.

7. That no Prelate of the Church can grant any Pardons.

8. That every Lay-man may in every place preach and teach the Goſpel.

9. That it is ſin to give any Alms or Charity to the Friers, Preachers, Minorites, Auguſtines, or Carmelites.

10. That no Oblation ought to be uſed at the Funerals of the dead.

11. That it is not neceſſary to make confeſſion of our ſins to the Prieſt.

12. That every good man, although he be unlearned is a Prieſt.

Roger, Nicholas, Richard, Michael, William and Roger accuſed with Book, Bell, and Candle.

Theſe Articles they taught, preached, and affirmed manifeſtly in the Town of Leiceſter, and other places adjoyning. Whereupon the ſaid Archbiſhop moniſhed the ſaid Roger and Nicholas, with the reſt, on the next day to make anſwer unto him in the ſaid Monaſtery to the foreſaid Articles. But the foreſaid Roger and Nicholas, with the reſt, hid themſelves out of the way, and appeared not. Whereupon the Archbiſhop upon Allhallow-day, being the firſt day of November, celebrating the high Maſs at the high Altar in the ſaid Monaſtery, being attired in his Pontificalibus, denounced the ſaid parties with all their Adherents, Fautors, Favourers, and Counſellers, excommunicate and accurſed, which either held, taught or maintained the foreſaid Concluſions hereſical and erroneous, and that in ſolemn wiſe, by ringing the Bells, lighting the Candles, and putting out the ſame again, and throwing them down to the ground, with other circumſtances thereunto belonging. Upon the morrow after (being All-Soulne-day) he ſent for all the Curates and other Lay-men of the Town of Leiceſter, to inquire more diligently of the verity of ſuch matter as they knew, and were able to ſay againſt any perſons whatſoever, concerning the foreſaid Articles; as alſo againſt the parties before named and ſpecified upon their Oaths, denouncing every one of them ſeverally by their names to be excommunicated and accurſed; and cauſed them alſo in divers Pariſh Churches in Leiceſter alſo to be excommunicate. And further the ſaid Archbiſhop interdicted the whole Town of Leiceſter, and all the Churches in the ſame, ſo long as any of the foreſaid excommunicate perſons ſhould remain, or be within the ſame, and till that all the Lollards of the Town ſhould return and amend from ſuch Hereſies and Errors, obtaining at the ſaid Archbiſhop his hands the benefit of abſolution.

The whole Town of Leiceſter interdicted.

At length it was declared and ſhewed to the ſaid Archbiſhop, that there was a certain Anchoreſs, whoſe name was Matilde, incloſed within the Church-yard of Saint Peters Church of the ſaid Town of Leiceſter, infected (as they ſaid) with the peſtiferous contagion of the foreſaid Hereticks and Lollards: whereupon, after that the ſaid Archbiſhop had examined the foreſaid Matilde, touching the foreſaid Concluſions, Hereſies, and Errors, and found her not to anſwer plainly and directly to the ſame, but ſophiſtically and ſubtilly; he gave and affigned unto her a day peremptory, perſonally to appear before him in the Monaſtery of Saint James at Northampton, more fully to anſwer to the ſaid Articles, Hereſies, and Errors, which was the ſixth day of the ſaid month of November; commanding the Abbot of the Monaſtery of Pratis aforeſaid, that the door of the Recluſe, in which the ſaid Matilde was, ſhould be opened, and that till his return he ſhould cauſe her to be put in ſafe Cuſtody. That done, he ſent forth his Mandate againſt the Lollards, under this form:

Matilde, an Anchoreſs, cited to appear.

William by the permiſſion of God, &c. To his well-beloved Sons, the Mayor and Baliffs of the Town of Leiceſter Dioceſs, greeting. We have lately received the Kings Letters, graciouſly granted us for the defence of the Catholick Faith, in theſe words following, Richard by the Grace of God, King of England and of France, &c. We on the behalf of our holy Mother the Church, by the Kings Authority aforeſaid, do require you, that you cauſe the ſame Richard, William, Roger, and the reſt, to be arreſted, and ſent unto us; that they with their pernicious Doctrine do not infect the people of God, &c. Given under our Seal, &c.

The Kings proceſs ſent by the Biſhop to arreſt the eight aforenamed.

By another Inſtrument alſo in the ſame Regiſter is mention made of one Margarite Caily Nun, which forſaking her Order was by the ſaid Archbiſhop conſtrained, againſt her will, again to enter the ſame, as by this Inſtrument here-under enſuing may appear.

Margaret Caily, a Nun, conſtrained againſt her will to take again her habit.

William by the Grace of God, &c. To our reverend Brother of God, John, by the Grace of God Biſhop of Ely, greeting, &c. In the Viſitation of our Dioceſs of Lincoln according to our Office amongſt other Enormities worthy Reformation, we found one Sheep out of our Fold ſtrayed, and amongſt the Bryers tangled; to wit, Margaret Caily, Nun profeſſed, in the Monaſtery of S. Radegond within your Dioceſs: who caſting off the habit of her Religion, was found in ſecular attire, many years being an Apoſtata, and leading a diſſolute life. And leſt her blood ſhould be required at our hands, we have cauſed her to be taken and brought unto you, being her Paſtor; and ſtraightly injoyning you, by theſe preſents we do command, that you admit the ſame Margaret again into her foreſaid Monaſtery (although returned againſt her will) or elſe into ſome other place, where for her Souls health you ſhall think moſt convenient; and that from henceforth ſhe be ſafely kept, as in the ſtrait Examination of the ſame you will yield an account. Given under our Seal, &c.

Matilde recanteth.

By ſundry other Inſtruments alſo in the ſame Regiſter recorded I find, that the foreſaid Matilde the Anchoreſs, upon the ſtrait examination and handling of the foreſaid Archbiſhop, before whom peremptorily ſhe was injoyned to appear, and till that day of appearance taken out of the Recluſe, and committed to ſafe Cuſtody, as you heard, retracted and recanted her foreſaid Articles and Opinions. For the which ſhe, being injoyned forty days Penance, was again {KING} {Ric. 2.} again admitted into her foreſaid recluſe in Leiceſter. The Biſhops Letter to the Magiſtrates of the Town thus beginneth: Willielmus permiſſione divina, &c. Dilectis filiis, &c.

Will. Smith, Roger Dexter, and Alice his Wife abjure.

Alſo by another Letter of the foreſaid Archbiſhop to the Dean of the Cathedral Church of our Lady of Leiceſter being regiſtred, I find that of the number of thoſe eight perſons before recited, whom the Archbiſhop himſelf at high Maſs did in his Pontificalibus ſo ſolemnly curſe with Book, Bell, and Candle: after certain proceſs being ſent out againſt them, or elſe in the mean time they being apprehended and taken, two of them recanted their opinions; to wit, William Smith, and Roger Dexter. But in the mean time Alice the wife of the ſaid Roger Dexter, taking hold of the foreſaid Articles with her Huſband alſo, together with the ſaid William Smith, abjured the ſame. For theſe be the words of the inſtrument: Subſequenter vero præfati Willielmus, Rogerus, & Alicia reatus ſuos reſcientes, ſe noſtro conſpectu præſentarunt, &c. Notwithſtanding, whether they preſented themſelves willingly, or elſe were brought againſt their wills (as moſt like it was) hard penance was enjoyned them before they were abſolved. Theſe be the words of the Inſtrument.

Sanƈta mater Eccleſia, &c. i.e. Seeing our Holy Mother the Church denieth not her Lap to any penitent child returning to the unity of her, but rather proſereth to them the ſame: We therefore do receive again the ſaid William, Roger and Alice to Grace. And further have cauſed them to abjure all and ſingular the foreſaid Articles and opinions, before they received of us the benefit of Abſolution, and were looſed from the ſentence of Excommunication, wherein they were ſnarled, injoyning unto them penance, according to the quantity of the crime, in form as followeth: that is to ſay, That the Sunday next after their returning to their proper goods, they the ſaid William, Roger, and Alice, holding every of them an Image of the Crucifix in their hands, and in their left hands every one of them a Taper of Wax, weighing half a pound weight, in their ſhirts (having none other Apparel upon them) do go before the Croſs three times, during the Proceſſion of the Cathedral Church of our Lady of Leiceſter; that is to ſay, in the beginning of the Proceſſion, in the middle of the Proceſſion, and in the later end of the Proceſſion; to the honour of him that was Crucified, in the memorial of his Paſſion, and to the honour of the Virgin his Mother; who alſo devoutly bowing their knees and kneeling, ſhall kiſs the ſame Crucifix, ſo held in their hands. And ſo with the ſame Proceſſion they entring again into the Church, ſhall ſtand during all the time of the holy Maſs, before the Image of the Croſs, with their Tapers and Croſſes in their hands. And when the Maſs is ended, the ſaid William, Roger, and Alice, ſhall offer to him that celebrated that day the Maſs. Then upon the Saturday next enſuing, the ſaid William, Roger, and Alice, ſhall in the full and publick Market, within the Town of Leiceſter, ſtand in like manner in their ſhirts, without any more clothes upon their bodies, holding the foreſaid Croſſes in their right hands; which Croſſes three times they ſhall (during the Market) devoutly kiſs reverently kneeling upon their knees; that is, in the beginning of the Market, in the middle of the Market, and in the end of the Market. And the ſaid William for that he ſomewhat underſtandeth the Latin Tongue) ſhall ſay this Antheme with the Collect, Sanƈta Katharinas and the foreſaid Roger and Alice, being unlearned, ſhall ſay devoutly a Pater Noſter, and an Ave Maria. And thirdly, the Sunday next immediately after the ſame, the ſaid William, Roger, and Alice, in their Pariſh-Church of the ſaid Town of Leiceſter ſhall ſtand and do, as upon the Sunday before they ſtood and did in the Cathedral Church of our Lady aforeſaid in all things. Which done, the foreſaid William, Roger, and Alice, after Maſs, ſhall offer to the Prieſt or Chaplain that celebrated the ſame, with all humility and reverence the Wax-tapers, which they ſhall carry in their hands. And becauſe of the cold weather that now is, leſt the foreſaid Penitents might peradventure take ſome bodily hurt ſtanding ſo long naked (being mindful to moderate partly the ſaid our rigour) we give leave, that after their entrance into the Churches aboveſaid, whileſt they ſhall tarie in hearing the foreſaid Maſſes, they may put on neceſſary garments to keep them from cold, ſo that their heads and feet notwithſtanding be bare and uncovered. We therefore will and command you together and apart, that you denounce the ſaid William. Roger, and Alice to be abſolved and reſtored again to the unity of our holy Mother the Church, and that you call them forth to do their penance in manner and form aforeſaid. Given at Dorcheſter the ſeventeenth day of November. in the year of our Lord God 1389, and the ninth year of our Tranſlation.

Peter Pateſhul againſt the Friers.

Unto the Narration of theſe aboveſaid we will adjoyn the Story of one Peter Pateſhul, an Auſtin Frier, who obtaining by the Popes priviledg (through the means of Walter Dis Confeſſor to the Duke of Lancaſter) liberty to change his Coat and Religion, and hearing the Doctrine of John Wickliff, and other of the ſame ſort, began at length to preach openly, and to detect the vices of his Order, in ſuch ſort as all men wondred to hear the horrible reciting thereof. This being brought to the ears of his Order, they to the number of twelve (coming out of their houſes to the place where he was Preaching) thought to have withſtood him perforce. Among whom one eſpecially for the zeal of his Religion, ſtood up openly in his Preaching, and contraried that which he ſaid, who then was Preaching in the Church of St. Chriſtopher in London. This when the faithful Londoners did ſee taking great hereat, they were moved with great ire againſt the ſaid Frier, thruſting him with his other brethren out of the Church, whom they not only had beaten and ſore wounded, but alſo followed them home to their houſe, minding to have deſtroyed their Manſion with fire alſo; and ſo would have done, had not one of the Sheriffs of London, with two of the Friers of the ſaid Houſe, well known and reported amongſt the Londoners, with gentle words mitigated their rage and violence. After this Peter Pateſhul thus diſtuibed, as is aforeſaid, was deſired by the Londoners (forſomuch as he could not well preach amongſt them) to put in writing that which he had ſaid before, and other things more that he knew by the Friers: who then at their requeſt writing the ſame, accuſed the Friers of murther committed againſt divers of their brethren. And to make the matter more apparent and credible, he declared the names of them that were murthered, with the names alſo of their tormentors: and named moreover time and place, where and when they were murthered, and where they were buried. He affirmed further that they were Sodomites and Traytors both to the King and the Realm; with many other crimes, which mine Author for tediouſneſs leaveth off to recite. And for the more confutation of the ſaid Friers, the Londoners cauſed the ſaid Bill to be openly ſet up at St. Pauls Church-door in London, which was there read and copied out of very many. This was done in the year of our Lord 1387, and in the tenth year of King Richard the Second. Ex Chron. Monachi Albanenſis. Cujus eſt exordium, Anno gratiæ milleſimo, &c.

Kings many times brought in too much fear of the Po. e.

Thus it may appear by this and other above recited, how the Goſpel of Chriſt, preached by John Wickliff and others, began to ſpread and fructifie abroad in London, and other places of the Realm: and more would have done no doubt, had not William Courtney the Archbiſhop, and other Prelates with the King, ſet them ſo forcibly with might and main to gainſtand the courſe thereof. Albeit, as is ſaid before, I find none which yet were put to death therefore, during the raign of this King Richard the Second. Whereby it is to be thought of this King, that although he cannot utterly be excuſed for moleſting the godly and innocent Preachers of that time, (as by his Briefs and Letters afore mentioned may appear) yet neither was he ſo cruel againſt them, as other that came after him: and that which he did, ſeemed to proceed by the inſtigation of the Pope and other Biſhops, rather than either by the conſent of his Parliament, or advice of his Council about him, or elſe by his own nature. For as the Decrees of the Parliament in all his time were conſtant in ſtopping out the Popes proviſions, and in bridling his authority, as we ſhall ſee (Chriſt willing) anon: ſo the nature of the King was not altogether ſo fiercely ſet, if that he following the guiding thereof had not ſtood ſo much in fear of the Biſhop of Rome and his Prelates, by whoſe importunate Letters and calling on he was continually urged to do contrary to that which both Right required, and Will perhaps in him deſired. But howſoever the doings of this King are to be excuſed, or not, undoubted it is, that Queen Anne his Wife moſt rightly deserveth singular commendation; who at the same time living with the King, had the Gospels of Christ in English, with four Doctors upon the same. This Anne was a Bohemian born, and Sister to Wenceslaus King of Boheme before: who was married to King Richard about the fifth (some say the sixth) year of his reign, and continued with him the space of eleven years. By the occasion whereof it may seem not improbable, that the Bohemians coming in with her, or resorting into this Realm after her, perused and received here the Books of John Wickliff, which afterward they conveyed into Bohemia, whereof partly mention is made before.

The said vertuous Queen Anne, after she had lived with King Richard about eleven years, in the seventeenth year of his Reign changed this mortal life, and was buried at Westminster. At whose Funeral Thomas Arundel, then Archbishop of York, and Lord Chancellor, made the Sermon. In which Sermon (as remaineth in the Library of Worcester recorded) he intreating of the commendation of her, said these words, That it was more joy of her than of any woman that ever he knew. For notwithstanding that she was an alien born, she had in English all the Four Gospels, with the Doctors upon them: affirming moreover and testifying, that she had sent the same unto him to examine. And he said they were good and true. And further, with many words of praise he did greatly commend her, in that the being so great a Lady, and also an alien, would study so lowly so vertuous Books. And he blamed in that Sermon sharply the negligence of the Prelates and other men. Insomuch that some said, He would on the morrow leave up the office of Chancellor, and forsake the world, and give him to fulfill his Pastoral office, for that he had seen and read in those Books. And then it had been the best Sermon that ever they heard. Hæc ex libro Wigo. In the which Sermon of Thomas Arundel, three points are to be considered: First, the laudable use of those old times received, to have the Scripture and Doctors in our Vulgar English Tongue. Secondly, the vertuous exercise and also example of this godly Lady, who had these Books not for a shew hanging at her Girdle; but also seemed by this Sermon to be a studious occupier of the same. The third thing to be noted is, what fruit the said Thomas Archbishop declared alle himself to receive at the hearing and reading of the same Books of hers in the English Tongue. Notwithstanding, the same Thomas Arundel, after this Sermon and promise made, became the most cruel enemy that might be against English Books, and the Authors thereof, as followeth after in his Story to be seen.

Thomas Arundel Archbishop, breaketh his own promise.

Th. Arundel and the Bishop of London go to Ireland to the King to consolate the Favourers of Gods Word

For shortly after the death of Queen Anne, the same year (the King being then in Ireland) this Thomas Arundel Archbishop of York, and Robert Braybrooke the Bishop of London, (whether sent by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Clergy, or whether going of their own accord) crossed the Seas to Ireland, to desire the King in all speedy wise to return and help the Faith and Church of Christ, against such as holding of Wickliffs teaching, went about (as they said) to subvert all their proceedings, and to destroy the Canonical sanctions of their holy Mother-Church. At whose complaint the King hearing the one part speak, and not advising the other, was in such fort incensed; that incontinently leaving all his affairs uncompleat, he sped his return toward England. Where he kept his Christmas at Dublin; in the which mean time, in the beginning of the next year following, which was Anno 1395, a Parliament was called at Westminster by the Commandment of the King. In which Parliament certain Articles or Conclusions were put up by them of the Gospels side, to the number of twelve. Which Conclusions moreover were fastned up upon the Church-door of St. Paul in London, and also at Westminster: the Copy of which Conclusions, with the words and contents thereof here under ensue.

Ex Hist. D. Athon.

{ Anno } 1395. Conclusions offered up in the Parliament-House.

{ KING } Ric. 2.

The Book of Conclusions or Reformations, exhibited to the Parliament holden at London, and set up at Pauls door, and other places, in the eighteenth year of the Reign of King Richard the Second, and in the year of our Lord 1395.

Conclusion exhibited in the Parliament.

THE first Conclusion: When as the Church of England began first to dote in Temporalties after her stepmother the great Church of Rome, and the Churches were authorised by Appropriations, Faith, Hope, and Charity began in divers places to vanish and fly away from our Church, forsomuch as pride with her most lamentable and dolorous genealogy of mortal and deadly sins, did challenge that place by title of heritage. And this Conclusion is general, and approved by experience, custom, and manner, as ye shall after hear.

The second Conclusion: That our usual Priesthood, which took his original at Rome, and is fained to be a power higher than Angels, is not that Priesthood which Christ ordained unto his Disciples. This Conclusion is thus proved, Forsomuch as the Romish Priesthood is done with signs and Pontifical Rites and Ceremonies, and Benedictions, of no force and effect, neither having any ground in Scripture, forsomuch as the Bishops Ordinal and the New Testament do nothing at all agree; neither do we see that the Holy Ghost doth give any good gift through any such signs or ceremonies: because that he, together with all noble and good gifts, cannot consist and be in any person with deadly sin. The corolary or effect of this Conclusion is, that it is a lamentable and dolorous mockery unto wise men, and see the Bishops mock and play with the Holy Ghost in the giving of their Orders; because they give Crowns for their characters and marks, inlead of white hearts, and this character is the mark of Antichrist, brought into the holy Church to cloak and colour their idleness.

Papistical Priesthood.

The third Conclusion: That the Law of Chastity enjoyned unto Priesthood, the which was first ordained to the prejudice of women, induceth Sodomy into the Church; but we do excuse us by the Bible, because the suspect Decree doth say, that we should not name it. Both reason and experience proveth this Conclusion. Reason thus, Forsomuch as the delicate feeding and fare of the Clergy will have either a natural purgation, or some worse. Experience thus, forsomuch as the secret trial and proof of such men is, that they do delight in women. And whensoever thou dost prove or see such a man, mark him well, for he is one of that number. The Corolary of this Conclusion is, that these private Religions with the beginners thereof ought most chiefly to be be disannulled, as the original of that sin and offence. But God of his might doth of privy sins send open vengeance.

The single life of Priests.

He doth reply coolly, hardly pass out the inclosed cheques Clergy.

He Prophesieth spirit of Idolatry.

The fourth Conclusion that most harmeth the innocent people, is this: That the fained miracle of the Sacrament of Bread inclueth all men, except it be a very few, unto Idolatry: forsomuch as they think that the body which shall never be out of Heaven, is by the vertue of the Priests words essentially included in the little bread, the which they do shew unto the people. But would to God they would believe that which the Evangelical Doctor teacheth us in his Trialogue, Quod panis altaris est accidentaliter Corpus Christi: i.e. That the Bread of the Altar is the Body of Christ accidentally: forsomuch as we suppose that by that means every faithful man and woman in the Law of God may make the Sacrament of that Bread without any such miracle. The Corolary of this Conclusion is, That albeit the Body of Christ be endowed with the eternal joy; the fervice of Corpus Christi, made by Frier Thomas, is not true, but painted full of false miracles; neither is it any marvel, forsomuch as Frier Thomas, at that time taking part with the Pope, would have made a miracle of a Hens Egg; and we know it very well, that every Lie openly preached and taught, doth turn to the rebuke and opprobry of him, which is always true without any lack.

The fained miracle of Transubstantiation.

A hundred Houses of Alms sufficient for England.

Pilgrimages and Oblations.

He maketh here Wicklif.

The Image of the Trinity an abominable thing.

The Feast of Corpus Christi invented by Thomas Aquinas.

A poor man the perfect Image of God.

Latria, Dulia.

The fifth Conclusion is this: That the Exorcisms and Hallowings, Consecrations, and Blessings over the Wine, Bread, Wax, Water, Oyl, Salt, Incense, the Altar-stone, and about the Church-Walls, over the Vestiment, Chalice, Miter, Cross, and Pilgrim-staves, are the very Practices of Necromancy, rather than of Sacred Divinity. This Conclusion is thus proved: Because that by such Exorcisms the Creatures are honoured to be of more force and power than by their own proper nature; for we do not see any alteration or change in any Creature so Exorcised, except it be by false faith, which is the principal point of Divelish art. The Corolary of this is, That if the Book of Exorcisation or conjuring of Holy water, which is sprinkled in the Church, were altogether faithful and true; we think certainly that Holy water used in the Church, were the best Medicine for all kind of sickness and sores: Cujus contrarium experimur: i.e. the contrary whereof daily experience doth teach us.

The Exorcisms and Blessings over the Water, Salt, Bread, Wax, Oyl, Incense, Altar-stone, Church-Walls, Vestiment, Chalice, Miter, Cross, Pilgrim-staves, and Palms.

The sixth Conclusion, which maintaineth much pride is, That a King and Bishop both in one person, a Prelate and Justice in Temporal causes, a Curate and Officer in worldly office, doth make every Kingdom out of good order. This Conclusion is manifest, because the Temporalty and the Spiritualty are two parts of the Holy Universal Church; and therefore he which addicteth himself to the one part, let him not intermeddle with the other, Quia nemo potest duobus Dominis servire: wherefore to be called Amphrodite, which are men of both kinds, or Ambodextri, which is such as can play with both hands, were good names for such men of double estates. The Corolary of this Conclusion is, That thereupon we the Procurators of God in this case do sue unto the Parliament, that it may be Enacted, that all such as be of the Clergy (as well of the highest degree as of the lowest) should be fully excused, and occupy themselves with their own Cure and Charge, and not with others.

The difference between the Ecclesiastical and Temporalities.

The seventh Conclusion that we mightily affirm is, That spiritual prayers made in the Church for the souls of the Dead (preferring any one by name more than another) is a false foundation of Alms, whereupon all the Houses of Alms in England are falsely founded. This Conclusion is proved by two reasons: The one is, that a meritorious prayer (of any force or effect) ought to be a work proceeding from meer charity: and perfect charity excepteth no person, because thou shalt love thy neighbour as thy self. Whereby it appeareth that the benefit of any temporal gift, bestowed and given unto Priests, and Houses of Alms, is the principal cause of any special prayers, the which is not far different from Simony. The other reason is, that every special prayer, made for men condemned to eternal punishment, is very displeasant before God. And albeit it be doubtful, yet it is very likely unto the faithful Christian people, that the founders of every such House of Alms, for their wicked endowing of the same, are for the most part passed by the broad-way. The Corolary is, That every prayer of force and effect, proceeding of perfect charity, would comprehend generally all such whom God would have saved, and to live. The merchandize of special prayers now used for the Dead maketh Mendicant possessioners and other hireling Priests, which otherwise were strong enough to work and to serve the whole Realm, and maintaineth the same in idleness, to the great charge of the Realm, because it was proved in a certain Book which the King hath, that a hundred Houses of Alms are sufficient for the whole Realm. And thereby might peradventure greater increase and profit come unto the Temporalty.

The foundation of Alms for the Dead.

The eighth Conclusion, needful to tell to the people beguiled is, That Pilgrimages, Prayers, and Oblations made unto blind Crosses or Roods, or to deaf Images made either of wood or stone, are very near of kin unto Idolatry, and far different from Alms. And albeit that these things which are forbidden and imagined are the Book of errors unto the common people; notwithstanding the usual and common Image of the Trinity is most especially abominable. This Conclusion God himself doth openly manifest, commanding Alms to be given to the poor and needy man, for he is the image of God in a more perfect similitude and likeness than any block or stone. For God did not say, let us make a block or stone unto our likeness and image, but let us make man: forsomuch as the supreme and highest honour, which the Clergy calleth Latria, pertaineth only to the Godhead, and the inferior honour which the Clergy call Dulia, pertaineth unto men and Angels. and to none other inferior creature. The Corolary is, That the service of the Cross, celebrate twice every year in our Church is full of Idolatry: for if Rood, Tree, Nails, and Spear ought so profoundly to be honoured and worshipped, then were Juda's lips (if any man could get them) a marvellous goodly Relick. But thou Pilgrim, we pray thee tell us when thou dost offer to the bones of the Saints, and holy men which are laid up in any place; whether dost thou relieve thereby the holy man which is already in joy, or that Alms-house which is so well endowed, whereas they are Canonised (the Lord knoweth how) and to speak more plain, every faithful Christian may well judg and suppose of Cain, that the strokes of that fame man, whom they call Saint Thomas, were no cause of Martyrdom, nor yet be.

{ KING } Ric. 2.

Judas lips.

The death of T. Becket of Cant. is not to be counted for Martyrdom

The ninth Conclusion, that keepeth the people low is, That Auricular confession which is said to be so necessary for salvation, and the fained power of Absolution, exalteth and setteth up the pride of Priests, and giveth them opportunity of other secret talks, which we will not at this time talk of; forsomuch as both Lords and Ladies do witness, that for fear of their Confessors they dare not speak the truth: and in time of confession is good opportunity ministred of wooing, or to play the Bawds, or to make other secret conventions to deadly sin. They affirm and say, that they are Commissaries sent of God to judg and discern of all manner of sin, to pardon and cleanse whatsoever pleaseth them. They say also, that they have also the Keys of Heaven and Hell, and that they can excommunicate, curse and bless, bind and loose at their own will and pleasure: insomuch that for a small reward, or for twelve pence, they will sell the blessing of Heaven by charter and clause of warrantise, sealed by their common seal. This Conclusion is so common in use, that it needeth not any probation. The Corolary hereof is, that the Pope of Rome which fained himself to be the profound Treasurer of the whole Church, having that fame worthy jewel which is the treasure of the Passion of Christ in his own keeping and custody, together with the merits of all the Saints in Heaven, whereby he giveth fained Indulgences and Pardons a pœna & culpa, is a Treasurer almost banished out of charity, whereby he may deliver all captives being in Purgatory at his pleasure, and make them not to come there. But here every faithful Christian may easily perceive that there is much falshood hid in our Church.

Auricular confession.

Confession the inlarging of lust.

The Impudent boldness of Priests.

The Pope treasurer of the Church, inlead of treasurer, with quails

The Tenth, That Man-slaughter (either by war or by any pretensed law of justice for any temporal cause or spiritual revelation) is expretly contrary unto the New Testament, which is the Law of Grace, full of mercy. This Conclusion is evidently proved by the examples of the preaching of Christ here in earth, who chiefly teacheth every man to love his enemies, and have compassion upon them, and not to kill and murther them. The reason is this, that for the most part when as men do fight, after the first stroke, charity is broken; and whosoever dieth without charity goeth the right way to Hell. And besides that, we do well understand and know, that none of the Clergy, by any lawful reason, can deliver any from the punishment of death for one deadly sin, and not for another: but the law of mercy, which is the New Testament, forbiddeth all manner of murther. For in the Gospel it is spoken unto our forefathers, Thou shalt not kill. The Corolary is, It is a very robbing of the people, when Lords purchase Indulgences and Pardons a pœna & culpa, unto such as do help their Armies to kill and murther the Christian people in foreign Countries for temporal gain; as we do see certain Souldiers which do run among the heathen people, to get themselves fame and renown by the murther and slaughter of men. Much more do they deserve evil thanks at the hands of the King of Peace, forsomuch as by humility and peace our faith is multiplied and increased; for murtherers and manquellers Christ doth hate and menaceth, He that striketh with the sword shall perish with the sword.

Hove Wat is lawfull, the proof by experience.

The eleventh Conclusion is, which is shame to tell, That the vow of Chastity, made in our Church by women that are frail and unperfect in nature, is the cause of bringing in many great and horrible offences and vices, incident unto the nature of man. For albeit the murther of their children born before their time, and before they are Christened, and the destruction of their nature by Medicine, are filthy and foul sins; yet they accompanying among themselves, or with unreasonable beasts, or with any creature not having life, do pass to such an unseemliness, that they ought to be punished by infernal torments. The Corolary is, That Widdows and such as take the Mantle and the Nuns and Widows which vow single life.

Ring deliciously fed, we would that they were married, because that we cannot excuse them from private offence of sin.

The twelfth, that the multitude of Arts not necessary (used in this our Church) causeth much sin and offence in waste, curiosity, and disguising in curious Apparel: experience and reason partly doth shew the same, forsomuch as nature, with a few Arts, is sufficient for mans use and necessity.

This is the whole tenor of our Ambassage, which Christ hath commanded us to prosecute at this time, most fit and convenient for many causes. And albeit that these matters be here briefly noted and touched: yet notwithstanding they are more at large declared in another Book, with many other more in our own proper tongue, which we would should be common to all Christian people. Wherefore we earnestly desire and beseech God for his great goodness sake, that he will wholly reform our Church (now altogether out of frame) unto the perfection of her first beginning and original. Ex Archivis Regis.

The Verses following were annexed unto the Conclusions.

Plangunt Anglorum gentes crimen Sodomorum,
Paulus fert, horum sunt idola causa malorum:
Surgunt ingrati Giezitæ Simone nati,
Nomine prælati, hoc defensare parati.
Qui Reges effis, populæ quicunque præestis,
Qualiter, his gestus, gladios prohibere potestis?

The which Verses are thus Englished:

The English Nation doth lament of Sodomites their sin.
Which Paul doth plainly signifie by Idols to begin.
But Giesites full ingrate, from sinful Simon strong,
This to defend (though Priests in name) make Bulwarks (great and strong.
Ye Princes therefore which to rule the people God hath placed,
With justice sword, why see ye not this evil great defaced?

After these Conclusions were thus proposed in the Parliament, the King not long after returned home from Dublin into England, toward the later end of the Parliament. Who at his return called certain of his Nobles unto him, Richard Sturie, Lewes Clifford, Thomas Latimer, John Montacute, &c. whom he did sharply rebuke, and did terribly threaten for that he heard them to be favourers of that side; charging them straightly never to hold, maintain, nor favour any more these opinions and Conclusions. And namely of Richard Story he took an Oath, that he should never from that day favour or defend any such opinions; which Oath being taken, the King then answered, And I swear (saith he) again to thee, that if thou dost ever break thine Oath, thou shalt die for it a shameful death, &c. Ex Chron. D. Alban.

All this while W. Courtney Archbishop of Canterbury was yet alive, who was a great stirrer in these matters. But yet Pope Urban the great Master of the Catholick Sect was dead and buried six years before. After whom succeeded in the schismatical See of Rome Pope Boniface the Ninth, who nothing inferior to his Predecessor in all kind of cruelties, left no diligence unattempted to set forward that which Urban had begun, in suppressing them that were the first-fors forth of the light of the Gospel: and had written sundry times to King Richard, as well for the repealing of the Acts of Parliament against his provisions, Quare impedit, & premunire facies: as also that he should assist the Prelates of England in the cause of God (as he pretended) against such, whom he falsly suggested to be Lollards and Traytors to the Church, to the King, and the Realm, &c. Thus the courteous Pope, whom he could not reach with his sword at least with cruel slander of his malicious tongue would work his poyson against them; which Letter he wrote to the King in the year of our Lord 1396, which was the year before the death of William Courtney Archbishop of Canterbury. After whom succeeded in that See Thomas Arundel, Brother to the Earl of Arundel, being first Bishop of Ely afterward Archbishop of York, and Lord Chancellor of England, and at last made Archbishop of Canterbury about the year of our Lord 1397. The next year following, which was the year of our Lord 1398, and the ninth year of the Pope, I find in certain Records of the Bishop of Duresm a certain Letter of King Richard the Second, written to the said Pope Boniface, which because I judged not unworthy to be seen, I thought here to annex the same, proceeding in form as followeth.

The Letters of Pope Boniface the Ninth to K. Richard.

{ Anno 1396. } The death of W. Courtney A. B. of Canterbury. T. Arundel A. B. of Canterbury.

{ KING Ric. 2. } { Anno 1398. }

To the most Holy Father in Christ, and Lord, Lord Boniface the Ninth, by the Grace of God high Pope of the most holy Romish and Universal Church, his humble and devout Son Richard, by the Grace of God, King of England, and France, Lord of Ireland, Greeting and desiring to help the miseries of the afflicted Church, and kissing of those his blessed feet.

A Letter of K. R. 2. to Pope Boniface the 9th.

WHO will give my head water, and mine eyes a fleeming tears, that I may bewail the decay, and manifold troubles of our Mother, which have chanced to her by her own children in the distress of this present schism and division. For the sheep have forgotten the proper voice of their shepherds, and hirelings have thrust in themselves to feed the Lords flock, who are clothed with the apparel of the true shepherd, challenging the name of honour and dignity, resembling so the true shepherd, that the poor sheep can scarce know whom they ought to follow, or what Pastour as a stranger they ought to flee, and whom they should shun as an hireling. Wherefore we are afraid lest the holy standard of the Lord be forsaken of his host, and so that City, being full of riches, become solitary and desolate, and left the land or people which was wont to say (flourishing in her prosperities) I sat as a Queen, and am not a widow, be destitute of the presence of her husband, and as it were so bewitched that she shall not be able to discern his face, and so wrapped in amazes, that she shall not know where to turn her, that she might more easily find him, and that she shall with weeping speak that saying of the Spouse, I sought him whom my soul loveth, I sought him and found him not. For now we are compelled so to wander, that if any man say, Behold here is Christ, or there, we may not believe him so saying; and so many shepherds have destroyed the Lords Vineyard, and made his amiable portion a wast wildemess.

Defect to rule in the Church.

The right entrance of a true Bishop.

'This multitude of shepherds is become very burdenous to the Lords flock. For when two strive to be chief, the state of both their dignities stands in doubt, and in so doing they give occasion to all the faithful of Christ, of a schism and division of the Church. And although both parties go about to subdue unto their power the whole Church militant, yet contrary to both their purpose, by working this way, there beginneth to rise now a division in the body of the Church, like as when the division of the quick innocent body was naked, when the two harlots did strive afore Solomon; like as the Ten Tribes of Israel followed Jeroboam the Intruder, and were withdrawn from the Kingdom for Solomons sin: even so of old time the desire of ruling hath drawn the great power of the world from the unity of the Church. Let your selves remember, we beseech you, how that all Greece did fall from the obedience of the Romish Church in the time of the faction of the Primarch of Constantinople; and how Mahomet with his fellows, by occasion of Supremacy in Ecclesiastical dignity, deceived a great part of Christians, and withdrew them from the Empire and ruling of Christ. And now in these days, where the same Supremacy is, hath withdrawn it self from the obedience of it, insomuch that now in very few Realms the Candle that burns before the Lord remaineth, and that for Davids sake his servant. And although now remain few Countries professing the obedience of Christs true Vicar: yet peradventure if every man were left to his own liberty, he would doubt of the preferring of your dignity, or that is worse, would utterly refuse it by such doubtful evidence alledged on both sides: and this is the subtil craft of the crooked Serpent, that is to say, under the pretence of unity to procure schisms, as the Spider of a wholsome flower gathers poyson, and Judas learned of peace to make

Strife to be preferred before worldly dignity.

Pope Boniface concerning the Romish Church.

A bold assertion.

The Pope will not forfit his dignity, for any publick tranquility.

Wicked flatterers about the Pope.

'war. Wherefore it is lively believed of wise men, that except this pestilent schism be withstood by and by, the Keys of the Church will be despised, and they shall bind the conscience but of a few: and when either none dare be bold to correct this fault, or to reform things contrary to Gods law, so by this means at length Temporal Lords will take away the Liberties of the Church, and peradventure the Romans will come and take away their place, people, and lands: they will spoil their possessions, and bring the men of the Church into bondage, and they shall be contemned, reviled, and despised, because the obedience of the people, and devotions towards them will almost be taken away, when the greater part of the Church, left to their own liberty, shall wax prouder than they be wont, leaving a wicked example to them that do see it. For when they see the Prelates study more for covetousness than they were wont, to purse up money, to oppress the subjects, in their punishings to seek for gain, to confound laws, to stir up strife, to suppress truth, to vex poor subjects with wrong corrections, in meat and drink intemperate, in feastings past shame: what marvel is it if the people despise them as the foulest forsakers of Gods Law? but all these things do follow if the Church should be left long in this doubtfulness of a schism, and then should that old saying be verified: In those days there was no King in Israel, but every one did that that seemed right and straight to himself. Michæas did see the people of the Lord scattered in the mountains, as they had been sheep without a shepherd: for when the shepherd is smitten, the sheep of the flock shall be scattered, the great stroke of the shepherd is the minishing of his jurisdiction, by which the subjects are drawn from his obedience. When Jason had the office of the highest Priest, he changed the ordinance of God, and brought in the customs of the heathen. the Priests leaving the service of the holy Altar, and applying themselves to Wrestling, and other Exercises of the Grecians, and despising those things that belonged to the Priests, did labour with all their might to learn such things of the Grecians; and by that means the place, people, and holy ointing of Priests, which in times past were had in great reverence of Kings, were trodden under foot of all men, and robbed by the Kings power, and was prophaned by thrusting in for money. Therefore let the highest Vicar of Christ look unto this with a diligent eye, and let him be the follower of him by whom he hath gotten authority above others.

The King setteth here to Preache.

Bishops taught by Christ not to play the Lords.

'If you mark well, most holy Father, you shall find that Christ rebuked sharply two brethren, coveting the seat of honour: he taught them not to play the Lords over the people, but the more grace they were prevented with, to be so much more humble than other, and more lowly to serve their brethren. To him that asked his coat, to give the cloak, to him that smote him on the one cheek, to turn the other to him. For the liberty that are given to his keeping he must forsake all earthly things, and to shed his own blood, yea and if need required, to die. These things I say, be those that adorn the highest Bishop, if they be in him, not his white horse, not his Imperial Crown, because he among all men is most bound to all the sheep of Christ. For the fear of God therefore, and for the love of the flock which ye guide, consider these things diligently, and do them wisely, and suffer us no longer to waver betwixt two: although not for your own cause, to whom peradventure the fulness of your own power is known yet in pitying our weakness, if thou be he, tell us openly, and shew thy self to the world, that all we may follow one. Be not to us a bloody Bishop, left by your occasion mans blood be shed, lest Hell swallow such a number of souls, and left the name of Christ be evil spoken of by Infidels, through such a worthy personage. But peradventure ye will say, for our righteousness it is manifest enough, and we will not put it to other mens disputation. If this bald answer should be admitted, the schism should continue still: seeing neither part is willing to agree to the other, and where the world is as it were equally divided betwixt them, neither part can be compelled to give place to the other without much bloodshed. The Incarnation of Christ and his Resurrection was well enough known to himself and his Disciples; yet he asked of his Father to be made known to the world. He made also the Gospel to be written and the Doctrine of the Apostles, and sent his Apostles into all the world, to do the office of preaching, that the same thing might be known to all men. The foresaid reason is the subtilty of Mahomet, the which knowing himself guilty of his sect, utterly forbad disputations. If ye have so full trust of your righteousness, put it to the examinations of worthy persons in a General Council, to the which it belongeth by right to define such doubts, or else commit it unto able persons, and give them full power to determine all things concerning that matter, or at the least, by forsaking the office on both parties, leave the Church of God free, speedily to provide for a new shepherd.

Publick request to be preferred before private.

'We find Kings have forsaken their Temporal Kingdoms, only upon respect of devotion, and have taken the apparel of Monks profession. Therefore let Christs Vicar (being a professor of most high holiness) be ashamed to continue in his seat of honour to the offence of all people, and the prejudice and hurt of the Romish Church, and the devotion of it, and cutting away Kingdoms from it.

'But if you say, It is not requisite that the cause of Gods Church should be called in controversie, and therefore we cannot so easily go from it, seeing our conscience gain-sayeth it.

Answer to a Popish objection.

'To the which we answer, If it be the cause of God and the Church, let the General Council judge of it: but if it be a personal cause (as almost all the world probably thinketh) if ye were the followers of Christ, ye would rather chuse a temporal death, than to suffer such a wavering. I say not, to the hurt of so many, but to the endless destruction of souls, to the offence of the whole world, and to an everlasting shame of the Apostolical dignity. Did not Clements named, or (that I may more truly speak) ordained of St. Peter to the Apostolick dignity, and to be Bishop, resign his right, that his deed might be taken of his Succesors for an example? Also Pope Siricius gave over his Popedom to be a comfort of the 11000 Virgins. Therefore much more ought you (if need require) give over your Popedom, that you might gather together the children of God which be scattered abroad. For as it is thought a glorious thing to defend the common right, even to bloodshed: so is it sometimes necessary for a man to wink at his own cause, and to forsake it for a greater profit, and by that means better to procure peace. Should not he be thought a Devil, and Christs enemy of all men, that would agree to an Election made of him for the Apostolical dignity and Popedom, if it should be to the destruction of Christians, division of the Church, the offence and loss of all faithful people? If such mischiefs should be known to all the world by Gods revelation, to come to pass by such receiving of the Popedom and Apostolical dignity: then by the like reason why should he not be judged of all men an Apostata, and forsaker of his faith, which chuseth dignity, or worldly honour, rather than the unity of the Church? Christ died that he might gather together the children of God, which are scattered abroad: but such an enemy of God and the Church wilneth his subjects bodily to die in battel, and the more part of the world to perish in soul, rather than forsaking to be Pope to live in a lower state, although it were honourable. If the fear of God, the desire of the heavenly Kingdom, and the earnest love of the unity of the Church do move your heart, shew indeed that your works may bear record to the truth. Clement and Siricius most holy Popes, not only are not reproved, but rather are reverenced of all men, because they gave over their right for profitable causes, and for the same cause all the Church of holy men shew forth their praise. Likewise your name should live for ever and ever, if ye would do the like for a necessary cause, that is to say, for the unity of Gods Church. Give no heed to the unreasonable crying of them that say, that the right chusing of Popes is lost, except ye defend your parts manfully: but be afraid, left such stirers up of mischief look for their own commodity or honour, that is to say, that under your wing they might be promoted to riches and honour. After this fort Achitophel was joyned with Absalom in perfecuting his own Father, and false usurping of his Kingdom.

Tenure of the Church to be preferred before worldly dignity.

Hard comfort for the Pope.

Better that the order of the Popes Election should be ceased, than the Church should suffer any longer this division in Gods Church. For that fashion in chusing is not so necessarily required to the state of a Pope, but the successor of the Apostle, as necessary cause

'required, might come in at the door by another fashion
'of chusing, and that Canonical enough. And this we are 'taught manifestly by examples of the Fathers; for Peter Bishops of Rome appointed their successors, to the time of Popetillery. 'the Apostle appointed after him Clement, and that not by 'false usurping of power, as we suppose. And it was thought 'that that fashion of appointing Popes was lawful unto the 'time of Pope Hilary; which decreed that no Pope should
'appoint his Successor.

Election of the Pope not as was before. 'Afterward the Election of the Pope went by the Clergy and people of Rome, and the Emperors Council agreeing thereto, as it appeareth in the Election of the blessed
'Gregory. But Martinus Pope, with the consent of the 'holy Synod, granted Charles the Power to chuse the Pope.
'But of late Nicolas the second was the first whom Martin
'makes mention of in his Councils to be chosen by the 'Cardinals. But all the Bishops of Lumbardy (for the most 'part) withstood this Election, and chose Cadulus to be
'Pope, saying, That the Pope ought not to be chosen but
'of the Precinct of Italy. Wherefore we think it not a safe
'way so earnestly to stick to the Traditions of men, in the 'fashion of chusing the Pope, and so oft to change, left
'we be thought to break Gods Traditions concerning the 'unity of the Church. Yea rather it were better yet to or-
'dain a new fashion of his Election, and meeter for him
'as it hath been afore. But all things concerning the same Good counsel lost. 'Election might be kept safe, if Gods honour were looked 'for afore your own, and the peace of the Church were 'uprightly sought: for such a dishonouring should be most 'honour unto you, and that giving place should be the 'getting of a greater dignity, and the willing deposing of 'your honour should obtain you the entry of everlasting
'honour, and should procure the love of the whole world
'toward you, and you should deserve to be exalted con-
'tinually, as David was in humbling himself. O how 'monstrous a sight, and how foul a monster is a mans body
'disfigured with two heads? So if it were possible, the 'Spouse of Christ should be made so monstrous, if the 'were ruled with two such heads: but that is not possible,
'she is ever altogether fair, in whom no spot is found;
'therefore we must cast away that rotten member, and
'thruster in of his second head. We cannot suffer any lon'ger so great a wickedness in Gods house, that we should Christs seamless Coat broken. 'suffer Gods coat that wants a seam, by any means to be 'torn by the hands of two, that violently draw it in sun-
'der. For if these two should be suffered to reign together,
'they would so betwixt them tear in pieces that little coat
'of the Lord, that scarce one piece would hang to another.
The Popes compared to the Souldiers that crucified Christ. 'They pass the wickedness of the Souldiers that crucified
'Christ: for they willing to have the Coat whole, said,
'Let us not cut it, but let us cast lots for it whole it shall be.
'But these two Popes suffering their right and title to be 'tried by no lot nor way (although not in words yet in 'deeds) they pronounce this sentence, It shall neither be 'thine nor mine, but let it be divided; for they chose rather
'as it appeareth, to be Lords (though it be but in a little 'part, and that to the confusion of the unity of the Church)
'than in leaving that Lording, to seek for the peace of the 'Church. We do not affirm this, but we shew almost the 'whole judgment of the world of them, being moved so to 'think by likely conjectures. We looked for amendment of 'this intolerable confusion, by the space that these two in-
'venters of this mischief lived. But we looked for peace,
'and behold trouble: for neither in their lives nor in their 'deaths they procured any comfort, but rather dying as it
'were in a doubt betwixt two ways, left to their Successors
'matter of contention continual. But now for the space of 'seven years, whereas of their Successors we desired and loo'ked for that they should bear good grapes, and they bring 'forth wild grapes: in this matter we fall into a deep despair.
'But inasmuch as we hear the comfort of the Lord, which 'promised that miserably he would destroy those wicked
'men, and let his Vineyard to other Husbandmen which 'will bring him fruit at their times appointed, and hath pro'mised faithfully that he will help his Spouse in her need
'to the end of the world: we leaning on the sure hope of 'this promise, and in hope contrary to hope believing, by
'Gods grace will put our helping hands to the easing of this 'misery, when a convenient time shall serve, as much as our
A godly purpose if it had been put in execution. 'Kingly power is able, and although our wit doth not per'ceive how these things afore rehearsed may be amended,
'yet we being encouraged to this by the hope of Gods pro'mise, will do our endeavour: like as Abraham believed,
'his Son being slain by sacrifice, that the multitude of his
'seed should encrease to the number of the Stars, accor'ding to Gods promise. Now therefore the times draw 'near to make an end of this schism, lest a third election of 'a Schismatick against the Apostles Successor make a cu'stom of the doing, and so the Pope of Avinion shall be 'double Romish Pope, and he shall say with his partakers,
'as the Patriarch of Constantinople said unto Christs Vicar
'when he forsook him: The Lord be with thee, for the Lord
'is with us. And is much to be feared of all Christian men:
'For that Pharisee begins now to be called the Pope of 'Avinion among the people. But peradventure it would be 'thought of some men, that it belongeth not to secular Prin-
'ces to bridle outrages of the Pope. To whom we answer,
'that naturally the members put themselves in jeopardy to 'save the head, and the parts labour to save the whole.
'Christ so decked his Spouse, that her sides should cleave to'gether, and should uphold themselves, and by course of time
'and occasion of things they should correct one another, and 'cleave together tunably. Did not Moses put down Aaron,
'because he was unfaithful? Solomon put down Abiathar,
'who came by lineal descent from Anatoth, and removed
'his Priesthood from his kindred to the stock of Eleazar
'in the person of Sadock which had his beginning from
'Eli the Priest? 3 Reg. 2. Otho Emperor deposed Pope
'John the 12. because he was lecherous. Henry the Em-
'peror put down Gratianus, because he used Simony in 'buying and selling spiritual livings. And Otho deposed
'Pope Bennet the fifth, because he thrust in himself. There'fore by like reason, why may not Kings and Princes bridle
'the Romish Pope in default of the Church; if the quality
'of his fault require it, or the necessity of the Church by
'this compell to help the Church oppressed by tyranny?
'In old time schisms, which rose about making the Pope,
'were determined by the power of Secular Princes, as the 'schism betwixt Symmachus and Laurence was ended in 'a Council before Theodericus King of Italy. Henry the 'Emperor when two did strive to be Pope, deposed them
'both, and received the third being chosen at Rome to be
'Pope, that is to say, Clement the second, which Crowned
'him with the Imperial Crown. And the Romans promi'sed him that from thenceforth they would promote none
'to be Pope without his consent. Alexander also overcame
'four Popes schismaticks, all which Frederick the Emperor
'corrected.

'Thus look on the Register of Popes and their deeds,
'and ye shall find that schisms most commonly have been
'decided by the power of secular Princes, the schismaticks
'cast out, and sometimes new Popes made, and sometimes
'the old ones cast out of their dignities, and restored to their 'old dignities again. If it were not lawful for secular Prin-
'ces to bridle the outrages of such a Pope lawfully made,
'and afterward becoming a Tyrant: in such a case he 'might oppress overmuch the Church, he might change
'Christendom into Heathens, and make the labour of Christ
'crucified to be in vain: or else truly God should not have 'provided for his Spouse in earth by all means as much as is 'possible by service of men to withstand dangers. There'fore we counsel you, with such a loving affection as be'comes children, that ye confider in your heart well, lest in 'working by this means ye prepare a way to Antichrist
'through your desire to bear rule, and so by this means as
'we fear the one of these two shall chance; either ye shall 'cause all the Princes of the world to rise against you to 'bring in a true follower of Christ to have the state of the 'Apostolical dignity; or that is worse, the whole world, de-
'spising the ruling of one shepherd, shall leave the Romish
'Church desolate. But God keep this from the world, that 'the desire of honour of two men should bring such a de-
'solation into the Church of God: for them that depart-
'ing away, which the Apostle prophesied, should come be'fore the coming of Antichrist were at hand: which should 'be the last dispolition of the world, peaceably to receive
'Antichrist with honour. Consider therefore the state of your 'most excellent Holiness, how ye received the power from 'God to the building of the Church, and not to the de'struction of it; that Christ hath given you wine and
'oyl to heal the wounded; and hath appointed you
'his Vicar in these things which pertain to gentleness,
'and hath given us these things which serve to rigour.

Senates Princes are to bridle the outrages of the Pope.

¶ This Epistle of King Richard the second, written to Pope Boniface the ninth, in the time of the schism, about the year as appeared 1397. as it contained much good matter of wholesome counsel to be followed, so how little it wrought with the Pope the sequel afterward declared. For the schism notwithstanding continued long after, in which neither of the Popes would give over their hold, or yield any thing to good counsel given them, for any respect of publick wealth. Such a throte beareth Ambition in this Apostolical See, which we are wont so greatly to magnifie. But of this enough, which I leave and refer to the consideration of the Lord, seeing Men will not look upon it.

Popes put down by Princes.

Drawing now toward the later end of King Richard's Reign, it remaineth, that as we did before in the time of King Edward the third, so here also we shew forth a summary recapitulation of such Parliamental Notes and Proceedings, as then were practised by publick Parliament in this Kings time, against the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Rome; to the intent that such, (if any such be) that think,
The Popes slipped Jurisdiction never received in England before the late years. or have thought the receiving of the Popes double authority to be such an ancient thing within this Realm, may diminish their opinion as evidently may appear by divers arguments heretofore touched, concerning the election and investing of Bishops by the King. As where King Osw in commanded Ceddo to be ordained Archbishop of York. Also where King Egfride caused Cuthbert to be brought to shop of the same See. Ex lib. Malmesb. de gestis Pontif. Anglorum. And likewise Mat. Paris. testifieth, that King Henry the Third gave the Archbishoprick of Canterbury to Radulphus then Bishop of London, and invested him with Staff and Ring. And the same King gave the Bishoprick of Winchester to William Gifford; and moreover, following the steps both of his Father and Brother before him, endowed him with the possessions pertaining to the said Bishoprick (the contrary Statute of Pope Urban, forbidding that Clerks should receive any Ecclesiastical Dignity at the hand of Princes, or of any lay person, to the contrary notwithstanding, &c.) Innumerable examples of like sort are to be seen in ancient Histories of this our Realm. As also out of the Parliament Rolls in the time of King Edward the Third, hath sufficiently been touched a little before. Whereunto also may be added the Notes of such Parliaments as have been holden in the Reign of this present King Richard the Second, the collection whereof in part here followeth.

Lawful that Princes should withstand the tyranny of the Pope

¶ Notes of certain Parliaments holden in the Reign of King Richard the Second, making against the Pope.

Ex Archivis Parliament. An. 1. Reg. Ricardi 2. IN the first year of King Richard the second, in the Parliament holden at Westminster, it was requested and granted, That the Popes Collector be willed no longer to gather the first fruits of Benefices within this Realm, being a very novelty, and that no person do any longer pay them.

The King forbids here to provide of the Collation of the Roman Pope.

Tit. 67. Item, That no man do procure any Benefice by provision from Rome, on pain to be out of the King's protection.

Tit. 68. Item, That no Englishman do take to farm of any Alien any Ecclesiastical Benefice or Prebend, on the like pain. In which Bill was rehearsed, that the Frenchmen had six thousand pounds yearly of such Livings in England.

Item, That remedy might be had against the Popes reservations to dignities elective, the same being done against the Treaty of the Pope, taken with King Edward the 3d. Tit. 57.

In the second year of the said King Richard the second, it was by Petition requested, that some order might be taken touching Aliens, having the greatest part of the Church Dignities in their hands. Whereunto the King answered, That by advice of the Lords he would provide therefore. Ex Anno 1. Tit. 70.

Item, It was Enacted, That all the Benefices of Car-dinalls, Archbishops, Bishops, and Rebels, to Pope Urban that now is, shall be seized into the Kings hands. Tit. 71.

An Act that Pope Urban was true and lawful Pope, and that the Livings of all Cardinals, and other Rebels to the said Pope, should be seized into the Kings hands, and the King be answered of the profits thereof: And that whosoever within this Realm shall procure or obtain any provision or other instrument from any other Pope than the same Urban, shall be out of the Kings protection. Tit. 73.

Ex 3. Anno Reg. Ric. 2.

Moreover, in the third year of King Richard the Second, the Prelates and Clergy made their protestation in this Parliament, expressly against a certain new Grant, to wit, their Extortions: That the same never should pass with their assent and good will to the blemishing of the liberties of the Church, if by that word extortion they meant any thing largely to proceed against Ordinaries and others of the Church. But if they meant none otherwise to deal hereafter therein, than before that time had been done, then would they consent. Whereunto it was replied for the King, That neither for the same their said Protestation, or other words in that behalf, the King would stay to grant to his Justices in that case, and all other cases, as was used to be done in times past, and he was bound to do by vertue of his Oath taken at his Coronation. Here note well a strange proceeding. But mark the strange event.

Furthermore, in the fourth year of the said King Richard the Second, it was requested, That provision might be had against the Popes Collectors, for levying of the first fruits of Ecclesiastical Dignities within the Realm. Tit. 44.

Item, *That all Priors Aliens might be removed out of their Houses, and licensed to depart, and never to revert.
And that* Englishmen may be placed in their Livings, answering the King as they did. Tit. 46.

And in the 9th year of the foresaid King, touching matter of the Staple, the Speaker of the Parliament pronounced, that he thought beft the same were plaited within the Realm, considering that Calis, Burges, and o-
